Brown Paper Cover
2 Label please.

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 27 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 7th July 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(d) Education—
The Indian Educational Service	1875
(e) Local and Municipal—
The Madras water-supply	ib.
(k) General—
The Home Rule movement	1876
The age-limit for the Indian Civil Service ..	1877
Post-war reformers	ib.
The Punjab Government and "protest" meetings	ib.
The dark forces of repression	1878
The "Moderates" and the Government ..	ib.
The agitation against the Madras internments.	ib.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(k) General—cont.
Non-Brahmans and the present situation ..	1879
Lords Willingdon and Pentland	ib.
The Madras Executive Council	1880
The dangers of leadership	1881
The zamindars and Home Rule	1882
The Madras internments	ib.
America and India	1883
Ireland and India	1884
Mr. B. G. Horniman v. Dr. T. M. Nayar ..	ib.
The demand for Home Rule	1885
The Maharaja of Bobbili and Home Rule ..	ib.
IV.—Native States.
The British Resident in Mysore and Home Rule ..	1887

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(a) Police—
Thefts	1888
The Indian Police	ib.
(c) Jails—
Indian prisoners in Mesopotamia	ib.
(d) Education—
Primary education in Bombay	ib.
Students and politics	1889
The Vice-Principalship of the Teachers' College, Saidapet	ib.
The condition of students	ib.
The Bombay Educational Conference	ib.
University	1890
Old Matriculates: Secondary School teachers.	ib.
Despondent students	1891
Primary education	ib.
The Intermediate examination results	ib.
(e) Local and Municipal—
The municipal tax	ib.
Water-supply in Madras	ib.
(h) Railways—
An official to supervise the traffic on railways.	ib.
(j) Salt and Abkāri—
Punishment by black mark	1892
Rewards	ib.
(k) General—
The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia	ib.
The Home Rule movement and the methods of the Government	1894
The Bombay Maternity Hospital	ib.
Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies	1895
The Secretary of State's Council	ib.
Swadeshism	1896
India and self-government	ib.
Sale of liquor in England and India	ib
The Indian Defence Force	1897
Indians and higher appointments in the army.	1898
Report of the Public Services Commission	ib.
The present situation	ib.
The future of India	ib.
An independent India	ib.
The Home Rule League	ib.
Repressive measures and reforms	ib.
Indian trade after the war	1899
The Home Rule movement and the zamindars.	1900
New India and Non-Brahmans	1901
The future of India	ib.
Anamalous order of the Punjab Government	ib.
The Governors of Madras and Bombay	ib.
The all-powerful Defence of India Act	1902
Industries	ib.
Internments	1903
Fiscal autonomy	1906
South Africa	1907
Political agitation	ib.
Sir S. P. Sinha	ib.
The Madras Mail	ib.
The Indian Daily Telegraph	1908
Bifurcation of the Kistna district	ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont.	PAGE
(k) General—cont.
The Mangoli	1908
Revenue and magisterial functions	ib.
Mr. Gandhi's farce	ib.
War loan lotteries	ib.
The British war theatre	ib.
The present political situation	ib.
The India Council	ib.
Patriots	ib.
The Andhra Reddi Conference	1909
Mrs. Besant fund	ib.
The Mesopotamian campaign	ib.
The Hon'ble Mr. B. S. Sarma's speech	ib.
Count Okuma	ib.
Swaraj	ib.
Madras internments: and conflict with national spirit	ib.
Retaliation	1910
Administrative reform	ib.
India Council	ib.
Sparrow-destruction clubs	ib.
Social reform	ib.
Discharge of our duty	1912
Home Rule for India	ib.
Mr. Basu's appointment	ib.
The Agricultural Conference	ib.
The duty of the people	1913
The late Mr. Naoroji	ib.
The self-government for India	1914
Reform in the administration	ib.
The Madras protest meeting	1915
Swadeshi movement	ib.
The recent appointments on the India Council.	1917
Suppression of a public meeting at Tuticorin	ib.
Mr. Galletti's speech	ib.
The internments and the Indian and the Anglo-Indian press	ib.
The present unrest in India	ib.
The Governors of Madras and Bombay	1918
The treatment given to Indians in the colonies.	ib.
The newspapers and the Madras and the Punjab Governments	ib.
The extension of the terms of Lords Pentland and Willingdon	ib.
Agricultural farms	ib.
The Agricultural Conference	1919
The present condition—No. 1	ib.
The present condition—No. 2	1920
False rumours	1921
Our immediate needs—No. 1	ib.
Our immediate needs—No. 2	1 23
III.—Legislation.
A free press	1924
IV.—Native States.
Agricultural advancement in Travancore	ib.
A big reform in Mysore	1925
The Mysore Economic Conference	ib.
The administration of Coorg	ib.
V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.
Agriculture	ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(d) Education.

1. The Indian Patriot, of the 4th July, observes:—"Presiding at the Bombay Educational Conference, Sir Narayan Chandavarkar pointed out how the efficiency of the Indian Educational Service has been sympathetically going down. . . . The result is we had a highly paid Education Service which is an asylum for the incapables. Not only that, but our own youths who are distinguished graduates, are not attracted to the Educational Service because of its unattractiveness. The result is, only the halt and the lame, both in England and India, seek the Educational department. The quality of education thus suffers.

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The Indian Educational Service.

(e) Local and Municipal.

2. Writing under the heading "Municipal Bungling", Justice, of the 3rd July, remarks:—"This time it is the water-supply. The pipe water-supply of Madras was introduced some forty years ago. It is not a very satisfactory supply, but it has been going on more or less satisfactorily . . . All sanitary works of the Madras Corporation are like an elephant's gestation unduly prolonged, and the water-supply works which had been dragging on for a number of years were formally opened by His Excellency the Governor early in 1915 with great pomp and ceremony. The people thought that the happy time that was promised to them had come; but, unfortunately, their troubles had just begun. In the first place the filter-beds when completed produced filtered water which contained more bacteria than the unfiltered water, and after considerable experiments and alterations the Director of the King Institute could not find the difference between the fiftered and the unfiltered water; they were so exactly alike. And then it was discovered that there were not enough filter-beds to supply filtered water to the inhabitants of Madras and then all the dormant municipal ingenuity came into play, and it was decided to supply filtered and unfiltered water mixed to the people. We do not know whether this brilliant idea originated with any of the municipal officials or whether the suggestion was made by some of the inmates of Lococks Gardens which is next door to the filter-beds. However, the idea was put into practical execution, and after the inhabitants of Madras had been fed on this bacterial kanji for several months the acting Health Officer in his official report stated that the death-rate had gone down and that one of the causes of this happy result was the completion of the filter-beds. Then, a few months ago, the President announced that the death-rate was again going up and that the Health Officer suspected that the cause of it was the supply of mixed filtered and unfiltered water . . . A proposal was made in the Corporation that as there was not enough of filtered water to supply to Madras the supply should be converted from a continuous into an intermittent. This was carried and already some newspapers in the City have expressed approval. To those who know the conditions of water-supply in this City, this new method is only a jump from the frying pan into the fire. . . Under such conditions when an intermittent supply is inaugurated every time that the water is turned off a large quantity of sewage may possibly be sucked in. We say sewage may be sucked in, because Madras has been soaking in sewage for the last many years. Many of the water-pipes are actually laid in the beds of ditch drains and therefore the intermittent system really means that the inhabitants are to have the pleasure of sewage contaminated water for drinking purposes. After carrying on the new water-works for over ten years and after spending over fifty lakhs of rupees on them, if we have only come to a badly filtered water served on the intermittent system, we have our own doubts as to whether the Corporation will ever within the time of the present generation accomplish a satisfactory water-supply for this city.

Justice, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

The Madras water-supply.

The extraordinary nature of the situation is that there is no proper Health Officer to point out the scientific defects in the water-supply or any other sanitary arrangements. A Health Officer who is not independent of the President cannot possibly discharge his duties satisfactorily. An Assistant Surgeon, who depends upon the President for his appointment, may have to sign almost anything that the President asks him to do. We have a fair idea of what these Civilian superiors are. Some of them think that in medical and sanitary matters they are greater experts than their professional advisers. . . A sanitary administration guided by a civilian cannot be very conducive to the improvement of public health. Yet that is what we have in Madras. Anyone can see that there is considerably less danger in supplying the citizens of Madras with unfiltered water which they have been accustomed to for more than forty years than in supplying water under an intermittent system with an old and cracked system of water distributary pipes. And yet that is being done with the sole object of asserting that their filtered water is really filtered water. It is usual for municipal authorities to publish an analysis of their water-supply over the signature of some competent analyst. It is about time that the Madras Corporation published from time to time an analysis of their so called filtered water over the signature of the Director of the King Institute. The part that the Madras Government is playing in this affair is still more regrettable. They have shown no tendency to bring the Corporation Executive to a sense of their duty. If things drift at the present rate, we are afraid that there will be no alternative for the rate-payers but to enforce their rights by a suit in the High Court. In the meantime watch the results of the intermittent water-supply! You can best do that by noting the increase in deaths from diarrhœa, dysentery and cholera. We expect these deaths steadily to go up from now onwards."

(k) General.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, June 28th, 1917.

The Home Rule movement.

3. In a leader on "The new movement," the West Coast Spectator, of the 28th June, says:—"Of late, to be more correct, since the demise of Gokhale and Perozeshah Mehta, we have noticed with considerable pain a sort of anarchy prevailing in the Indian political camp; people who were nobodies yesterday have suddenly become full-fledged leaders, and ideals which Mehta and Gokhale were cautious enough to keep at a distance have been forcibly brought to the front and people encouraged to hug them to the bosom. It will be noticed that the Home Rule movement never made any impression on the people, was not allowed to come out and disturb public tranquility so long as the two great statesmen were alive. After their demise, attempts were made to capture the Grand Old Man and to boom the movement with the magic of his name, but the hero of a hundred campaigns saw through the transparent motive and politely declined to give it the weight of his authority and name. . . Now, when we see political sanity and prescience reaching the vanishing point and false prophets, apparently honest, stumping the country propounding strange creeds and methods of political warfare, there are times when we sigh for a Mehta or Gokhale. . . We say with a full sense of of responsibility, at the risk of being voted down as renegades and traitors by the roaring patriots who can tolerate no differences of opinion, and think that those who are not with them are against them, against the true interests of the country. . . As we have repeatedly been pointing out in these columns, an attitude of hostility towards the Government, even though it takes care to avoid collision with the penal laws of the country, cannot pay in the long run. . . We have absolutely no desire to question the patriotism or motive of those who boom home-rule and are anxious that India should take her place in the great Anglo-Saxon Federation; but practical politics teaches us that mere wish and protestations, however sincere, will not take the country to the goal of her aspirations. We are told by another class of politicians that the moment Home Rule is granted, the humbler and lower classes of the people will improve as if by magic, becoming articulate and fit to discharge their duties as individual units of the commonwealth. . . Fanatics, impatient idealists and revolutionaries may be left out of account altogether, but we are pained to see some of our moderate politicians hugging shibboleths to the bosom and shouting in extremists' company. . . We would regard the Besant internment as a blessing in disguise if the new energies it has awakened will lead to self-examination, to self-surrender and to an adequate preparation for self government. Mere abuse of the Government or of a slow-moving bureaucracy obsessed with the madness of efficiency will not lead to the fulfilment of our aspirations. We must make our claim irresistible; and when we are a strong united nation, proof against traitor within and foe without, fully prepared to meet the responsibilities of empire, to make any sacrifice if necessary, self-government will come to us of its own accord. No bureaucracy however, powerful, will then be able to resist it. Nations by themselves are made, not by talk, but by action, action that is based on righteousness, and on a sprit of devotion."

4. The Hindu, of the 30th June, writes:—"The preposterous recommendation of the Royal Commission on Public Services in India that the age-limits for the competitive examination for the Indian Civil Service should be reduced to 17–19 is being sharply criticised in the United Kingdom by various responsible authorities. . . The startling suggestion of the commission appears to have been made not from any general desire expressed by witnesses who gave evidence, but that the majority of the commission had almost decided upon the matter before examining the witnesses, as can be seen from the way in which witnesses were asked to make definite suggestions as regards the courses and curriculum to meet the situation which would be created after the age-limits are lowered. . . It is really remarkable that, in the face of such widespread protests and of the fact that it will unquestionably bar the English door against Indians, the majority of the Commissioners should have recommended the lowering of the age-limits. It will be the height of folly for the authorities, who have to finally decide the matter, to accept such an objectionable and pernicious suggestion."

The age-limit for the Indian Civil Service.

Hindu, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

5. The Hindu, of the 30th June, states:—"A rather novel method of granting political reforms to India has been hit upon by a writer in the Indiaman received by last mail, which, had it not been for the ingenuity displayed, sufficient to secure as long a postponement of reforms as could be desired even by the bureaucracy, we would not have referred to. . . He suggests that His Majesty, acting under the authority of Parliament, should appoint a committee of his Privy Council, comprising a British Administrator as President, with two Indian Princes and two Dominion statesmen as members, to sit in India from time to time, and after hearing all the interests concerned regulate the constitutional development of each province of the Government of India, and of the India office itself, so as to approach by stages the goal accepted by Parliament in advance. The suggestion is intended to be liberal and fascinating; but we do not think there will be many to accept this proposal that India should entrust her future destinies to the caprice of a committee where the supreme decision is to rest with a reactionary bureaucrat and an indifferent Colonial."

Post war reformers.

Hindu, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

6. The Hindu, of the 30th June, observes:—"Our readers may recollect that yesterday's Hindu contained a telegraphic summary of a public meeting of the citizens of Lahore protesting against the orders of internment passed by the Madras Government. From a telegram which appears elsewhere, it would be seen that the Punjab Government has issued an order under the Defence of India Act to the editors of the local newspapers not to report or make reference to the proceedings of the said public meeting. . . The actions of the Punjab Government are even more inscrutable than those of some other Local Governments, and the various shifts and devices to which official ingenuity has recourse to in order to avoid public exposure of the nature of the internment orders, indicate that the official conscience is far from being at ease on the subject."

The Punjab Government and "protest" meetings.

Hindu, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

New India, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

7. New India, of the 30th June, remarks:—"Not even in the darkest days of repression in the period of the Morley-Minto regime had the leaders of the country to face such a combination of the forces of reaction in India as that which they have now to attack and overcome. The bureaucratic wall of opposition that is now presented to Indian reformers is being much more secretly entrenched and much more thoroughly organised in all the different Provinces than the ordinary citizen with full belief in British principles of liberty and progress can anticipate or guess. And the most unfortunate feature of the situation is that the heads of administration in India and their Chief in England, who is the Minister for Indian affairs, responsible to the British Parliament, have clearly shown themselves no believers in those principles of liberty which the rulers have for a century and a half taught them to understand and assert. . . Fortunately for the friends of anti-home rule, the repressive repertoire of the Indian Government has been re-filled to overflowing by the large arbitrary powers which a war measure like the Defence of India Act has provided them with, and these are now being used for exigencies different from those for which they were avowedly conferred."

The dark forces of repression.

New India, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

8. New India, of the 30th June, writes:—"The advice of the Anglo-Indian Press to make an immediate effort to rally the "Moderates" to the side of the Government has not been entirely disregarded, and what is more noteworthy, the first effort has failed. The appointment of a third Indian Member to the India Council was surely made, as the London Times hints in its article cabled by Reuter, with the object of counteracting the growing demand for home-rule; but no Indian of any standing has been so far deluded into jubilation. The Indian Press is agreed that the selection of Mr. Bhupendranath Basu is commendable, as is also the increase in the number of Indians at Whitehall. But no expression of appreciation has gone beyond that. The indifference thus rightly maintained, has put out some of our Anglo-Indian friends, one of whom has accused us of ungrateful folly for looking a gift horse in the mouth. Indians surely have not been reduced to such a beggarly condition as to accept any gift, however worthless, with shouts of joy. However loudly these officious saviours of India may declaim, we note with pleasure the determination of the Indian public not to be satisfied with such petty offers as an appointment in the Secretariat or the Council.

The "Moderates" and the Government.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, June 30th, 1917.

9. In a leader under the heading "New conditions," the West Coast Spectator, of the 30th June, says:—"The political atmosphere is still surcharged with electricity. There is undoubtedly high tension between the Government and the educated classes which is certainly not relieved by the excited language some of our contemporaries and leading public men are indulging in. . . We ask in all sincerity what useful purpose is served by prolonging a campaign of vituperation, however heated the moment, and indulging in destructive criticism that cannot either improve the situation or bring home to the governmental authorities the force and significance of the new conditions that have been generated. The fact is in our criticism of public men and affairs we are led or misled, by emotion and sentiment, by a too great conception of our wrongs, supposed or real, and we conveniently ignore the other side of the question which no impartial critic ought to. The Government have made mistakes, but none gives them credit for erring with honourable and honest motives, and the average critic carried away by emotion and blind loyalty to his leaders attributes sinister designs and sees in every act an attempt to raise a bar sinister or to crush our aspirations and hopes. . . No Government can be frightened into submission; not even the Fenian outrages lead a great and distinguished liberal statesman into slackening the rigour of the laws, and it was only when the leaders of the nationalist party talked sense that Gladstone took up Irish reforms. This is a lesson we should profit by."

The agitation against the Madras internments.

Cochin Argus, British Cochin, June 30th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the Cochin Argus, for the week ending 30th June, observes:—"The fat is still in the fire, and no end of protest meetings are being held to condemn the action of the Madras Government in ordering the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two chief co-adjutors, in addition to which, the columns of Home Rule and kindred organs of public opinion are daily flooded with denunciations of the autocratic bureaucracy, against whom, curiously enough, the main charge which continues to be levelled is that they are despotically silencing all constitutional political agitation. This indictment somehow reminds us of the Irishman, who tumbled into a ditch and, on being asked by a fellow-countryman if he was dead, answered mournfully that he was not dead, but was entirely speechless. . . It is from the very people, who are fiercely clamouring for the recall of Lord Pentland, who are discussing the proposal that Legislative Councillors should resign their seats as an answer to the Government's repressive policy and who are preaching a boycott of British goods that we hear this charge that the Government is gagging a free people, so that it may be impossible for them to make their political grievances and sorrows known to the great and good British democracy, who dwell on a moral and political plane far loftier than that occupied by the bureaucracy, who rule India with a rod of iron. The inconsistency of it all would be amusing, were there not a certain element of danger involved in the inflammatory campaign that is being waged. . . In our opinion, if the agitators persist in the methods which they are recklessly pursuing they will leave the Government no help but to go in for further repression, and while we do not hesitate to admit that that would be very unfortunate, we are, at the same time, very strongly of the opinion that it is quite free to the agitators themselves to desist from speeches and writings, which can, by no stretch of the imagination, be considered as falling within the bounds of constitutionalism."

10. The following appears in the Non-Brahman, for the week ending 1st July, under the heading "Rally the Non-Brahman":—"To those who are watching the political horizon, there is something that must call for thought. The agitation that has sprung up over the internments is not to be ignored, although wild writings and wilder speeches have suddenly been stopped by the wholesome effect of the internments. Non-Brahmans as men who have a stake in the land, cannot afford to passively look on the situation. Responsible men like Tej Bahadur Sapru are openly preaching that the youths need not enlist in the Indian Defence Force, because Mrs. Annie Besant has been interned—the sudden suspension of the activities of the Indian Defence Force Committee amounts only to that. This is a serious step, and brings us face to face with an aggressible form of agitation which may be misunderstood by young bloods. If old and responsible men would be so reckless, what of the less experienced and more thoughtless. Hence we say that we are face to face with a situation that calls for our active aid. . . We are, at least as much opposed to repression in India as, say, Babu Bepin Chandra Pal. But we ask the Government to take us more into confidence. . . We do not sympathise with threats and irresponsible rashness. But we do care very much indeed that we shall have no repression. But unless we see signs of repression, we shall not have anything to do with agitation. Such is our attitude, and we ask the Government what they are going to do with such a reserve of sympathetic and independent fountain of opinion as we are. . . We, Non-Brahmans, are ready at hand to interpret between the real people and the Government, only much use has not been made of us as might be. The Government have not cared to make use of us. Let the Government call us to help, boldly proclaim a policy of advancement and we shall see to it that in a short time there shall not be many men to protest against suspicions of repression and such original grievances."

NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, July 1st, 1917.

Non-Brahmans and the present situation.

11. New India, of the 2nd July, writes:—"In view of the restrictions in force at the present time the Secretary of State for India with the approval of His Majesty has invited Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon to serve on in India. and they have consented to do so." (Reu.). The political situation can hardly be said to be relieved by this announcement and the outlook is obviously rendered gloomier than ever. . . Lords Pentland and Willingdon, Lord Chelmsford's great Presidency satraps, who have shown every sign of seconding the Viceroy's unwise 'strong' policy with extra-strong repression, with an activity and ingenuity worthy of the far nobler cause of freedom, are invited to serve on in India and have consented to do so, with result that the repressive regime now completed in the several Provinces has been indefinitely prolonged."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

Lords Willingdon and Pentland.

Justice, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

Writing on this subject, Justice, of the 2nd July, says:—"Information has been received from the Secretary of State for India that 'in view of the restrictions in force at the present time, the Secretary of State for India, with the approval of His Majesty, has invited Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon to serve on in India, and they have consented to do so'. . . . We are now glad that both Lord Willingdon and Lord Pentland have been given an extension of their term of office. Lord Willingdon has proved himself a very efficient ruler of Bombay. He has been popular with nearly all classes of people. We have used the word 'nearly' advisedly, because with the irreconcilables no Governor who does his duty, without fear or favour, can be popular. Lord Pentland has been carrying on the administration of this Presidency very smoothly, and his good intentions are undoubted. Madras has always been, to use Lord Curzon's words, a mild and loyal Presidency. But since the home-rulers took refuge in it its atmosphere has been rather disturbed. Lord Pentland has now taken a definite attitude and has apparently grasped the realities of the situation. In the interests of this Presidency then it is proper that he should remain longer here in order to make the path comparatively smooth for his successor. . . . It will be remembered that some of the home-rulers even went to the length of saying that they must ask for the recall of Lord Pentland; because he had the courage and sagacity to grapple with the situation firmly. However, the Secretary of State has now given his reply to the politicians in Bombay and Madras who have been so severely criticising the Governments of Lord Willingdon and Lord Pentland."

Hindu, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The Hindu, of the 2nd July, observes:—"We have received the following Press Communiqué from Ootacamund: 'In view of the restrictions in force at the present time the Secretary of State for India with the approval of His Majesty has invited Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon to serve on in India and they have consented to do so.' Reuter has also wired out the information adding that the restrictions refer to travel. The news will not be received in this Presidency with any exhilaration, especially in the circumstances which face the public at the present time. . . . It is evidence of the little or no value attached by the Secretary of State for India to the opinions and wishes of the people of this country in dealing with their affairs that, while their desire was not fulfilled in respect of Lord Hardinge and Lord Carmichael, Their Excellencies Lord Pentland in respect of whom no such wish has been expressed and Lord Willingdon in regard to whom a movement set on foot collapsed very soon, should have been asked to stay on."

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The Indian Patriot, of the 2nd July, remarks:—"We publish the interesting intelligence today that in view of the restrictions in force at the present time the Secretary of State for India, with the approval of His Majesty, has invited Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon to serve on in India and they have consented to do so. We do not know of the nature of restrictions now in force which were absent when Lord Carmichael's term was over, for if ever there was a Governor whom the people were most anxious to retain, it was Lord Carmichael. We do not attach much importance to a short extension of office, but we should not be surprised if this announcement should not be taken as confirm the suspicions entertained in certain quarters about India being on the eve of an era of repression. . . . Unless there is very strong reason for it, we are not in favour of an extension to a Governor's term of office; in this connection we are told by the Secretary of State that there is necessity for extension, which is indefinite and must depend upon the nature of the restrictions. We think that there is no reason why any political meaning should be read into this announcement at all, unless it suits the purpose of a class of agitators with whom, we are sure, the sober sections of the population will have no sympathy."

Hindu, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

12. The Hindu, of the 2nd July, states:—"The cat is let out of the bag in a telegram from Ootacamund which gives us the views of the South of India Observer regarding a fourth Member of the Madras Executive Council. The wire is from the Associated Press whose agent at Ootacamund is the Anglo-Indian Editor of the South of India Observer. In the opinion of our contemporary, failing an Anglo-Indian nominee to the office of fourth Member, no better selection could be made than Dr. T. M. Nayar among Indian gentlemen. We think our contemporary could have gone further and said that the selection of Dr. Nayar could not be bettered even by appointing an Anglo-Indian in order to impress the administration with the Anglo-Indian point of view. . . If a fourth Member is to be appointed to the Madras Executive Council, it would without doubt be an Indian and the claim would legitimately be made that it should go to a member of the Muhammadan Community, and in justice it should be granted. Few among the members of the Indian Community would be disposed to acknowledge that Dr. Nayar is the fittest person under present circumstances to fill the office of Member of the Executive Council. He is now filling the role of the leader of an anti-national movement and his activities are mainly devoted to driving a wedge through the local Indian Community, and scandalizing the public by a frenzied onslaught on the foremost Indian leaders. . . An Indian Member of the Executive Council must be a man who resolutely endeavours to impress the Indian view of matters upon his colleagues, and this can hardly be done by any person who is himself not in harmony but is in unveiled hostility with the views of his countrymen."

The Madras Executive Council.

Writing on this subject, Justice, of the 3rd July, says:—Our contemporary the Hindu is trying its best to qualify itself to become the successor of Mrs. Besant. Mrs. Besant used to anticipate all sorts of troubles and used vigorously to write on them. Our contemporary is adopting the same methods. We remember the vigorous attack the Hindu made on this newspaper before it had seen the light of day and only a few days ago the Hindu lashed itself into fury in a two column leading article on hearing a rumour that some more people were to be interned, and last night it launches into an attack in true Brahmanical style on Dr. Nayar, because some one said that a Fourth Member of the Madras Executive Council was to be appointed and suggested Dr. Nayar's name for it. Dr. Nayar has heard nothing about the appointment of a Fourth Member to the Madras Executive Council, still less about his own nomination for that place. But for the Hindu, which evidently follows the methods of the rowdy Moplahs of Kundotti, anything is sufficient to launch an attack on any of its pet enemies. The Hindu believes that Dr. Nayar is filling the rôle of the leader of an anti-national movement. Well, we do not know what national movement is referred to here. Dr. Nayar certainly is taking an active part in an anti-Besantine movement, and apart from a Besantine movement he does not see any national movement. Since Mr. Kusturiranga Ayyangar and others who had taken a creditable part in exposing the methods of Mrs. Besant had turned round and begun to hang on to her skirts, Dr. Nayar has ceased to attach any importance to movements with which such men are connected. . . The Hindu says that Dr. Nayar's activities are mainly devoted to driving a wedge through the local Indian community; on the contrary his activities are chiefly devoted to extracting that wedge, a wedge driven through the Indian community by the Brahmanical ancestors of Mr. Kasturiranga Ayyangar and others. . . We have heard a rumour that the Fourth Membership of the Madras Executive Council is to be given to a representative of the Besantine gang, preferably to one of those who prostrated themselves at the feet of Mrs. Besant at the railway station."

Justice, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

13 In an article on this subject, New India, of the 3rd July, states:—"All who were 'in the know' at the great public meeting of protest in Gokhale Hall were aware what were the real feelings of the meeting, and specially of the delegates who came from mufassal towns. The meeting clamoured to go far further than the organisers were willing to let it go. It is no secret that a resolution for the recall of Lord Pentland was asked for; and above all that most present in the audience, though not many among the leaders, expected the swadeshi vow to be given. . Did the Madras leaders make a mistake, or were the mufassal delegates mistaken in their reading of the popular mind? It would hardly seem the latter, from the dozens of resolutions passed everywhere about the swadeshi vow. It is a mode of lawful constitutional expression of the opinions of the people on the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues; it is a democratic method of agitation for the cancellation of the internments which the people find most congenial and thorough-going. The city of Madras so far on this matter has not openly publicly been given the lead by any leader. There are thousands who would like the swadeshi vow to be given them at a solemn and sacred meeting.

The dangers of leadership.

New India, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

"There are many reputations at stake just now; one is of Madras as a leader of the province. Not a few were the delegates who openly said:—'If Madras will not lead us, we shall no longer look to Madras to give the tone to our political life.' We should fail in our duty to the public if we did not point out the dangers; democracy is not very patient at crisis. When the people clamour to be led, they should be led forward."

Justice, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

The zamindars and Home Rule.

14. Justice, of the 3rd July, writes:—"It is becoming increasingly manifest that the zamindars and landholders of this Presidency are as a body definitely opposed to the concession of Home Rule to India at this moment and that the Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar and the Hon'ble the Zamindar of Polavaram who represent them in the Imperial and Local Legislative Councils, respectively, have no authority to use the name of their constituents in the Home Rule controversy as among their active supporters. Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar in a letter to a contemporary tries to explain away the awkward position which he has created for himself. . . He seems to have very peculiar notions about the aristocracy of this Presidency. He means by aristocracy all those who are gifted with worldly goods, whether they are merchants or lawyers or politicians, and he includes Mrs. Besant among the aristocracy, though the appeal for funds on her behalf does not support this assumption. However, he was returned to the Imperial Legislative Council not to represent Mrs. Besant, the fat lawyer, and the millionaire merchant or wealthy politician, but the landed interest of this Presidency. . . Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar is prepared to be a martyr in the true Besantine fashion, so that inferior men like the Raja of Pithapuram, Raja of Venkitagiri and Raja Manavedan Raja, who possess not his foresight and his wisdom but whom he is anxious to uplift may get a few boons, we suppose, from the Government."

Travancore Times, Nagercoil, July 3rd, 1917

The Madras internments.

15. The Travancore Times, for the week ending 3rd July, observes:—"We have not the slightest doubt that the action of the Madras Government, ordering the internment of Mrs. Annie Besant and her lieutenants, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia, has been taken with the best of motives, and there is no room whatever for suspecting that it has been aimed against the political aspirations of the people. . . The circumstances that led Mrs. Besant to adopt her present career are singular. Whether she adopted her present political career deliberately or was led into it gradually by the exigencies of her previous position, we cannot tell. She was at first the leader of theosophy. It was, perhaps, in that capacity that she proclaimed a few years ago that a certain Krishnamurti, a boy about fifteen years, was in his last birth, Jesus Christ, or Lord Maitriya. Absurdities of this nature are beneath notice. But this startling announcement was made known to the public in connection with a case which added little to the prestige of theosophy and less to Mrs. Besant. . . But before her influence waned considerably, she put forward her new Home Rule cult. . . Not satisfied with constitutional agitation for it, in season and out of season she blamed the Government, attributed motives to the rulers and those in authority and by writing and speaking succeeded in creating a great deal of discontent among a class of people who believe that Home Rule will add to the exceptional benefits they are now the recipients of. Her utterances were misleading the impressionable students in large numbers. . . As has become usual of late, protest meetings are being held in various centres, the wording of the resolutions passed at some of them being by no means mild. Such public protests, whatever purpose they may or may not serve, are sure to weaken in young and ignorant minds respect for established authority. . . History has taught these dumb millions what Home Rule once meant to them and they would not for a moment join hands with the agitators to be subjected to a repetition of the same results."

The Hindu, of the 5th July, writes:—"The pronouncement made yesterday by Mr. Chamberlain in the House of Commons on the subject of Mrs. Besant's internment will deepen the discontent already felt in this country at his attitude. . . The educated community of India, who have been deeply stirred over the matter and have risen as one man to protest against the injustice, do not come into the consideration of the Secretary of State at all. Mr. Chamberlain confines himself to echoing the vague declamation that Mrs. Besant's agitation was not merely mischievous, but was carried on by improper methods. . . It seems to us that it is high time for the people of this country to bestir themselves to carry on the agitation to England and to inform the people of the United Kingdom and the Members of Parliament as to the reality of the state of things in this country."

Hindu, Madras July 5th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 6th July, remarks:—"A tendency, full of the gravest menace to the political progress of the Indian people, is growing more and more marked in the attitude of the authorities in England towards Indian affairs. There is a callous indifference to the real needs and feelings of the people and an infinite faith in the motives and actions of the bureaucracy. This attitude is put down to the pre occupations of the war; but circumstances have made it clear to us now that all protestations of that kind are unmitigated cant. . . It is only India that is to be repressed into silence in the name of the war. It is the Indian people alone who are to be charged with disloyalty and anti-Imperial intentions, if they raise their voices for anything except the interests of the war loan. It is Indian movements only that are to be branded as dangerous to public safety. Indians must not think of serving their country; they should absorb themselves in slaving for the Empire. The war, which is to liberate the world and complete the circle of freedom in the 'Empire of the free,' is used as an excuse to check India's progress and to stifle even her hopes of liberty and democratic self-government. Her future, both immediate and distant, is to be planned not according to the designs of her best and wisest, nor even according to the designs of British statesmen, instinct with the generous spirit of liberty and Democracy, but on the miserable pattern supplied by bureaucrats, who, in the arrogance of race pride and the selfishness of vested interests, have lost all sense of British freedom and justice and have never cared to cultivate Indian sympathies or view-points. . . In his replies to questions in the matter of Mr. Besant's internment and the position of the Home Rule Leagues, Mr. Chamberlain made it clear, as yerterday's telegrams show, that he was not going to concern himself at all with any considerations as to the rights or wrongs of any step that the officials here may choose to take in pursuance of their policy of repression. The officials decree it and the officials must be right, for the officials cannot be wrong . . The Government here has, therefore, a blank cheque, their infallibility in this matter is fully accepted and the general blessing of the Secretary of State is given to their policy in anticipation. . . Mr. Chamberlain has claimed for the Government of India and its deputies, not the divine right of Stuart Kings but the autocracy of the sword of oriental despots, and in this process, he is willing to write himself down as a figure-head, especially in grave cases."

New India, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

16. In a leader comparing the United States of America on the 4th July 1776, and India at the present day, New India, of the 4th July, says:—"The essential difference between the case of America and that of India is that in the former instance, a nation kin by blood to the mother-country was involved, while the Indians are an alien people and, still more, a coloured people. The dominant new factor is, we think, undoubtedly colour; for in the case of South Africa, where colour was not involved, affairs were settled amicably within a short time of the Boer War. . . India may learn from her history a positive and a negative lesson: The necessity for a nation to sink provincial differences in the cause of freedom and the resistance of oppression; the equal necessity for constitutional agitation, continuous and incessant. America's methods of reaching her goal were unconstitutional though perhaps they were the only way at the time. But emphatically they should not be followed now. There should be no neccessity for them. . . It is part of England's debt to America for the selfishness she showed towards one daughter, that she should make some sacrifice for India. The freedom, wrested from her by force by the American Colonies, must be bestowed gratuitously on India. Yet she has disarmed India, and her recent policy is to repress the Indian cry for freedom by acts which are used in a way they should never have been used. The clouds gather quickly, but the quicker they gather, the more quickly, does the Indian nation become a united whole. The time is at hand when England must turn a sympathetic attention to the affairs of her Indian Empire, or she will fail in her supreme test—the test which will determine whether she is worthy to be an Empire-builder or not.

America and India.

New India, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

"An Empire-builder may not with impunity disarm a nation under her care; she may not act so that the industries of a dependent country perish. she may not keep the people of the land from the great posts of responsibility; she may not tax a people without adequate representation; she may not withhold from the masses the gift of education; she may not in an ancient civilisation discriminate between the white and the coloured man.

"If England would just cast her eyes back for a moment to the years preceding the Revolution in America, she would see a marked similarity between the discontent there and the discontent here. She would find that because of unjust laws, the American women refused to wear garments made of English stuff, and a general boycott of English tea was instituted. This is reminiscent of the swadeshi movement of to-day. . . England would find many signposts for her guidance if she would look once again at the history of her American Colonies with the clearer perspective of nearly 150 years. But will she do so? Or does the bar of colour cloud her vision? Is freedom the prerogative of her sons alone, and not of the world at large; is it the privilege of western nations only, and is the Dharma of the eastern Nations to be one of subjection in the years to come."

Hindu, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Ireland and India.

17. The Hindu, of the 4th July, remarks:—"The treatment by the Government of Great Britain of Irish and Indian questions has been, as all India has noted with extreme regret of a character which has irritated public opinion in this country beyond measure. The internments in Madras on the day following that on which the Irish revolutionaries were released from the prison in order to conciliate Irish opinion and make the chances of a successful conclusion of the Irish Convention as great as possible, will not be forgotten in India for a long time. . . . How vast is the difference in the methods followed in dealing with the discontent and unrest in the two countries! Mr. Lloyd George made certain alternative proposals to the Nationalist and Ulster leaders, and emphasised the urgency of an early and satisfactory settlement of a state of affairs which was productive of immense evil not only to Ireland but to the whole of the Empire. The Prime Minister did not hide his scheme in his office box, as is usually done in India, but gave it the widest publicity. . . What do we find in India? The Government of India conceive certain proposals, of which the public do not know anything and embody them in a despatch which we are told is at present being considered in England. . . The political principle that you should give the people what they want and not what you think is for their good is one which does not appeal to the authorities who wield the destinies of India."

Justice, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

18. Justice, of the 4th July, has the following:—

"More Royalist than the King himself.

Mr. B. G. Horniman v. Dr. T. M. Nayar.

"There are people to be found in almost every country who praise 'every century but this and every country but his own'. We have in India at present some remarkable specimens of that kind of people. Mrs. Besant, while she was free to inculcate her political opinions on the people of this country, used to dilate on patriotism as a great virtue Patriotism as illustrated by the example of Mrs. Besant is love for somebody else's country. We have another instance in Mr. Horniman, the editor of the Bombay Chronicle. We are told that this gentleman was on the staff of the Statesman of Calcutta before he went to Bombay to take up the editorship of the Bombay Chronicle. We presume that this transfer from the Statesman to the Bombay Chronicle was effected without any change of political opinion in Mr. Horniman, for Mr. Horniman now seems to manifest a dread for change of political opinion in any one. . . Why only the other day in New India there was a desire expressed for Mrs. Besant to address the American House of Representatives on behalf of India very much like what Mr. Balfour did on behalf of the British Empire. So under the new dispensation of Home Rule for India the real exponents of Indian public opinion will be people like Mrs. Besant and Mr. Horniman, and this state of affairs is being worked up to by people who loudly proclaim that they are Swadeshis. . . . The people of India, as a rule, are so gentle and so full of gratitude and also they are very amenable to flattery especially by a European. It is by flattery that Mrs. Besant has secured so many Indians to follow her lead. Flattery will undoubtedly be used by other Englishmen and Englishwomen who are anxious to control and lead the Indian people. And if India should ever secure Home Rule, the real leaders of the country who would control the people as well as the Home Rule Government will be this class of hirelings and adventurers. . . . Mr. Horniman sneers at the fact that Raja of Kurupam and Dr. Nayar have supported the action of Lord Pentland. Would it have been an improvement if, instead of these two Indians of position in this Presidency, Lord Pentland had the support of Mrs. Besant the adventuress and Mr. Horniman the hireling?"

19. New India, of the 5th July, writes:—"Amongst the multitude of counsels which 'candid friends' impress upon the people of this country to induce them to desist from agitation or educative propaganda on behalf of the urgent reforms required in the Government of their land, there is one to which we would draw special attention today. . . . One argument which is supposed to be very conclusive by anti-Home Rulers against this demand is that it is not right to proceed with it at a time when the Empire is engaged in a stern struggle on behalf of liberty. We are also told, that in refraining from doing so, we in India will be only giving effect to a policy and understanding accepted by all political parties in England. It is needless, of course, to point out that the summoning of the Imperial Conference, the constitution of the Imperial War Cabinet and the carrying through in Parliament of Electoral Reform and women's suffrage on a scale unparalleled in the history of Parliamentary progress in England, constitute by themselves a conclusive reply to our 'candid friends' . . . We in India have been crying hoarse over the failure of the Government to make a declaration in favour of our just aspirations for self-government, and though this demand has now been backed up by the London Times, the declaration is yet to come . . . . The principle on which this avoidance of controversy is advocated has thus been mischievously misconceived and is the reverse of the state of things in England . . . Apart from the identity of Hindu-Musalman entente and the union achieved of the two great communities in Lucknow last year, apart from the unificatien of the two wings of the Congress which has now been accomplished on the basis of constitutional agitation for self-government within the Empire, there does not exist any class of the people of India, who, on account of the demand for Home Rule, can, by any conceivable hypothesis, raise a violent political controversy with any other class . . . Where, then, does the violent political controversy or, as we may put it, the violent opposition to legitimate reforms come from? It comes from the bureaucratic class and their henchmen in the Anglo-Indian press . . . That the people of the country should be penalised with repression, because the opponents of their legitimate demand are fierce over it, is a process of vicarious suffering which only the authors can have the hardihood to justify."

New India, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

The demand for Home Rule.

20. New India, of the 5th July, states:—"The old Maharaja of Bobbili has preferred his old love, the Madras Mail, among the anti-Home Rule agencies, for the communication of his precious views on Home Rule for India. Those who have known this astute Zamindar's previous performances will not be unfamiliar with the paternal style which he always affects when he addresses his appeals to the members of his own class, nor will they be surprised at views which to the average educated citizen of the day will come forth as from a sepulchre or from the remnants of a bygone age. . . . We fancy no one ever expected the Maharaja of Bobbili, with his training, antecedents and associations, to be disposed a priori in favour of anything like democratic institutions. For, call it Home Rule, self-government, Congress propaganda, constitutional reform, or whatever you will—it is certainly a thing which no aristocrat, least of all one who has such natural pride of ancestry and autocratic dominion, can feel natural sympathy for. Such sympathy can come about only as a result of a political education rare among this class in India and more often denied to them in the atmosphere in which they live. . . Neither the Ruling Chiefs nor the estate holders belonging to any of the ancient classes of nobility in the land, have cared to interest themselves in the politics of the average man, much less in the politics of the educated classes in British India. . . It is, no doubt, open to the Maharaja of Bobbili and those who think with him, to believe 'that as their status is chiefly based on land they must take Lord Pentland's warning as a piece of friendly advice, if not as a paternal one, as he is the representative of the King-Emperor.' But when he went beyond his own class, or rather his own adherents in that class, to tender advice to those who disapprove of the internments, he was guilty of the very thing with which he most wantonly charged Mrs. Besant, in connection with her interview with His Excellency, viz., impertinence. It is impertinence for him to tell the people, far more in touch with public opinion and conversant with the affairs of the common folk than this aristocratic 'Zamindar' can be, that it was 'a foolish thing' for any one of them to speak against the internments and that if they were the well-wishers of the interned they should go to Mrs. Besant and give her sound advice. . . For all that their Anglo-Indian detractors may do to collect and magnify trifles, they will hardly trouble their heads over the out-of-date lucubrations of a 'retired' Zamindar, though he may have been decorated with the mere title of a 'Maharaja' by a paternal Government of bureaucrats."

New India, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

The Maharaja of Bobbili and Home Rule.

Justice, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, Justice, of the 6th July, observes:—"The Brahman understudy of Mrs. Besant, who is now conducting New India makes an attempt to sneer at the Maharaja of Bobbili and to read him a lecture on political education and democratic institutions. Not many months ago we had another instance where a nobleman was threatened with attacks in New India if he presided over a particular meeting which was distasteful to the Home Rulers. Here is another instance where a nobleman is made the subject of an attack, because he had the courage openly to express his opinion against the so-called Home Rule movement. . . The Home Rule print starts by drawing attention to the previous performances of the Maharaja of Bobbili. That has come to be a habit with this newspaper. The Maharaja of Bobbili has no reason to be ashamed of any of his previous performances. On the contrary he has a good deal to be proud of. . . We refrain from subjecting to such a process the "previous performances" of the High Priestess of Home Rule, because we do not want to produce an attack of severe nausea in the respectable and clean minded citizens of this Presidency. . . Our complaint all along has been that people with practically no political education and experience are clamouring for Home Rule straightway. This Poona Brahman journalist and his Madras Brahman vakil colleagues are among the people who have had the least political education. The only political education which they seem to have had is to listen to the harangues of self-constituted leaders like Mrs. Besant. That extraordinary lady, who said in 1911 "Let the Indian citizen first learn to stand and walk before he asks to rule and govern", says in 1916 that Home Rule for India is overdue. In other words, a political preacher who thinks that a country like India, whose citizens in 1911 could not stand and walk but were ready in 1916 to run and jump, cannot be a reliable political teacher. . . We have to endorse the remark of one of our correspondents who said that the Home Rule agitation is carried on by sheer impudence, and it is the embryo politicians—who have had practically no political training, who cannot even understand the budget when a copy of it is put into their hands—who now claim the right of controlling that budget, who are attacking their seniors like Bupendranath Basu and Sir Narayan Chandavarkar because they do not move fast enough for them. . . We are told that it is impertinent for the Maharaja of Bobbili "to tell the people far more in touch with public opinion and conversant with the affairs of the common folk than this aristocratic zamindar can be that it was a foolish thing for anyone of them to speak against the internments." But who are the people more conversant with the affairs of the common folk than the Maharaja of Bobbili? . . The Home Rule gang must certainly be on their last legs if they are relying on the Maharaja of Bikanir as the last support of their cause. Is it that they cannot or will not understand the speeches of the Maharaja of Bikanir? Whatever it may be, we are glad to see that they appreciate the views of the Maharaja of Bikanir, and if they will turn over a new leaf and follow the lead of such eminent ruling Princes as the Maharaja of Bikanir, the Maharaja of Mysore and the Maharaja Gaekwar whom they quote with approval there may be some chance yet of their turning out useful citizens. But if they continue to worship at the shrine of the advertising adventuress they are more likely to find themselves inside a lunatic asylum than in the Council Chamber weilding supreme authority and pulling the Governor by the nose."

IV.—Native States.

21. In commenting on a correspondent's allegations regarding the Honourable the Resident's remarks on seeing New India and the Bombay Chronicle during a visit to the Mysore Government Public Library, Bangalore, the Karnataka, of the 30th June, has the following:—

Karnataka, Bangalore City, June 30th, 1917.

The British Resident in Mysore and Home Rule.

"Our British Resident and Home Rule.

"It is our obvious duty to express our strong disapproval of the action alleged to have been taken by the Hon'ble Mr. Cobb ostensibly in his solicitude for the mental well-being of our youth. The Public Library is not an institution maintained by irresponsible agitators or mischievous seditionists and its committee of management includes several gentlemen of high official status, one member at least being an Englishman and a Christian Missionary. When these do not see anything harmful in New India, it is strange that the high British Resident should deem it his duty to taboo that famous journal. . . Altogether, the crusade said to have been begun by the Hon'ble Mr. H. V. Cobb is not only bound to be futile, but it will also have the unfortunate consequence of shaking the faith of the people in the sympathy and good sense of the instruments of the British Government in this country. . . We fervently hope the Hon'ble Mr. Cobb is mindful of the importance of not creating needless irritation in the popular mind and of maintaining unimpaired the high and noble traditions of Liberal statesmanship bequeathed to him by Sir Hugh Daly."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

22. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 28th June, says that thefts are on the increase in the Kaikalur taluk and that the Police do not appear to take steps to prevent them. It hopes that the District Magistrate Mr. Campbell will enquire into the matter and do the needful.

Thefts.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

23. The Andhraprakasika, of the 27th June, speaks highly of the Police in England and in contrasting them with the Police in India, remarks:—The Police in India neglect their duties. But they make salams to persons wearing hats and pantaloons and having a stick in their hands. They are too much given to sleep. When they do not know what to do, they arrest some lame or blind man who passes urine on the side of the road. This has become the common duty of the policeman here. We do not often hear of policemen arresting thieves. It is said that sometimes they abet theft. But we do not know how far this is true. The people fear the Police. Policemen connive at the faults of big men; but they arrest any others committing the same faults. The Police are as much despised in this country as they are honoured in foreign countries. May the Indian Police loyally discharge their duties and may the Government put them in the right way.

The Indian Police.

(c) Jails.

Dravidan, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

24. The Dravidan, of the 3rd July, is glad to learn that the 4,000 Indian prisoners who was selected from the jails in the Punjab for field work in Mesopotamia conducted themselves very satisfactorily during their stay there, and asserts that, if this system is adopted in the case of every jail, it will give an opportunity to a few of the prisoners therein to gain their liberty and learn to lead a respectable life.

Indian prisoners in Mesopotamia.

(d) Education.

Swadesamitran, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

25. The Swadesamitran, of the 27th June, writes:—Our readers would not have forgotten that a resolution, brought up in the Bombay Legislative Council last December, by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel, that primary education should be made free and compulsory at least in such places as are municipalities was lost, on account of the majority of members having voted against it. But, the Honourable Member, undaunted by this, gave notice to that Government, some months back, of a Bill to be introduced by him, with the object of introducing free and compulsory primary education in all municipal towns, and we now learn that the Government of India, to whom this Bill was sent up, have raised no objection to the object thereof. So, this Bill will be considered by the Legislative Council of that province, when it meets next month. The failure of the last resolution on this subject might be due to the fact that the non-officials nominated by the Government as well as the Government Members might have deemed it to be their duty to vote on the side of the Government. But now, as the object of the Bill has been approved by the Government of India, we hope that all the members will vote for it unanimously and help the advancement of primary education. It used to be said by the bureaucrats that there were not sufficient funds to make primary education free and compulsory all at once and that it might cause hardship to the poor people. Though we have been praying for this for a long time, it is quite possible for these bureaucrats to give us the reply always that the time has not yet come for it, and offer the same excuse of want of funds. If so, we do not know when even a beginning is to be made in this matter. If this step had been taken already, education would have spread much by this time. If even now we are told that the time has not yet come for it, how can it satisfy the Indians?

Primary education in Bombay.

26. The Prapanchamitran,* of the 27th May, writes:—It is indeed regrettable that the Madras Government should have prohibited students from attending political meetings. If the students, who are to be the citizens of the future, are not to see our leaders speaking eloquently in political meetings and discussing political questions and gain an experience thereby now, when are they to do it? It is our opinion, too, that students should not take an active part in politics. as it may affect their education prejudicially; but even an ordinary man will admit that the students should see the work done by the leaders of the country and learn lessons therefrom. So, this order of the Madras Government will cause dissatisfaction to all.

Students and politics.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, May 27th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 29th June, also refers to the reply of the Secretary of State in the House of Commons to a question, about the order of the Government of Madras prohibiting students from attending political meetings, that he was not prepared to discuss the propriety of the action of the Madras Government, who have informed him that the said order was passed in the interests of the students, who were being dragged to take part in an undesirable political agitation, and adds:—The words of the Government of Madras are perhaps gospel truth to the Secretary of State. Every one knows that Lord Pentland himself had stated before this that there was no fault to be found with the students. Mr. Chamberlain believes that the order has been passed simply because students are dragged to take part in an undesirable political agitation. Has there been no political agitation before this, and have not the students been present at political meetings? We have to think that the Secretary of State is unaware of the declaration by the people that no undesirable agitation is being carried on now and that the order of the Madras Government is an unwarranted one. Mr. Chamberlain would have done better to ascertain the opinion of the public here, before he stated that he was not prepared to question the propriety of the order of the Madras Government. If the word of the bureaucrats is taken to be gospel truth, what weight can there be for the opinion of the public?

Students and politics.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

27. Anent the appointment of Mr. T. V. Sivakumara Sastriyar as the Acting Vice-Principal of the Teachers' College, Saidapet, the Hindu Nesan, of the 28th June, expresses a hope that this gentleman will be confirmed in this appointment, as he has acted in it once already, and adds:—It is necessary that the Vice-Principalship of this College is given to an Indian, as it is only an Indian Vice-Principal that can understand the likes and dislikes of the graduates undergoing training in that college. As the Hon'ble Mr. Stone is well aware of the capability of Mr. Sastriyar, he is bound to recommend his confirmation in the appointment.

The Vice-Principalship of the Teachers' College, Saidapet.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

28. The Lokopakari, of the 2nd July, writes:—The condition of students in India has now come to be pitiable indeed. They are not able to pass the examinations in large numbers. The ideal of education in India seems to be the passing of examinations and not culture, and numerous restrictions are imposed on the students both in schools and in examinations. A good number of them have not been able to get through the higher examinations for the last few years and this is attributed by educational experts to students wasting their time in congresses and conferences. That is why the Madras and Bombay Governments have issued orders prohibiting students from attending political meetings. These orders will really benefit the students in their educational advancement.

The condition of students.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

29. Referring to the deliberations of an Educational Conference held recently in Bombay under the presidency of Sir Narayan Chandravarkar, the Swadesamitran, of the 3rd July, observes:—As those who were present at this conference are educational experts having experience in that field, great weight should be given to their views even by the officials. The first point to be considered by this conference was the constitution of the University Senate. Ever since the University Act was modified in the time of Lord Curzon, the Universities lost the independence which they had and have now become institutions subject to official control. The Senate is at the top of the organization for imparting education. That the conference should have first considered about the constitution of this body and next about primary education which forms the base of this organisation, shows that these are the most important factors. All people including our Government admit that every one should know the three R's. In other civilised countries proper steps are taken to give effect to this opinion But in India alone the whole thing stops with the talk and is not translated into action. Why should a thing possible in other countries be impossible here? They plead want of funds and want of teachers. If it is suggested that the expenditure on other items may be reduced, and that on education increased, the Government do not agree to it and say that all the other items of expenditure are necessary. Nothing has been done to get a sufficient number of teachers trained. The Government say that they will increase the expenditure on education gradually year by year. According to the present system it will take centuries for all the males to know to read and write. But it has been possible to introduce free and compulsory education in Baroda, Mysore and other States. If it is stated that this will cost far more to British India than to these States, it cannot be forgotten that the income of British India is far more than that of the States. We cannot understand what objection the Government can have even for the municipalities and the local boards giving free and compulsory education without asking for any assistance from the Government. The application by a municipality to be permitted to do so was refused by the Madras Government last year, and a resolution moved on the same subject some months back by Mr. Patel in the Bombay Legislative Council was not accepted by that Government. But the Government of India recently accepted the principle that municipalities and local boards should give free and compulsory education to all, and they have also permitted a Bill to be introduced on this subject in the Bombay Legislative Council. These used to be a wide gulf between the acceptance of a principle and its application in practice. So, it is a very timely act on the part of the conference to have passed a resolution urging on the introduction of free and compulsory education now. We hope that, on seeing the fate of Mr. Patel's resolution in the Bombay Legislative Council, this question may be brought up in other Legislative Councils also. We would like to lay stress on one point at this juncture. It is very necessary that there should be one school in every village. In places where the authorities have not started a school, the people should establish one.

The Bombay Educational Conference.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

* Received in the current week.

The same paper refers to the statement made by Sir Narayan Chandravarkar as the President of this conference that the attempt of the Government to prevent students from interfering with politics cannot succeed, and adds:—Sir Narayan Chandravarkar was a Judge of the Bombay High Court and a Vice-Chancellor of the University of that province. He has a real interest and knowledge in educational matters, and he cannot be said to be a nationalist in politics. So, no one can easily refute his statement. A resolution has also been passed by this conference that there has been no necessity whatever for the order of the Bombay Government about students and that this unreasonable order should be cancelled. We hope, therefore, that the criticism of Sir Narayan Chandravarkar and the resolution of this conference will be noted by Provincial heads and the bureaucrats.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

University.

30. The Andhraprakasika, of the 28th June, attributes the great slaughter in the University examinations to the examiners who are not in touch with students and who set difficult questions which no one could answer, and says:—It is only the teachers that know anything about students. The University has gone wrong by appointing as examiners persons other than teachers. If there should be more passes, the University should appoint teachers as examiners. We hope the University will soon follow this suggestion.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

Old Matriculates: Secondary school teachers.

31. The Andhraprakasika, of the 28th June, reproduces the letter under this heading already abstracted from the Desamata of the 20th June, in page 1836 of the weekly report.

32. The Kistnapatrika, of the 30th June, deplores the miserable condition of the many unsuccessful students of the schools and colleges, and observes:—It is regrettable that all are stranded in non-national schools and colleges in the hope of entering Government service. The time is come when students and guardians should think of new methods of education. None but those who have no self-respect take to "non-national" colleges. The National College at Masulipatam and the National School at Madanapalle are cordially inviting students. May they respond!

Dependent students.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 30th, 1917.

33. Referring to the various attempts of the Indian leaders to make primary education compulsory, and to the difference of opinion as to whether this or self-government should be the subject of agitation in the first instance, the Manorama, of the 29th June, points out that, both being equally necessary, the protagonists of each should strenuously work for the attainment of their respective objects, and that the present stir in the matter of self-government, which must be regarded as a blessing in disguise, and not as a bad sign, will be equally desirable in the case of education too, and observes that, inasmuch as the India Government, who have somewhat changed their policy on the subject of primary education, have given their assent to the introduction into the Bombay Council of a Bill for making primary education compulsory, it is to be hoped that similar Bills will be introduced in the local council and in those of other provinces, and that public-spirited members on the various councils will do the needful in the matter.

Primary education.

MANORAMA, Calicut, June 29th, 1917.

34. The Uttara Taraka, of the 30th June, deplores the disappointing results of the last Intermediate examination, which are considerably worse than those of the previous year, and hopes that the matter will receive the attention of the Government and of the University authorities.

The Intermediate examination results.

UTTARA TARAKA, Parur, June 30th, 1917.

(e) Local and Municipal.

35. The Andhraprakasika, of the 26th June, says:—We regret that the Government are determined to raise the municipal tax in the city of Madras, in spite of protest from the Commissioners. It is undesirable and objectionable to impose additional taxes on the already-overburdened tax-payers. We pray that the Government will not be in a hurry about this matter, and request that they will take into consideration the other means of raising money suggested by the Commissioners.

The municipal tax.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

36. The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th June, says, with reference to the supply of drinking water in the City of Madras, that the results are not proportionate to the large expenditure on the scheme of water-supply in Madras and prays that the authorities will find out the defect in the scheme.

Water-supply in Madras.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 23th June, complains that the tank in Nizampatam which is the chief source of supply of water for drinking purposes in the village, is in disrepair and requests the Taluk Board President to inspect the tank personally and do the needful.

Scarcity of drinking water.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

(h) Railways.

37. Adverting to the new appointment of an official to ascertain the best means of reducing, as far as possible, the difficulties that now exist in connection with the traffic on railways, the Swadesamitran, of the 27th June, observes:—The telegram received on this subject from Simla makes it appear that this official has been appointed to secure promptitude in connection with military traffic. Every one will admit that this traffic should necessarily be conducted with expedition. Still we hope that the obstacles and inconveniences to the people in travelling on railways will also be removed as much as possible, and that this subject will not be ignored.

An official to supervise the traffic on railways.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

(j) Salt and Abkāri.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

Punishment by blackmark.

38. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, criticising the blackmarking and other punishments in the Salt and Abkāri deparment, says:—The Government have distinctly laid down the rule that Government servants, who have not been made permanent in Government service, should not be punished by black mark. But officers do, in violation of this rule, punish them in that way, and higher officers do not note such irregularities though they are furnished with a list of punishments every quarter.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

Rewards.

39. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th June, dwells upon the evils of the system of giving rewards to officers in the Salt and Abkāri Department, and suggests that that system may be abolished and the money thus saved utilised for purposes for the carrying out of which the authorities now plead want of funds.

(k) General.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, June 25th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

40. Referring to the statement said to have been made by Mr. Austen Chamberlain, in reply to a question on this subject by Sir A. Williamson in the House of Commons, that the action of the Madras Government was quite necessary and that the other Provincial Governments had satisfied themselves that the activities of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues had excited unrest which might easily become dangerous at present, the Hindu Nesan, of the 25th June writes:—This reply of the Secretary of State for India, when excited public meetings are held in different places and telegrams are flying, communicating resolutions passed therein that the internment order should be cancelled, cannot but cause great surprise to the Indians. It shows that the Secretary of State for India supports the manner in which the Local Government have exercised their discretion in this matter. Now the question arises as to how the resolution passed in the public meeting held at Madras praying for a cancellation of these orders can have any effect, and it is a point about which the Indian leaders should consider carefully. Our people should take the trouble of making the British public know these resolutions passed by Indian leaders, after deep consideration without being impatient in the least. The reply of the Secretary of State makes us presume that he would not have bestowed much thought on the "sufficient reasons to believe that Mrs. Besant has acted or is likely to act in a manner prejudicial to public safety", referred to in the notice served on Mrs. Besant. He may have much faith in the words of the local officials. Still if he had waited for some time to know the popular opinion on the subject and then given his reply, it would have been much better. Though the reply of the Secretary of State as wired to us by Reuter will disappoint those crying incessantly for Home Rule for India, it will surely infuse a greater enthusiasm in the people working for the ideal of Home Rule.

The Swadesamitran, of the 27th June, publishes reports, from its correspondents of protest meetings held about these internments at Tanjore, Madura, Kaniyur, Sangagiri and Abinavam. In the last three places those present at the meeting resolved to buy only swadesi goods. There was also a ladies' meeting at Sankaridrug, at which, in addition to a resolution of protest against the internments, a swadesi vow was also taken by all those present.

The same paper reproduces in Tamil the following comments of the Times of Ceylon on this subject:—In our opinion, the policy of repression begun against Mrs. Besant, cannot be taken to include the statesmanship of Lord Pentland. We entirely agree that the methods adopted by Mrs. Besant, in political matters cannot at all be approved. Nevertheless, considering the excitement caused by the internment order, it can easily be seen that Mrs. Besant is now a greater menace to public safety than before. The Government of Madras have given her now a greater influence and glory than she had till now. It will be hard indeed to point out a more shortsighted act than this in the history of Indian politics.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 27th June, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held in Trichinopoly to protest against these internments, at which a resolution was also passed that, in token of these internments, the people should use only swadeshi goods, except when they cannot do without foreign goods.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

In publishing the proceedings of a meeting of the Bengal Muslim League, in which it was resolved that the members of the League should all become members of the Home Rule League, and that the elected members of the Legislative Councils should resign their seats as an indication of the condemnation of these internment orders, the same paper remarks that, while it has no objection to the members of the Muslim League being induced to join the Home Rule League, it cannot approve of the proposal that the elected members of the Legislative Councils should resign their seats.

Under the heading "short notes", the Dravidan, of the 27th June, repeats its opinion that the action taken by Lord Pentland in this matter was quite a justifiable one in the interest of the public peace and the prestige of the Government and, scoffing at the statement made by Mrs. Besant at the Chittoor District Conference that she, being a white woman, could do whatever she pleased and that her white skin would prevent the Government from doing any harm to her, observes that it is the duty of all leaders now to try to maintain a healthy relationship between the rulers and the ruled in this country.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

Referring to the swadeshi vow taken at the several meetings held to protest against these internments, Dravida Patrika, of the 27th June, says:—This vow was taken in Bengal when it was divided in the time of Lord Curzon, and it led to the starting of many new industries and the development of many old ones. When Bengal was reunited, the people became satisfied. Now they have woke up once again. The people should keep up to this vow. This will help the improvement of industries in our country to a large extent. It is the best means to make those in England attend to our grievances and redress them. To support swadeshi goods and avoid foreign ones cannot be deemed to be antagonistic to the Government. They are bound to help this movement in the interests of the country.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

The Dravida Patrika, of the 27th June, publishes a letter from a correspondent, who, referring to the intensity of the public feeling which has been roused by this action of the Madras Government and the condemnation of this action by the Indians and Europeans alike, expresses his conviction that the very step intended by the Madras Government to suppress the Home Rule movement will give an impetus to its development and will lead to the correction of the mistakes of the bureaucrats in India and the conferment of numerous benefits on her, and concludes:—The Government should note the public opinion in this matter. They will do well to consider this opinion and cancel their unnecessary order. Even if they do not do so, it is my humble opinion that it will prove very beneficial; for it will doubly help the development of a new spirit in this country.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 28th June, publishes the proceedings of meetings held in Periyakulam, Chingleput and Negapatam, to protest against these orders of the Madras Government.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

The same paper reproduces in Tamil the substance of the cable sent by the Hon'ble Sir Edulji Wacha as President of the Bombay Presidency Association, protesting against these orders, which appears in the Hindu of the same date and observes:—Mr. Wacha does not belong to the party of Mrs. Besant and cannot even be said to approve entirely of her methods. Even in the message, no mention is made of the inconvenience personally caused to her by these orders and her opinions and methods. The gist of the message is only that it is not proper to have recourse to repressive measures now and that the aims of the Government in the matter of self-government should be published immediately and the aspirations of the people fulfilled soon. We hope that the truth of these statements will be realised and that the Government will come forward without delay to adopt proper remedies.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

Referring to the message called to Messrs. Lloyd George, Chamberlian and Asquith by the President of the Bombay Presidency Association about these internments, the Hindu Nesan, of the 28th June, remarks that, if these three gentlemen avail themselves of the opportunity now offered to them, consider deeply the present situation and take such action as is necessary in a liberal spirit, it will betoken their superior wisdom.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 29th June, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held at Mudikondan to protest against these orders.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

Lokopakari, of the 2nd July, takes exception to the view expressed by some short-sighted Indians that, as a set-off against these internments, the elected members in the Provincial Legislative Councils in India should resign their seats and that Indians should not enlist in the Indian Defence force; and adds:—According to the saying that, out of evil cometh good, this war tends to confer numerous benefits on the Indians. We should not let loose this opportunity. If we refuse to enlist in the volunteer crops for the protection of our country, as called upon by the Government, we will not be fit for having Home Rule too. We can rule our country only after saving it from others. Though there are distinctions between Englishmen and Indians in the regulations applying to those enlisting in this corps, we should ignore them for the present and demonstrate our loyalty and capability by enlisting in the corps. If we do our duty, our aspirations cannot but be fulfilled. Hasty and impulsive acts will be of no avail. What connection is there between Mrs. Besant and the defence of India? It will be unwise on our part to think of not taking advantage of the new privilege granted to us by the Government of enlisting in the Defence Force.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 3rd July, reproduces in Tamil the communication appearing in the Hindu, of the 2nd instant from Miss Arundale describing the way in which Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues are taking their stay at Ootacamund, quite cheerfully.

The same paper publishes in detail the proceedings of the public meeting held on the 2nd July in the Gokhale Hall to collect subscriptions for the Besant Relief Fund.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

The Swadesamitran, of the 4th July, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held in Kumbakōnam under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Acharyar, to protest against the order of internment against Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia, at which a swadeshi vow also was taken.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

The Home Rule movement and the methods of the Government.

41. The Swadesamitran, of the 27th June, recapitulates the different acts of repression of the Provincial Governments in India against the popular leaders, which indicate, in the opinion of this paper, nothing but the fact that the authorities are not in favour of the Home Rule movement and repeats that, whatever may be the view of the authorities, it is not compatible with statesmanship to subject the patriots now engaged throughout the country in the agitation for Home Rule to repressive measures and that such action will not be conducive to the benefit of the country.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

The Bombay Maternity Hospital.

42. The Swadesamitran, of the 27th June, refers to an Indian lady having been appointed the Superintendent of this hospital and remarks:—Who can deny that it will be an advantage to Indian women, who resort to such hospitals, if the Superintendent thereof is an Indian lady? This raises the question as to why, in Madras and other places, Indian ladies should not be employed in larger numbers in maternity hospitals. If Indian ladies are employed a larger number of Indian women will resort to these hospitals, as an Indian lady will sympathise with them and understand their condition and needs well. Moreover, if the place of Superintendent in hospitals is given to Indian ladies it will encourage many Indian women to improve their medical knowledge and obtain degrees therein.

43. The Prapanchamitran, of the 27th May, expresses its satisfaction at the appointment of Mr. F. R. Hemmingway as the Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies, and observes:—We knew of this appointment long ago. Our readers may remember the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar in the local Legislative Council, last November, that this appointment should be given only to an Indian after Mr. L. D. Swamikannu Pillai and the non-committal reply of Sir Alexander Cardew thereto. We were laughing within our sleeves then. New India criticises the appointment, by the Government, of an Englishman to this place, ignoring the opinion of the people. We cannot agree with the view of this paper. Our opinion is, as was observed by Abraham Lincoln, that where there is no "democracy in which the Government is conducted by the people for them" much good cannot result, whoever may hold whichever appointment. We have seen high Indian officials expressing their regret at things not being done in a manner beneficial to the people, because the "Dorai" does not like it. Until the Government is conducted in accordance with the opinion of the people, it will be a mistake to think that it would be better, if this appointment were held by an Indian. Mr. Hemmingway is a very good man and one who treats kindly even ordinary people. We heartily approve of his nomination to this post. Amongst the mistakes committed by the Madras Government, some good things also occur like this at times.

Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, May 27th, 1917.

44. Adverting to the appointment of the Hon'ble Babu Bupendranath Basu and Sir Prabhashankar Patni as Members of the Secretary of State's Council, the Hindu Nesan, of the 27th June, observes:—It will indeed be a matter of satisfaction to the Indians that the proposal of appointing a third Indian Member to this Council has been given effect to now and that Babu Bupendranath Basu has been appointed to this place. The appointment of Sir Kistna Govinda Gupta, who was the first Indian to get into the Secretary of State's Council, had at least the one flaw that he was an official. In the case of Babu Bupendranath, even this defect does not exist. The other Indian appointed now, Sir Prabhashankar Patni, has a slight official touch about him, for he was in the Executive Council of the Governor of Bombay for some time. But we have no reason to be dissatisfied with his appointment in place of Sirdar Daljit Singh, because the former has a better knowledge of Indian political matters than the latter. The action of the Secretary of State in approving of the order interning Mrs. Besant on one side and appointing Babu Bupendranath Basu to his Council on the other, indicates that the Government, while they hit with one hand try to fondle with the other. Under these circumstances, it will not be wise on the part of the Indian leaders to refuse to recruit men for the Indian Defence Force and to resign their seats in the Legislative Councils, instead of pointing out their grievances boldly.

The Secretary of State's Council.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

Adverting to the appointment of the Hon'ble Bupendranath Basu and Sir Prabhashankar Patni as Members of this Council, the Muslim Dutan, of the 30th June, remarks that, as these nominations increase the number of Indians in the Secretary of State's Council to three and as all these three have been in India all along, they may be expected to acquaint the Secretary of State with the real condition of India and the aspirations of the Indians.

The Secretary of State's Council.

MUSLIM DUTAN, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

The Lokopakari, of the 2nd July, also refers to these appointments and observes that the nomination of the Hon'ble Bupendranath Basu should give special satisfaction to the Indians as he is not an official, unlike the Indian members that were nominated to this council till now, and expects the Babu to seek proper remedies for the complications that have arisen in connection with the Home Rule movement in India.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

Dravidan, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

45. In the course of a leader under this heading, the Dravidan, of the 27th June, expresses that, instead of the people taking a hasty vow to use only swadeshi goods, boycotting all foreign ones, they would do well to take a vow to get rid of the distinctions amongst themselves and observes:—We do not think that movements such as the swadeshi movement, which has come to the front along with the cry for Home Rule can result in any good. We deem it to be a wrong course begun at a wrong end. We must first try to reform ourselves. If the distinctions among us are done away with, and we improve our condition by the proper advance of education, our benign Government are quite ready to render us all assistance in the matter of improving the industries and manufactures of this country. So, if without hastily losing ourselves in the Home Rule and swadeshi movements, we co-operate in the matter of social reform and the advancement of education and in the matter of benefitting the country, as much as is possible, it will improve in its condition gradually.

Swadeshism.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th June, contains a Telugu version of the letter written by Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar and Mr. Telang in response to the question of several Home Rule Leagues, declaring that the swadeshi vow is not compulsory on all who wish to join Home Rule Leagues.

The swadeshi.

Dravida Patrika, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

46. The Dravida Patrika, of the 27th June, dwells upon how self-government within the British Empire demanded for India by the Congress of 1906 is in keeping with the change in the ideas of the men all over the world and with the replacement, in more than one country, of an autocracy by a democratic constitution, adds:—This idea of securing self-government for India has been gradually growing strong among the people of this country, and it is neither desirable nor possible to prevent them from entertaining this idea. The Englishmen should deem it to be their foremost duty to advance the interests of India. It is they that have been ordained by the Almighty to be the instruments of the regeneration of this country. It is the performance of this duty successfully that will glorify the name of the Englishman.

India and self-government.

The same paper reproduces in Tamil a message sent by Mr. Ritche of South Africa to the people of India about the attempts made by the latter to secure Home Rule for India, in the course of which he is reported to have stated as follows:—When every country in the world is now thought fit to govern itself, it is really a mistake to say that India cannot do so. Those who assert that the people in India are incapable of managing their own affairs are insulting this country. India, which governed itself for thousands of years and which gave a shape to the civilization of many countries, can on no account be deemed to be unfit to manage her own affairs. So I request the leaders of the Home Rule movement not to give up their efforts until their object is accomplished. Publish your prayers, which are just and most constitutional, undaunted by thousands of obstacles and several enemies. I assure you that in the end victory will be yours.

Swadesamitran, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

47. The Swadesamitran, of the 28th June, writes:—It is the opinion of the westerners that every one has a right to drink and that is why the western Governments do not like to put a stop altogether to drink. But our people have for long believed that drinking is as much a heinous sin as murder. No one can deny that the drunkard, though he does not murder others, gradually kills himself. The people of this country will deem it to be a reasonable measure, if the Government, which consider an attempt to commit suicide to be a crime and inflict a punishment therefor, also punish drinking, which leads to gradual suicide. This is why the prohibition by the Begum of Bhopal of drinking by any Muhammadan is appreciated by all. If the Government of India would also follow the wake of this Native State, numerous poor families will be spared from misery. Though the Europeans had not till now an aversion to drunkards like us, this feeling is coming into existence now. We have from time to time noted the measures adopted by the Allied countries to prevent and curtail the drinking habit. It is clear from the London Times, that these measures have resulted in a material improvement in the condition of the poorer classes in England. Considering the easy methods adopted by the authorities in England to curtail the drinking habit, what looks strange is why they have not adopted these measures in other places as well. They have realised that the best means is to make it difficult to obtain intoxicants, and have on this principle closed several shops and declared that, in the remaining shops, intoxicants can be sold only at stated hours. They have also ordered that sweets can be sold freely in liquor shops By these measures, the authorities in England have reduced the consumption of liquor. But it is a matter for regret that, though the supervision of the sale of liquor in India has been only in the hands of the Government, the quantity consumed has been gradually increasing. The sale of liquor is a source of large income to the Government in India and the Government may therefore be afraid that their income might be reduced, if the quantity of liquor sold is curtailed. But this income, derived from an unjust source, should be detested. The Government will not eventually be put to any loss on account of reduction in this income. It is the prosperity of the people that is a great asset to the Government, and this income may be derived from other trades and industries, which would flourish by the reduction of the consumption of liquor. The Government too feel that the consumption of liquor is increasing by leaps and bounds, as is seen from their appointment of a committee to inquire into the causes of this. We have already pointed out that its constitution is not satisfactory. Rev. Leith has written a letter to the Press in which he takes exception to the Government not having included in this committee even one of those who have been striving to do away with the drinking habit altogether. He objects also to this committee not having been asked to report whether the Licensing Board in Calcutta, which has done much good, may not be copied in this Presidency also. As long as the Government derive an income from the sale of liquor, the power of granting licences for liquor shops should not rest with the Government, or the Government should, without caring for income, reduce the number of shops and the hours during which they are to be open, as is done by the British Government. No one here will object to any rule that may be framed in order to reduce the consumption of liquor. Some import merchants may object to it but not the people. Under these circumstances, why should the Government hesitate to reduce the consumption of liquor ?

Sale of liquor in England and India.

48. Adverting to the fact that, out of 1,300 Indians who have come forward to enlist in this force, 690 are from this Presidency, the Swadesamitran, of the 28th June, remarks :—

The Indian Defence Force.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

Though the educated classes have been criticising the acts of the bureaucrats and agitating for Home Rule, it is they that have now come forward also to help the Government in the matter of recruiting men for this force. It is seen from a list, furnished by Sir Sivaswami Ayyar, of the men who have joined this force till now, that 394 are Brahmans. So we can lay stress upon the necessity of even those who have been professing to be loyal and to be abstaining from political agitation and of the educated among all classes coming forward freely now to join this force.

The Lokopakari, of the 2nd July, quotes figures which show that out of 690 men who have come forward to enlist in this force till now, 394 are Brahmans and says :—We have often been repeating that the Brahmans are superior to other classes in every respect, and this has been proved even in the case of the Indian Defence Force. It is a fact to be noted by the Non-Brahmans, who, out of jealousy, will not admit that the Brahmans are foremost on account of their excellent habits and education, that the latter have come up even in the military line, leaving the other classes behind. It is the devotion and perseverance of the Brahmans that help them to advance in every respect.

The Indian Defence Force.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The Dravidan, of the 3rd July, scoffs at the argument of a correspondent to New India that because 394 out of 690 men, who have till now enlisted in the Indian Defence

The Indian Defence Force.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Force, are Brahmans, it bespeaks a greater enthusiasm on the part of the Brahmans for the defence of the country, and points out that the majority of the men in the regular Indian army are Non-Brahmans and that these have been truly and loyally serving His Majesty and his Government from time immemorial.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

Indians and higher appointments in the army.

49. The Swadesamitran, of the 28th June, reproduces a communication from the Truth, a western journal, which refutes the argument, against the conferment of higher appointments in the army on the Indians, that they cannot be military leaders, by quoting the example of Haider Ali, Tippu Sultan and others and, remarking that if an opportunity is given to the Indians such leaders are bound to arise among them, concludes with the question "suppose we are Indians. If we are prevented from carrying arms for our country, will we not deem it an insult?"

CATHOLIC NESAN, Madras, May, 1917.

Report of the Public Services Commission.

50. Adverting to the action of the Madras Government in inviting the remarks of a number of gentlemen and associations about this report, the Catholic Nesan * for May is surprised at the name of the "Catholic Indian Association" not being found in the list of individuals, whose opinion has now been sought for, and observes that, until the reason for this exclusion becomes known, it will have to be considered as an injustice done to the seventeen lakhs of Catholic Indians in this Presidency.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

The present situation.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 29th June, reproduces, in Tamil, the substance of a letter sent to the Press by Mr. G. A. Natesan on the present situation, which appears in full in the Hindu of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

The future of India.

52. The Swadesamitran, of the 29th June, in reproducing in Tamil the details of the interview of Saint Nihal Singh with Sir S. P. Sinha about the future of India, as communicated by the former to the Press, and published by the Hindu of the same date, observes that, if the provincial heads and the bureaucrats carefully ponder over the observations of Sir S. P. Sinha and act on them, it will surely benefit both the rulers and the ruled in India.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

An independent India.

53. The Dravidan, of the 29th June, quotes approvingly the words of Count Okuma, who is reported to have stated that India cannot aspire for Home Rule until and unless she gives up all her customs and observances which are detrimental to her progress and her people advance to the level of Englishmen in knowledge, character and morals, and repeats its observation that the agitation of the Home Rulers cannot be of any avail, as there is much to be yet improved in the condition of the people of this country, before they can think of having an independent Government for themselves.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The Home Rule League.

54. The Swadesamitran, of the 2nd July, reproduces in Tamil the substance of a letter addressed to the Press by Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar laying down, in the "enforced absence" of Mrs. Besant, the President of the Home Rule League, the lines on which the Home Rule propagandist work should be conducted in the future, which appears in extenso in the Hindu of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

Repressive measures and reforms.

55. The Swadesamitran, of the 29th June, writes:—We regret that the replies given by the Secretary of State to the questions asked in Parliament for the last few days will change the good opinion the people had of him. Many have come to regard all the statements made by him during the sittings of the Imperial Conference and the discussion about the duty on cotton goods in India as no more than empty ones. The approval, by this official, of the action taken against Mrs Besant, who even in internment is praying for Home Rule for India, may lead the Indians to presume many things. As was anticipated by us last week, the Government of Madras did not obtain the previous sanction of the Secretary of State for interning

* Received during the current week.

Mrs. Besant. But what of that? When Mr. Chamberlain is ready to approve of every word and deed of the Madras Government, why should the latter obtain the previous sanction of the former for anything? But one noteworthy point is that, while the Secretary of State said, in his reply last week, that Mrs. Besant's activities would easily become dangerous, he has made a definite statement in his reply this week that her activities were really dangerous. It is no doubt difficult to give replies to a cross-examination in Parliament. But we are sure that the difficulty of the Secretary of State in this matter will not stop here. So we hope that he will give patient and consistent replies to the questions that may be asked hereafter. But however capable and well informed he may show himself to be and however much he may support repressive measures, he will have to note one or two undeniable facts. The Government of India have openly stated that they have no objection to constitutional agitation on the part of the people for Home Rule. It was only a few months back that Lord Pentland referred appreciatingly to the fact that there was no prospect whatever of a disturbance of the public peace either by the students or the people in India and especially in the Madras Presidency. Everyone knows that, within these months, Mrs. Besant has done nothing new which may disturb public peace and has not engaged in any dangerous political agitation. Our Governor has also admitted that neither Mrs. Besant nor the others engaged in the Home Rule Movement have been found wanting either in loyalty or in securing the welfare of the Empire. When this is the true state of affairs, what are we to say of the statement of the Secretary of State, made with or without the cognisance of the Government of Madras that that lady is engaged in a dangerous agitation? This inconsiderate reply shows that even he has yielded to the words of our enemies, who have been opposing the reforms demanded by us for a century and more and voiced forth unanimously by the Congress last year. It is a patent fact that Mrs. Besant and the Home Rule leagues are propagating only the reforms demanded by the Congress and the Muslim league. Perhaps, this is not clear to the Secretary of State alone. If the agitation conducted by Mrs. Besant becomes dangerous, that carried on by the Congress and the Muslim league together is also a dangerous one. It is a very easy thing to have recourse to repressive measures, and even if it leads to results unexpected by those responsible for it, they may be prepared for such a contingency. But it has been for long a difficult task for the bureaucrats to fulfil the Home Rule aspirations, which now fill the hearts of the Indians and for which they are agitating, and to introduce the necessary reforms so as to merit their gratitude. It is one of the features of the unfortunate condition of our country that these reforms primarily curtail the influence, responsibilities and privileges of the bureaucrats and that responsible statesmen expect either the consent or the absence of hostility of these bureaucrats to these reforms. Though it may be desirable for His Majesty to publish his intention of introducing the reforms necessary for our having in due course the self-government to which we are entitled, the Indians can appreciate the advantages of these reforms only after they understand clearly what they are; for they know that, in the history of the Indian administration, many proclamations have been construed in different ways. So, it will give some satisfaction, if those now advising the Government base their recommendations at least on one or two suggestions made by men like Sir S. P. Sinha, who is the most moderate of moderates. They should clearly understand that they cannot easily satisfy the Indians hereafter by merely giving them empty appointments or positions. Instead of their representatives being permitted, as is the case now, only to give advice in the matter of executive administration, they must hereafter be given (definite) powers in that administration. Statesmen, inclusive of the Secretary of State, and officials cannot ignore these two suggestions of Sir S. P. Sinha. If reforms are introduced it should be on the lines suggested by him. If on the other hand, reliance is placed on repressive measures and minor reforms contemplated as a set-off therefor the people will regard it only as a short-sighted act of statesmanship and reject it.

56. Adverting to the principle accepted by the Imperial Conference that every portion of the Empire should, as far as possible, co-operate with the other portions in devoloping the Imperial trade, the Swadesamitran, of the 30th June, remarks:—It will be necessary for us to come to an understanding beforehand, after mature consideration, what the condition of India should be when this principle is begun to be applied; for, under the existing circumstances, the Indians have no influence in the Indian administration. The Government of India have not even the privilege of imposing taxes without the previous sanction of the Secretary of State and this officer again is one of the important members of the British Cabinet. The Members of the House of Commons, who are on the cabinet, will never consent to the English trade being affected in the least by an advancement of the Indian trade, as they are elected by the English people and the cabinet, as a whole, would like to be in the good graces of the House. The duty levied on cotton goods exported from India and the excitement caused in England when the export duty on cotton goods was recently increased may be quoted as instances in point. As the major portion of the foreign trade of India is now carried on only with England, a protective duty will have first to be levied to guard India from English mercantile competition, if the Indian trade is to improve. It is in view of this that we have often been claiming the right of controlling the income and expenditure in the administration of our country. It is quite natural for Englishmen however much they may sympathise with us, to attach a greater importance to the advancement of English industries. So, we should come forward ourselves to improve our condition. It is the welfare of the Indians that should be given preference in considering about the progress of India, and the welfare of the Empire should come only after this. For the Indians to progress, they should have the hearty support of the Government of India and also a spirit of national unity.

Indian trade after the war.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

Dravidan, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The Home Rule Movement and the zamindars.

57. The Dravidan, of the 2nd July, welcomes the manifesto issued by some zamindars denying the approval, by the zamindars as a class, of the Home Rule agitation now conducted and states that Messrs K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar and K. R. V. Krishna Rao, who have been identifying themselves with the Home Rule Movement, cannot be taken to voice forth the views on this subject of the community they represent in the Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The Home Rule movement and the zamindars.

Adverting to the manifesto issued by certain zamindars dissociating themselves from the Home Rule movement as conducted at present, the Swadesamitran, of the 4th July, remarks:—Though these zamindars say that they have nothing to do whatever with the agitation carried on and the measures adopted by the Home Rule League with Mrs. Besant as its President, they admit that they do not deny that India should have Home Rule and that proper efforts should be made for her to have it in course of time. It is to be noted that the zamindars with very few exceptions were all along keeping aloof from the discussion and agitation carried on by the Congress and the Muslim League throughout the country for the advancement of the Indians. So, this opinion expressed unanimously by a number of zamindars that India should be granted Home Rule in course of time will doubtless give satisfaction to all. There may be a difference of opinion regarding the time at which and the manner in which this Home Rule is to be attained. Therefore, it is quite natural that the zamindars whose conduct has always been characterised by caution and solicitude should, while expressing their opinion in writing about a high political ideal which is likely to affect the position of the Government of India, have stated that this ideal can be attained only gradually and in course of time. Nevertheless, all of us cannot but appreciate the action of this community, which has now for the first time entered into the political arena, having advocated the ideal of Home Rule. Now that the zamindars also have expressed the opinion that the political reforms necessary for the gradual attainment by the Indians of Home Rule should be introduced, is it not necessary for the Government of India to publish the reforms that they propose to introduce? When the grant of political reforms after the war was demanded by the Congress and the Muslim League till now, the bureaucrats were adducing the argument that no one else but the educated classes wished for such reforms and allowing time to pass by. There is no longer any room for such excuses. Why should the Government of India now raise any objection to publish that the grant of Home Rule to the Indians is the aim of their administration and that they will, without delay, grant certain executive privileges in view of the accomplishment of this aim?

58. The Dravidan, of the 2nd July, referring to the statement said to have been made by the present editor of New India, that he would never agree to the argument that the Non-Brahmans should be given appointments in proportion to their numbers, remarks that this editor seems to be worse than his predecessor in his attitude towards Non-Brahmans, and trusts that the Government will attach no weight whatever to the words of this editor.

New India and Non-Brahmans.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

59. The Swadesamitran, of the 3rd July, also reproduces in Tamil the views of the Hon'ble Mr. Bupendranath Basu about the future of India as expressed to a representative of the Associated Press Agency, which appears in extenso in the Hindu of the 3rd July.

The future of India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

60. Adverting to the order issued by the Punjab Government to the editors of newspapers in that province that they should not publish the proceedings of the meeting held in Lahore on the 28th June 1917 protesting against the order of the Madras Government in the case of Mrs. Besant and others, the Swadesamitran, of the 30th June, says:—This order will create surprise and disgust to many. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Province says that, if the proceedings of this meeting are published, it will disturb the public peace. Protest meetings have been held on the subject in several places till now in India. Have they led anywhere to the disturbance of public peace? No. So, it is a wonder of wonders that such a disturbance should have been anticipated in this province alone. This order has been passed under the Defence of India Act. This Act, which came into existence on account of the war and which was till now applied to suppress the Home Rule and other political agitations, has now come to be used even for preventing the publication of the proceedings of a public meeting. All this shows that this Act is applied even to matters which could not have been thought of by any one. It was perhaps expected that if Mrs. Besant were gagged by means of this Act, it would lead to the suppression of New India and also of the Home Rule movement. But both these have become much stronger than before. If there is any discussion in the papers which may disturb public peace, there are the Press Act and other Acts ready for application. But the application of these Acts would throw on the Government the burden of proving the offence. This trouble is, however, saved by the application of the Defence of India Act. We regret to observe that it cannot indicate sound statesmanship to pass orders which are likely to rouse public feeling and create unrest among the people at this juncture when it is necessary and expedient for the officials to seek the co-operation, support and love of the people in this great war.

Anamolous order of the Punjab Government.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

61. Anent the extension of the terms of office of Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon as the Governors of Madras and Bombay, the Hindu Nesan, of the 3rd July, observes:—We do not think that this news will be received favourably by the citizens of either province. The sincere request of the Indians in general for the extension of the term of office of Lord Hardinge and the people of Bengal for a similar extension of the term of office of Lord Carmichael was negatived. Now, the Secretary of State has obtained the sanction of His Majesty for extending the terms of office of the Governors of Madras and Bombay. It is perhaps considered to be statesmanship to hesitate to do a thing when it is earnestly demanded by the people and to persist in doing a thing when there is no request for it from the people. As far as Madras is concerned, many would not like Lord Pentland's term being extended. As for Bombay the fact that even those who wanted to ask for the extension of the term of office of Lord Wellingdon have decided not to do so, makes us come to the conclusion that many do not like the extension of the term of office of this Governor also. Anyway, as the term of office of these Governors has been extended under these circumstances, we hope that, though they have been adopting repressive measures till now, they will in their extended term confer such benefits on the people as will make the latter forget altogether that they once had recourse to repressive administration and that they will return to their native land after conducting the Government here as to merit the regard and love of the people.

The Governors of Madras and Bombay.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The all-powerful Defence of India Act.

62. The Swadesamitran, of the 4th July, writes:—The incidents of every day show that the Defence of India Act has become a big bug-bear in the hands of the authorities. This Act was passed to suppress the enemies of the King-Emperor and disturbance in the country. But it has come to be freely used to gag and take away the personal freedom of subjects who are full of loyalty to the King-Emperor and his Government. The system of citizens freely representing their grievances and intimating their wants to the Government obtains in every place where the British flag flies. The British have been teaching to us that this is the privilege of citizens. It is in pursuance of this that we are agitating for the Government attending to our wants and grievances. This is a constitutional act. If in doing this any offence is committed, there is the ordinary Penal Code to check it. If the Government take action under this Code and prove to us that the method followed by us is a wrong one, we will have a warning not to repeat it But the Government do not adopt this course. They say that the method followed by us is a wrong one. We deny it. Immediately they apply the Defence of India-Act. They have the power in their hands. What can we do? The Government have declared the method in which Mrs. Besant has been conducting the Home Rule agitation to be a wrong one, and have interned her and her colleagues. The people in different parts of the country are convening meetings to complain that this is not a just action. Though in some places these are allowed to have their say, one official sends a warning not to use strong language. If words constituting an offence are used, one can easily be caught in the clutches of the Penal Code. Why then should a warning be issued and people discouraged? In some places, a petty official prohibits even the convening of a meeting and he professes to act under the Defence of India Act. Wonderful! What connection is there between the Defence of India Act and an Inspector of Police? In some other places, still, they prohibit the publications of proceedings of meetings and even this action is based on the Defence of India Act. They then modify the order and allow the proceedings to be published the next day. The order of the Punjab Government, can be quoted as an instance. The Defence of India Act comes in to prevent a lecture published in one place from being published in another. All these are facts known to our readers, and we will add one more which has come to our notice today. It appears Mr. Asaf Ali, a Barrister in Delhi, who applied to the President of the Municipality for using the Town Hall there to convene a meeting to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant and others, was met by an Inspector of Police, who served upon him the order of the Chief Commissioner prohibiting the said meeting under the Defence of India Act, and added that that officer intended to serve such a notice upon all persons, as many times as it might be necessary. What a strange action? We would like to point out to the Government that it is not proper to adopt repressive measures for curbing a constitutional agitation. They say that they would repeat the same repressive measures to prevent our criticising those adopted by them. Will this Defence of India Act prevent us from even thinking of Home Rule as was funnily pointed out by the Daily Mail of London? We hope that the Government will consult the opinion of the popular leaders and show some moderation in the application of this Act so as to prevent such suspicions and unrest being created among the people.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

Industries.

63. The Andhraprakasika, of the 26th June, says:—We believe that both the Government and the people are the cause of the decline of our trade. The Government do not give the same support to our trade as they give to foreign trade. This is the reason why our products go to foreign countries and come back to the Indian market in other forms. For this, the Government are responsible to a very large extent and the people to some extent. . . It is gratifying that the Paris Conference which met last month, recommended that our country should in the matter of trade with foreign countries, be empowered to afford or not the same facilities to them as they do or do not afford to our country.

64. The Andhraprakasika, of the 26th June, says:—Mr. Chamberlain has stated plainly that the Madras internments were a matter of necessity. . . We hope that as Mr. Chamberlain also will share the severity of future agitation, the severity of language used in speaking of Lord Pentland will show an abatement. Just as the number of those who say that the order of the Governor is improper is increasing, so also the number of those who support him in his action is on the increase.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, publishes a report in Telugu and English of the proceedings of a meeting held at Lucknow to protest against the Madras internments and notes about similar meetings held at Madura, Tuticorin, Rajahmundry, etc.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, gives a Telugu version of a letter written to the press by Mr. Manmohandas protesting against the Madras internments.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

Internments.

The same paper says that at the protest meeting held at Calicut, some people have taken the swadeshi vow. It says that endeavours are being made to open at Calicut a swadeshi mart on a very large scale.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th June, reproduces in Telugu the letter of Mr B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya discussing the question whether the Members of Legislative Councils should by way of protest against the Madras internments resign their seats, which appears in the Hindu, dated the 26th June 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th June, says in its leader:—The Bombay Presidency Association has wired their disapproval of the action of the Madras Government in interning Mrs. Besant, etc. to the Prime Minister, etc., in England. It is the British that are fighting for the maintenance of the freedom of small States. It is they that have given shelter in their country to people under arbitrary rule who have suffered in many ways for freedom. They will surely not be silent when they come to know that in their territory individual freedom is restrained. They will certainly not be indifferent in regard to Mrs. Besant, famous all over the world. The news of the internment will not stop in England, but will soon spread to all neutral countries, and also to the Colonies. It may spread to the enemy countries and be made much of. This is an instance of what perverse results a precipitate action may lead to. We are at a loss to know the propriety of this policy of the Government during this war. . . The Presidency Association has stated that if the internment orders are not cancelled, the commotion among the people will grow beyond limits. It is its opinion that repressive measures can never suppress political aspirations and that it is a surprise that at the present war crisis, the Government have resorted to such measures. The association thinks that the administrative policy of the Government has degenerated to a large extent, and that it is not just on the part of ministers to vindicate the mistakes of their subordinates. . . Repression on the one hand and sympathy on the other, at one and the same time, was the policy of Lord Morley, which failed to achieve its object in the case of the partition of Bengal. The unrest did not disappear until the partition was annulled. So also today, while individual freedom is in danger, people will not be satisfied with promises of petty reforms. The Presidency Association has made it plain that the people cannot be satisfied with anything short of the grant of reforms suggested by the National Congress. It suggests that Mrs. Besant and others should be released and that the authorities should publish beforehand what reforms they intend to grant, so that the people may be enabled to express their opinions thereon. The public also desire such a thing unanimously. . . We hope that the Prime Minister and other statesmen will not be partial to the bureaucracy but will grant the wishes of the people. . . If taking the swadeshi vow now, we do not keep it, the swadeshi movement will fail as it failed once before, and we will be ridiculed in the world. We do not discourage the movement, but we wish that it may not like a bubble, have only a transcient existence.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

Internments.

The same paper publishes a Telugu version of the remarks of the Ceylon Times on the internment of Mrs. Besant, in which appear the following observations:—The Madras Government have realised that the internment of Mrs. Besant has been productive of greater evil than her platform lectures and newspaper writings. . . . No more indiscreet action ever occurred under the British rule in India than the internment of Mrs. Besant.

The paper also contains the proceedings of the Madras Provincial Congress Committee and the Mahajana Sabha, protesting against the internments.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th June, publishes in Telugu an abstract of the proceedings of the meeting of the Bombay Presidency Association, protesting against the Madras internments.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 28th June, says:—The Bengal Muslim League have passed a resolution suggesting that the elected members of Legislative Councils should express their indignation at the action of the Madras Government in interning Mrs. Besant by resigning their seats. Some are under the false impression that the Government want to root out the Home Rule movement altogether. There is no ground at all for entertaining any such idea. Again what connection is there between Home Rule and membership in the Legislative Council? It is very strange that a certain gentleman has suggested that an ultimatum should be sent to the Government requiring them to release the interned persons by the 16th July, and that if the Government do not do so, the honourable members in the Legislative Councils should resign their seats. Will the administration come to a stand still if they resign? We hope the members will not resign their seats as suggested.

The paper, in conclusion, condemns the suggestion of some to cease to work in connection with the recruitment of the Indian Defence Force, and says that to follow that suggestion would be ruinous to the best interests of the country.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 29th 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th June, refers in brief to the meetings held at Poona, Lahore, Cocanada, Bezwada and Tenali, protesting against the Madras internments.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

Internments.

Referring to the answer of Mr. Chamberlain to an interpellation in the Parliament regarding the internment of Mrs. Besant, the Andhrapatrika, of the 29th June, says:—The words of Mr. Chamberlain show that he reposes great confidence in his subordinates. He has already been known as the "know nothing" Mr. Chamberlain. It is surprising that Mr. Chamberlain is indifferent to a thing that is agitating the whole country. It is not known how the Madras Government have resorted to internments without consulting the higher authorities. It appears to be the policy of Mr. Chamberlain to be partial to the authorities. It is not known what steps he has taken to ascertain the opinion of the people regarding the internments. The hopes of the Indians now rest upon the British Ministers and the British people. Indian leaders should at once go to England to make the British people understand the opinion of the Indian public. Great will be the loss to India if this is delayed. May the people soon wake up!

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 30th, 1917.

Madras internments.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 30th June, observes that the opening speech of Mr. Sutcliffe, who presided over the meeting held at Sholapur to protest against the Madras internments, inspires even the timid with courage. It publishes an extract from the speech which contains:—"In the west, liberty is at conflict with despotism, and it is certain that liberty will trimph. There is a similar conflict in India; can we prophesy similar results? We can say, yes, when all the Indians undertake their duty to their mother country with equal devotion, when India speaks with one voice, and without a dissentient note, when she gives expression to her firm and irresistable determination for the attainment of liberty with one heart and with one aim. . . . This repression of Mrs. Besant is really a heavy blow. Shall we look on with unconcern, or shall we have recourse to retaliative measures? Shall we hide ourselves like a dog that has been whipped, or act like men and heroes! . . . If we are to deserve the confidence of mother India, may the enterprising souls jump into the place of every one that is interned! For every voice that is silenced, may the new voices shout for freedom, till every hill and dale may echo the call for freedom."

Internments.

The Desamata, of the 27th June, publishes the proceedings of a meeting held at Rajahmundry to protest against the Madras internments, and reproduces from the Andhrapatrika portions of the letters of Mr. Pandit M. Malavya and Dr. Tez Bahadur Sapru, Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma already abstracted on page 1858 of the weekly report.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, June 27th, 1917.

The internments.

Referring to Mr. Chamberlain's reply to the question in Parliament regarding the internments, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 29th June, remarks:—Seeing the reply we must say that we shall not be altogether wrong to suspect that the recent repressive measures were taken only with the sanction of the Home Government. But as the officers here are the eyes, so to speak, of the Home authorities, it is doubtful whether these know the truth of the situation here. For the Madras Government has not shown so far that any of those now interned have done anything which can be punished under the Defence of India Act. Nor have the other provinces who have forbidden Mrs. Besant to enter their territory informed the public of the offences of which she is guilty; but they have only resorted to repression. When these officers themselves are the eyes through which those at home have to see, how could Mr. Chamberlain help saying what he did?

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, June 29th, 1917.

The internments.

Referring to the internments, the Lokaprakasam, of the 25th June, has the following in English:—The revolting news of the sad internment of Mrs. Annie Besant and her lieutenants in Messrs. B. P. Wadia and G. S. Arundale, who have been exerting themselves wholeheartedly for the attainment of Home Rule for India and the Indians, as obtaining in the colonies, by the order of His Excellency the Governor of Madras in Council, has, it is apparent, created a deal of unfortunate sensation throughout the length and breadth of the land. That this action of the Government is capable of creating dissatisfaction among the masses of the population in India, it is idle to deny. In each case the Government order notifying the fact begins as follows:—

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, June 25th, 1917.

* * * * * *

Whatever might be the nature of her doings heretofore, we refuse to believe that Mrs. Besant is guilty of such an offence as to drive the Government to the necessity of resorting to this Act, which is purely a war measure. Her unsparing efforts for recruitment into the Defence of India Force, from the very commencement is well known. As far as it is known to the public, they do not share the view that this old venerable and venerated lady Mrs. Besant or any of her two comrades has acted any way contrary to the Defence Act. We strongly believe that there will be enough of proof, if proof were needed, to show that this resourceful lady has done nothing so grave as to be interned in this manner, but has only exerted with the best of intentions, for the good of India, and self-rule under the ægis of the British supremacy. In these circumstances there is nothing surprising at the unsatisfactory opinion of the public on the gubernatorial order, which has been openly expressed in many of the public meetings held throughout the country.

In the course of his concluding speech at the Council meeting held on the 24th ultimo His Excellency observed that the efforts of those who work for Home Rule might bring trouble on the administration and that measures would be contemplated for stopping same. As our readers are aware, the public and the press condemned the speech in unmeasured terms and meetings were held in almost every important town. Then followed an explanation, as it were, of the gubernatorial utterance. The efforts of the public, not only of this presidency but of the whole Indian Empire, for the attainment of Home Rule, is well known. It is impossible for any to say that that enthusiastic work has disturbed the peace of India or the laudable arrangements and help for the success in the present titanic war. Furthermore, peace is the dominating feature of this "benighted presidency". We are of opinion that it will be the greatest blunder were His Excellency to think that by the internment of the triumvirate there will be alleviation in the efforts of the Home Rule leaders. The Government is, no doubt, armed with vast powers to arrest the liberty of the public, having in prominent view the present war. But whether those powers could be used against those who work for the good of India and for Indians and for Home Rule without any way interfering with the sympathetic and whole-hearted support for war, is open to serious question.

We do admit that Mrs. Besant is exerting for the attainment of Homo Rule. What is it that induced the Government to intern Mr. Arundale. As we are aware his efforts were directed chiefly towards the spread of education. Even as secretary of the Home Rule League, we do not remember him as delivering any speech in that connection. The Government a little while ago prevented Mr. Wadia from delivering a speech in support of Home Rule, and he has never done so thereafter. Self-rule or Home Rule, whatever one might call it, is not the sole property of this triumvirate and New India. It has taken deep root in all India. And surely, it will not die away by the internment of these three patriots. It is, perhaps, more likely that the cause will gain greater strength by actions like these, when all those, who work for it, will have of necessity to be interned. How far such a state of affairs will be conducive for the welfare and happiness of the rulers and the ruled, we leave for the Government to ponder over.

As we go to press we are staggered to find the answer given by Mr. Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for India, in reply to a question put to him in the House of Commons last week. Surely it will cause similar pain to one and all friends of India.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 4th, 1917.

The internments.

A correspondent in the Kerala Sanchari, of the 4th July, points out that the internment of Mrs. Besant cannot be solely due to her efforts for the obtainment of self-government thinks that, whatever may be the cause of the interument of Mrs. Besant and her associates, their release at as early a date as possible will, no doubt, put an end to the unrest and that the Government should gladly respond to public opinion on the matter, and observes that, as the Secretary of State also thinks that the action of the Madras Government was necessary, the agitation should hereafter be carried on in England.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

Fiscal autonomy.

65. Under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, says:—Unless the authority to spend the revenue is in the hands of the people, self-government will not attain perfection. The authority over the exchequer is the key to self-government. Some more higher appointments may be conferred on the Indians and the Indians may get some more seats in the Legislative Councils. But until the people are granted the power to spend money, there can be no responsible Government. . . The principle that there should be no taxation without representation is the foundation of self-government. This principle has not as yet been introduced into the administrative methods of the Government of India. This Government is not responsible to the people. The realisation of the ideals of the people depends upon the favour and kindness of the Government. . . The Parliament in England is an assembly of the representatives of the people. But the Government of India is not such. So if the Government should be responsible to the people, the representatives of the people should have the control over the exchequer. . . In the Imperial Legislative Council containing a majority of officials, the resolutions of the people's representatives are thrown out. With the help of the nominated members in the Provincial Legislative Councils, the Government throw out the resolutions moved therein. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar and the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao Pantulu saw their helplessness and said they could not do any good to the people. . . The approval or disapproval of the representatives of the people cannot change the firm opinion of the Government. So the representatives of the people should get real independence. . . . In distributing the revenue to different provinces, the Government of India do not follow any principle, but acts arbitrarily. . . Such a state of things is a source of great loss to the provinces. The chief means of the advancement of a province is to spend the revenue of that province for that province itself. If provincial autonomy is granted and the people's representatives are enabled to spend the revenue, it is then easy to secure the advantages of self-government. These two reforms are not revolutionary. They are steps leading to the goal of political life in India. The people will not rest satisfied with smaller reforms. So leaders like the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao think the grant of self-government will make the Indian nation perfect.

66. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, refers to the republican propaganda in South Africa and remarks:—If the Boers persist in severing their connection with the British, they will not only forfeit their present independence, but will bring ruin to their country. There is no doubt that General Botha will be able to suppress this attempt at revolution, and we hope that he will nip it in the bud.

South Africa.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

67. Referring to the fact that a Police Inspector stopped a meeting at Tuticorin held to protest against the internments, the Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, remarks:—The meeting did not violate any law of the land. It did not break the peace. It is difficult to understand what authority the Police officer had to apply the Defence of India Act against the meeting. . . Bad days have overtaken constitutional agitation, and the freedom of speech and of the press. . . The leaders of the people should soon meet and decide what course political agitation should take in the future.

Political agitation.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

68. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, publishes a Telugu version of a conversation between Sir S. P. Sinha and Saint Nihal Singh, in which the former is reported to have said that to give greater powers to the Government of India without making them responsible to the people would only make them more arbitrary, and that the young men of India would not rest satisfied unless authority passed into their hands gradually.

Sir S. P. Sinha.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

69. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th June, says:—Before the internment of Mrs. Besant, the Anglo-Indian papers had their swords drawn against her. They could not sleep till she was interned. Now that she had been interned, they are quiet and look at political matters with a different attitude. . . The internment of Mrs. Besant has made the Congress leaders no longer indifferent towards the swaraj leagues. Political factions have disappeared and the whole of India is resounding with the cry of swaraj, and the people of every province in India are in deep sympathy with the movement. In the new national movement which the Partition of Bengal gave rise to, responsible leaders of the people did not take any part. It is students and young men that showed great enthusiasm then. But now the members of the Legislative Councils and other leaders are the foremost supporters of the swaraj movement. This great result must be attributed to Mrs. Besant's devotion to duty, disinterestedness and indefatigable energy, and to the great regard that the Indians had for her The Anglo-Indian papers cannot but be enchanted by this state of things. From a perusal of the aricle on self-government, which appeared in yesterday's issue of the Madras Mail, it is plain that that paper also has now understood the futility of repressive measures, and has urged that the Government should sympathise with the aspirations of the people. Nobody would suppose that this paper which advocated repressive measures till yesterday is today in full agreement with the people. But there are indications of a change in its attitude. It recommends greater freedom being granted to the people in local self-government. Everybody is aware that this paper immediately knows the opinions of the Government. There is, therefore, room to suppose that certain reforms will soon come into force. From what the paper says it is to be inferred that the Government will retain very little authority on local boards. The Government will not interfere with these local bodies unless they are guilty of unjust acts. The people have long been asking for non-official district board presidents. The Mail says that the time has arrived for the grant of that wish. Power is to be granted to local boards to spend large sums for spreading elementary education. This will satisfy the people to some extent. It is gratifying that in these days of agitation for swaraj, the Government propose to give greater privileges to the local boards. But it is an illusion to suppose that the people will be satisfied with such small reforms. They must be given financial independence in order that they may rest contented. But we are glad that the Government are treading peaceful paths. We submit that an endeavour on the part of the Government to lay a permanent foundation for self-government will draw the rulers and the ruled closer together in friendship.

The Madras Mail.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

70. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th June, publishes in Telugu as well as in English the remarks of the Indian Daily Telegraph on the protest made in a meeting at Lucknow against the internment of Mrs. Besant.

The Indian Daily Telegraph.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

71. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 27th June, refers to the proposed bifurcation of the Kistna district and says that to constitute Ellore the headquaters of the new district will in every way be more convenient than to make Nidadavole the headquarters.

Bifurcation of the Kistna district.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

72. Referring to the sinking of the mail steamer Mangolia off the coast of Bombay, the Andhraprakasika, of the 26th June, says:—There is no reason to fear that German submarines have come here and are causing such mischief. We think that the accident is due to the scattering of mines by the Allies. German submarines could not now come this great distance.

The Mangolia.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

73. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 26th June, refers to certain difficulties which parties are put to under the present system of criminal administration in the mufassal, and says:—The revenue and magisterial functions should not be vested in the same officer. The people will be greatly benefited if these functions are separated, and if village panchayats be constituted with power to try some of the cases now tried by the Magistrates.

Revenue and magisterial functions.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

74. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th June, reports New India to have said under this heading:—Mr. Irwin compares the work of Mr. Gandhi in Bihar to a farce. To ridicule the acts of holy men like Mr. Gandhi and to put a wrong construction on their views cannot but be productive of great harm. The Government cannot be indifferent to this. . . If an Indian paper had ridiculed an Englishman who is as respectable as Mr. Gandhi, what would have been its fate? It is well known that the Anglo-Indian papers often dishonour Indian leaders. But this evil has now transgressed all bounds.

Mr. Gandhi's farce.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

75. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th June, reports the Capital to have said:—Lord Bishop Whitehead and some other Missionaries deprecate lotteries for raising the war loan. But does the Lord Bishop think it just that the Missionaries should be paid large salaries out of the revenue derived from the Hindus, Muhammadans, etc., in India for preaching to a few Christians and condemning Indian religions? . . The bureaucracy is the most important thing in India.

War-loan lotteries.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

76. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th June, publishes, in Telugu, a telegram in which it is stated that in the British theatre the Germans appear to fight with an army twice as big as that of the British.

The British war theatre.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

77. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th June, reproduces, in Telugu, the letter of Mr. A. Suryanarayana Murti, regarding the present political situation, published in the Hindu of the 26th June.

The present political situation.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

78. Referring to the appointment of a third Indian to the India Council, the Andhraprakasika, of the 27th June, says:—This new appointment gives the lie to the rumour that the Government wish to restrain the people and their constitutional agitation. If the Government wished to stifle our desires, they would not have granted their privilege. The presence of three Indians in the India Council will not bring us any great good. One Indian from every Province in India should be appointed as a member of this Council.

The India Council.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

79. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 28th June, exhorts the advocates of Home Rule to give up their propaganda and endeavour first to put an end to the prevalence of corruption among persons belonging to the several departments of public service such as the Police and the Magistracy and also among several private persons. He concludes as follows:—What can be said of patriots who evince no interest at all in discouraging corruption which is annoying the people and clamour for home rule? They say that Home Rule will set everything right. If faith is reposed in these patriots and Home Rule is granted, the country will go to ruins.

Patriots.

80. The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th June, reports the President of the Andhra Reddi Conference to have said:—The present educational methods do not enable persons to do any other thing than taking up service under others. This is considered to be a great defect in the present methods. All do not secure even this means of maintenance, and hence the jealousies and fresh moves which lead to many evil consequences.

The Andhra Reddi Conference.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

81. The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th June, publishes a Telugu version of the letter of Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar's appeal to the public in regard to Mrs. Besant fund.

Mrs. Besant fund.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

82. The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th June, says:—The Mesopotamia Commission have reported that the Government of India are responsible for the failure of the first Mesopotamian campaign. We cannot say what this report will end in. But we are pained when we think of Lord Hardinge who, as Viceroy did much good to India. Before bringing the authors of the failure to book, we have to consider certain things. The Mesopotamian theatre was then new. There was no railway or telegraphic communication between India and Mesopotamia. Some experience was necessary. That having been gained, the second expedition was successful. Lord Hardinge was during the first campaign engaged in India in many important political affairs. He might have made a mistake in connection with the first expedition, but it will be well to excuse him in view of the many advantages he secured for the empire.

The Mesopotamian campaign.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

83. The Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd June, and the Desamata, of the 27th June, publish a Telugu version of the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma delivered at the Madras protest meeting.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma's speech.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 22nd, 1917; DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, June 27th, 1917.

84. The Andhraprakasika, of the 29th June, publishes a Telugu version of a speech of Count Okuma, the late Prime Minister of Japan, in which appears the following:—The people of Spain, Portugal, France, England, etc., entered India and not only carried away immense wealth, but also robbed her of her commercial, artistic and educational greatness. The foreigners are not responsible for this, but the Indians who have ruined their country.

Count Okuma.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

85. The Hitakarini, of the 24th June, writes:—The words of Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar about swaraj deserve to be preserved and enshrined in the heart of every Hindu. . . There is no other means of salvation for India than swaraj. So the Indians should be as firm in the matter as Sir Subrahmania Ayyar. The principle of swaraj should be inculcated to those who have not yet noticed the present great movement We must give a practical reply to the words of Lord Pentland. Those who can give money should give it. Others should give both physical and mental help. . . It is the duty of every Indian to connect himself with the swaraj agitation, and follow the orders of men who are old in wisdom. . . It is not God's intention that anybody should act arbitrarily. The agitation for swaraj is ordained by God. All the Indians should in one voice echo this ideal. That, says Kavyakantha Ganapathi Sastri, will help us in getting swaraj. But doing is quite different from preaching.

Swaraj.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, June 24th, 1917.

86. The Hitakarini, of the 24th June, says in its leader:—There will be peace in a country, only so long as national spirit is not repressed and peace is the very life of administration. . . Both the rulers and the ruled are responsible for its preservation. The orders of the Government of Madras regarding internments must be admitted to be hostile to national progress in India. Various persons take various views of it. Some are of opinion that the order lay the axe at the root of the tree of the country's advancement. In our opinion this is a conflict with the national spirit.

Madras internments: and conflict with national spirit.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, June 24th, 1917.

There should be no difference of opinion in regard to the statement that to prevent students from attending political meetings will lead to a tumult in the national spirit. We should not hereby be understood to mean that Government are ill disposed to students. . . Can there be anybody who ventures to say that, in the National Congress, resolutions which violate the peace of the country and the orders of the Government will be passed? If there be such a man he will never deserve the love of the people and the favour of the Government. Constitutional agitation is correlated to national progress. It is not known why such an agitation is being condemned. Who will not admit that unconstitutional agitation is to be condemned? Among those who appreciate the agitation for swaraj, there is none who are so unwise as to approve of unconstitutional agitation. The Government are aware of this. No one who has read the opinions of such men as Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar, etc., will venture to say that the present agitation is unconstitutional and is dangerous to peace. Will not the people regret the fact that Mrs. Besant who had been most loyally carrying on a constitutional agitation with an eye on justice was interned . . . If under the rule of the British who are determined to establish righteousness, movements calculated for national advancement are not encouraged, under what other Government will they be so encouraged? The rulers should help the advancement of the nation and the protection of the religions as far as possible, and should not interfere unnecessarily . . . This is a political agitation, but without the help of the Government, the nation cannot make any advancement. It was not proper on the part of the Madras Government to have unnecessarily taken severe steps to suppress the agitation in question. To use against persons not deserving to be killed, weapons which should be used against persons that deserve to be killed, is to use against cuckoos and parrots, darts which have been manufactured for use against cruel beasts . . . Who can say that anybody among such persons as Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar and Pandit Madan Mohan Malavia, is devoid of loyalty.

National power is very sharp. It alone possesses the power of deluge. . . As a result of the internments, the whole of India is in a state of commotion. The grand manifestation of national spirit is reaching the sky. This is the time when the rulers should take a far-sighted view and do their duty. They have to carry out the suggestions of the Times of India. We submit that to help the development of the Indian nation will conduce to the happiness of the whole world and to the restoration of peace.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, June 30th, 1917.

Retaliation.

87. The Kistnapatrika, of the 30th June, writes about the internment of Mrs. Besant:—The native papers, with but a few exceptions, have candidly condemned the action, and the Government would have, by this time, clearly understood popular opinion at least through their Criminal Investigation Department. All the same, they will not, so soon, change their view. In the belief that the rulers will not heed their representations unless measures that express their determination are steadily followed, people from various parts, suggest the boycotting of British goods and the resignation of members of Legislative Councils. The former measure is an effective means for the encouragement of swadeshi industries, but it is doubtful whether it would be an effective retaliation at a time, when British exports have themselves dwindled down on account of war. As for the other, it will publish the determination of the members and establish their self-respect. But, so long as there is no union that will insure others not stepping into their places, many persons may be waiting to avail themselves of an opportunity, to secure the seats vacated on the Councils, and we need not dwell on what hostile attitude they may assume towards national endeavour. There is but one means to avert this while at the same time, maintaining self-respect. That is what has been suggested by Mr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya Garu in the English papers—that the members of the Legislative Councils should, without vacating their seats, desist from attending them. This may create some sensation in England, if not among the rulers here. India will deserve self-government, only when she treads new paths of action calculated to nourish popular power and national honour, without allowing political agitation to end in empty talk.

Administrative reform.

88. The Kistnaptrika, of the 30th June, publishes the conversation between Sir P. Sinha and St. Nihal Sing abstracted above, and comments thereon as follows:—Sir P. Sinha's statement that what is needed to reform the administration is authority and not influence, is pregnant with meaning . . . Allowing more members into the Councils may add to our influence but not to our authority. People will have real power only when, in accordance with the resolution of our National Congress, the Executive Councils are placed under the control of the Legislative Councils. But even Sir P. Sinha has declared as absolutely necessary what Lord Pentland has discarded as undesirable at present.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 30th, 1917.

India Council.

89. The Kistnapatrika, of the 30th June, writes with reference to the new membership in the India Council:—This is, perhaps, the gradual granting of self-government. When the whole country is shouting for self-government, our rulers adopt repressive policy on the one hand, and conciliatory policy on the other. We need not speak separately of the "dividing policy" of the Non-Brahman movement. It is ridiculous on the part of our rulers that, in these days when the view is gathering strength that the rule of the India Council from a different continent is undesirable, they seek to perpetuate the said council by the conciliatory step of taking upon it one more Indian. The days are passed when people are satisfied by such measures . . . The sooner the Government understands that the agitation in India cannot calm down until the Executive Councils are placed under the control of the Legislative Councils, the better will it be.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 30th, 1917.

Sparrow-destruction clubs.

90. With reference to the sparrow-destruction clubs among the students of England, the Kistnapatrika, of the 30th June, remarks:—It may be guessed what sort of citizens the youths of England will grow up to be, if their tender hearts are habituated to such cruelty. It is regrettable that even flesh eating boys should be put to acts of destruction that stamp out their natural tenderness. A system of education that does not inculcate Ahimsa (refraining from giving pain) may be considered opposed to humanity.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 30th, 1917.

Social reform.

91. The Kistnapatrika, of the 30th June, publishes the lecture delivered by a gentleman on social reform which contains:—When the main root is displaced, the tree withers away and dies in a day. This is what has happened to our Varnasramadharma (the Hindu religio-social institutions such as caste). This is due to what our Government have unintentionally done. They have declared and maintained a neutral attitude towards religious matters. But the result has been a greater shock to our Varnasramadharma than it has ever received during the rule of the Muhammadans. The result has been like the injuring of the main-root of a tree, in the attempt to dig up a gem buried in the soil beneath it. Our rulers have introduced western education for our benefit. Our Varnasramadharmas (religio social institutions) are being destroyed on account of it. I am not ignorant of the innumerable benefits that we and our country have been deriving from English education when I say this. . . Whatever may be its benefits it has done us harm in this field. . . Then came the Missionaries. . . They have condemned our culture, customs and creed, and so described them as to create an idea that we are like brutes. Whether this wrong preaching resulted in any good to them or not, it has done us a wrong that has been affecting us to this day. . . I shall describe how damage has been done to us by western education. The very ideals of life of those in the west radically differ from ours. Our aim is spiritual while theirs is material. . . With them competition and ambition are the main motives at play. They follow their lead, and try to get the better of another with whom they come into conflict. . . Their pleasure is only illusory and ends in pain. Acute intellects can see that the present European war is the result of having a material goal in view.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, June 27th, 1917.

92. The Desamata, of the 27th June, has an article contributed under this heading which contains:—The citizens of Rajahmundry assembled in a meeting to protest against the Madras internments. . . Alas! the citizens who have recently placed camphor-garlands around Mrs. Besant's neck, and showered flowers on her, have to shed tears in showers dejected at the news of her internment. What a change has come over time!. . . She devoted herself to gaining self-government for India under the British Empire, and to this end directed all her energies in a constitutional spirit. That self-sacrificing and liberal-hearted soul has now been caught in the meshes of the orders of the bureaucracy and bound. . . Indians cannot be ungrateful to her. They cannot help expressing their disapproval of their protest against and their indignation at. . . this wrong act of the Government, done not in accordance with the Penal Code, without holding any trial, and without informing her of her offence. Their regard, love and esteem for her prompts them all to assemble and shed tears for her. . . Well done! my countrymen!. The new spirit blazes in you. The power of the new agitation has attracted you. You have tasted the sweet relish of swaraj. You are blessed. You are not unmindful of the new spirit that convulses the country from the Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. Even Nature bemoans the affliction that befalls devout patriots. . . Nature sheds her tears in the shape of the rain drops. The flower tree droops and closes her blossoms. . . Ye, members that are assembled here, lose not hope and courage. . . Tread in her footsteps with unflinching courage. . . The British will not turn a deaf ear to our complaints. They will not fail to grant us self-government under the British Empire—a self-government with liberty.

Discharge of our duty.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 2nd, 1917.

93. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 2nd July, writes:—The British authorities say that India will be regarded as an integral part of the empire and that she has been admitted to the Imperial Conference to enable her to make her suggestions. The confinement of the fighters for Home Rule, despite this, raises a doubt in the minds of the people as to how far the British Kingdom * will go on (sic). Besides, some people, thinking that by creating disunion among the Indians they can be rendered unfit for Home Rule have brought about differences between the Brahmans and the Non-Brahmans. The Indians too, not understanding the secret, revel in mutual hatred and seek each other's ruin. Seeing all this we may safely affirm that Home Rule for India will be a mere dream.

Home Rule for India.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, June 29th, 1917.

94. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 29th June, welcoming the news of the appointment of Mr. Basu as member of the Secretary of State's Council, says:—Mr. Basu is one of those who drafted the memorandum of the nineteen submitted to the Home Government. As he is a leading advocate of the Congress propaganda, we have no hesitation in saying that the weight of his opinion—particularly at this juncture—will be appreciably felt in the India Council. Moreover the presence of three Indian members will, it is to be hoped, lead to a speedy realisation of Indian aspirations.

Mr. Basu's appointment.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 3rd, 1917.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 3rd July, writes:—Mr. Basu has a thorough acquaintance with the system of administration prevailing in this country. If the India Council should act upon his advice, it would doubtless produce a true spirit of mutual confidence between England and India.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, June 29th, 1917.

95. In an article giving a summary of the proceedings of the recent Agricultural Conference at Simla, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 29th June, observes:—Conferences seem to be the order of the day. Both the Government and the people are convening conferences. It would not be correct to suppose that conferences by themselves can help progress in any direction. Mere resolutions passed by such assemblies can be of little avail. Nevertheless, this seems to be the practice obtaining everywhere of late. So the Agricultural Conference also passed some resolutions the other day. But it is generally believed that nothing has been finally decided upon. Many questions came up for discussion, it is true. But there has been no decisive opinion on even one of them, and it was not found possible to enunciate even general propositions. The Conference at last left it to the local Governments to decide matters according to their own individual conditions and requirements.

The Agricultural Conference.

* This is very likely a misprint for a word meaning "purpose".

96. In the course of a lengthy leading article under this heading, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 3rd July, writes:—Some things which we, at times, take years to get, at other times we are able to get in a second. Just as a hungry child cries to its mother for food it is very natural that the people should ask for greater privileges; and the Government, like a mother, may grant the request at one time and disallow at another. When we, the people, ask for independence, how queer it is that we should say: "Have you not obtained independence from your rulers? Then grant the same to us too!" We must give up such faulty arguments and prove our fitness to obtain larger privileges and then ask for those privileges and fight for them. When we have thus proved our capacity, it would be the duty of the Government to grant us greater liberty. The people of India having enjoyed a large measure of liberty in the administration from time immemorial, they are fully trained in the art of self-government. It is nothing new to them. Even when the ancestors of the advanced western nations of the present day were very backward, were there not large empires in India? Self-government is, therefore, as easy as their daily routine to Indians. What justification can there be then for denying them Home Rule? Has not Russia obtained her liberty? Was not Ireland granted Home Rule? Have not the Americans granted independence to the Philippines, whom they conquered only about a hundred (sic) years ago? Are we Indians inferior to all these? It behoves the British authorities to think over this. Was it wrong to have asked for Home Rule in this war time? How was it right to have interned Mrs. Besant and others who asked for it? Would it not lead to popular discontent and a feeling of despair among the people that self-government will not come to them at an early date? Have not the British authorities decided to treat the Colonies such as Canada and Australia as their equals? How are we inferior to them? Have not Indians provided more men and money than everybody else? Have not the Indians merited applause from every quarter by their heroism which was of the type which the Pandavas displayed in the Mahabharata war? Have not even the Indian rulers risked their lives and gone to the front? Although there is only a very small army at present, is there not perfect peace in this land with a population of 30 crores? What further evidence need there be to show that the Indians are perfectly loyal to the British Empire? The Indians have never been so loyal to any other ruler. So then, the grant of Home Rule which they ask for now would only be an adequate return for their services and loyalty and not of the nature of a gift. If the Government should promise Home Rule at the close of the war, the present agitation would doubtless decrease. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the British will regard the Indians with greater confidence and promise them Home Rule and soon take steps to fulfil it.

The duty of the people.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 3rd, 1917.

97. In a lengthy eulogistic sketch of the late Mr Dadhabhai Naoroji's career, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 4th July, extols his political work and the books written by him on the subject and concludes as follows:—There is a proposal to found a memorial in his honour. But it seems to us that his work for the country is the best conceivable memorial to him. His methods for remedying the shortcomings of the administration in India and the foundation he has laid for Home Rule or swaraj are the greatest memorials to him. It is the duty of every Indian to make this memorial a success. If every patriot should subscribe a month's income to the Home Rule fund and thereby bring about the speedy grant of Home Rule, he would be creating the best possible memorial to Mr. Naoroji and such a memorial would admittedly be the most suitable one in his case.

The late Mr. Naoroji.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 4th, 1917.

The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 4th July, in a similar article abounding in superlatives in his praise, dwells on his steady and untiring labours for the political advancement of the country.

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore, July 4th, 1917.

Mysore Star, Mysore, July 1st, 1917.

98. The Mysore Star, of the 1st July, writes:—Those who agitate for complete self-government at the close of the war seem to think that by complaining to the higher authorities, even to the Secretary of State, it would be possible to get the orders of internment withdrawn. Nobody would object to such withdrawal, provided the present agitation also would cease at the same time. If, on the other hand, those who pose as the leaders of the people should think that persistent agitation is bound to succeed in the end and act on the belief that, as with the modification of the partition, they will achieve their purpose, they are only mistaken. For there is no analogy between the two. The partition was as easy to modify as it was to make. The grant of self-government, on the other hand, is not so easy as to ask for it. It requires long and deep thought on the part of the rulers and the interests of the rulers as well as the ruled have to be guarded. To take advantage of the present crisis to agitate for Home Rule when the British Ministry is pre-occupied with war problems and thus to be deemed selfish is by no means consistent with the India's well-earned reputation for loyalty. Another defect of the present system of agitation seems to arise from the erroneous idea that political privileges such as self-government being in the power of the Home authorities to grant, they can be gained irrespective of the good-will and support of the local administrators. We should bear in mind, however, that Mr. Morley's reforms would not have come without Lord Minto's support and that neither the redress of the South African Indians' grievances, nor the annulment of the partition nor the sympathetic interest of the British public in regard to the grant of self-government would have been possible without the sympathetic attitude of Lord Hardinge. In the absence of the present Viceroy's sympathy we shall get nothing. Even the present internment cannot be said to be due to Lord Pentland alone. We cannot say that His Excellency issued the order without consulting the Viceroy or that the Viceroy did not consult the Secretary of State in turn. To do anything to alienate the sympthy of the higher authorities here and thus to lose the kindly interest of the British Ministry as well, at this time, is therefore even more impolitic than improper. The present unprecedented measure of sympathy among the British public towards Indian affairs, which Sir Sinha told us of the other day, is certainly not due to the clever oratory of our popular leaders; it is, as we stated in a previous issue, due to the heroic services of our unlettered men on the battlefield. If our leaders were to wait and see what it would all bring to them at the close of the war and had helped the authorities, the result would have been doubly beneficial. To have attempted to barter those services of India for the boon of self-government and to have adopted these extreme methods of compelling the authorities to this end is therefore most indiscreet. The National Congress has for so many years been urging the admission of Indians into the army. Now the authorities have granted the request. But what is the result? The number of men who have enlisted themselves in these four months is not even a fourth of the number invited. The leaders are still busy blaming the authorities and complaining of defects in the proposed system instead of profiting by the opportunities already created. What can be more disgraceful than this? We should all realise the advantages of conciliation over hostility. Let us take the suffragist movement for example. Before the war, with all their persistently extreme methods of agitation the suffragists did not succeed. Look at their attitude on the outbreak of the war, and look at the result! Their whole-hearted services, giving up their agitation, brought them what they wished for; and Mr. Asquith who was at one time one of the bitterest opponents of the suffragist movement introduced a Bill in favour of the movement. We would, therefore, emphasize the value of the excellent lesson which this affords to all Indians.

Self-government for India.

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, June 29th, 1917.

99. In a lengthy leading article dwelling on the protests against the internments, through speeches at public meetings at various places and through the criticisms appearing in the press, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 29th June, observes that the Anglo-Indian journals are the only supporters of the order, and that, leaving aside the naturally impassioned criticism of the Indian press on one side, and the approbation of the Anglo-Indian press, which cannot be said to represent Indian opinion on the other, it will generally be admitted that, even apart from the internments which affect only certain individuals, the consensus of public opinion is towards the grant of a large measure of self-government within the empire and it is noteworthy that even the Times of India, the leading Anglo-Indian journal, urges that the authorities should be prepared to be more broad-minded in this respect.

Reforms in the administration.

The paper finally remarks that India will have gained everything she wants if the responsible authorities at the head of the administration would only act upon the advice of the Times.

The Madras protest meeting.

100. Referring to the Madras protest meeting against the recent internments, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 27th June, points out that the extreme and objectionable character of the methods, adopted by the Home Rule party, may more or less be attributed to the attitude of the Anglo-Indian papers towards Indian demands, which in spite of the Press Act go to the length of passing severe strictures on generous and sympathetic Viceroys too, and that, in view of the Secretary of State's statement on the subject, it is doubtful whether the Madras Government can be made solely responsible for the orders against Mrs. Besant and others, who, however, have not swerved an inch from the path of loyalty even when their zeal for self-government led them to adopt objectionable methods, and whom the members of the British Parliament, the Prime Minister and His Majesty the King-Emperor himself will, it is to be hoped, soon release, and says :—Several of the well-known Indian leaders are of opinion that the action of the Madras Government against Mrs. Besant was wrong; and this view is gradually spreading among the people in general. Such an impression among the people in general, whether it be right or wrong, cannot be conducive to the welfare of India. That the desire for self-government on the part of the Indian leaders is a deep-rooted one, is proved by the establishment of Home Rule Leagues, by the increase in the number of members thereof and by the amount of money pouring in towards their maintenance and support, all these being the consequences of this incident (internment). A rich man in Bombay has contributed a lakh of rupees to the Home Rule League therein. The Government's present action has like the "curse of Urvasi" proved to be a blessing in disguise, inasmuch as it has augmented the people's desire and zeal for self-government, which there is reason to believe will, in the present circumstances, go on increasing. The Government are not opposed to the grant of Home Rule, the difference of opinion being as only with regard to the time and manner of granting it. The Indian leaders will do well to bear this in mind, and strive for the attainment of the object in a manner that may satisfy the Government as well as the people.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, June 27th, 1917.

The swadeshi movement.

101. Referring to the swadeshi movement, the Kerala Patrika, of the 30th June, points out that it is not a genuine one, started with a view to improve indigenous industries, but only a sequel to the recent internments, and that it is likely to die out sooner than that which came into being at the time of the Partition of Bengal, and observes that all efforts for the improvement of indigenous industries should be made in agreement with, and not in opposition to, the Government, and that before taking a swadeshi vow what ought to be done is to try to improve the indigenous industries.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, June 30th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Lokaprakasam, of the 2nd July, has the following in English :—" As we observe around, India is passing now through a very important stage, and the series of representative meetings of the public held during the past fortnight in different parts of the Empire, vehemently protesting against the drastic action of the Madras Government, bears sufficient testimony to the deep feeling of the public. Even the large uneducated yet intelligent among the population of the whole country from the Himalayas to the Comorin is unanimous in the wholesale condemnation of the repressive policy now administered by His Excellency Lord Pentland at the fag end of his regimé, and the seriousness with which they are bent upon putting to practice the solemn swadeshi vow taken is a matter of grave consequence. Without any exception, the reports of many a public meeting we have been favoured with, make prominent mention of this vow, and it is only in the fitness of things that we see LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, July 2nd, 1917.

Srijit C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar of the Home Rule League coming out with the ideas of the League. To extract it in full:

"We have received, as Secretaries . . . political activity."

Nobody has any legitimate reason to quarrel at what has been said above; nor can we come in possession of any more useful weapon than that of swadeshi, to effectively bring to the notice of the English public the seriousness of the political situation created in recent times. The whole world is aware of the stubbornness with which our indomitable brethren of Bengal practised swadeshi when their province was partitioned and the success that ensued. Unlike the present, it was only a provincial grievance then, and the way they peacefully acted speaks volumes to their capacity and spirit of persistence. As Mrs. Besant has been advocating, it is only by constitutional and law-abiding means that we can work out our salvation, and not by acts of violence or brute force. The present times we are in drives us to the inevitable necessity of helping our Indian brethren first, and we are therefore in duty bound to do it. There are in our midst Maharajas, Rajas, Zamindars and all the rest, and the greatest service they could do to further the cause of our motherland and the Indian Nation is by encouraging swadeshi by all manner of means constitutional. India's industry and commerce, will come to prominence then, and our salvation will be in our own hands. Will all our patriots, young and old, bestow a kindly thought upon this all-important matter for the revival of our industrial development? We earnestly appeal to them in the fervent hope that they will wake up to the occasion, recognising in full the vital issues that are involved.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 4th, 1917.

The swadeshi movement.

In pooh-poohing the swadeshi movement, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 4th July, dwells upon the impossibility of carrying out the swadeshi vow, and observes that, inasmuch as there can be no administration which is entirely faultless, it is the duty of the people to point out their mistakes, if any, to the Government, and enable them to rectify them, instead of assuming a hostile attitude towards the Government and taking such vows, which will not only defeat its own purpose but also bring some evils with it.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, June 29th, 1917.

Swadesism.

The Yogakshemam, of the 29th June, points out that the internment orders have given a great impetus to the old swadesi movement, and observes that whatever may be the principle underlying the policy of the Madras Government, it may be asserted that, if these serve to improve the industries in this Presidency, it will prove to be a blessing to the many who suffer much for want of means to eke out their livelihood.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

Swadeshi movement.

The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 27th June, writes:—The defunct swadeshi movement has been resuscitated by the supporters of Home Rule and the oath is being administered to people requiring them to give preference, as far as possible, to swadeshi articles. We consider this movement to be most prejudicial to the prosperity of the country. All of us have had some experience more or less of what swadeshi connotes and can assert that this movement made no contribution to the material or economic welfare of the community and the country. Time was when the swadeshi deity was being worshipped throughout the Bengal Presidency and purchasers of foreign articles were being reproached and execrated. Gradually, however, the dark night of this unreasonable prejudice passed away, and the Bengalis became conscious of their error. We are astounded to find the city of Madras now committing the same blunder, and we are sure they will live to repent of their folly.

The swadeshi oath is an unnecessary evil and only a foolish person is likely to involve himself in it. Perhaps his folly will allow him to appreciate swadeshi articles contrary to his will and desire, otherwise no person in his sober senses would, for the sake of fad, conceal the truth.

There are thousands of articles which, if made locally, would require an enormous amount of money to produce. Possibly they may be made available and placed within the means of a few wealthy vakils and merchants, but what benefit can poor and impecunious people, whose numbers run into hundreds of thousands, derive from these expensive swadeshi articles, and how can these poor creatures bear the burden of such high prices? The appreciation of such articles by a few rich people is hardly sufficient to popularise them on the market. They have to be approved by the masses and not merely by the classes. It is obvious that poor people can never tolerate high prices.

Indigenous industries are but an ostensible plea, but the real object of the supporters of swadeshi is to throttle the revenue of the country by the introduction of their home-made articles. They do not realise what they are doing, and the true situation is summed up in the saying:—

Better far a wise enemy than a foolish friend

The Government cannot be conquered or coerced by any such procedure. It will collect its taxes whatever the state of affairs may be. It is the helpless poor, who have been incited and misled by so-called leaders, that will be the sufferers. Ultimately the secret will be out. The strength of swadeshism will naturally decline and arrangements will have to be made for its funeral obsequies as has already been done in Bengal.

The editor impresses on the supporters of Home Rule that they should not disturb the peace of the country by relying on unsound and unwise principles. swadeshi will do but slight harm to foreign merchants and manufacturers; it is the people of the country who will suffer most.

102. Referring to the appointments of the Hon'ble Mr. Basu and Sir P. S Pattani as members of the India Council, the Manorama, of the 29th June, points out that the presence of three eminent Indians on the India Council will, in the present state of things in India, be of immense advantage to her, and hopes that these Indians, who are well acquainted with the wishes of the Indians, will strive for her advancement in their private as well as official capacities.

The recent appointments on the India Council.

Manorama, Calicut, June 29th, 1917.

103. Referring to the suppression of a public meeting at Tuticorin by the Inspector of Police, who is said to have taken this action under the Defence of India Act, the Manorama, of the 29th June, points out that it would be a great pity if anybody and everybody is allowed to make use of the Defence of India Act, in any and every matter, and that now the first thing to be done is to protest against this unjust action of the Inspector, and observes that, if Inspectors can do things like this, then it is to be apprehended that Inspectors, Sub-Inspectors, head constables, and constables themselves will begin to oppress the people in the name of the Defence of India Act.

Suppression of a public meeting at Tuticorin.

Manorama, Calicut, June 29th, 1917.

104. The Yogakshemam, of the 29th June, also makes an appreciative reference to the recent speech of Mr. Galletti at Tinnevelly.

Mr. Galletti's speech.

Yogakshemam, Trichur, June 29th, 1917.

105. Anent the fight between the Anglo-Indian and Indian press regarding the internments, the Yogakshemam, of the 29th June, points out that, though in number and following the Indian papers are superior to the Anglo-Indian papers the latter are freer and have the support of the Government, and that therefore it may be more or less guessed, which of the two will be worsted in the struggle, refers to the admission by a European paper in Northern India that the action of the Madras Government was rash (impatient), and that it might lead to various troubles, and says:—It appears that the action of the Madras Government has created great unrest in all parts of India, and many say that this unrest will have greater force than that which was created by the partition of Bengal.

The internments and the Indian and the Anglo-Indian press.

Yogakshemam, Trichur, June 29th, 1917.

106. Referring to the recent internments, the Kerala Patrika, of the 30th June, draws attention to the extraordinary unrest among a certain section of the people as a result thereof, which cannot conduce to the welfare of the people, and which increases and may still continue to increase in consequence of the speeches delivered at the various protest meetings, and to the fact that a number of people, other than Theosophists and Home Rulers, are now joining the Home Rule Leagues, though no great value need be attached to it, as those who have settled views on the subject of self-government are not likely to change them merely on account of the internments, pooh-poohs the suggestion that the elected members on the Legislative Councils should resign in a body, which can in no way hamper the Government, as well as that relating to swadeshism, which, in its opinion, will be impossible to be carried out, and observes that thousands of Indians know nothing of these matters, that even among the knowing there are many who, though silent, approve of the action of the Government, that those who criticise the Government's action will do well to think of their duties and responsibilities and that, inasmuch as there is a general belief that the action was due to the clamour for Home Rule, the Government on their part will do well to state clearly whether it is so or not and what they are going to do in the matter of self-government.

The present unrest in India.

Kerala Patrika, Calicut, June 30th, 1917.

Malayala Manorama, Kottayám, July 4th, 1917.

The Governors of Madras and Bombay.

107. In commenting favourably on the extension of the terms of offices of Lords Pentland and Willingdon, who have displayed considerable courage and wisdom in checking the agitation for self-government, which was being carried on in an undesirable manner even at this critical juncture, the Malayala Manorama, of the 4th July, points out that it will be of advantage to have here these Governors who are responsible for the repressive measures, till the end of the present trouble, rather than new ones who may be little acquainted with the present situation, though this decision may not be acceptable to the swadeshi party, and observes that, though these measures have had the effect of increasing the activities of the advocates of Home Rule, they are sure to die out soon, and that the Government need not pay heed to their clamour.

Desabhimani, Quilon, une 30th, 1917.

The treatment given to Indians in the Colonies.

108. The Desabhimani, of the 30th June, condemns the action of a European in Johannesburg who pushed out of a tram car in motion an educated Indian youth who ultimately died as a result of it, points out that India has received various benefits from British rule, but that it is the atrocities committed by hard-hearted men like the European referred to above, that produce unrest among certain impetuous Indians, and that the British Government ought, in the interests of the Empire, to induce the Colonial authorities to adopt a more generous policy towards Indians, and to punish then and there those who commit such atrocities, and observes that it may be hoped that at the reconstruction of the Empire after the war, satisfactory remedies would be found for these defects.

Manorama, Calicut, July 3rd, 1917.

The newspapers and the Madras and the Punjab Governments.

109. Referring to the order of the Punjab Government, prohibiting under the Defence of India Act, the publication of the proceedings of the Bradlaugh Hall meeting at Lahore, protesting against the Madras internments, the Manorama, of the 3rd July, points out that the order of the Punjab Government, the cause of which is not known to any in that province, has come upon the people as a surprise, and that no other Governments have made a similar order, and observes that most people think it to be quite improper to apply an Act, passed as a war-measure, to a matter which is in no way connected with the war.

Manorama, Calicut, July 3rd, 1917.

The extension of the terms of Lords Pentland and Willingdon.

110. Referring to the Press communiqué announcing the extension of the terms of Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon, the Manorama, of the 3rd July, points out that this news is not likely to give satisfaction to many in India, but hopes that His Excellency Lord Pentland will, instead of obstinately clinging to such acts of his as have drawn forth severe criticisms from the people in general, avail himself of this opportunity to rectify his mistakes, the admission of a mistake being more honourable than sticking to it.

Manorama, Calicut, July 3rd, 1917.

Agricultural farms

111. Referring to the establishment of experimental farms in various parts of the country and to the efforts of the agricultural department to educate the people in scientific methods of agriculture, the Manorama, of the 3rd July, dwells upon the necessity of establishing an agricultural farm in a central part of South Malabar, which alone will ensure the attainment of the object the Government have in view, and hopes that this matter will receive the attention of the capable Collector, Mr. Evans, who is well acquainted with the conditions in Malabar, and of the Hon'ble Mr. Moopil Nayar.

MALAYALI, Quilon, July 4th, 1917.

The Agricultural Conference.

112. Referring to the recent Agricultural Conference at Simla, the Malayali, of the 4th July, doubts whether its results have been proportionate to the heavy expenditure incurred in connection therewith, and whether, if several important subjects which came before it were to be left for settlement by the Provincial Governments, there was any necessity at all for such a conference at Simla, expresses surprise at the attitude of some of the members who boldly asserted that there was little to be done in the matter of agricultural education, which no one who loves India could say, and observes that, though the settlement of several questions has been delegated to Provincial Governments, the Government of India will, there is reason to believe, direct them as to how they should proceed, and that, as the Viceroy and Sir Claude Hill take special interest in agricultural matters, it may be hoped that several measures for the improvement of agriculture will be introduced and carried out before these eminent officers retire from service.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, June 24th, 1917.

The present condition—No. 1.

113. The Qaumi Report, of the 24th June, writes:—The orders of the Government of Madras have produced a marked change in the atmosphere and the atmospheric condition of the city is not the same as it was a month ago. Changes are taking place in ideas, sentiments, and feelings, and it appears there is not likely to be much peace and quietness in the lot of Madras in future.

Mussalmans are most affected by the present condition. Home Rule and its hopes are before them, and, it is explained to them that you and we are identical, touching the service of the mother country who has a claim on you too.

Liberty is the first principle of Islam and a Mussalman cannot speak evil of freedom, but the idea of political freedom is also rankling in his mind, and he is thinking whether this desired freedom will enslave him or not. What will be the position of Islam and Mussalmans under Home Rule? It is said, "It will be a time of freedom and that Mussalmans will be given equal rights in the administration of India. They will be allowed to act in accordance with their principles and tenets. In fact they will enjoy greater religious liberty, because in the administrative body their opinion would have the most weight and the decision of any religious question would be based upon Mussalman advice.

The breeze of freedom is being waffled over men's minds and the spectacle of liberty is placed before their eyes. Mussalmans are dumb. They are looking back and muttering and then look about in front. They know what their actual condition is and, if the present atmosphere continue to exist, what their future is likely to be.

There is no doubt that the Government has forgotten the Mussalmans. Moreover both parties have lost their former enthusiasm. One section of Mussalmans, that relied implicitly and with the utmost assurance on the Government, has now become feeble, and its voice weak. The advancement of the country has left it several stages behind, and there is now no hope, nay, it is impossible that it will ever regain its lost place of honour. The market of constitutional endeavour is very brisk, and time proclaims that the future condition of the world can never be the same as it was before. We observe that there is a life and death struggle going on between Monarchy and Democracy. The Tsar and Constantine are making their abode in the wilderness, and, in England democracy is discussed in assemblies.

This party, foreign and unknown to the community, wishes to exercise its influence and submit to the rulers ideas formed and shaped by itself, just for the sake of bread and butter (lit. salt). But the rulers themselves are fully aware that the representations of this party are miles away from fact and knowledge. For example, a so-called well-informed person, who has no knowledge of anything, outside the four walls of his house and has not the energy to attend meetings, recently wrote that "no Mussalman attended the Thursday's meeting," although the Mussalmans who were present, flatly contradict the statement. Does the Government regard such informants well informed? Does it rely on such statements? We know it certainly does not. The Government knows well that the information furnished by these uninformed persons is deplorable and that their position in the community and the country is lamentable.

We are sure the eyes of our informant will be opened now, and he will not repeat the mistake of communicating false information to the Government. This incident ought to make the correspondent of our contemporary the Madras Times, who claims to have been present at the meeting, to feel sorry for himself. If he had only taken the trouble to look round, he might have seen ten or twenty Muhammadans. If this is the case of a well-informed correspondent, what about poor people who are engaged in business?

But the Hindus ought to be pleased that Mussalmans were present at their meeting. Mussalmans cannot yet admit the principle of Home Rule and we know that those, who attended the meeting, were neither partisans of Mrs. Besant nor admirers of her methods, but they love sympathetic people and were present to express their feelings of grief and sorrow.

It is possible that the Government may infer from this procedure on the part of Mussalmans, and conclude that the information, communicated to it by certain selfish persons on behalf of the Mussalmans, was consistent with fact. We will not reply to it just yet, we shall go on observing the actual condition of the country and Mussalman relations and later throw some light on the matter. It is hoped that the authorities will read this article of ours carefully.

Qaumi Report, Madras, June 25th, 1917.

The present condition—No. 2.

114. The Qaumi Report, of the 25th June writes:—Although the unrest described by Sir Valentine Chirol does not exist in the city, the fact remains that unrest is certainly spreading. Here and there adherents to Home Rule are being secured, the number of believers is increasing, and the Swadeshi oath is being administered. We are, however, glad that the real danger, owing to the existence of New India, has gone. Had its body been lying shroudless and without a grave, this unrest would have assumed a different colour, and lawyers and legists would have appeared in the field.

Some people think that the resuscitation of New India is inexpedient.

"We said this mischief is best asleep."
(Let sleeping do go, lit. Tr.)

But we think they are excusable. Had these people, like ourselves, been acquainted with the real state of affairs, they would have valued its revival and regarded it as placing the seal of silence on the tongues and hands.

We know prominent vakils took part in the discussion regarding its existence, when the rumour was exceedingly persistent that the Government had privately hinted to Khan Bahadur Muhammad Bazlullah Sahib Bahadur (acting Chief Presidency Magistrate) not to grant it. Some people go, as far as, to believe that Mr. Pelly was granted leave for this very reason in order that a European official should not get a bad name.

New India's supporters had decided to appeal immediately to the High Court, in case the Khan Bahadur refused to grant the permission to register the paper, to obtain a mandamus against him. A special meeting should be held to express feelings of detestation at this procedure and the voice of the Press Association should be raised. The situation was a very complicated one. Had the Khan Bahadur for some reason or other refused to grant the permission, the Government would have got a very bad name, and the seed of unrest, which was perishing, would have blossomed forth into a big tree.

We are very pleased and all men of foresight express their satisfaction with his practical knowledge, and assert that he has solved an intricate problem with great firmness and tact.

Moreover, the Press Act is before us and there is not a single section therein empowering the Magistrate to refuse to receive security and stop an old paper from publication under its Proprietor and Editor. Had this been the intention of the Legislature, they would certainly have given an explanation. On the contrary Sir Robert Resley's preface shows that the aim and object of the Press Act is that newspapers should not enjoy unlawful freedom. The object of the Act is to admonish newspapers, and not to stop them. We do not understand how the Khan Bahadur could have rejected the appeal for the resuscitation of New India, or how the Government itself could have given him such instructions. When the Government passed the order for the internment of Mrs. Annie Besant, they knew that legal steps would be taken to secure it a new base of life and that some one would succeed her.

Had the Government wished to silence New India along with Mrs. Annie Besant, they would have specified in the order that she should not make over or transfer her Press to another.

The Government have not made any such prohibition nor have they issued any order to that effect. They have acted very wisely. The Khan Bahadur has committed no mistake either in the administration of the law or in the rectification of the present condition. He has thus saved the Government from unnecessarily getting a bad name; otherwise by now there would have been a great outcry, and the lamentation caused by the Press Act would have reached the Privy Council through the High Court

Whether it be New India, or ourselves, or others, so long as we exist we are within the bounds of the operation of the Press Act, and the authorities have the power to reprimand us for each and every mistake. If New India errs in future, the Magistrate or the competent authority has the right to deal with it according to law.

Had the Khan Bahadur entertained the idea, that New India was connected with Mrs. Annie Besant, and the Government had awarded her an iron decoration for her writing and speeches, the venomous reputation could not vanish with the appearance of the name and work of a new Proprietor and Editor, we might, for a moment, have admitted the logic of this argument, and with all respect, have asked this question. For the sake of example supposing, for some reason or other, the Madras Mail were sold to Mrs. Besant and she wished to publish it in accordance with her own aims, would the present good reputation of the Madras Mail obtain Mrs. Besant the required permission without any security or restriction, and would it continue to be the Madras Mail any longer?

The fact is the authorities and the law can decide as to past acts and statements, but they cannot control future events. If any authority were as a precautionary measure, to interpret erroneously like this, we should regard him as an enemy of the Government. The present example is sufficient to show that Khan Bahadur Muhammad Bazlullah Sahib Bahadur's action has put a stop to unrest.

115. The Qaumi Report, of the 24th June, writes:—False rumours are afloat in connection with Mrs. Annie Besant to the effect that when she saw Lord Pentland, she asked to be put in jail instead of being interned. We know perfectly well that the statement is untrue. The fact is His Excellency said "the Government wishes to put an end to your activities." Mrs. Annie Besant replied, "I do not wish to withdraw anything I have said or done." His Lordship offered her time for further consideration, but Mrs. Annie Besant said, "there is no necessity for it." Finally His Excellency said, "see me to-morrow." Mrs. Annie Besant replied, "I do not wish to give you any more trouble."

False rumours.

Qaumi Report, Madras, June 24th, 1917.

The above is the gist of the true story.

We should also do something.

Mr. Arundale has not yet been interned. Legal steps are being taken in London for his release. Mussalmans have forgotten their friends. There was a proposal to send a deputation to the Viceroy and the proposal was very strongly supported by the Muslim League, but it has not yet taken shape.

Is this not the time when we should do something?

116. The Qaumi Report, of the 26th June, writes:—Under the heading "The present condition" we have written that at present signs of agitation and unrest are being manifested. Mussalmans are being taught to adopt the constitutional principle

Our immediate needs.

Qaumi Report, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

We do not say that Mussalmans will pledge themselves to support Home Rule nor do we think that the present unrest can check their aspirations. The time, however, demands that we should awake from the sleep of indolence and realise what our immediate need is.

Many persons tell us that we have an equal share in the joys and sorrows of India. The law books of Hindus and Mussalmans are identical. Moulavi and leader have been interned and no one can assure us as to what our future lot is to be. Necessity demands that we should also take part in lawful agitation, and give our community the benefit of our national importance and influence.

Some people declare that if Home Rule does not suit Mussalmans we should establish a settlement for ourselves in some other country. We are not wanted in India.

Others say that the Government is not against a lawful demand for Home Rule, but is opposed to improper writing and speech. For this reason why should we keep apart from Home Rule? The desire for freedom is natural and every one is entitled to constitutional freedom. How can we remove a natural desire from our minds?

Some say that the Muslim League believes in Home Rule and the principal leaders of the community are raising the voice of demand. Hence we have no necessity for further consideration. We can, without any hesitation, declare that we are also with our compatriots.

We believe that these ideas will greatly disturb the Mussalmans and they will reproach themselves with unnecessary hesitation. Can you say that you have a special position in the country? Can you prove that there is a separate chapter for us in the law? Can you assure us that you have some special patrons amongst the authorities? Have you obtained any special appointment or post because you are Mussalmans? Will any special indulgence be set apart for you in the proposals for the future administration and development of the country?

We admit that everyone cannot answer these complicated questions, and that unfortunately there is no influence in the community that can keep it immune from outside influences, and thus save it from effacement by being absorbed in any other community.

Our immediate need is that we should appreciate our nationality. We should realise that we are an important and responsible community. Our past history is great, our importance and greatness are indestructible, our religious strength is alive, our blood contains spiritual fervour, and our hearts and minds are subject to heavenly influence.

We may be effaced ourselves but nationality cannot be destroyed. We may become irreligious, but we cannot destroy religion. These things constitute a sacred trust inherited by us from our ancestors. Our duty is to hand it down to posterity.

In such a case how is it possible that we should destroy the trust for the sake of the country or the people. We are not opposed to Home Rule, but we are against the principle that aims at our effacement by absorbing us in a numerically great community. We will be Indians in India, but we cannot be Hindus. If India wants to swamp our nationality and religion in its Ganges and Jumna, she should have us excused. We are not going to anoint ourselves with her love.

We have not come to India as highwaymen or mendicants. We entered it as conquerors and took up our abode here If we have no say in its administration, that does not mean we have become slaves and that the walls and doors of the country can limit our movements at their pleasure. As long as the traces of our civilisation remain, as long as the memorials of our rule exist and as long as a babe of our community lives, we will not forget our past greatness, past history and past rights, whether Home Rule is obtained or no, whether the condition of constitutional freedom is fulfilled or not fulfilled.

We, as a community, are a civilised community, and the civilised world cannot ignore our rights. Let India regard the history of our past greatness, as an old calendar. A large part of the old and musty records of the past, however, is made up of our history. No history of Europe can be complete without a reference to us. It was we who made this land of India prosperous and her soil has been enriched by our blood.

Is the reward for all this to be self-effacement and the abandonment of the destiny which God hath decreed for us, a destiny which every living nation possesses? Fate is not our foe! It is but the outcome of our endeavours. If today we wish to live, no power on earth can hinder us so long as the soul is healthy; bodily ills cannot prevent us.

Qaumi Report, Madras, June 27th, 1917.

Our immediate needs—No 2.

117. The Qaumi Report, of the 27th June, writes:—Our national history is not a tale of Nuldaman. We are a community that prefers self-respect to love truth, and truth to expediency. It is superfluous to speak of the procedure of either the Government or its officials. No Government can open the gates of heaven for us. To expect the Government to grant special laws, special indulgences, and special attractions is tantamount to burying our national zeal, self-respect, and greatness alive. The Government is bound to follow its own principles and act according to its own ideals. If it does not grant us special consideration, it is the fault of laws. But why should we arrange a funeral procession for defunct endeavours and mourn for our rights:—

"He will not change his disposition;
"Why should we change our attitude?
"Wherefore we seriously ask why he is dissatisfied with us?"

In the last analysis the Government is an alien one. The officials are strangers. The law is based on foreign principles. It would not be surprising if it showed us no consideration, but what regard have our political friends, our compatriots or our fellow travellers along the paths of civilization for us? Which of our special rights have they recognised? What special consideration have they suggested for us? Which of our demands have they supported?

Have they recognised our right for separate representation? Have they admitted our historical greatness? Have they sympathised with our numerical inferiority? Have they had a regular debate at the Congress sessions concerning the internment of Messrs Muhammad Ali, Zafar Ali, Showkat Ali. Moulana Hazrat and Moulana Azad? Has any President referred to the question? Has any disapproval been expressed at the confiscation of any Mussalman newspaper or Press? Did they show us any compassion in the Cawnpore mosque case? Did they side with us in the matter of the conditions of the Muslim University? Why, therefore, should the question of indifference of the Government and the bureaucracy arise? What consolation and satisfaction have the friends of the country given us that we should complain of the strangers to the country?

"With what tongue dost thou complain of exile, Ghalib?
"Hast thou forgotten the unkindness of thine own countrymen?"

We unhesitatingly declare that to expect any special indulgence from Government is to bury one's national sense of self-respect alive. Whatever the Government has hitherto done it has done in accordance with its own aims. Whatever it does in future, will be done on this self-same principle. Do we not remember that even during the time of our indigenous rule no special indulgence was extended to us? In the administration of the country Muhammadans enjoyed equal rights. Our Government, in full view of Mussalmans, conferred preferment upon Hindus and Christians and no Mussalman, qua Mussalman, was entitled to any special consideration. The real test was ability and this is a manifest proof of our national tolerance that up to the present we read and teach the poems, writings, works, and impressions of non-Muslims. Even up to the present day we do not talk of Musa Abdul Masīh or Ishāk or Yākūb only; but we refer to Aristotles, Socrates, Galen, Todar Mall, Birmall and Man Singh in equally affectionate terms.

We do not really think that Home Rule, or self-government is bad nor do, like the Hindus, imagine it to be very near, nor like the Anglo-Indian contemplate it, as something a long way off. Our immediate need is not to decide whether something is near or remote. What is nearer than death or more remote than judgment-day? We believe, in both. Our immediate need at present is that we should revive our nationality, and grasp the means obtainable, be they official or non-official, and through them resuscitate the past greatness and history of the community. In fact do what a living nation should do.

Our immediate need is this that we should assemble under the Divine standard, i.e., the banner of religion, and make use of our spiritual powers, the powers that vitalised our community in the past. Our national life should be free, unfettered, and independent. We should demand from the Government not favours but rights and not allow our destiny to solely depend on the consideration or generosity of another community or Government. A community of flatterers is perfectly helpless and hopeless. It can never succeed and lacking the one thing needful, it can derive no benefit from any kind of Home Rule or self-government.

Constitutional freedom is a sword, and any attempt, to use it without previous practice, would be fraught with danger.

Supposing, for the sake of argument, India needed freedom, we as a community are more in need of it, but as long as we lack the influence born of learning and wealth, we can derive no benefit from liberty. If, however, rich and educated community give us our equal rights, and if it demand freedom, not in the name of India but in the name of Indian Mussalmans and Hindus, we can assuredly join our voices with theirs. But all this requires time in order that we may revive our nationality. Our immediate need is, that we should clearly define our political ideal, so that the rights of hundreds of thousands of our ignorant and poor brethren, who are not able to appear either before the Government or in the market place, or in the assembly, or at the Council table, may not be trampled under foot. We are responsible for them, and without them, we have no right, either in the name of the Muslim League, or in that of Muslim leaders, to conclude a separate peace. Such an act would mean selling the community, and that is something which we are not accustomed to do.

III.—Legislation.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, June 30th, 1917.

A free press.

118. In an article under this heading, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 30th June, writes:—In order to please some of the autocratic officers of the Government of India, some of the Governments of the Native States too have enacted a law to undermine the liberty of the press as in British India. The result is that the people are not free to express their true views. Autocrats always think that by taking away the liberty of speech they can do as they like. They even deceive themselves that they have succeeded. But the truth is otherwise. Great demon kings like Rávana brought about their own ruin by denying the liberty of speech. Alexander and Napoleon wiped themselves out by denying the same liberty. Many a ruler has secretly met with his death for the same reason. The present Russian Revolution is due to the same cause. It is well known that, wherever there are adequate opportunities for criticism in a country, there the chances of revolution are minimised. Nevertheless some short-sighted and irresponsible persons think that they can carry everything before them by their highhandedness and invite many a disaster thereby. As the British are somewhat farseeing, they are able to escape such disasters to a considerable extent. But even the British have not the requisite measure of foresight. That is why trouble is now cropping up in their kingdom too. We pray to God that they may be able to realise the consequences of their failings.

IV.—Native States.

Dravidan, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

Agricultural advancement in Travancore.

119. The Dravidan, of the 28th June, refers to the various suggestions that are being made to commemorate the sixtieth birthday celebration of the Maharaja of Travancore, and observes:—It will not be fair to do anything in this connection for benefiting only the Brahman class, who have always been the favourites of this State for purposes of charity. The memorial raised should be such as will benefit all classes and especially those classes which are backward in education, morals, civilization and industries. Our opinion is that the best form of memorial would be to estalish an Agricultural College in Trivandrum, the capital of the State, and to make arrangements for agricultural education being imparted in all schools in the State. We do not think any other memorial will be beneficial to the majority of the subjects of the State, and we hope this suggestion will be acceptable to the philanthropists of that State.

120. Referring to the announcement by the Mysore Darbar that there will be an immediate separation of the executive from the judicial functions in the State, the Swadesamitran, of the 3rd July, remarks:—This reform has been demanded in India from the time the Congress came into existence. High officials like the Viceroy have on many occasions admitted the necessity for the reform and stated that it would be undertaken soon. Even the Decentralization Commission recommended the introduction of this reform immediately. But nothing was of any avail. The plea seems to be that the separation of executive from judicial functions would curtail the esteem in which the Collector is held. Thus a system which leads occasional miscarriage of justice is continued for the purpose of maintaining the prestige of the Collector. The fact that this reform is about to be introduced in the Mysore State shows that the Native States which are expected to copy their administrative methods from the British India, are, in certain matters, in a position to teach British India in matters of administration.

A big reform in Mysore.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

121. In a leading article criticising the work of the Mysore Economic Conference, the Tumkur Vartaman, of the 2nd July, says:—The time has arrived for enquiring why the Economic Conference has not been able to show any adequate return for the huge amount spent upon it. The truth seems to be that the members of the executive bodies in the branch committees of the conference seem to have no grasp of economic questions. If they should treat these just as they do in the other departments of Government, we may be sure that no results will follow even after many centuries of work. To render this work more satisfactory what is more important than money is intelligence, energy and enthusiasm coupled with a sympathetic interest on the part of the highly paid officers. The Government do not seem to be prepared as yet to entrust the responsibility wholly to honorary workers. The labours in this connection cannot be fruitful unless there is good mutual confidence between the Government and the people.

The Mysore Economic Conference.

Tumkur Vartaban, Tumkur, Mysore Province, July 2nd, 1917.

122. In the course of a leading article reviewing the annual report on the administration of Coorg, the Vrittanta Patrike, of the 5th July, observes:—It is gratifying to note that this little province under the Honourable the Resident in Mysore has effected progress in numerous directions. The forest revenue increased very considerably during the year. The Abkāri revenue also yielded a large sum. The restriction regarding the hours for keeping public houses open, the reduction of the number of shops and the arrangements made for bringing home to the minds of school children the evils of the drink habit, will, it is to be hoped, appreciably put down the vice. It is regrettable to note, however, that the number of children who attended school during the year shows a decrease instead of an increase. Three schools ceased to exist. The grant to the Basel Mission school was withheld. Only 21 per cent of the children of school-going age are receiving education. With more energetic persuasion and encouragement in regard to the spread of education, it should be possible to increase this number considerably. Another regrettable matter is that the number of offences committed during the year shows an increase. It is stated that this is due to the increased efficiency of the Police. Coorg is a fertile province. With the facilities of railway communication with the province, its agricultural produce could be more easily exported and trade would increase, leading to an increase of the population and the further advancement of the province.

The administration of Coorg.

Vrittanta Patrike, Mysore, July 5th, 1917.

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.

123. The Dravidan, of the 30th June, referring to the backward condition of the people of this country in the matter of improving agriculture, which is the main source of livelihood for the crores of people in this country, dwells upon the necessity of agricultural schools being started in different localities, so as to improve the knowledge of the people in agriculture, and of rendering pecuniary assistance to the agriculturists, both of which require the help of the Government, and observes that, as long as the Government do not make serious efforts in this matter, the holding of any number of agricultural conferences will not result in any material advantage.

Agriculture.

Dravidan, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

Errata.

Report No. 25.

Page 1799, line 34, substitute "at" for "of" after "amazed".
" 1802, paragraph 118, line 17, omit "the" after "with".
" 1802 " 118, " 30, substitute "royal" for "loyal".
" 1803, line 3, omit "the" before "Fate".
" 1804, " 4, substitute "Requiescat" for "Requires cat".
" 1804, " 5, substitute "he" for "the" before "too".

Report No. 26.

Page 1835, line 3 from the top, for "cannot" read "can not".
" 1837 " 30 " " for "studnts" read "students".
" 1839 " 22 " " for "Comissioner" read "Commissioner".
" 1841 " 4 " " for "Chemsford" read "Chelmsford".
" " " 23 from the bottom, delete the comma after "paper".
" 1842 " 14 " top, for "resolution" read "resolutions".
" 1848, paragraph 43, line 6, for "ound" read "Round".
" 1854, line 5, from the bottom insert "who" for "why".
" 1860 " 2, insert "may" for "many".
" 1866, item 88, line 5, substitute "health" for "heath".
" " " 88 " 18, insert " , " after "Kába".
" " " 88 " 46, substitute "speak" for "seek".
" " " 88 " 52, substitute "life" for "lip".
" 1867, line 5, insert "is" after "corpse".
" " item 89, line 15, substitute "Saturday" for "Saterday".
" " " 89 " 18, insert "the" before "activities".
" " " 89 " 34, substitute "India's" for "Indias".
" 1868, line 2, substitute "villains" for "villians".
" " " 5, insert " , " before "disorder".
" " " 17, substitute "rule" for "rules".
" 1869, " 37, substitute "maledictions" for "malidictions".
" 1870, " 3, substitute "extraordinarily" for "extraordinary".

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 28 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 14th July 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(a) Police—
The Police and "Protest" meetings	1929
(b) Courts—
The Madras High Court	ib.
(c) Local and Municipal—
The Vice-Presidentship, South Arcot District Board	1930
The Madras water-supply	ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont.	PAGE
(k) General—
Lords Pentland and Willingdon	1932
The unrest in India	ib.
The Madras Executive Council	1933
Lord Hardinge and the Mesopotamian Commission	1934
Social intercourse of Europeans and Indians ..	ib.
The Congress Presidentship	ib.
The Mesopotamia muddle and after	1935
The advocacy of self-government in England and India	ib.
The making of leaders	1936

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

A prophecy about the war 1937
The war .. .. ib.
The food problem of England .. .. .. ib.
Troubles in China .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police—

Tuticorin meeting .. .. ib.
The Criminal Investigation Department .. ib.
Police Sub-Inspectors 1938

(b) Courts—

The Madras High Court .. .. ib.

(d) Education—

The Intermediate Examination, 1917 .. .. ib.
National education 1939
Mr. Earnest Wood on education .. .. ib.
The Madanapalle College .. .. .. ib.
The present day education .. .. .. ib.
The School Final and the Intermediate Examinations 1940
The Bombay Educational Conference .. .. ib.
Shilly-shallying in connection with the Muslim College .. .. ib.

(e) Local and Municipal—

Corporation of Madras 1941
The Madras Corporation .. .. ib.
Local self-government .. .. ib.
The Lahore protest meeting .. .. .. ib.
The water difficulty .. .. ib.

(h) Railways—

Railway thefts .. .. ib.

(j) Salt and Abkári—

Excise Advisory Committees .. .. .. ib.

(k) General—

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia 1942
The Governor of Madras 1946
Indians in the Council of the Secretary of State for India 1947
A Fourth Member to the Madras Executive Council .. .. ib.
Home Rule .. .. ib.
Condition of cattle 1950
Post-war reforms .. .. ib.
Publication of the works of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues .. .. ib.
Compulsory vaccination 1951
The speech of General Smuts .. .. .. ib.
The Secretary of State's reply to the interpellations in the Parliament .. .. .. ib.
The Criminal Investigation Department .. 1952
Publication of Mrs. Besant's Theosophical works .. .. ib.
The Congress Presidentship .. .. .. ib.
Lord Ronaldshay on self-government .. .. ib.
Swadeshism .. .. ib.
The present situation and our duty 1953
Mr. Chamberlain's irresponsibility 1955
Home Rulers and the Maharaja of Bobbili .. ib.
Lord Ronaldshay on Home Rule 1956
Home Rule and the Zamindars .. .. .. ib.
The Central Board of Recruitment 1 57
The Brahmans .. .. ib.
Exodus to the hills 1958
Police annoyance .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.

Governors of Madras and Bombay 1958
Censor .. .. ib.
Indian administrative methods .. .. .. ib.
Swaraj .. .. ib.
The Madras Mail and Lord Hardinge .. .. ib.
The Indian Defence Force 1959
The order of the Punjab Government 1960
The war gift from India .. .. ib.
The late Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji .. .. .. ib.
The Andhra Social Conference 1961
Sparrow clubs .. .. ib.
The heavenly cow .. .. ib.
Exhortion to uplift the country 1962
The Allahabad leaders and Home Rule League. ib.
The Madras Provincial Congress Committee .. ib.
Mr. Bhupendranath Basu .. .. .. ib.
A meeting of the Congress .. .. .. ib.
Lord Willingdon and Lord Pentland .. .. ib.
The present situation 1963
Miss Arundale's letter .. .. ib.
Zamindars .. .. ib.
Zamindars and Home Rule movement .. 1964
The Besant Fund 1965
Bifurcation of the Kistna district .. .. ib.
Industries .. .. ib.
Assistant Surgeons .. .. ib.
Lord Pentland 1966
Mr. Surendranath Banerji .. .. .. ib.
Gold .. .. ib.
Indian coolies and Penang .. .. .. ib.
Honours 1967
Double assessment .. .. ib.
Home Rule Leagues .. .. ib.
The message of Mr. Ritche .. .. .. ib.
The white race .. .. ib.
Self-government .. .. ib.
Coming Dasra and Mohurram festivals .. ib.
"Political institutions—India" .. .. ib.
Resignation of the members of the Bengal Legislative Council 1968
The Punjab Government and the Lahore meeting .. .. ib.
Prohibition of a protest meeting in Delhi .. ib.
Protest meeting at Berhampur .. .. .. ib.
Non-Brahman protest at Perambur .. .. ib.
Present agitation .. .. ib.
Extension of His Excellency Lord Pentland's term of office 1969
The present situation in India .. .. . ib.
India in Parliament 1970
Havoc wrought by wild beasts .. .. .. ib.
The Punjab Government and the Madras internment .. .. ib.
Lord Hardinge's defence in Parliament .. ib.
Appointment of persons with Indian degrees to places hitherto reserved for Indian Medical Service officers .. .. ib.
The present condition and Mussalmans .. ib.
Improper agitation 1973

IV.—Native States.

Mysore budget 1974
Mysore Railway Administration .. .. .. ib.
The Mysore Public Works Department .. .. ib.
Something which calls for the attention of the Hyderabad Residency Local Fund Committee .. 1975

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.

The condition of crops in Malabar .. .. .. ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

1. The Indian Patriot, of the 7th July, writes:—"Dr. Varadarajulu Nayudu of Sankaridrug writes to New India about an instance of police terrorism which, if true, deserves at least as much prominence in the attention of the Government as that of Inspector Jaffer Hussain of Tuticorin—the name of the Sankaridrug police official does not, however, transpire. . . This kind of unnecessary annoyance (i.e., the taking of the names of those who attended, etc.), must cease. We can understand a straightforward order that meetings should not be held to protest against the internments, but we can never understand this havoc of letting loose Police dogs among the people. . . The mischief done by this ceaseless irritation is serious, and is particularly unfortunate; because it could be easily avoided. It is, we think, necessary that explicit instruction should be issued to the Police not to rouse popular agitation by this display of over enthusiasm. No doubt they are actuated, as they understand it, by the best of motives, but the result is to unnecessarily keep an agitation incessantly before the public."

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The Police and "Protest" meetings.

(b) Courts.

2. Justice, of the 10th July, remarks:—"We understand from a note in the Madras Mail that the Secretary of State has sanctioned the raising of the number of permanent Judges in the Madras High Court from eight to ten. . . In other words, there will be ten permanent Judges and three temporary Judges from the date of the reopening of the High Court bringing the total up to the unlucky thirteen. This will never do. If thirteen Judges continue to sit on the High Court Bench some calamity will happen. Superstitious clients may decline to continue litigation. That will be the worst calamity that could happen to the High Court or something less terrible may happen. . . . In increasing the number of Judges in the High Court we have been proceeding very much as the British army at the Western front has been doing of late. First there is an advance, then there is a delay to consolidate our conquests, then a further advance and so on. That is what we have been doing with regard to the High Court. First of all a number of temporary Judges are appointed, then some of them are made permanent, then more temporary Judges, then a delay to get some more Judges made permanent and so on. We have just accomplished a bit of consolidation of conquered appointments. Therefore, the next move is obviously to appoint more temporary Judges. One of the temporary Judges has been made permanent. Therefore the logical conclusion of that would be the appointment of another temporary Judge. . . . We know that the work of the High Court will never become current, no matter what the number of Judges may be. The more Judges there are on the High Court Bench the more temptation there is for vakils to speak at greater length. The Mail observes that when the High Court was transferred from its old home opposite the Harbour to the present Law Courts, there were six Judges on the Bench. At the closing of the High Court two months ago there were twelve Judges on the Bench, though the number of cases has not doubled during that period. Therefore it is not the increasing litigation that has necessitated the appointment of more Judges, but it is the prolongation of litigation that has been the cause of it. . . . During the war time economy has been attempted in almost every department except the judicial, but we do not grumble at that. Even with fifteen Judges in the High Court we think we get off rather cheaply, for under a Home Rule Government we are certain there would be at least twenty-five Judges on the Madras High Court.

Justice, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

The Madras High Court.

New India, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 10th July, says :—"The announcement has been made that the Secretary of State for India has settled finally the permanent strength of the Madras High Court at ten Judgeships, and that, for the present, he has sanctioned, if the state of work needs it, more temporary Judgeships. . . The position which the Secretary of State professedly—we say professedly, because the final upshot of the whole matter is so extraordinary a sequel to it—set about to rectify was that of a High Court with eight permanent Judges and four temporary Judges. The position which will result from his decision is a High Court of ten permanent Judges and three temporary Judges. . . When Samuel Johnson published his first accounts of Parliamentary proceedings, he always took care, as he himself put it, that the Whig politicians had not the best of it. When the bureaucracy in India proceeds to settle plans connected with the administration of justice, they apparently take equal care that the vakils have not the best of it. . . Now when the permanent strength is increased, it is neither left at nine, which would have left three places open to the vakil section of the Bar, nor at eleven, which while giving the other two classes a preponderance in numbers, would have secured the vakils those three places, but the strength is put at ten, so that both civilians and the Barristers might have equal benefit from the permanent increases—without being left to the chance of a dispute or competition among themselves—and the vakils are left without the benefit of any permanent addition to their prospects. There will be four permanent civilian and four permanent Barrister Judges of the High Court, but the permanent vakil Judges will hereafter continue to be only two. Not even the most sundried bureaucrat will dare to say that the vakil Judges have not had a distinguished record as His Majesty's Judges. Then, is this not a case of the claims of vested interests or of the ruling race being placed above the claims of fitness and the claims of equal opportunities for all His Majesty's subjects alike? And if this is so in the selection of those administering justice in the highest Courts of the land in the name of His Majesty, what are we to hope for where the clash of interests may occur in the lesser spheres of public administration?"

(e) Local and Municipal.

Justice, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

3. Justice, of the 7th July, has the following:—"We read in a contemporary that the Collector of South Arcot has recommended the appointment of his personal assistant as the Vice-President of the District Board.

The Vice-Presidentship, South Arcot District Board.

Here is an opportunity for putting in a non-official vice-president. We do not see any reason why the Collector should not have thought of it seeing that the district is in no dearth of competent non-officials to discharge the duties of the vice presidentship of the District Board. Unless some convincing explanation is offered for it, the reported arrangement is sure to provoke hostile criticism. At all events such an appointment will go to discount the hopes which His Excellency's speech at the last meeting of the Legislative Council on local self-government very naturally raised."

Hindu, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

4. The Hindu, of the 10th July, states:—"The present system of water-supply in the City has already become a grave scandal, and it must be ended immediately if public confidence in the efficient administration of the Corporation should be restored. We are deluged with complaints about the very unsatisfactory results of the new scheme of intermittent supply and the amount of annoyance, inconvenience and discomfort caused by the practice is alarmingly great and the Corporation Executive cannot any longer afford to look on the hardships endured by the residents with complacency. The experiment has been tried and found to be disastrous in its results, and we must warn the Corporation that it does not ensure a steady supply of water as hitherto, it will be playing with the health of the residents in the City. . . The intermittent system cannot satisfy the requirements of the people and there should be no hesitation in closing the interesting experiment. The ratepayer in Madras is the hardest hit and the worst served of all the principal cities in India. The lavish expenditure on the new water-works was trumpeted to herald the dawn of the happy times when the residents will be given a never ceasing supply of filtered water. But what are the facts, and have the huge sums been spent only to inaugurate the intermittent system? The situation created by the present muddle in the municipal affairs of the City is one which is not exhilarating to contemplate. . . The Commissioners of the Corporation cannot, in the interests of the ratepayers whose interests they should safeguard, allow the existing conditions to continue for a day longer. The new system of water-supply should be abolished forthwith, the inhabitants should be promised a continuous supply of water and a thorough enquiry should be instituted into the deplorable muddle which has already caused such hardship.

The Madras water-supply.

Justice, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

Justice, of the 12th July, writes:—"We understand that the Corporation of Madras are about to terminate the experiment of the intermittent water-supply and to revert to the continuous supply, but the President warns the public that as the water-supply will be a mixture of unfiltered and filtered water the consumers ought to boil the water before drinking The President of the Madras Corporation is improving. In 1915-16, for months together, when he supplied a mixture of filtered and unfiltered water to the citizens of Madras no such previous warning was given. . . The Madras Mail now remarks 'The only thing to be said in its favour is that it does it openly after giving fair warning'. Yes, most thieves get honest when they are caught.

"That the Corporation would very soon stop the intermittent supply and revert to the continuous one we were absolutely certain. That they ever did try the intermittent system only shows how stupid they are. . . The cry that they have not a sufficient amount of filtered water and therefore they are compelled to supply filtered and unfiltered mixed is a hypocritical one. The municipal authorities ought to know by this time that their so-colled filtered water is not sufficiently pure to be used as drinking water. Ever since the completion of the filter-beds they have only been yielding impure water. . . It is also an idle pretension that by mixing filtered and unfiltered water you could improve the quality of the mixture. No one who has had any scientific training worth the name would put forward such a proposition. And therefore if a mixture of filtered and unfiltered water is supplied it amounts to supplying unfiltered water, and then why go through the farce of mixing the so-called filtered and unfiltered water? They can only have one object in view, that is, to bamboozle the people. The Corporation have bungled, mismanaged and made a hideous mess of their water-supply works, and the only practical method of getting out of that mess would be to continue the supply of unfiltered water until such time as they can have proper filter-beds to give the required quantity of filtered water. While supplying unfiltered water to the inhabitants the existing filter-beds ought to be emptied and filled again under proper supervision. At the same time additional filter-beds ought to be constructed. Till these arrangements of the filter-beds are completed the citizens must be supplied with unfiltered water which is in no way inferior, as drinking water, to their so-called present filtered water-supply. . . A proper scientific enquiry ought to be made into the working of the filter-beds in Madras, and if it is proved that they are not what they pretend to be, then the mistakes ought to be corrected at the expense of the authorities who have bungled and not at the expense of the innocent rate-payers. We have never seen or heard of greater municipal incompetence anywhere else. That, perhaps, cannot be helped. But the intolerable part of it is that these bungling municipal authorities sometimes pretend to lecture to the people on sanitation."

Hindu, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 12th July, says:—"The President of the Corporation of Madras Mr. J. C. Molony should be congratulated on his prompt compliance with the demand of the residents of the city that the intermittent system of water-supply should be immediately abolished in view of the great inconvenience caused by it. Complaints had become so numerous and insistent that that any further delay in reverting to the former method would have been unpardonable folly. . . The question of an efficient supply is a difficult one, but it is monstrous that after an expenditure of half a crore of rupees on the new water-works, the Corporation should have recourse to various shifts and devices to secure a supply of filtered water and then finally to fall back upon a system of a mixed supply of filtered and unfiltered water. . . As we have already said, the question of water-supply in the city should be thoroughly investigated and efficient remedies applied. This is absolutely necessary in fairness and justice to the overtaxed rate-payers, and if this is not done, the Corporation will well deserve to be called inefficient, irresponsive, and miserably under the mark."

(k) General.

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, July 4th, 1917.

5. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 4th July, writes:—"The Secretary of State is to be congratulated on his obtaining His Majesty's sanction for the retention in office of Lords Pentland and Willingdon for sometime longer. Although we are told that the restrictions on travel have necessitated this step, we dare say that far weightier reasons have prevailed. The period of extension is not stated but if they are to remain here for another five years, they will have their work cut out for them. . . While we feel grateful to Mr. Chamberlain for obtaining an extension of term to Their Lordships, we are no less grateful to them for consenting to continue in their offices at much sacrifice to themselves, and bear again the burden of administration when they might have looked forward to a well-earned rest."

Lords Pentland and Willingdon.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 5th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 5th July, says:—"It must indeed be the restrictions in travel now in force that must have led the Secretary of State into giving Lords Pentland and Willingdon extensions of office. Otherwise Mr. Chamberlain would not have shown this consideration to these two satraps which Lord Hardinge and Carmichael were refused although Indians were very keen on it. Extensions of office have never done good in the past, and in the case of Lord Pentland we do not know how His Excellency would fare. There is no denying the fact that as Governor he has failed to reach up to the expectations of the educated classes who, rightly or wrongly, hold that he has failed to apply his Radical principles to the Government of the Province. . . We have only to express the hope that Lord Pentland will yet see his way to infuse a little more of his Radical spirit into the administration, and make amends for his lapses."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

New India, of the 10th July, observes:—"The Anglo-Indian press has naturally been jubilant over the indefinite prolongation of His Excellency Lord Pentland's term of office. . . The official notification explains this as due to the restrictions imposed by war. But it is a poor compliment to the powers of the Secretary of State, if when a provincial head could promise a safe conduct to Mrs. Besant to England he could not secure a similar one to Lord Pentland. And we know that the restrictions will not prevent Mr. Bhupendranath Basu and Sir Prabhashankar Pattani and Mr. Aftab Ahmed Khan from going to England. Or did the 'safety' in Lord Pentland's offer merely refer to condition of the province in Mrs. Besant's absence rather than to her personal safety? But whatever the number and variety of reasons alleged, or whether Lord Pentland stays or goes, the agitation in the province will not cease.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 5th, 1917.

6. In a leader on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 5th July, states:—"The average official is a slave to routine and a highly centralised system of administration that leaves him no leisure to move freely about cultivating the acquaintance of the real people and their leaders. In the good old days, in our own district (Malabar), Connolly, Macgreggor, Austin, Sharp, Logan and Winterbotham, whose names are household words were of the people practically; they had opportunities of entering into the life and thoughts of the people. The exigencies of transfer were not then so pressing as they are now, and a Civilian had time to settle down and to acquaint himself with his new surroundings. "Banyan tree darbars" were the order of the day, and the results they achieved were beneficial. In our own time, Mr. Tottenham and Mr. Cotton, and before them Mr. Dance, went very near the ideal, but before they could reach it they were taken away to other spheres, but even now their work and name endure. To be candid, we must also state that we have now a different set of people. While in the olden days our karanavans and fathers were content with orderly development and progress, were concerned more with the harvest and the weather than the Irish question or the Balkan crisis, we are now impatient idealists who hanker after an Utopia or Home Rule that is alleged to be the panacea for all evils. We do not make any allowance for the complexity or diversity of the administrative problem, the difficulties the Government have to contend against, the conflicting interests they have to reconcile and the stupendous nature of the task before them. The result is that the officials and the people drift apart from each other, there are mutual recriminations and, unfortunately, mutual distrust also. We never give the officials credit for good intentions, bureaucracy is always on the brain, and with some of us, the very word has the effect of a red rag on a bull. Our criticisms destroy rather than construct, and in the case of many of us bureaucracy is synonymous autocracy. Another cause that operates is the advent of spurious leaders. Fed upon emotional politics and sentimentalism we run helter-skelter after the stump orator who whet our political appetite and serve pungent dishes. . . . Altogether, the situation in the country is not one which we can survey without anxiety. Sufficient unto the day are the evils thereof, but as days advance fresh troubles and evils crop up, the creation of both the Government and the people. For how long is this state of affairs to continue, for how long are we to observe with regret the policy of drift which both the parties follow. The Government lack imagination and the people the appreciation of the many difficulties ahead. . . Altogether we think it is time that the Government of India was liberalised, placed themselves at the head of the national movement in this country and became a national Government in the purest and truest sense of the term."

The unrest in India.

Writing under the heading "the Nemesis" the Non-Brahman, for the week ending 8th July, says:—"It is this kind of false and put up agitation that seriously detracts from the force of Indian agitation. Because we read that Sir Edward Carson could start a rebellion in Ireland, we think that the best way to bamboozle the British is, by speeches and resolutions and veiled references to subterranean machinations. If students should not be allowed to participate at political meetings, if Mrs. Besant and party are not to be left out of internment, we are told that serious things will follow. What will follow? Nothing can follow which the Government cannot face. Because Mr. Horniman has to earn his bread by abusing Dr. Nayar, it does not mean that India is on the verge of a rebellion. Because newspaper editors have to live by flattering their readers that they are really cleverer than any one created by God, only they have no scope to employ their powers, there is no reason why truth should leave the land. . . The Zamindars did not care to come forward and preach their political opinions but they had to, for they found a representative who was misrepresenting them. The Zamindar manifesto is a crushing reply to those who would have Home Rule in a hurry. It is only a foolish agitation that could be so easily exposed. It would have been well if the dignity had been preserved; as it is, they have urged the country to come out and protest. . . This wild agitation has made responsible officials enquire what the matter is, and the reply comes from influential quarters to the effect that these people who make the loudest noise are the professionals. Thus have we lost; thus have we exposed ourselves; thus have we proclaimed our unfitness for self-government by betraying the mutual jealousies and lack of confidence among ourselves."

Non-Brahman, Madras, July 8th, 1917.

7. The West Coast Spectator, of the 5th July, remarks:—"For some time past we have been hearing strong rumours about a Fourth Member being appointed to the Madras Executive Council, the office probably going to an Indian. Provided an Indian of the right sort and calibre is appointed, the innovation will certainly be appreciated by the people. . . We would prefer an Anglo-Indian Civilian, who can sometimes bring an open mind to bear on the consideration of administrative or public questions and rise above party or sectarian influences, to an apkawaste Indian renegade or political turn-coat with several axes to grind or vanity to satisfy. Such an Indian, however able, is more a public danger than a champion of people's rights. . . Why not ask the non-official members of the local Council to elect the member. Such a procedure will not only gratify the people immensely, but will also bring the popular element into the Council. This will certainly be a step towards rallying the moderates, and put the intentions of the Government beyond doubt."

The Madras Executive Council.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 5th, 1917.

Hindu, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Lord Hardinge and the Mesopotamian Commission.

8. In commenting on Lord Hardinge's statement in the House of Lords, the Hindu, of the 7th July, says:—"The Indian public will view with dismay the raising of important matters of administration, military and civil, regarding India and their final disposal, without any reference to the people of India, without so much as bestowing a thought that the issues affect them most and that their opinions must count. . . It is astonishing that these far-reaching proposals are discussed behind the back of the people of India. There can be no more powerful argument for bestowing upon the people of India real self-governing powers and the budget right than this systematic, perverse and unjust policy of deciding momentous issues without any reference to the Indian public and without eliciting their opinion."

Justice, Madras, June 7th, 1917.

Social intercourse of Europeans and Indians.

9. Referring to the comments of the Hindu and the Madras Times on Lady Katherine Stuart's paper before the East India Association, Justice, of the 7th July, observes:—"Long before Kipling wrote about the impossibilities of the East and the West meeting and long after, people both in India and in England have written and spoken extensively on the eternal subject of social intercourse between Europeans and Indians. . . A more useless task than that of asking English people to change their ways and manners in order to meet and study the Indians we cannot think of. It is not necessary for anyone to change one's ways before one can understand somebody else's ways, and we do not believe that it is correct to say that English people who have lived long in India do not understand the Indians. They do understand, but the only thing is that they do not always admire the ways of Indians. Perhaps some of them have an amused contempt for the ways of Indians. . . Entire social fusion between the two communities we never expect, and we do not advocate any attempts to bring about such an artificial fusion. All that we want is that the Indian should understand the Englishman's point of view and that the Englishman should understand the Indian's point of view. . . It is not the outward manifestations and flattering words that we want. If the English people will understand our points of view, that would be sufficient. Social reform of the Hindu community can never be brought about by European reformers. That reform must come from within. . . Want of social intercourse has not prevented Englishmen in India from appreciating the worth of very orthodox Hindus, let us say, like Sir T. Muthuswami Ayyar or Sir Bhashyam Ayyangar who were very orthodox in their ways and as such had very little of what we may call social intercourse with the Europeans. . . We particularly dread the increase in the spread of philanthropic associations headed by English women who visit Indian homes and sympathise with the down-trodden Indian women for their subjugated and miserable condition. Such philanthropic workers even when they do not come to preach Christianity inflict perfect boredom on the down-trodden Indian women. What is more they are incapable of producing any impression on the Indian women who, in their own resigned way, will simply say 'They have their ways, we have our ways'. In the higher social ranks the attempt of English women to civilise Indian women by organising clubs for them and converting them into suffragettes and bridge players is also an undesirable innovation. We say all these because we are afraid that as a result of the preaching of Lady Katherine Stuart a fresh battalion of European social workers may be organised to study us at close quarters and come and preach to us on social elevation. Oh! Help!"

Hindu, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The Congress Presidentship.

10. The Hindu, of the 9th July, states:—"We publish elsewhere a communication from Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar suggesting to the Congress Committees to elect Mrs. Besant to the Presidentship of the next Congress. We regret we have to express our disagreement with the view of our respected countryman. . . For the purpose merely of showing the opinion of the country regarding Mrs. Besant's activities and services to the country, it seems to us unnecessary and a futile proceeding to elect her as President of the Congress, when she is debarred by superior force from acting as such. . . . The President of the Congress is elected not for the purpose of merely demonstrating the sense and sentiment of the people, however overwhelming it may be in favour of a particular personage, but for the person elected actually to preside and to conduct the business of the national institution. . . . We think, however, that it will be something like overshooting the mark to elect Mrs. Besant when it is practically certain that under the present order of internment she cannot act as President of the Congress."

11. In the first of a series of articles under this heading, New India, of the 9th July, remarks:—"So much has been said, in season and out of season, of the perfection of the administrative system in India and of the marvellous efficiency of the heaven-born coterie that directs this system, that the revelations of absolute ineptitude and wrong headed bungling, made in the Mesopotamia Commission Report, must have come upon those who have put implicit faith in this gospel according to bureaucrats, with a tremendous shock. . . . We leave to the bureaucrats and their apologists the task of reconciling if they can, these facts, with the theories of the monopoly of political experience, of supereminence in administrative ability, and of superhuman initiative and foresight, which have been so sedulously attempted to be impressed upon the Indian mind by a process of constant reiteration. . . . The imaginary campaign of calumny and discredit, which has been made to serve as an excuse for the internment of Mrs. Besant and the initiation of a policy of repression, pales into mere mild talk by the side of this authoritative and unanswerable indictment. The fact cannot any more be gainsaid that the attempt of governing a great people by means of an exclusive caste of foreign bureaucrats has had its day and must now cease to be. India demands it, the Empire needs it and the world awaits it."

New India, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The Mesopotamia muddle and after.

12. New India, of the 10th July, writes:—"A writer in the London Daily News, discussing the conversion of General Smuts 'from the foe of Great Britain into one of its most brilliant instruments,' recalls to mind that General Botha once said that 'three words saved South Africa for the British Empire.' 'What were they,' he was asked. 'Methods of barbarism,' he replied. 'Those words uttered by the official leader of the Liberal Party sent a thrill through our people.'

New India, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

The advocacy of self-government in England and India.

"The writer, further, points out that 'there were two men whom the Boer Generals had learned to trust, Kitchener in South Africa and Campbell-Bannerman at home.' Kitchener offered his terms to the Boer Generals and asked them to accept them assuring them at the same time that 'in a year, or at most in two years, there will be a Liberal Government in England and you will get self-government.' It was this prophecy and Campbell-Bannerman's fulfilment of the prophecy that saved South Africa to the Empire.

"The writer then triumphantly exclaims that 'it was the last struggle of Imperialism and Liberalism in the governance of the British Confederation, and it is the triumph of the Liberal idea of self-government that the presence of General Smuts in our midst today represents'. (Italics are ours).

"Was that struggle the last? If so, how is it that in India an earnest advocacy of self-government was declared by the Parliamentary trustee of Indian interests as 'a dangerous political agitation which might even be disastrous to India' and that it was an 'undesirable political propaganda' for students? Is India not a member of the British Confederation? What is the present struggle between educated India and the Anglo-Indian Bureaucracy but a fight to the finish between brummagem Imperialism and large-hearted Liberalism? . . . May we ask our Anglo-Indian friends, putting them on their oath as jurors, to read and digest this passage and say with as much sincerity and impartiality as may be furnished by the quantum of British blood coursing in their veins, whether it does not contain exactly the idea and the argument that Mrs. Annie Besant and her New India have been endeavouring to propagate in this country and whether the venerable lady and her faithful gifted lieutenants were not deprived of their liberty by a once Radical Governor because of such endeavour, whereas General Smuts and President Wilson have been almost deified by their countrymen at home for leading them from the darkness produced by the never-ending ancient European antagonisms into a 'nobler plane of ideas,' clearing the issue and moralising their case? May we not, with the same writer, say that this difference in treatment is due to the machinery of Government in England 'scrapped' by Mr. Lloyd George. 'He has made Lord Milner his right-hand man and has seated Lord Curzon on his left hand,' and we may add, Austen Chamberlain on the gadi of the Great Moghul at Downing Street. 'He has closured the voice of the Nation abroad and has made Lord Northcliffe the mercury of his ideas. It is this surrender of the interests of democracy to the enemies of democracy that is the ultimate root of the distrust that prevails, and the discontent that has gone so deep in the labour world'—and we may add—in the Indian continent."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

The making of leaders.

13. In concluding an article on this subject, New India, of the 13th July, remarks:—"These are times when courageous declaration of principles is required and one way to impress it is indicated by the United Provinces and Bombay leaders by joining the Home Rule League. What must we think of those here and elsewhere who have not done so? We know that however much we may shield and protect them in these columns, they are marked men in the young Indian public who have now the occasion to know who are truly their leaders and who are only nominally so, because they want to be in the good books of both the Government and the people. We feel the process at work which is sifting our publicists into grain and chaff and a few days more will clearly show where stands who.

"Members of young India, here is a magnificent opportunity before you. Do not wait to be led; endeavour to be leaders yourselves; do not be deterred by Governmental frowns; do not be tempted by bureaucratic favours; do not fall prey to any system of political jobbery. Resolve to be a man of the people and shun equally praise and blame from the opposite camp of those who are fighting against our freedom. Be courageous, be firm, be persistent and remember that unless the interned leaders are released, your foremost duty is to intern, boycott, reject everything—bureaucratic and official. The motherland has proclaimed her needs, she has raised the cry: 'Who will deliver me from bondage; which of my sons will be heroes in the strife.' The time for waverers and sycophants is over, that for courageous, dauntless, single-eyed patriots has arrived. Who will make the adequate response and find a place in the history of India?"

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

14. The Hindu Nesan, of the 6th July, reproduces in Tamil the prophecy of a Japanese astrologer about the end of the war, which appears in the Hindu of the 5th idem.

A prophecy about the war.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

15. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, in its leader on war observes:—As Lloyd George has said though the final victory has become distant by the Russian revolution, it is certain that the victory that will be obtained is sure to be complete. But much has yet to be done. The recovery of the countries conquered is fraught with difficulties. It will take time to put down the pride of the Germans who have been prepared for war and prepared to stake their all. The sub-marine peril has not yet been removed completely. Mr. Lloyd George has promised that war will not be stopped until victory is gained whatever obstacles may stand in the way. Thereby liberty will destroy autocracy. This is the vow of the Premier. All are awaiting the fulfilment of this vow.

The war.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

16. The Messenger of Truth, for July, says:—On account of the German submarines sinking merchant vessels and on account of the army needing all available provisions, the people of the countries engaged in the war have not sufficient food-stuffs to eat. The Germans and their allies also experience the same difficulty. It seems that the time has come when every one in England can have only a half-meal.

The food problem in England.

Messenger of Truth, Madras, July 1917.

17. Referring to the troubles in China, the Yogakshemam, of the 6th July, points out that a republic being replaced by autocracy is more surprising than the latter being replaced by the former, and that, owing to the selfishness of certain Chinese leaders, and to the interference of Japan, America, Germany, and other foreign powers, China has had no peace at all, since the establishment of the republic, and asks "Who will not be sorry for these dissensions which have crept in in our neighbouring country?"

Troubles in China.

Yogakshemam, Trichur, July 6th, 1917.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

18. Referring to the fact that the Police Inspector Mr. Jafer Hussain stopped a meeting arranged to be held at Tuticorin, to protest against internments, the Desamata, of the 27th June, says:—We are glad the Police Inspector did not go the length of interning persons under the Defence of India Act. May the leaders know who gave the Inspector authority to stop the meeting!

Tuticorin meeting.

Desamata, Rajahmundry, June 27th, 1917.

19. The Desabhimani, of the 1st July, says:—In ancient India spies were not engaged for knowing the defects in the people and punishing them, but for ascertaining what the people had to say about the Government and the officials for the purpose of helping the Government to redress the grievances of the people. We nowhere read in ancient history that the Government ever punished or attempted to punish the people for disclosing their defects. . . We have been hearing of the Criminal Investigation Department ever since the starting of the agitation in Bengal against the Bengal partition. So long as the Criminal Investigation Department officers follow just ways, there can be no harm from them, but when they tread unjust ways, the difficulties caused to the people thereby are beyond description. Their reports are gospel truth to Government, but in our experience, a great portion of them is false. Still the Government place implicit faith in their words and there is no use of our complaining. The Government get reports about public bodies through them, but we think the authorities will, if they communicate directly with those bodies themselves, get truer information. We do not say that it is useless to have that department, but we understand from the commotion in the people that a good deal of what they do is wrong. It is the duty of the Government to remove this stain on themselves.

The Criminal Investigation Department.

Desabhimani, Guntur, July 1st, 1917.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Police Sub-Inspectors.

20. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd July, says:—The Police Sub-Inspectors are devoid of experience and therefore do not know how to manage their business. They suspect their subordinates and the village officers. The constables have no respect for them and do them any amount of harm. The constables do not fear extra drill or punishment by black mark. Under such circumstances, there can be no detection of crime. The present day Sub-Inspectors think that it is beneath their dignity to make friends with village officers. How can they get the required information in cases? The higher authorities do not seem to interfere in these matters. The Circle Inspectors are a disadvantage to the department. Instead of advising and helping the Sub-Inspectors, they promote animosity between them and the constables. When a Sub-Inspector prescribes some duty to a constable, the latter goes to the Circle Inspector and complains, with the result that the Sub-Inspector is asked to give that duty to some one else. The Circle Inspectors are a source of trouble to the Sub-Inspectors, so much so that the constables do not respect the latter at all. If the grade of Circle Inspectors is abolished, the Deputy Superintendents will be of much help to Sub-Inspectors, and the constables will then serve under them respectfully.

(b) Courts.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The Madras High Court.

21. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th July, publishes a letter from a correspondent on the subject of the recent addition made to the number of permanent Judges of the Madras High Court, and the recommendation of the Madras Government to confirm the temporary additional Judges. In the course of this letter the following observations occur:—The fact that permanent arrangements are not made in the case of such important officers of law as the Judges of the High Court is indeed a reason to lower the regard and esteem the people have towards these officers. If High Court Judges, who occupy the highest seats of justice, are given extension of service every six months or a year like ordinary officers, doubt is raised in the minds of the people as to how it is possible for these Judges to discharge their duties impartially. Therefore, it will indeed be a good thing to put a stop to the present practice of appointing additional Judges. Such arrangements may be made for short periods whenever the work is increased under unforeseen circumstances. However, the powers to appoint temporary additional Judges should be rarely exercised and not as a matter of course. Moreover, as far as our experience goes; more Judges than nine are not required to dispose of the work in the High Court. But the Secretary of State has consented to the appointment of ten permanent Judges. This is, in our opinion, quite sufficient. There are certain other reasons for our saying that nine Judges will suffice. According to the statute, a third of the number of permanent Judges should be barristers and a third civilians. Consequently there can be three Indians. If there be ten Judges, it happens that four should be barristers and four civilians. Then there can be only two Indians. It is the opinion of certain distinguished Judges that it will be by itself an excellent thing if the people are convinced that in the Supreme Court of Justice the Judges spend their whole time and energy solely in the administration of justice even though work may thereby be delayed. This is indeed also the opinion of the people. Therefore there is no reason for the Government to increase the expenditure by appointing additional Judges on the score of arrears of work.

(d) Education.

UNITED CHURCH HERALD, Nagarcoil, July, 1917.

The Intermediate Examination, 1917.

22. Referring to the high percentage of failures in the recent Intermediate Examination of the Madras University, the United Church Herald for July observes that the failures are due partly to laxity on the part of the heads of colleges in the matter of admissions of students into the college classes, partly to overstrictness on the part of the University examiners in the valuation of answer papers and partly to the neglect on the part of the students who, without proper attention to study, waste their time in playing at cards and attending theatres, and smoke cigars and cigarettes and thereby spoil their memory. The paper remarks that it is the duty of the educational authorities to see that these causes are removed and that students devote much of their time to study.

23. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th July, writes:—There is a great difference between the instruction as imparted in England and that as imparted in India. In England they develop all the powers of the child and pay attention to its intellect, memory, sensibility, desires and physical strength. The first two alone are developed in India, while the others are neglected. As an effect of the method followed in England, not only do the students there improve their intellect but also acquire such qualities as patriotism and loyalty and become physically strong. In India the ideal is to pass examinations merely for the sake of earning a livelihood, and students are engaged in preparing themselves for the same. These examinations are indeed such as to test only the training of memory. Mr. Justice Bhiman of Bombay writes in the Bombay Chronicle that it is true that the method of instruction imparted here, instead of training the intellect to be a useful faculty, converts it into a dustbin. He belongs to the Civil Service, and when one belonging to that service relentlessly condemns the very method that is held in high esteem by the members of that service, it becomes reasonable for the Government to give up this method and co-operate in the deliberations that are being made by Mrs. Besant and others to impart instruction on national lines. By education all the natural powers of the man must be developed. Why should we waste our time in reading several English books with a view to speak and write correctly English, a language foreign to us? Should we not train ourselves to think and to consider and act as the occasion requires? Memory too should be developed, but instead of burdening it with unnecessary things, only such matters as would be useful to us should be committed to it. The student should be active and enthusiastic and have strength of mind to tread upon a running serpent. His education should not make him think of the protection of his family as his only object of his life, but also instil in his mind the noble idea that it is his duty to strive for the well-being of his country and people. Unless people care for self-respect, this nation cannot progress. The student should be made familiar with the ancient history of this country in order to make him feel that he also comes of a martial race, and not to think that it is his fate to suffer himself to be beaten by others. The Indian Histories now in use in schools close in a few pages the ancient civilization and the condition of people, and elaborately deals with matters such as the various invasions of India by other nations. Such books as these should be torn and thrown away and replaced by books that can speak of the greatness of the Hindus. Unless the method of instruction is reformed as suggested above, it will not be possible for us to derive the full benefit of education.

National education.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

24. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, reports Mr. Earnest Wood to have said:—We have to find out the defects in the present system of education in which book-learning is the most important thing. The student does not develop character by book-learning. Again the education now imparted is not useful in life, and is quite unsuited to the present times. It is thus full of defects and we have to replace it by a system which will develop character in the student.

Mr. Earnest Wood on education.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917

25. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, publishes a Telugu version of the curriculum, etc, of the National University College at Madanapalle, into which the Madanapalle College was transformed.

The Madanapalle College.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

26. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, remarks that the present system of education ruins the physical vigour and health of boys and girls and that 75 per cent of the graduates have lost their health and are unable to do any work.

The present day education.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

SUDARSINI, Viswasatiyapuram. July 1st, 1917.

27. The Sudarsini, of the 1st July says:—Only 16 per cent have passed the Intermediate examination. This is horrible. It is only our University that shows such bad results. What is to be done when so many candidates are plucked every year in the Intermediate and School Final examinations just as sheep are slaughtered before goddesses. . . The School Final examination candidate has to spend a very large amount and other things for his education only to find himself plucked in the end. This is unfortunate. The expedition for the Intermediate examination is much bigger than those of Gazni Muhammad. What the elders at home accumulate like ants without enjoying it themselves, is all consigned to the stomach of the schools. The students lose their health The parents find themselves unable to pay their debts incurred on account of the education of their sons. When the pass list is published, the plucked candidates almost run mad. The elders at home fear that their boys may run away or commit suicide. . . Bad times have come. We do not know who is accountable for all this misery. Yet students join schools and colleges in crowds, being hypnotised by the University.

The School Final and the Intermediate examinations.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

28. Andhrapatrika, of the 5th July, gives in Telugu an abstract of the proceedings of the Bombay Educational Conference and of the speeches made thereat.

The Bombay Educational Conference.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

29. The Qaumi Report, of the 5th July, referring to the dilemma in regard to naming the college "Usmania" or "Islamia" says:—We are in doubt as to whether there are to be one or two colleges.

Shilly-shallying in connexion with the Muslim College.

Muhammadars are extremely anxious to know what upheavals these proposals have caused. Are they tired of this mutual conflict or has the Government given them the order to rest awhile? How is it that neither the Usmania nor the Islamia College has yet been established? If both still lack the power to issue from the realm of not being, why does the Government delay in raising its own Madrasa-i-Azam to the status of a college?

The Government is aware that there is only one Government College, the Presidency College, in the city, and that its standard is so high that Muhammadan students scarcely dare think of approaching it. Besides the college is open to all and Muhammadans have no special claim upon it There are two Mission Colleges which have their own principles to follow.

These incidents proclaim that Muhammadans are in need of a National College. If there be any complexity about the proposals for the establishment of the "Usmania" or the "Islamia" College, the Government should adopt measures for simplifying matters. The silence and the neutrality of the Government with reference to the subject are incomprehensible. Why does it shirk the settlement of so important and educational question?

We hear that there was some difficulty in the number of the "managing body", but we published the opinion of the community in the matter in these very columns stating that no one was more deserving of the Presidentship than Justice Abdur Rahim, and if he, for some reason or other, could not accept the responsibility, then Khan Bahadur Muhammad Bazullah Sahib Bahadur, B.A., might assume it. In the official circle he is one of whom his alma mater is justifiably proud. While the educational services he has rendered both officially and unofficially have placed the community under a deep debt of obligation to him.

Although we do not advocate any far-reaching interference on the part of the Government, but we do not consider there is any objection to the appointment as President or the inclusion as members of the Board of distinguished officials who are acceptable to the community and who have repeatedly given practical proof of their impartiality.

We certainly do not propose that the Government should baptise the Muslim College. Prompted by sympathy and a genuine interest in the question, we simply put forward the proposal and join the community in its request that the foundation of one college or the other may be quickly laid.

(e) Local and Municipal.

30. The Dravidan, of the 4th July, has the following short note on the subject of water-supply in the Madras City:—Let bygones be bygones. The Corporation mixed up filtered with unfiltered water and supplied it to all the people. The Health Officer affirmed with gratification that diseases were on the decrease and that the rate of mortality came down! And so some days went on. Alas! What shall we say? The cry was again raised that the death-rate was going up. The Municipal officers have now come to the conclusion that this state of things is due to the supply of mixed water with poisonous bacteria. Thus within a year, they have made two different statements. They have expressed that the very water which was the cause of decrease in the rate of mortality in 1915 was the cause for its increase in 1916. This is a wonder of wonders. The corporation is blowing hot and cold in the same breath.

Corporation of Madras.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Referring to the same subject, the Hindu Nesan, of the 4th July, reproduces in Tamil the comments of Justice in its leader of the 3rd instant on the inefficiency of the Health Officer to point out scientific defects in the system of water-supply in the Madras city or to make the necessary sanitary arrangements.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

31. The Andhraprakasika, of the 30th June, refers to the proposed increase of municipal tax in the city of Madras, and requests the Corporation to avoid it by curtailing their present expenditure to some extent, by putting an end to unnecessary ostentation, and by replacing some of the highly-paid officers by our countrymen with less salaries. It hopes that the Government will not support the proposal of the municipality.

The Madras Corporation.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

32. The Hindu Nesan, of the 6th July, reproduces in Tamil extracts of comments made by Justice in its leader of the 5th idem on this subject.

Local self-government.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

33. The Andhraprakasika, of the 30th June, fears that in the history of protest meetings, the orders of the Punjab Government prohibiting students from attending the meeting held at Lahore and the press from publishing the proceedings of the meeting will form two episodes attracting the attention of the public. It also fears that the present agitation may strain the relations between the rulers and the ruled.

The Lahore protest meeting.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

34. The Qaumi Report, of the 4th July, writes:—The apprehension regarding the interruption of the facilities for procuring water has unfortunately developed into a dread of drought. It is difficult to get rid of the idea of a compulsory famine. Owing to Ramzan, Mussalmans are having a taste of an ill-timed disturbance. It is presumed that the Corporation can hardly realise the attendant difficulties of the fast, or of fasting, but cannot the Government turn its attention in this direction? for, in the houses of those who are keeping the fast, loud is the lamentation caused by this enforced famine. What can helpless purdah nashin ladies do?

The water difficulty.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

(h) Railways.

35. The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd July, says that railway parcels are being meddled with in transit and attributes it to the fact that the railway authorities have declared that they will not be responsible for any losses that may occur in transit. The paper says that the authorities may not be responsible for accidents and that to state that they are not responsible for losses due to thefts by railway servants does not stand to reason.

Railway thefts.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

(j) Salt and Abkāri.

36. Adverting to the order of the Government sanctioning an addition of three more members to the Excise Advisory Committees in municipalities and unions, one being an officer of the Abkāri Department and the other two nominated from among the Excise Advisory Committees.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

elected non-official members of the municipalities or unions, with discretionary power to the President to add to the number one nominated from among the classes which do not consider drinking an evil habit, the Hindu Nesan, of the 4th July, observes:—We approve of the nomination of two of the elected non-official members of municipalities or unions to the committee. We do not, however, approve of the appointment on the Committee of an Abkāri officer or of an addititional member, if necessary, from among the class or classes which do not consider drinking an evil habit. The Abkāri officer will give only such advice as will not affect the excise revenue. We cannot say that the member, who is of opinion that drinking is not an evil habit, will be of much use to the committee. It is not possible to assert definitely that the reforms now made by the Government in the constitution of the Excise Committees will be productive of as much good as is expected by the people.

(k) General.

Desabhimani, Cuddalore, June 30th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

37. The Desabhimani, of the 30th June, has the following English leaderette on this subject:—We are deeply sorry that the Madras Government have under the Defence of India Act caused Mrs. Besant and her co-workers Messrs. Wadia and Arundale to be interned. The circumstances under which this order was passed by the Madras Government have been rather peculiar and people throughout India from one end to the other are still labouring under a difficulty to know what it was that brought these highly esteemed and genuine lovers of India to this fate. The Defence of India Act is a measure passed to meet the exigency of the present war situation and it is intended to operate against those who prove the avowed enemies of the British in and out of India. So far as the whole of India can see Mrs. Besant has been a staunch lover of British Rule and she has spent not a little of her energy and influence towards that end. Her ardent and sincere appeal to students and men to join the Defence Force of India is itself a point in illustration. In almost all her utterances there was a current of her deep love and unshaken loyalty to the British Raj. Messrs. Wadia and Arundale have been her sincere co-workers the former being of a Parse descent, the latter an out and out Englishman. Mr. Wadia was never known up till now to have transgressed neither law nor order, and Mr. Arundale was nothing if not an eminent and enthusiastic educationist. While so, it is inexplicable why the Defence of India Act was applied against these three worthies—the true lovers of India and the British Rule. The action of the Madras Government is deeply to be regretted. It has outraged the feelings of most of the people of India and manifestation of such feelings is had every day at public meetings all over the land. Indian leaders of thought and opinion have been shocked by this order which seems to set at naught all constitutional principles of Government, and they are evidently trying to exercise their moral independence in the matter. At a juncture like this when India works with her Sovereign hand and glove against the common enemy, making vast sacrifice of her men and money, we feel it our humble duty to our Government to express that the action of the Madras Government in this respect does not look well advised, fraught as it is with evil consequences. We would, therefore, anxiously expect that the British authorities act with their usual statesmanship and try to smoothen the ruffled situation satisfactorily."

The same paper publishes the following English letter from the pen of a correspondent, relating to the same subject:—"All true sons of India are devoted lovers of the British connection with India and the utmost concern at the present crisis of the world's history is that the civilisation of man be maintained against the barbarity of the Modern Huns, by a crushing defeat of the German and his allies. So, it is, that anxiety is felt lest that the action of the Madras Government should damp or chill the enthusiasm of war support about which India was nowise behind any part or portion of the British Empire. And in this connection it may be observed that Madras share of subscription to the War Fund, was much helped by Mrs. Besant with her voice and pen. It is also an open secret that till the last hour before her internment, Mrs. Besant was every inch, an intense English woman, with the pride of her race and instinct with true admiration for the part that England has played in the cause of man and his freedom in this globe. And therefore the treatment that was accorded to her in the absence of the least of little signs of any disturbance anywhere, is an event ungracious indeed.

Now, with the volume of feeling over the action of the Madras Government so manifested by such illustrious people all over the Indian Continent, it is never too late to right the wrong done to India and her best friends. The best way to act is to do even in the manner suggested by the Times of India. And allaying public feeling is to do a handsome deed and trouble is at an end with peaceful methods of Government and certainly not by internment. The one unfortunate thing always is, that repression does not succeed in suppressing imagined evil, and when it is misapplied, it providentially adds a momentum to the persecuted cause. So it is here. The internment order has given a bold leap forward to the Home Rule cause, it has united all ranks of people to it and Home Rule has come to stay, in India. India is not like South Africa where democracy is boldly demanded despite Botha's staying hand. So every true citizen of the British Empire would humbly advise the Government not to persist in the path so unwisely chosen but to promptly draw itself alongside the people, put itself at the head of them and bravely bring about self-government itself. We are not concerned with Mrs. Besant and her colleagues, as individuals, but the cause is greater than anyone person or many such persons. So, it will be part of the wisdom of things that to suit the altered condition of the world, and in the present changed Indian political outlook, the Government will be very statesmanlike in giving unasked that which the whole world and the British Empire in particular holds dear and has—self-government.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 4th July, reproduces in Tamil the substance of the speech made by the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri as the President of a public meeting held at Poona on the 28th June 1917 to protest against the orders of internment, which appears in extenso in the Hindu of the 3rd July 1917.

HINDU, NESAN, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The same paper also reproduces in Tamil an abstract of the comments of the Bombay Chronicle as to the sources of Lord Pentland's inspiration for the issuing of these orders, which are republished in the Hindu of the same date.

Adverting to the order issued by the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore prohibiting the publication in the newspapers of the proceedings of the meeting held in the Bradlaugh Hall to protest against the orders of the Madras Government interning Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia and to his subsequent announcement to the newspapers of his having cancelled the said order, the same paper observes that, instead of doing an act with due deliberation and without haste, to issue an order and then cancel it on reconsideration, will only cause the prestige of the Government to be lowered in the estimation of the public and nothing else.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 5th July, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Hindu in its issue of the 4th instant on this subject.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

The Dravida Patrika, of the 4th July, reports that, in the ladies' meeting held at Sankaridrug to protest against these internment orders, the President, Srimati Rukmani Ammal, wife of Dr. Varadarajulu Nayudu, editor of the Prapancha-mitran, of Madras, has said that every man and every woman should work for the acquisition of Home Rule for India subject to British supremacy and improve the industries of the country by purchasing only swadhesi goods and boycotting foreign goods generally and the English goods in particular with a view to condemn the repressive measures of the Government, and that every one should join the Home Rule League and be prepared to bear the hardships which may be caused by the authorities.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 5th July, reproduces in Tamil the gist of the speech made by the Hon'ble Mr. C. Y. Chintamani at a public meeting recently held at Allahabad to protest against these orders. The speech appears in the Hindu of the same date.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

The Swadesamitran, of the 6th July, reproduces in Tamil the substance of the letter written to the Hindu, of the 5th idem by Mr. V. Subba Rāo, a retired District Registrar, on this subject.

The same paper also reproduces in Tamil the letter written by Kummatta Chinnarappa Reddi and Chinna Yerikalappa Reddi of Anantapur district to the Andhraprakasika, conducted on the lines of Justice, referring in appreciative terms to the work of Mrs. Besant in India and expressing their regret at the attitude of the paper in supporting the internment orders and writing derisively of the speakers at the several meetings held to protest against these orders.

In publishing the proceedings of a public meeting held on the 2nd July 1917 in the Tinnevelly Club, Vannarpettai, under the presidency of Mr. A. Krishnaswami Ayyar, a retired District Judge of Travancore, to protest against these orders, the same paper observes that the internment of Mrs. Besant has caused alarm, sorrow and surprise even in the rural parts of this district.

The same paper publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a meeting held at Kumarapalayam, Trichengode taluk, Salem district, to protest against these orders. A resolution to buy swadesi goods even at a loss was passed at this meeting with a view to improve Indian industries and to impress on the English people the present needs of the Indians.

Referring to the interpellations in the Parliament in connection with these internments and the repressive measures adopted by the Madras Government, and the reply of the Secretary of State for India supporting the action of that Government, the Swadesamitran, of the 6th July, expresses its surprise at his pronouncement that the Government of India have been given full discretion in matters of administration and observes:—As for India it has no self-government. The executive powers entrusted to the authorities can indeed be said to be unlimited. Though for the proper exercise of these powers, they are not responsible to the Indians, it was settled sixty years ago that they should be responsible to the Parliament. In those days, soon after the quelling of the Sepoy Mutiny, Queen Victoria assumed direct charge of the Government of India, appointed a Secretary for it and made him completely responsible to the Parliament. Mr. Chamberlain has now relieved himself of that responsibility. But it is quite certain that the Parliament will not leave him so lightly. Though on account of the pressure of war, it may not be possible for them to attend to this at the present moment, there is no doubt that they will attend to it at the close of the war. Whatever that may be, now that the Government are armed with powers to enforce repressive measures at their will and pleasure, it becomes imperative for our countrymen to realise their condition and the duties they owe to their motherland and to conduct themselves with courage and calmness.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant.

Referring to the message of sympathy sent by Sir Rabindranath Tagore in connection with this internment, the Swadesamitran, of the 7th July, trusts that, as he has wide experience of Europe and is highly esteemed by the literati of Japan and by America, the opinion of that great man will have the effect of producing good sense in our rulers.

The same paper publishes, from the pen of correspondents, the proceedings of of a public meeting held at Vēttaikkārampudūr village in the Coimbatore district and at Negapatam in the Tanjore district, under the auspices of the Home Rule Leagues to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues. A resolution to buy swadeshi goods was passed in the former, and in the latter the President of the meeting exhorted those present to take the swadeshi vow.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, also reproduces in Tamil the speech made by the Hon'ble Mr. C. Y. Chintamani at the meeting held at Allahabad to protest against these internments, which appears in the Hindu of the 4th July 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, publishes a Telugu version of the proceedings of a meeting held at Vizagapatam to protest against the internments, quoting the speech of the President and portions of the speech of the mover of the first resolution. It says that the first resolution exhorted the public to join the Home Rule League in larger numbers and take the swadeshi vow.

The internment of Mrs. Besant.

The Sudarsini, of the 1st July, says:—The action of the Government in enforcing the Defence of India Act against Mrs. Besant who taught the people in a constitutional way the ways and means for obtaining swaraj under the British Government, and throwing the loyal Indian population into consternation, has caused us regret and surprise. The people are as sorry now for their separation from Mrs. Besant as they were when Rama and the Pandavas were exiled. We are at a loss to know what necessity there was for the Madras Government to enforce such a cruel Act against Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia, and what policy it was thus to dishonour the Indians, who were hoping for at least some liberties being granted to them under the British rule, and expecting their success every moment. This sad news spread throughout the country and has caused people immense pain even to those in villages. If the interned persons had been punished after trial, then there could be no cause for indignation. May His Majesty King George V and the Prime Minister Mr. Lloyd George, who says that on the close of the war India must be granted some privileges, restore to us the interned persons and deserve the gratitude of the three hundred millions of the Indian population.

SUDARSINI, Viswasarayapuram, July 1st, 1917.

Two correspondents to the Andhraprakasika, of the 29th June, write to it to the following effect:—We became subscribers to your paper with a view to encourage it, but your writings supporting the Madras internments have filled us with grief and surprise. We are sorry for the tone of your writings. Mrs. Besant has established Home-Rule Leagues and been trying to bring about reforms in conformity with the wishes of the people The light spirit with which you refer to Mrs. Besant is improper. We are of opinion that you have been thereby doing disservice to the country and to the Non-Brahmans Your articles create great agitation among the reading public.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 29th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, reproduces the above article.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

Internments.

The Desabhimani, of the 1st July, says in its leader:—Lord Hardinge and the High Court of Bombay approved of the agitation for swaraj Then where is the mistake in such agitation? We do not accuse Mrs. Besant, like some papers published by the English, of writing strong articles, for she was born in Europe which is the abode of freedom, and her writings therefore cannot but be strong. If she used disloyal words, it would be well to point them out. If her agitation was altogether wrong informing her of such a fact would have averted matters coming to the present state, and Mrs. Besant would have been saved the present restraint. It is a delusion to suppose that the swaraj agitation is progressing through her paper only. Will that agitation disappear even if she be made a living corpse? No. . . It is unnecessary that those just men who carry on constitutional agitation should follow the will of the rulers. When the editors of papers who find defects in the administration, do not firmly and fearlessly publish them in their papers, it is the same whether they and their papers exist or do not exist. Is it the object of papers to make mountains of molehills, as do the Justice and the Andhraprakasika, and earn praise? What policy is it to fail to find out if the statements in an article are true or not, and to refrain from satisfying the wishes of the people? If papers do not publish the defects in the administration, how are the rulers to know the views of the people. We do not mean by this that papers should write sedition. However careful a writer may be, he may make mistakes in writing. But if the editors are warned, they will feel thankful and be careful in the future. Mrs. Besant is an advocate of the people. It is her enthusiastic devotion to duty that roused the indignation of the Government and made them intern her. Properly speaking her articles cannot be said to be faulty. To intern Mrs. Besant, who has identified her welfare with that of the people and who has devoted her all to the cause of righteousness, is a stain on the British Government. There are signs all over India that the internment will in no way affect the swaraj agitation. In Mrs. Besant's writings we do not see any signs of hostility to the British Empire. We request the public not to retrace their steps whatever the difficulties may be, but to carry on a constitutional agitation without giving vent to strong language in their speeches or writings.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 1st, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Internments.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, says:—The Government knew when enforcing the Defence of India Act that protest meetings would be held. They will certainly not set right the wrongs which they have arbitrarily been the authors of. The Congress and the Moslem League must at once meet in Madras. A resolution must be passed appointing the representatives of both the bodies to request His Excellency the Viceroy to cancel the internments. It must also be resolved that if His Excellency refuses to comply with the request, the members of the Legislative Council, and of local boards and municipalities should resign their seats. Such a resignation will appear just even to the Government, who admit that the Honourable Members are the representatives of the people. When the Government turn a deaf ear to the representations of the representatives of the people, what is the use of these gentlemen saying that they advise the Government in the Legislative Councils? How is it just that they should remain in the Councils? To resign the seats appears best in the present circumstances.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, reproduces from the Kistnapatrika, of the 30th June, in its leaderette on the protest meeting held at Sholapur, already abstracted on page 1904 of the weekly report.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, briefly refers to meetings held at Guntur, Dharmavaram, Nellore and Ellore, protesting against the Madras internments.

RAVI, Cocanada, July 5th, 1917.

Internments.

The Ravi, of the 5th July, says:—We are sorry that Mrs. Besant and her co-workers were interned, but we think the Government did a wise thing, for it is true that her influence and her speeches are a menace to good Government. If the Government did not do as they did, the clamour would increase. The desire for swaraj is no doubt legitimate and the Indians should try their best to get it. But the vast illiteracy prevailing in the country and the animosities existing in it make it unfit for it. Is India better prepared for it than China? No. Even in China, the swaraj movement has not succeeded. . . It is now necessary that the Government of India should declare their policy about swaraj.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd July, refers briefly to the proceedings of a meeting held at Ellore to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 5th July, publishes a Telugu version of the letter of Mr. M. Asaf Ali, Barrister-at-Law, Delhi, regarding the prohibition of a protest meeting proposed to be held at Delhi, which appears in the Hindu of the 4th July.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 5th July, contains a Telugu version of the letter addressed to Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar by the managing proprietor of a weaving factory at Rohri, Sind, which appears in the Hindu of the 5th July 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 5th July, thanks the Madras Government for reconsidering the portion of their order prohibiting the publication of even the religious writings and speeches of the interned persons and cancelling it. It prays that Lord Pentland may also cancel the internments and earn the gratitude of the people.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 6th, 1917

The internments.

Referring to Mr. Chamberlain's reply in the House of Commons to the interpellation regarding the internment of Mrs. Besant, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 6th July, remarks:—The mere allegation that Mrs. Besant was engaged in a dangerous type of agitation can never carry the argument any further. Nothing can be better, therefore, than to state expressly that Mrs. Besant as also the others are asking for Home Rule and that that is what is dangerous and mischievous.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The Governor of Madras.

38. Referring to the extension of the term of office of Lord Pentland as the Governor of Madras, the Dravidan, of the 4th July, says:—Whatever the Home Rulers and the papers of their party may now say, there is no doubt that every true citizen will agree that Lord Pentland has all along been doing good to the people. He has till now, with great equanimity, put down the tumult raised by the Home Rulers as to belie the statement of Lord Curzon about our Presidency that it is the most loyal and peace-loving province. So, it is our firm conviction that patriots, interested in the progress and tranquility of this Presidency, think that he should not give up the administration of the Government at the present juncture.

Indians in the Council of the Secretary of State for India.

39. Adverting to the nomination of the Hon'ble Mr. Bupendranath Basu and Sir Prabha Shankar Patni as Members of the Secretary of State's Council, the Dravida Patrika, of the 4th July, makes the following observations:— The speech made by Mr. Bupendranath Basu, as the President of the National Congress held in Madras some years ago, was characterised by strong patriotic sentiments and breadth of view. He is well known for advocating the cause of the people in the Legislative Councils and elsewhere. His nomination is therefore a highly desirable one. But we cannot say so much about Mr. Patni. This gentleman is not as yet known to have done anything for the people. We have to be content with his nomination on the only ground of his being an Indian.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

A Fourth Member to the Madras Executive Council.

40. Anent the remarks of the Hindu regarding the rumoured appointment of a Fourth Member to the Madras Executive Council and the nomination of Dr. Nair for the same, the Dravidan, of the 4th July, observes:—The Hindu writes with great excitement to the effect that Dr. Nair is no patriot and that he is not fit for that appointment. On the other hand we assert that he is a patriot but does not hold Mrs. Besant in high esteem. Rumour has it that the appointment may go to one of those who prostrated at her feet whenever she went out!

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Home Rule.

41. Referring to the statement made by the High Priest of the Parsis to his co-religionists that it was his duty, as their religious head, to advise them to work with perseverance on constitutional lines for the acquisition of certain political privileges for India, and that they should advance boldly without giving up their work either being afraid of the displeasure of the authorities or allured by titles and other honours, the Dravida Patrika, of the 4th July, contrasts the attitude of this High Priest with the numerous Matadhipathis and Priests in the Tamil land whose actions are not productive of good either to themselves or to the public and who are unfit to give advice in matters either religious or worldly.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Home Rule for India.

Referring to the internal troubles in China and to the statement made by the Madras Times and other papers which are not in favour of the Home Rule movement, that the Home Rulers should take note of this, that it will be dangerous to agitate for Home Rule, when the public opinion is not wholly unanimous about it, and that the people should qualify themselves for it before attempting to acquire the same, the Swadesamitran, of the 6th July, observes:—It is also said that to agitate for Home Rule will only be a wild cry. Were America and the colonies of England fit for self-government before acquiring the same? The recent example of Russia may also be considered. Russia had been an absolute monarchy for thousands of years. But a republican form of Government has indeed been established there as if by magic. Was any question raised as to whether she was then fit for republican government? As soon as they learnt that a republican Government was established there, England, France, America and other countries indeed sent congratulatory telegrams to Russia. It is not known that even a single individual murmered about the fitness of Russia for such a rule, even though to this day she is full of civil dissensions. It is a fact that even after the establishment of the republican form of Government, her condition is still unsettled. But it is usual for some to bring into existence certain contrary forces on occasions when popular rights and liberty are being established. History will clearly say that, in the end, popular liberty will indeed be established. While this is the case, only very few can believe if it is said that in the case of India alone there is a separate time limit for her people to obtain such rights. There are reasons to believe that it is the opinion of many of the people that the few, who say that India is not fit for Home Rule and will not get it, will live to see that she gets it.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, July 6th, 1917.

The Home Rule movement.

The Swadeshabhimani, of the 6th July, writes:—It is hardly necessary to dwell on the radical changes brought about by the present war almost everywhere in the world. The self-government of Poland, the democracy in Russia and the Home Rule of Ireland are sufficient to indicate the trend of these changes. The whole world has been awakened So the Indians, too, just opened their eyes a little and evinced a desire to ask the British statesmen to grant them self-government within the empire. Lord Hardinge welcomed this desire with his characteristic liberality. All this looked natural enough. The political horizon, which was thus all brightness has, it will be admitted, now become clouded by the fiery attitude of the authorities: Without dilating on this point we may say this much. From the European war we have the Home Rule question. The latter has raised many other problems in its turn. Some of the zamindars of Madras have come forward to say that they do not approve of the present Home Rule agitation. We do not need to enquire whether they express this disapproval of their own accord or at the instigation of others; nor would it serve any purpose to do so. One point, however, is indisputable, namely, since even after nearly a hundred years of training under such liberty-loving and capable masters as the British, we have still among us zamindars who are opposed to the attempts to obtain self-government within the empire, it would be worse than useless to gain self-government so long as we have such "sons of Laksmi" among us. We do not like to repeat either the arguments of these few zamindars or the replies given thereto by respected leaders such as Sir Subramanya Ayyar and the Hon'ble Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar who has been elected by these zamindars as their representative in the Imperial Legislative Council. We have great pleasure, however, in announcing to our readers the suggestion that the now famous Dr. T. M. Nayar should be appointed Fourth Member of His Excellency's Executive Council. It would be a mistake to suppose, however, that all the zamindars are opposed to Home Rule. For the principles enunciated by the zamindar of Munagala the other day as the President of the Reddis' Conference are fit to be studied not only by the sons of Lakshmi (goddess of wealth) but all reformers in general. His views are not narrow like those of some others of his class. He fully realises the value of solidarity for all national advancements. Unless the number of these broad-minded men increases and differences such as those referred to above disappear, we should not wish for self-government.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

Home Rule.

The Juridah-i-Rozgar, of the 26th June, has a leader on the marginally-noted subject beginning with the lines:—

"The martyrs of love are perfectly familiar with the law of faithfulness."
"They regard bleeding in the street of the slayer as the shedding of blood."

With reference to the manner in which the writer in our local paper has dealt with the subject of Home Rule under the heading "The present condition", Muhammadans can make no useful deduction therefrom, nor can the Hindus conclude that it serves any useful purpose. His writing is an absolutely perplexing dream and the interpretation thereof is no other than a case of—

"Like soul, like angel."

It would have been better if an independent course had been followed in attempting a solution of the question of Home Rule, and that an endeavour had been made to explain explicitly to the generality of Muhammadans to what extent this question contributed to freedom, and the amount of injury caused thereto by the shortsighted policy of the Madras Government.

On the contrary, however, putting lucid declaration on the shelf, he has expressed his ideas in equivocal language from which it seems he had in view, on the one hand, the risk of falling into the clutches of the Government, and on the other, the idea of backing Home Rule and its supporters. If he succeeds in proving the presence of Muhammadans at some meeting, he hastens to explain that they neither support Mrs. Besant nor her methods; but that they sympathise with the sufferers and therefore attended the meeting to express their feelings of grief and sorrow. Good god! what writing and what antithesis. He tries to save the Muhammadans from the clutches of the Government, and at the same time spares no pains to please the Hindus!

"At once the longing for the beloved and the concern for his head;
"His heart is in both places at once!"

We really cannot understand how the Mussalmans, who were present at the meeting, expressed their sorrow and grief when they are said not to approve of either Mrs. Besant or her ways. The fact is Muhammadans cannot take any part in movements that are opposed to the policy of the Government, yes, but attending a meeting as spectators is one thing and attending as enthusiastic supporters of the aims of Home Rule is quite another:—

"Behold how remote is this way from that."

It is not possible, however, that the Muhammadans, who attended the meeting and expressed their feelings of grief and sorrow, could have communicated the fact to the writer in our local paper.

He writes: "The Hindus ought to be pleased at the Muhammadans attending their meetings," and "Mussalmans are not yet able to approve Home Rule."

If Muhammadans cannot yet approve of Home Rule, why should Hindus be glad at the Muhammadans attending the meeting. Hindus might really have been glad if Muhammadans had been of one heart and voice with them. But here just the opposite is the case. According to his own statement Muhammadans differ from Hindus on the Home Rule question, and yet the latter are pleased! How marvellous!

The fact of the matter is the Muhammadans cannot, on any account, join the Home Rule League. The difference that exists between Muhammadans and Hindus is not one calculated to unite them as milk unites with sugar. Their sentiments and aspirations are different from those of the Muhammadans. Islam teaches Muhammadans to obey the ruler for the time being, while the Veda sings to them the song of freedom for the mother country.

"There are some intoxicated with poverty and some with riches;
"In this tavern we are vagabonds; not wine-bibbers."

For the sake of bread and salt he desires to submit for the consideration of the authorities some vain ideas fashioned by himself.

It is very easy for our pugnacious writer of the article to lay before the authorities false ideas regarding the Muhammadans. As has already been pointed out, he has tried his utmost, inexplicitly, albeit, to bring to the notice of the Government that Muhammadans also are believers in Home Rule. From the tenour and general trend of the article it is evident that the words, "Home Rule" and "Freedom" are synonymous terms, and that independence is the basic principle of Islam.

He further writes:—"A so-called prudent person, who has no knowledge of anything outside the four walls of his own house, and who has not energy to attend meetings, has recently published that no Muhammadan attended Thursday's meeting, in spite of the fact that those, who attended the meeting, declare in clarion tones that they were there."

The Jarîdah says:—"The beauty of it is, however, in spite of our not being everywhere, we possess a lofty imagination and comprehensive ideas. We have no desire to be here, there, and everywhere like our contemporary. It is, of course, true, that we stated that no Muhammadan was present at the meeting on Thursday. What we meant was that no Muhammadan, who was a believer in Home Rule or who was an enthusiastic supporter of its aims, was there. The mere fact of attending a meeting as spectators is not worthy of mention. It would have been otherwise, had the Muhammadans come on the platform and delivered an address on Home Rule or a lecture on the short-sighted policy of the Government. Alas! the pity of it, what an excellent opportunity has been afforded to this uninformed person to criticise a position, which, like the web of a spider, collapsed in the twinkling of an eye!

The writer further says:—"The market of constitutional endeavours is brisk in the land, and the life and death struggle between the monarchy and democracy is going on."

We (Jaridah) have understood your (writer's) real aspirations and the utmost limit of your bucolic ideas has come under our observation. You are welcome to these ideas but our friendly advice is:—

"Unwise counsellor talk not in terms of love and madness:
"With what face can you say these are Government matters?"

JAMEDAR-I-ROZGAR, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

Home Rule.

The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 28th June, in continuation of its article in a previous issue on this subject writes:—The editor in criticising the editor of another paper on different topics, says that the latter has neither moral courage, nor a whole-hearted support, nor regard for the community, nor any enthusiasm for national interests. His lucubrations are nothing but babblings.

Briefly, the proper thing for Muhammadans is not to sympathise with his objects and aims. In fact, Home Rule is a poisonous draught which they cannot swallow. This is not the time for constitutional government nor is there any question of a dispute between democracy and monarchy, nor have the lawful claims of Muhammadans been overlooked. If they have lagged behind in their national advancement, it is their own fault. Otherwise the sun of sovereignty shines over all alike. The fact of the Muhammadans being a responsible and resolute-minded community does not mean that they should demand Home Rule and further lower its existing status. If our great history is strong, can it become stronger by adopting itself to the Home Rule?

"Your natural crooked sight is the seat of misfortune.
"Mischief is the thrall of the wanton look."

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Condition of cattle.

42. Quoting the statistics relating to cattle in the different provinces of India to show the position occupied by this Presidency among them, and dwelling upon the necessity of improving the condition of cattle in an agricultural country like India, the Dravida Patrika, of the 4th July, observes that steps should be taken to put an end to the practice of killing milch-cows for the sake of their flesh and that the Veterinary department should be reconstituted, as at present this department cannot be said to do much work and the cattle die in very large numbers every year in consequence of contagious diseases among them.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

Post-war reforms.

43. Referring to the despatch of the Government of India to the Secretary of State regarding the reforms to be introduced in the administration of India after the war, the Swadesamitran, of the 5th July, observes:—What proposals have been submitted by the Government of India we do not know. We ask for such reforms as will pave the way for Home Rule. Lord Pentland has said that the benefits we are to drive will fall far short of our expectations. There is, therefore, reason for us to fear whether the Secretary of State would disregard our wishes. At this stage we should learn what the proposals are and how far they are from our wishes, and then make the necessary agitation. Therefore, political organization such as the Congress Committee should ask for the immediate publication of these proposals in India If, as stated by Lord Pentland, the proposals are such as cannot satisfy our aspirations, we will have to send a deputation to England. All political organizations should therefore, without even waiting for a minute, cable to the Secretary of State for India, for the immediate publication of the proposals. Bigger organizations like the Congress Committee have not yet fully risen to the urgency of the situation. We, therefore, impress upon all organizations in the mufassal to pass resolutions as was done some days back in Salem, and wake up the bigger ones.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

Publication of the works of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues.

44. Adverting to the order recently issued by the Government on this subject, the Swadesamitran, of the 5th July, writes:—Telegraphic news has been received that the Government have relaxed their order against Mrs. Besant, so far as religious publications are concerned. But the reason for this relaxation is not given in the new order.

We have to infer from this that the original order was drawn up in haste. We should, however, be grateful to the Government for having realised their fault at least now instead of remaining obdurate. Some may construe the institution, by the police, of proceedings against the Secretary of the Gokkale Hall for permitting it to be used for meetings in connection with Mrs. Besant, to be due to the grudge they bore towards her. It is indeed a wise thing that the proceedings have been withdrawn. There is one thing funny in the present order. The works written or hereafter to be written by Mrs. Besant, and her two colleagues have, prior to their publication, to be examined and approved by the Governor in Council or the officer appointed by him. The works till now published and the lectures till now delivered by Mrs. Besant, are too numerous to be reckoned. If their examination is to be conducted by His Excellency the Governor or any other officer, his whole time will be taken up by this alone. He himself will, in the end, become an expert in Theosophy!

Compulsory vaccination.

45. Referring to the withdrawal, by the Bombay Government, of the prosecution launched, some time back, against Mr. Jethmal and Mr. Vasvani for refusing to vaccinate their children, and to the case in which a headmaster and an assistant master of a school in Karachi were fined by the Magistrate of the place for a similar offence in spite of several arguments adduced by them from a religious and a medical point of view, the Dravidan, of the 4th July, observes:—Some of the highly educated men believe that no good results from vaccination. It is not, therefore, reasonable to compel them to vaccinate their children against their will. Have the authorities greater interest in these children than their parents? No, if these children suffer from any disease in consequence of vaccination, who will be responsible for this? Why should a difference be made in the application of the laws relating to vaccination? This is a thing worthy of being noticed by the Government, and we trust that in the case of men who have no faith in the efficacy of vaccination, the thoughtful procedure adopted by the Bombay Government will be adopted by the other Governments also

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The speech of General Smutts.

46. Referring to the speech made by General Smutts on the occasion of an entertainment given to him by the members of the Parliament a few weeks back, the Swadesamitran, of the 5th July, writes:—Not only should the British statesmen earnestly note the importance of the statement emphatically made by him that the interest and well-being of even the Boers, who were once the enemies of the English, should be safeguarded, but the bureaucrats here should also note it with a liberal spirit. Lord Pentland and others have been declaring that Home Rule is the life and soul of the British Empire. Yet, when the Indians ask for such Home Rule on the ground that it is the vital foundation for friendly relations to be established permanently between England and India, is it proper for the bureaucrats to show disgust and uneasiness? There is nothing in this to cause surprise to us. But what are we to say of the strange conduct of the bureaucrats who act as if they are unaware of the opinion of the people and the political trend of the world? Although the English people had not for a long time paid proper regard to the popular opinion regarding Ireland, have they not now realised that they cannot get on unless they yield to the opinion of the people which has been growing strong in this matter? In India, the popular opinion is not what it was. It has of late grown very strong. We trust that due regard will be paid to it, so that the evils that would result by treating it lightly and suppressing it may not become too strong. General Smutts, while speaking on another occasion, has openly given out that the people of a country can have broad views and that the difficulties in the administration of the country will be removed only when we devise means for the various communities to work without any difference for their common good, with co-operation and with mutual understanding and esteem. We wish that not only our countrymen, but also the authorities who are responsible for the good of this country, would carefully consider this.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

The Secretary of State's reply to the interpellations in the Parliament.

47. Referring to the reply made by the Secretary of State to the interpellations in the Parliament about the repressive measures adopted in India, that he greatly values the recommendations of the Provincial Governments and that in political matters of great importance they would have to act in anticipation of his approval, the Hindu Nesan, of the 6th July, writes:—From this it is understood that the Secretary of State considers that his duty is simply to say ditto to whatever the Provincial Governments say. To the question asked about Mrs. Besant's agitation, he has replied that this agitation is being conducted on improper lines and that the prestige of the Government will be lost thereby. His opinion is indeed one-sided and has been formed without his learning the truth of the matter.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The Criminal Investigation Department.

48. Adverting to the statement made by the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, that if the details relating to the work of Bengal C.I.D. were published, the public could know and appreciate how careful the members of this department are before they entertain suspicions about anarchists, the Swadesamitran, of the 7th July, observes:—When the authorities say that sufficient reasons exist for suspecting one before internment under the Defence of India Act, the people incessantly demand the publication of these reasons. But the authorities never publish them. When they know that these reasons could be accepted by the public or by a Court of Law, why should they hesitate to publish them? Can such conduct of the authorities create confidence in the minds of the people? Thus without publishing the details of the work of the secret police, what use is there in the statement of the Commissioner of Police, that if these details are published, the people can appreciate their judicious work? The authorities estimate the loyalty and honour of the people with the help of the secret police and the members of this department should, therefore, possess high character, great capability and sound education. But when we consider the pay of the lower ranks of that service, can it be said to attract men of unsullied character and adequate competency?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Publication of Mrs. Besant's Theosophical works.

49. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, publishes in Tamil the letter written by Mr. Iqbal Narayan Gurtu on the order of the Government in connection with this subject, which appears in the Hindu of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The Congress Presidentship.

50. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, also publishes in Tamil the letter of Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar pleading for the election of Mrs. Besant as the President of the next Congress, which also appears in the Hindu of the 9th July 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917

Lord Ronaldshay on self-government.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, also reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Bombay Chronicle on the speech made by Lord Ronaldshay regarding self-government, which appears in the Hindu of the 9th July 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Swadeshism.

52. In publishing the proceedings of the Second Anniversary Celebration of the Puduvayal Gnana Prakasa Sabha, the Swadesamitran, of the 7th July, reports one of the lecturers to have observed, while lecturing on "our duty", that it is not desirable to export the raw products of this country for a small profit and purchase manufactured articles from the western merchants paying very high prices, that if the capitalists in the country would establish industrial institutions, it would be the best means for India to progress like other countries, and that every one should take the vow to buy swadeshi goods only.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Swadeshism.

The Swadesamitran, of the 7th July, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held at Kumbakōnam on the 4th idem under the auspices of the Swadeshiya Pracharana Sabha when Mr. C. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar, the President of the meeting, in speaking of the importance of swadeshism, is reported to have said that the western people derive a very large profit by the export of the raw products from this country, that it will be a source of danger to the people to be without improving the industries, that the bureaucrats would not agree to leave India to herself, that by the internment of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues the swadeshi spirit is spreading with greater vigour than before and that the people should buy only swadeshi goods, acquire Home Rule and speak in their vernacular languages alone.

Then Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar is also reported to have made the following observations on this occasion:—There is no use in vehemently discussing in the Legislative Councils on the duty imposed on cotton goods. The Government do not lend their ears to the wishes of the popular representatives. They are treating us like cows and feeding us on bran, oilcake, cotton seeds, etc. The cow gives milk; while we are capable of buying foreign goods. Mrs. Besant is interned so as to prevent us from asking for anything. We should not therefore remain quiet, but must go from street to street and lecture about swadeshi and Home Rule movements, and make them understood by all. We should endeavour to work for this purpose in all villages whenever we happen to go there. Let us therefore take the vow that we will not touch any goods, but the swadeshi ones.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, also publishes, as reported by a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held at Kumbakōnam on the 6th July 1917, under the auspices of the Swadeshiya Pracharana Sabha, when Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar, the President of the meeting, and N. Tiruvengadattayyangar, who also addressed the meeting, are reported to have exhorted every one to take a vow not to touch foreign goods, but to use only swadeshi goods with a view to improve Indian industries.

SUDARSINI, Viswasarayapuram, July 1st, 1917.

The Sudarsini, of the 1st July, says:—The whole of India has resented the internment of Mrs Besant, etc., and is in a state of great commotion. . . . The first step for swaraj is the economic progress of the country, and there can be no such progress without a determination on the part of the people to use only swadeshi articles. . . So we should take a vow to use only articles made in this country though they may appear rude. The paper concludes the article with the following exhortation;—O, Andhra brothers, take the swadeshi vow. Improve the industries and make progress. Attain swaraj.

The swadeshi.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 7th, 1917.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 7th July, again dwells upon the impossibility of carrying out the swadeshi vow, and asks whether it is possible, as some people think, to get rid of repressive measures by the force of the term, swaaeshi.

Swadeshism.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

53. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th July, writes:—The British Empire is said to be built up on the basis of the principle of self-government, and it is also said that efforts are being made to guide such countries, in the Empire, as have not yet come to enjoy Home Rule, on lines which would lead them to that goal. If this is true, every inch of the British Empire will at one time or other in the future come to enjoy Home Rule, though races like us have to be anxious as to the time it may take for this object to be accomplished. Some say that any nation can conduct Home Rule properly only if it is granted to them after the majority of them have learnt to realise their responsibility in that rule. Our plea is that, as in Canada, Australia and other countries, which were granted Home Rule even before they had this sense of responsibility, the administration has been conducted properly, we should be granted Home Rule soon. We are better qualified to have Home Rule now than Canada and Australia were when they had it. Several among us are cultured people. England has trained us for the last 100 years in institutions which form the basis of Home Rule. We belong to a race which can lay claim to an ancient civilization. Thus we are better fitted to have Home Rule than the colonists enjoying it now, and it was when we had complete confidence in this fitness that the war began Our people rely upon the statements made on several occasions by British statesmen as to the principle for which this war is conducted and believe that the time of redemption for Belgium and Servia will synchronise with that for us. If, having given room for the entertainment of such a belief, the British statesmen behave in a manner which will cause disappointment, they will be sowing the seeds of unrest in a country which has been quiet. Though Mr. Curtis of the "Round Table" made us fear that the colonies might perhaps be against the grant of Home Rule to us, the statement made by Sir S. P. Sinha to Saint Nihal Singh about the attitude of the colonies in this matter, makes it clear that they have no objection whatever to our having Home Rule. Besides this, Mr. Smutts in speaking in London on the 22nd of May last on the future of South Africa stated that regulations were under consideration in the South African Parliament to grant Home Rule to the natives of that place, who, as described by Mr. Smutts, are a set of ignorant men, without any ideals, and resemble brutes. As South Africa has decided to grant Home Rule to the natives, who are in such an uncivilised condition, no one is justified in denying a similar grant to us whose civilisation is superior even to that of the Europeans. It is clear from the lectures of Mr. Lloyd George and others that the British statesmen will not deny it and from the statement of Sir S. P. Sinha that the colonial statesmen also will not do so. But the authorities in India will raise serious objections, unwilling to part with the power which they have been enjoying for a long time. Even the Secretary of State for India, who acts upon the words of these, may hamper us. So, if our aspirations are to be fulfilled, it is not enough for us to make efforts for it here alone. Our representatives should go to England and plead before the British public. Some years back, when Sir B. Fuller, the Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal, prohibited a conference and indulged in other high-handed acts, Mr. Gokhale went to England and explained the situation here to the British public, and the result was that there were many questions in the Parliament and Sir B. Fuller's regimé came to an end. If we place our aspirations before the British public, it will not bein vain. We hope that our leaders will take the necessary action promptly.

The present situation and our duty.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 7th July, continues its leader on this subject in the following strain:—Telegrams received for the past one week from England and the other provinces in India show that the impatient among the Anglo-Indian bureaucrats are working for brushing aside the progress of self-government in our country even more actively than we expected. The ultimate responsibility for such mischievous activities is taken up by the Secretary of State himself, who having, on account of the pressure of the war, entrusted the local officials with complete powers, supports their actions in Parliament, without caring for anything. There is room for serious apprehension as to whether the Parliament, which is finally responsible over him, for the welfare of India, will also permit such methods. In trying to improve the state of affairs caused by the political unrest in the time of Lord Minto, this statesman and Lord Morley, followed liberal principles and realised that the proper remedies for the situation were the removal of the grievances caused by the officials exercising inordinate control in the administration, which was the root cause of the unrest, and the fulfilment of the natural aspirations of the Indians, whose knowledge and experience of administration have been improving, for a responsible share in this administration. They accordingly proposed a few liberal reforms and had them approved. Though these reforms had two important defects, all the well-wishers of our country are aware that these defects (themselves) and the effect of the war upon India have led the country moving forward rapidly. So it is that all popular leaders, having the interest of the country at heart, have been, after deep consideration, urging the necessity, on the part of the Government, of realising the reasonableness of the present (Home Rule) movement and fulfilling the aspirations of the people and so it is, again, that we have been demanding that, when the constitution of the Empire is reformed after the war, the condition of India, which forms the central portion of the Empire and which is a main support for its existence, should be raised to that of the colonies; for it is only then that this Empire, which hopes to be the sole guardian of the welfare of the world, can have permanent peace. As it is stated that the present statesmen do realise this, our countrymen request them to begin to introduce such reforms as are necessary for this purpose. Besides this, they have been wholeheartedly rendering enormous help in this war, not even caring for the serious grievances they have, and thereby performing their duty, unhesitatingly, at this critical juncture, and they are anxiously expecting that their grievances will be considered from a liberal standpoint and that the condition of their countrymen will be improved, as soon as the war comes to an end, and their aspiration for Home Rule, which they have had for a long time, fulfilled. It is for this purpose that the people have been taking active steps, on the initiative of the Congress and other associations, to bring about union among themselves and to improve the knowledge of the masses so as to make them also understand the necessity for Home Rule and are working under the popular leaders for the welfare of our motherland. It was at this juncture that Lord Hardinge, who sympathised with their aspirations, vacated his seat of Viceroyalty. His successor, Lord Chelmsford, either owing to the instigation of the bureaucrats, who have a bitter hatred for Home Rule, or owing to his own disapproval of it, declared a few months after his arrival here that there was no use in our expecting mighty reforms immediately and that we could hope to have them only step by step. Ever since this pronouncement was made, the ideals of Home Rule, nay, even ordinary reforms, have been condemned by the bureaucrats, by the Anglo Indian papers, which always support them and by a few unpatriotic Indians, who count upon the influence and favour of these two classes. In doing so, they began to treat all movements as being connected with Home Rule and call for the suppression of every one of them. In pursuance of this call, the all-powerful Defence of India Act has been brought into play and action taken in different places to suppress our patriots and the Home Rule propaganda generally. There is one important difference between the (repressive) measures adopted in 1907–1908 and those adopted now. In the case of the former, the assurance was often given that they were adopted only to abate the unrest that might be created by the active agitation of some patriots and that they would not affect in any way the speedy introduction of reasonable reforms. But the repressive measures now adopted are based upon a war law, and there is no assurance whatever of the introduction of any substantial reforms. Acting on a confidential circular issued by the Government of India two or three months back, the several provincial heads here are announcing that our Home Rule aspirations cannot be realised now, that no political reforms which would help in any way the realisation of these aspirations are under the consideration of the Government and that the only reforms under contemplation refer to a few matters of provincial administration and the improvement of local self-government. This view is confirmed by a telegram appearing in the London Times of yesterday. Under these circumstances, our leaders have to do their work with a serious responsibility upon their shoulders, and the public are bound to make all sacrifices in the matter and render every possible assistance to the leaders. But the reforms introduced in 1907–1908 have in a way helped those, who are so strongly intend upon suppressing the Home Rule movement. If those who introduced such reforms had then openly stated that India would surely attain Home Rule gradually, those who are now opposing "Home Rule" would have no pretext to act upon. Secondly, though the reforms introduced then were conceived in a liberal spirit, the framing of the legal rules and methods for giving effect to them was left in the hands of the Government of India, surrounded by the bureaucrats, and many evils resulted therefrom. It is well-known that the very purposes of those reforms were in many respects changed by these rules. It is these two defects that we have referred to above. So, our first work should necessarily be to get rid of these defects. Hence it is that our representative associations pray for an announcement that it is the clear aim of the English Government that India should soon have Home Rule and for a reform of the constitution of the Legislative and Executive Councils, as a sign thereof and as a first step towards the attainment of that object on the lines suggested by them. Therefore all the people here should realise their responsibility in the situation that has now arisen and do their duty zealously. It looks as if there is an attempt to introduce petty reforms and ignore the high ideals of Home Rule. If this is true, the Executive Committees of the Congress and the Muslim League should forthwith move for preventing it and for securing proper consideration of our aspirations. In addition to this, all the Indians should give up their old habits and serve their country, on constitutional lines, with a new enthusiasm for conducting our political movements resolutely and with a view to victory.

Mr. Chamberlain's irresponsibility.

54. The Hindu Nesan, of the 7th July, reproduces in Tamil the substance of the leader in New India of the 6th idem on this subject.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Home Rulers and the Maharaja of Bobbili.

55. Adverting to the comments of New India, on the attitude of the Maharaja of Bobbili in expressing certain views prejudicial to the Home Rule movement, the Dravidan, of the 7th July, condemns the action of the editor of New

Dravidan, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

India in speaking as he likes of persons who happen to hold an opinion contrary to that of the Home Rulers, and observes:—Indeed, what we say is nothing but that it is not proper for our people to cry for Home Rule without knowing anything about political privileges. There is the least reason to believe that the Poona Brahman that has now come here (referring perhaps to the editor of New India), or other Brahmans that have been here, know even a little of political matters. They have somehow caught hold of a few ideas from the speeches of Mrs. Besant. To rely on them, therefore, is to descend into a river relying on a mud horse. The people of this country have 35 years' experience of municipalities and 25 years' experience of Legislative Councils. How can it be said from this alone that they have gained an experience of Home Rule? The Home Rulers speak disparagingly of persons such as Mr. Bupendranath Basu and Mr. Narayana Chandravarkar, who hold views contrary to their own as being tardy in their pace. As the above gentlemen are men of ripe experience, they do not, like others, act with excitement or excessive zeal.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Lord Ronaldshay on Home Rule.

56. Adverting to the observations made by Lord Ronaldshay in reply to the address of welcome presented to him by the people of Dacca on the subject of Home Rule for India, the Hindu Nesan, of the 7th July, writes:—We are aware of the opinion expressed by Lord Pentland in the Madras Legislative Council on the prospects of Home Rule for India. Though he said that India could not get Home Rule all at once but could be had only in course of time, he rather failed to put it in such a way as not to wound the feelings of those who heard him. Lord Ronaldshay also has spoken on Home Rule in his reply to the address of welcome presented by the people of Dacca. We do not know if this address contained any prayer for the grant of Home Rule for India. If there was such a prayer in it, it would not be possible for Lord Ronaldshay to evade giving a definite answer. If without their making a reference to that subject in the address, he spoke on it of his own accord, it is unnecessary. That question is a big one concerning the whole of India. It is a great question to be considered in consultation with all the public leaders of India and with a joint committee consisting of representatives from all Indian organisations such as the Congress and the Muslim League. It is vain to speak of it in other places. It is not our view that the matter should not be discussed with others but that it is not possible for shortsighted men and unripe politicians to discuss it. Yet Lord Ronaldshay has addressed the Dacca people on such a subject. There is one particular feature in what he said. Although he said that it was impracticable for India to get Home Rule all on a sudden, he did not put it in such a way as to disappoint or provoke his hearers. He told them that he had only to remind them of the words of Sir S. P. Sinha about Home Rule given utterance to at the Congress held in Bombay two years ago. It is well that he reminded the people of these words. But then Mr. Sinha stated that the Government should openly give an assurance that Home Rule would be granted to the next generation of Indians. Lord Ronaldshay could have given such an assurance, but he has not.

Lokopakari, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Home Rule and the Zamindars.

57. Referring to the speech made by Raja Ranga Rao, Zamindar of Munagala, as the President of the Reddi Conference held on the 29th ultimo at Nellore, to the effect that India should, at the close of the war, acquire Home Rule subject to the British supremacy, that in order to obtain such an ideal the Indians should in every way render the necessary aid towards the successful termination of the war and show themselves fit for Home Rule, and that young men should enlist in the Defence Force thereby showing their sense of loyalty and partriotism, the Lokopakari, of the 9th July, observes that his speech would be an advice to the shortsighted and unpatriotic men who are brewing social and racial dissensions among the people, and a lesson to the 35 zamindars who have come forward as though opposed to Home Rule, and that his speech also deserves the earnest attention of the Government.

Referring to the manifesto issued by the 35 zamindars against Home Rule, the same paper writes:—Those who belong to the party that do not want Home Rule for India must indeed be non-Indians. They are Anglo-Indians. If India gets Home Rule, the influence of the Anglo-Indians will go down. It is but natural therefore that they are opposed to Home Rule. Either due to their instigation or perversity of intellect, a few among the non-Brahmans are speaking and writing against the Home Rule party. Following their lead the 35 zamindars have come forward. It appears that these have come forward as direct opponents of the Hon'ble Mr K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar and the Hon'ble Mr. K. R V. Krishna Rao Pantulu, who represent the zamindars of this Presidency in the Legislative Council. We think that those who are making great efforts to spoil the union of the people would have been disappointed at the manifesto of these zamindars. That strange party which is for "divide and rule" can no longer raise its head in India. Now that there is harmony between the Muhammadans and the Hindus, the agitation that is now and then made by people of perverse intellect will be of no avail.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The Home Rule and the zamindars.

In commenting on the communication relating to Home Rule from some of the zamindars, the Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd July, says:—It is impossible to repress the desire for independence. The self government movement cannot be curbed. The desire for freedom has spread all over the world. Russia could not resist it but has submitted to it. . . Who created such a desire for freedom? Is it not the English our rulers? . . Under such circumstances, how is it improper that the Indians who are under the British Government should attain swaraj under the suzerainty of the British Sovereign? This matter has not been dealt with in the letter of the zamindars. The country is full of poverty. There are many people who live on only one meal a day. The taxes paid by the people are not expended for their sake entirely. High offices are not all bestowed on the Indians. Industries are not flourishing in the country. People clamour for freedom so that they may improve the country economically and make it prosperous once again. This is the root principle of the self-government movement. It is not strange that the zamindars who do not know the views of the people well write in opposition to this principle. They would do well to withdraw this communication, or they would be deemed to obstruct the progress of the country. At the present critical juncture, it is essential that all the people should work jointly. This is not the time for difference of opinion. May the zamindars know that union only leads to success!

The same paper publishes a Telugu version of the communication sent by the zamindars relating to Home Rule.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 7th, 1917.

The zamindars and the Home Rule.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 7th July, points out that there are many influential persons amongst the Anti-Home Rulers, and rejoices that the Hon'ble Mr. Mupil Nayar, Raja Manavedan Raja, and Raja Vasudeva Raja are amongst them.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

The Central Board of Recruitment.

58 Adverting to the constitution of this Board which has been appointed by the Governor-General in Council and to the Provincial Boards which will be formed in the several provinces for purposes of recruitment, the Hindu Nesan, of the 6th July, observes that the Government have realised the truth that the recruitment work would be affected if the opinion of the non-military men were disregarded, and trusts that, as the Government have now devised measures for recruiting men for the army paying due regard to the conveniences of the people, the public will realise the pressure and difficulties caused by the war and co-operate with the Government in this great effort, and that by the co-operation of the Provincial Boards with the Central Board the object of the Government of India will be fulfilled.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The Brahmans.

59. The Dravidan, of the 7th July, has the following short notes regarding Brahmans:—In temples they are the officiating priests, in houses they are the purohits (family priests), and in offices they are the officers! Thus the Brahmans are found everywhere. Are they found only as officers in offices? No. They even take up such menial posts as those of muchis in offices. Thus they are found in different capacities in different places. Excellent! Further, they allow none to approach them, none to come near them. How are we to live, O Lord!, in this pressure!

Not content with these, on occasions of marriage and on occasions of funerals, they would run from place to place and plunder our money! Whose is this money and whence has this come? The money that is given in the temples is the money of the non-Brahmins; the money that is paid as taxes is the money of the non-Brahmans; the money that is given on festive occasions is the money of the non-Brahmans. Like the waters of the river that flow into the sea, all this money safely goes into the hands of the Brahmans! Should we not endeavour to safeguard our money?

Not content with service in charitable institutions, they have begun to be the heads of such institutions! They set on foot certain organizations, create troubles and play all kinds of trick to oust the descendants of the endowers of such institutions and appropriate to themselves all the powers. If our men allow themselves to be duped, they are lost! If they are inactive, they will be completely undone! Let non-Brahmans alone look after the management of charitable trusts endowed by non-Brahmans. Let not the Brahmans interfere in these matters as uninvited guests.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Exodus to the hills.

60. The Hindu Nesan, of the 9th July, reproduces in Tamil the observations of the Madras Times about the exodus of the Government to the hills during the summer.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Police annoyance.

61. The Hindu Nesan, of the 9th July, also reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Indian Patriot, on the annoyance caused by the Police to the people who took part in the meeting held at Sankaridrug to protest against the internment orders of the Government.

Lokopakari, Madras, July 9th, 1917

Governors of Madras and Bombay.

62. Referring to the extension of the term of office of these Governors, the Lokopakari, of the 9th July, observes that it is wonderful that the extension of the term of office of Lord Carmichael, which was most desired by the people, was not sanctioned, and remarks that this gives a clear idea of the narrow views of the Secretary of State for India.

Lokopakari, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Censor.

63. Adverting to the appointment of Mr. Norman Mitchell, a Deputy Superintendent of Police, as censor to pass communications addressed to or received from Mrs. Annie Besant and others, who are interned at Ootacamund, the Lokopakari, of the 9th July, says that a Civilian ought to have been appointed to this post.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

Indian administrative methods.

64. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, reports a correspondent to the Times of India to have said:—Government are responsible for the ignorance of the masses. This ignorance makes them helpless in the solution of national questions. If our country should make any progress in the near future, the bureaucracy would be unnecessary. The bureaucracy listens to those who speak in accordance to its wishes, and the representation by the ryots of their grievances is an eyesore to them. The order of the Madras Government is an instance in point. The public have recented and criticised the shortsighted policy of the Madras Government clearly discernible in the speech of His Excellency the Governor and the order of the Madras Government.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

Swaraj.

65. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, has a Telugu version of an article from the Leader, which contains the following:—

Does it at all appear from the speech of Lord Pentland that he is of opinion that the legitimate aspirations of the Indians should be considered with sympathy? The speech on the other hand shows that he has a bad opinion regarding the aims and aspirations of the people. . . Judging from the uniform attitude of the Local Governments, it seems as if the Government have undertaken to discourage the agitation for swaraj.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

The Madras Mail and Lord Hardinge.

66. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, contains a Telugu version of the article in the Madras Mail criticising the policy of Lord Hardinge in India regarding the Mesopotamian affair.

Lord Hardinge.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, says:—The Anglo-Indian papers will be naturally glad to know that the history of Lord Hardinge has been stained. They do not like his sympathy with the people. When we remember the fact that these papers insulted him saying that his band was composed of Germans, it will be plain how wrathful they are. The charge against Lord Hardinge in the matter of the Mesopotamian compaign has delighted the Mail, which scorned him outright. From its article on Lord Hardinge it is plain that the cause of its anger is not so much the failure of the campaign as his deep sympathy for the Indians. . . The Mail is of opinion that he did not realise the importance of devoting all his energy to the cause of the present terrible war. There can be no greater false charge against him. He saved Belgium and Paris. . . He rendered invaluable help to the cause of the war in every way and devoted all his time to it. Needless it is to say that the censure bestowed on Lord Hardinge is the result of envy. . . Even Mr. Bonar Law has said in the Parliament that this is not the time to discuss the question of how far Lord Hardinge was responsible, but the Mail has thrown the whole blame of the failure of the campaign on him. The Anglo-Indian papers may take delight in blaming him, but the Indians can never be unfaithful to him. It is improper, in the opinion of the Indians, to connect the failure of the Mesopotamian expedition with Lord Hardinge's sympathy for India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

The Indian Defence Force.

67. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, has the following in its leader:— The internments have given rise to many new problems. Many means have been proposed to see that the Government may not disregard public opinion. Swadeshi, National education, etc., are some of them. Leaders like Pandit Motilal Nehru in the United Provinces expressed the opinion that in order that the people may show their entire disapproval they should not join the Indian Defence Force. Mr. B. C. Pal expressed the same opinion in New India. The Indians should consider this point deeply. This important matter was not sufficiently discussed in the Press, perhaps out of indifference or because leaders in other Provinces did not agree with the leaders above mentioned. Or the matter may have been still under consideration. At any rate, it is necessary that the leaders should express a firm opinion on this matter. . . Dr. Mullik has stated that the opinion of the leaders of the United Provinces is disastrous to the country. Before her internment, Mrs. Besant wrote that in the interests of the country, the suggestion of Mr. Pal should not be followed. We have to remember the words of Mr. Tilak that he would give up the swaraj propaganda if young men do not join the Defence force in large numbers. Young men gave an enthusiastic response to this. If the leaders now give contrary suggestions, young men will be thrown into great confusion. It is true that there is great difference of opinion between the rulers and the ruled. It is also true that public opinion has been treated lightly. We have often stated that individual freedom has been endangered. . . It is our opinion that the question of the Indian Defence force is more important to the people than to the rulers. . . The Government have not taken the same pains with regard to the formation of this force as with regard to the raising of the war loan. It is national leaders like Mr. Tilak and Mrs. Besant that have hitherto worked for its formation. . . It indicates no manly spirit to expect foreigners to protect us for all time. Many an event may take place to thwart such a thing. . . It is not a creditable thing for the Indians that their coasts are being protected by the Japanese. It is ridiculous that the Indian, who saved France, protected the Suez Canal, helped in the conquest of German Colonies, and took Bagdad, do not receive training and undertake to defend their own country. . . If Indians do not join the force, the rulers will not change their opinions about matters affecting the welfare of the country, and the people will lose the new opportunity afforded to them. Our goal is self-government. If that is attained, the burden of defending the country will fall on our shoulders. If we cannot do that, the world will ridicule us. We have not only to attain self-government, but should be able to maintain it. So this opportunity is of vital importance. The words of the zamindar of Munagala spoken at the Reddis' Conference deserve to be followed. The question of the Indian Defence Force is of greater importance to the Andhras, who have been requesting the Government to save them from the stain of being considered unfit to be soldiers. Our requests have been responded to, and under such circumstance, the Andhras should not be indifferent, but should join the force in larger numbers, and thus manifest their patriotism and loyalty.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 11th, 1917.

The Indian Defence Force.

In a long leader under the heading "The Indian Defence Force," the Kerala Sanchari, of the 11th July, exhorts all patriotic Indians and the Malayali youths in particular to join the force which is raised for their benefit and that of India, instead of depending entirely on England for the defence of their own country, points out that those who clamour for self-government should be ashamed of the fact that this Presidency could not supply just a thousand recruits required of it, but that Malabar can congratulate itself on having offered 156 persons, a number comparatively larger than that of any other district though, considering its population, it is still small enough, and observes that though Indians are not given the same privileges that are accorded to Europeans and Anglo-Indians, they may rest assured that the Government will grant them in course of time, that their present apathy and doubts will not be conducive to the welfare of India, and that it is not proper on their part to be content merely with desiring and talking of self-government.

The same paper thinks that the order of the Government, prohibiting the cutting into pieces of gold coins or the melting thereof, which, however, should have been passed long ago, is certainly a necessary one, dwells upon the evils resulting from the mania for ornaments, which is a common defect of the people of South India, and observes that as the people in the interior parts of the country are generally illiterate, the village officers should be instructed to make known to them its substance by beat of drums, so that the order, issued under the Defence of India Act, may not prove to be a source of hardship to them.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

The order of the Punjab Government.

68. Referring to the order of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, prohibiting the Punjab papers from publishing the proceedings of a meeting held at Lahore to protest against the internments, the Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, says:—This order of Sir Michael O'Dwyer, whose wisdom is already known to our readers, is in keeping with his previous orders regarding Mr. Tilak and Mr. Pal. It is regrettable that the Defence of India Act which is a war measure has been enforced against political agitators. . . If anybody spoke disloyally in the meeting, it would be proper to convict him under the provisions of the Indian Penal Code, but to restrain the freedom of the press under the Defence of India Act will only conduce to promote unrest among the people. Local governments are vying with one another in adopting repressive measures. It is strange that the local governments do not see that the only way of tiding over the difficulty is to satisfy public opinion and adopt peaceful methods. We think that the British Government should interfere and restore peace, or, legitimate political life may take a retrograde step.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

The war gift from India.

69. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, contains a Telugu version of the letter of Lala Lajpat Rai regar ding the war-gift from India, published in the Hindu of the 30th June 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The late Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

70. The Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd July, in its leader under this heading, writes thus:—The Indian sun has set. The holy India is covered with darkness. A bad plight has overtaken constitutional agitation. Leaders have been punished with internments. The freedom of speech and of the press is waning day by day. Under such a sad plight, the people are at a loss to know which way to go. Leaders have not come forward to show the way. Leaders have not been born who will free us from fear. . . He (Dadabhai Naoroji) has, in his 'Poverty and un-British Rule in India,' established that the poverty of India is due to enormous yearly drain of India's wealth during the last 150 years. He understood long ago that financial independence is the foundation for self-government, and declared 'so long as the expenditure of the revenue is in the hands of the rulers, the Government is, without doubt, a despotic government.'

The late Dr. Naoroji.

The Swadeshabhimani, of the 6th July, in a lengthy article gives a eulogistic sketch of the career of the late Dr. Naoroji, dwelling particularly on the political side of his activities and observes:—He studied the causes of the growing poverty in India. Nobody can gainsay his clear-cut arguments on this subject. His one principle was that even an alien rule in India should be on democratic lines and that to entrust the internal administration of the country to the hands of the Indians was equally in the interests of India and the empire. Further, being a firm believer in the British love of justice, he was ever a champion of constitutional methods in agitation. He entered Parliament and aroused interest and sympathy among the British public in regard to India. He urged on the attention of the British statesmen the desirability of appointing commissions and committees to enquire into and remedy the shortcomings of the administration of this country. The committees were appointed and the defects and shortcomings were brought to light; but, in practice, they were never remedied as desired by Mr. Naoroji. The enormous esteem in which he was held by the people is indicated by the fact that he was thrice President of the Congress. The first time he praised the liberty and love of justice of the British public. The second time, at the Lahore session, it was seen that his confidence in this respect had somewhat decreased. The third time at Calcutta he said: "It would be needless to enumerate the disappointments I have met with. If any one else were to face the same, his heart would have broken and he would have quite forgotten himself." At the Calcutta Congress he whispered the watchword of self-government within the empire into the ears of the Indians and said that all his attempts to please the bureaucracy had failed. The Government was equally cognisant of his great services to the people, and the Government University honoured him with the degree of LL.D. However earnestly we may have hoped that he would live to see some considerable measure of self-government which he preached come to India, the hand of time being too powerful, he had to depart this world before it came. But the work he began is still before us. Let all of us who are compatriots try to carry it to a successful end and wish him peace.

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, July 6th, 1917.

The Mysore Star, of the 8th July, and the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 11th July, also contain lengthy leaders similarly dwelling on Mr. Naoroji's political work.

Mysore Star, Mysore, July 8th, 1917; Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 11th, 1917.

The death of Dr. Dadabai Naoroji.

All the Malayalam papers publish long articles expressing regret at the irreparable loss India has sustained in the death of Dr. Dadabai Naoroji, dwelling upon his valuable services to the country.

Malayalam Papers.

The Andhra Social Conference.

71. The Desamata, of the 27th June, reports the Chairman of the Reception Committee of the Andhra Social Conference to have stated that the education imparted in the municipal and Government schools is not only unsatisfactory and useless, but is also sometimes harmful to some extent.

Desamata, Rajahmundry, June 27th, 1917.

Sparrow clubs.

72. Referring to the fact that students have been asked in England to destroy sparrows causing harm to crops, the Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, says:—It is not strange that this commission to students who have to develop their normal sense, appears to the Indians who follow the principle of harmlessness, to be improper. . . Indian vegetarians are roused to indignation even towards those who kill cows, sheep, fowl and antelopes for food.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 26th, 1917.

The heavenly cow.

73. The Hitakarini, of the 24th June, depicts the picture of the Kamadhenu or the heavenly cow, in which she is represented as useful to the Muhammadan, the European, the Parsi and the Hindu alike inasmuch as her milk is distributed to all without distinction. At the same time a demon is represented to insist upon having her flesh alone and killing her for it. Then all those that have been using her milk, says the paper, have joined together, wrenched the sword from the hand of the demon and killed him with it. The paper then draws the moral that the wicked deserve to be punished and union and faith save everything.

Hitakarini, Ellore, June 24th, 1917.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 1st, 1917.

Exhortation to uplift the country.

74. The Desabhimani, of the 1st July, contains some verses read in the Andhra Conference which are to the following effect:—O, sons of the Andhra country, try to uplift the country and bring about the awakening of its soul force, considering the disabilities of the Indians in the Fiji islands, the troubles of the leaders who hide their faces in corners, the humiliation of papers suffering under a hard Act, and the highhandedness of officers who repress speech. Let Lord Pentland threaten to pass repressive orders; let the college authorities order that students should not go to political meetings; let Government servants say that self-government should not be spoken about; let the Anglo-Indians proclaim that it is a sin to grant freedom. O, Andhras, do all that is necessary with devotion to the country and with confidence. . . Tell the English people that the chief reason why life and money is sacrificed in this terrible war, why the discussion of all controvertial questions is avoided, why India is filled with peace, which has disappointed the Germans, and why the people gave up extreme views and adopted moderate ones, is the confidence that the English who are famous for their sense of justice will grant liberty to India. Proclaim to the English that if they do not grant freedom to the Indians and make them happy, the whole world will laugh at them saying that their motive in fighting against Germany is selfishness.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

The Allahabad leaders and Home Rule League.

75. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, publishes a Telugu version of the letter of Mr. Motilal Nehru addressed to the Leader regarding the causes that led the Allababad leaders to join the Home Rule League.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

The Madras Provincial Congress Committee.

76. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, contains a Telugu version of the resolution passed by the Madras Provincial Congress Committee, agreeing with the Bombay Provincial Committee in its opinion about interments and stating that unless the Government declare their political policy and begin reforms, the people will not be satisfied.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Mr. Bhupendranath Basu.

77. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, refers to the appointment of Mr. Bhupendranath Basu as a Member of the India Council, and remarks:—The Indian Members in the Council have no greater authority than to make suggestions. There is therefore no good whatever may be the number of Indian Members. Indians will no longer be satisfied with such small privileges. But Mr. Basu is a Congress leader and is one of the nineteen members of the supreme Legislative Council who approved of certain post-war reforms. He may therefore help towards the grant of self-government after the war. A telegram announces that he accepted his present appointment with this end in view. That he has accepted the present office, at some loss to himself shows his devotion to the country. We hope that Mr. Chamberlain will take his advice and introduce self-government into India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

A meeting of the Congress.

78. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, says:—It will be well to call for a meeting of the Congress before Mr. Basu leaves for England, to enable him to place in person the opinion of the Indian public regarding self-government before the India Council. A resolution of all the Indians in the Congress will be a source of encouragement to all, and will attract the attention of the rulers. The meeting should decide as to how the agitation for self-government should be conducted in the present situation. A meeting of this kind will show the earnestness of the people and their devotion to duty.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Lord Willingdon and Lord Pentland.

79. Referring to the extension of the term of office of Lord Willingdon and Lord Pentland, the Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, remarks:—These two Governors are noted for adopting repressive measures. Their rule has not met with the approval of the people. The extension of their term of office will disappoint the public. The term of office of Lord Hardinge and Lord

Carmichael who were loved by the people, were not extended. Perhaps the term of office of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab also may be extended. Is this extension due to the difficulties of voyage or to the efficiency of the administration?

80. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, publishes a Telugu version of the letter of Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar on the present situation published in the Hindu of the 2nd July 1917. — The present situation. — ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

81. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, publishes a Telugu version of the letter of Miss Arundale published in New India of 2nd instant on page 5 about "The Three Interned." — Miss Arundale's letter. — ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 7th July, also gives a Telugu version of the same letter. — KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 7th, 1917.

82. Referring to the letter published by the zamindars as regards their attitude towards the Home Rule Movement the Kistnapatrika of the 7th July, observes: . . . — Zamindars. — KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 7th, 1917.

The relation between the zamindars and the authorities is very peculiar. As they (zamindars) do not go against the dictates of their priests in matters religious, they behave in such a way that they may not lose the favour of the rulers in matters political. It thus becomes impossible for them to lead any reform movement. . . In political meetings the cause of the people is generally upheld rather than that of the zamindars. This therefore is partly the reason for their viewing such meetings with indifference. . . Ordinarily in every zamindari there is undoubtedly a sort of disagreement prevailing between the zamindar and the people. There may be several causes for this. One of them is, we cannot but accept, the disparity existing between the landlord and the tenant (ryot). The ryots think that it is the ryot that labours, while it is the zamindar that enjoys the fruits and the zamindar believes that he has a right for a share in the crops, raised by the ryot. Under such circumstances the zamindar cannot look at things from the point of view of the ryot.

The main aim of the political movement is to develop popular forces. Even accepting that the zamindars form a section of the people, the awakening of the people is not relished by them. They believe that there is a special connection between themselves and the Government and that the interests of the ryot are different from his own. . . The Government treats the people in the zamindari villages like step-children, while the zamindar thinks that it is not his duty to safeguard the interests of the people. The zamindars are not the ruling princes on one side nor are they a section of the people on the other. . . Therefore the relation that subsists between the zamindars and the people is only one of a monetary nature and not one of a friendly character which grows between those who are interested in mutual well-being.

Under such circumstances it is not surprising that the zamindars look at popular awakening with greater jealousy than the really independent ruling chiefs; nor is it strange that in matters of dispute arising between the rulers and the people the zamindars should side with the rulers The condition of things now agitating the country is one of this nature. This is why the zamindars sided the rulers instead of taking up the causes of the people. . . It is feared that the zamindars may in future gain more and more importance in the present political administration. They and the bureaucracy may combine in a way. There are signs of such a thing happening. It may be asked why a House of Lords of the kind in England may not be formed in this country. But in the modern political evolution as well as in the new social order of things there are indications that any special importance that may be attached to such traditional families will be reduced. The House of Lords in England will be reformed. It may be said with certainty that the reform may soon cause the very dissolution of the House itself. There is no doubt that even democracy has its own difficulties and dangers. But yet it is through democracy that humanity is today working out its development.

In the letter now published by the zamindars they have cleverly stated that they are not opposed to self-government or constitutional agitation but that they only disapprove of the methods of the Home Rulers. The meaning of these sentences is not at all clear. It is not safe for any that they should try to blame their fellow countrymen in vague and ambiguous language without definitely stating what the methods of Home Rulers are and why they do not approve of them. . . Nothing can be more unjust than to blame the Home Rulers and side with the Government in their repressive measures without showing any reasons for doing so. The Home-Rulers did not ask for complete autonomy. What evil is there in focussing the opinions of the people and in making the weight of their opinion known to the Government so that the reforms desired by the 19 Legislative Council Members and approved by the Congress and supported by the Moslem league may be secured after the war. . . Whether the zamindars without yielding to external pressure withdraw their words or not and whether the policy of repression of Government is further strengthened or not by the support of the zamindars, we trust that so long as the people believe that the methods of the Home Rulers are proper and legal, and are conducive to the prosperity of the world the Home Rule agitation will thrive and bring credit to the country, to the Empire and to humanity.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 7th, 1917.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 7th July, republishes the letter written by two Reddies of Nellore to the Andhraprakasika, condemning the attitude of the paper towards the internments. The letter is already reported upon supra.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

The zamindars.

In commenting on the communication of the zamindars regarding Home Rule, the Andhraprakasika, of the 2nd July, says:—It is a great thing that at the present juncture the zamindars came forward fearlessly and expressed their opinion. They do not say that they do not want swaraj. What they say is that it is well that India gets it not at once but after some time. We hope most of the people will agree with them.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Zamindars.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd July, contains a criticism of the leader in the Andhrapatrika on the communication of the zamindars relating to Home Rule, abstracted supra.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Zamindars.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 4th July, refers to the communication of the zamindars on Home Rule and remarks:—Up to now sixty-five Zamindars are against the Home Rule propaganda. It is not possible to disregard the opinion of the Zamindars. They are very influential in the country. There are very many men who act according to the words of Zamindars. The advocates of immediate swaraj and the rulers will do well to note this.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 7th, 1917.

Zamindars and Home Rule movement.

83. The Kistnapatrika, of the 7th July, publishes a Telugu version of the letter written by the zamindars as regards the Home Rule Movement.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

The Besant fund.

84. Writing under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, says:—Renunciation should precede self-government. The people should show by action that they possess the firmness required to attain self-government. Internments are on the increase in the country. Obstacles to constitutional agitation are multiplying. Only when they are overcome, will the fitness for self-government become manifest. . . We have been subjected to a severe test, which, if we stand, will show our fitness for self-government. It will then not be possible for anybody to obstruct the grant of swaraj. Internments which are so many tests, teach a lesson to us, and, if we do not profit by that lesson, we will be losing this opportunity. We have many internal enemies also, whom we have to pacify. We have to bring home to the freedom-loving British people, the justice of our ideals. The duty lies with the advocates of self-government to persuade their countrymen who have been under a delusion, and the British who have not understood the goal of the Indians. The internments have considerably lightened our task. Indian and Muhammadan leaders who were indifferent towards the Home Rule movement have joined the movement. Those who have not hitherto concerned themselves with politics have joined the movement and are working for its progress. Some antagonists are trying to impede its progress. But their endeavours will prove useless ere long-

They approve of the goal but fear that it may soon fructify. This is ridiculous. But the strong current of the movement will carry them with it. . . We must make the civilised countries know of the affairs of India. . . The people must become experts in agitation. Its results hang on the favour of others. If, in addition to these, we manifest our fitness for self-government by acts accomplished by self-help, the grant of self-government will not be delayed. . . Whatever may be the motive of the Government in interning persons, the people must work with the belief that the internments will help on the advancement of the country. The unselfish words of Mrs. Besant which Miss Arundale communicated to the public through the press must encourage the people to action. Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon who created these circumstances no doubt deserve praise. Their term of office having been extended, the national spirit in the people will certainly gain in strength. . . In last night's meeting, the speakers in one voice appealed for help to the Besant fund. Mr. Nunjunda Rao said that some liberal-hearted Englishmen are not aware that India does not enjoy self-government responsible to the people, and that the same ignorance prevail in the Colonies. The English people in England should be awakened. . . The Besant fund is not for the benefit of Mrs. Besant. It will help on the advancement of the country. The people must show the same enthusiasm in this matter as in that of the war loan. It is disgraceful that in this meeting, the swadeshi vow was not taken. The time of empty talk is gone. It is regrettable that many of the leaders that attended yesterday's meeting were wearing foreign clothes. We hope that under the lead of Sir S Subrahmanya Ayyar, the Indians will give up their lethargy and bestir themselves to action.

Bifurcation of the Kistna district.

85. Writing under this heading, a correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 2nd July, says that Nidadavole which it is proposed to constitute as the headquarters of the proposed new district, does not command the same conveniences as Ellore viewed from the point of sanitation, commerce, and availability of accommodation, Ellore is a much better place than Nidadavole. The paper then raises its voice against the proposal to transfer the headquarters of the Kistna district from Masulipatam to Bezwada, and says that Masulipatam must have been constituted the headquarters from its historical importance or from the conveniences it commands. There is no rule that the headquarters should be in the middle of the district. The paper hopes that the Government will make Masulipatam the headquarters of the new Kistna district and Ellore, the headquarters of the second district.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 2nd, 1917.

Another correspondent to the same paper and a correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 4th July, dwell upon the many advantages which Nidadavole has over Ellore and support the proposal to constitute that place as the headquarters of the new district.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 2nd & 4th, 1917.

Industries.

86. The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd July, says in its leader:—The people as well as the Government are to blame for the lack of technical knowledge in the people. Neither the Government, nor the people could provide the very few Indians that return after acquiring technical knowledge in foreign countries, with occupation. Europeans do not like to engage their services in their factories. The factories started by the Indians can be counted on one's fingers. The owners of these factories also indent for engineers from foreign countries and do not entertain Indians. . . When there are no technical schools, the people will not start new industries. If the rich take the same interest in the question of industries as in that of swaraj, India will soon make progress. . . A very large amount of money goes to foreign countries to buy matches with, for use in India. The people and the Government, who should regard the welfare of the people as their own, should, in union, start match factories in this Presidency. If they do so, the economical condition of the country will certainly improve.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

Assistant Surgeons.

87. Referring to an order of the Government requiring the services of Assistant Surgeons for military duty, the Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd July, fears that if they also should go, many hospitals will have to be closed for want of doctors. The paper regrets that the present opportunity is not availed of to open a few more medical schools and turning out a few more Sub-Assistant Surgeons. It prays that the Government will think deeply and leave the Sub-Assistant Surgeons at least for the people.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

88. The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd July, says: —The advocates of immediate swaraj wax wroth at the very mention of the names of Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon. Some of them could not hold their anger and ask the Government in England to call back Lord Pentland. Man proposes and God disposes. The terms of office of these two rulers have been extended. This may be an eyesore to the advocates of Home Rule, but we trust that the greater portion of the people in this Presidency will be glad to hear the news of the extension of Lord Pentland's term.

Lord Pentland.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 4th, 1917.

The Desamata, of the 4th July, writes:—People are eagerly awaiting the advent of a new Governor. This eagerness is not only due to the ending of the term of Lord Pentland. Lord Pentland occupies the first rank among those who have been hostile to Home Rule agitation, and have adopted repressive measures. He has created discontent not only in the Madras Presidency, but also all over India by subjecting to internment Mrs. Besant, Mr. Wadia, and Mr. Arundale. . . We believe that the suspicion, that the terms of office of Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon have been extended in consideration of their repressive policy, has no foundation in truth, but that the difficulties of transit constitute the only reason for the extension. . . We wish that those who hold the office whether those that already exist or those that newly come, should take far-reaching views of things, and without haste, so manage the affairs of State as to conduce to the well-being of both England and India and to their own good reputation.

Lord Pentland.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, reports that the following resolution was passed in a meeting of the Pedda Cherukuru Home Rule League on the 15th (of June): The speech delivered by Lord Pentland recently at Ootacamund before the Legislative Council Members is prejudicial to the ideals of self-government and to the self-respect, patriotism and loyalty of the Indians. This meeting, therefore expresses its disapproval thereof by this (resolution).

Lord Pentlands's speech.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

89. The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd July, refers to the fact that Mr. Surendranath Banerji, who has been working for the Congress for long, has not joined the Home Rule League, remarks:—The advocates of immediate swaraj say that there is no difference at all between the policy pursued by the Congress and that pursued by the Home Rulers. If that is so, why does Mr. Banerji hesitate?

Mr. Surendranath Banerji.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

90. In commenting on the order of the Government prohibiting the melting of gold coins, the Andhrapatrika, of the 5th July, says:—Gold is now being sent to India. It is on the way. The Government might have published the order in question in order that this consignment of gold may be used in the right way. The Government may use this quantity of gold to increase the number of coins. . . The Government should see that any authority that may be vested in the police in this matter is not used by them to the annoyance of the people. . . There can be no harm in using some gold for ornaments. It is not well to try to break time-honoured and ancient customs at once.

Gold.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

91. The Andhraprakasika, of the 4th July, contains the following from the pen of a coolie who returned from Penang:—It is not possible to describe in a paper the troubles to which we are subjected by Europeans in Penang. They were sending the men to rubber plantations, 8 or 9 miles from the town, and appointing female coolies at places near the town. We were under the impression that they did not send the women to distant places, because they were women. After some days, a European appointing coolies outraged the honour of a woman by force. Many such things take place in Penang. Nobody is there to save us from these outrages. We feigned sickness and were able to leave Penang and reach our native place. The paper urges that if the above is true, the Government should enquire into it.

Indian coolies in Penang.

92. The Andhraprakasika, of the 5th July, recommends that the present system of conferring titles may be replaced by the ancient system of honouring persons by presenting them with weapons such as sword and armour.

Honours.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

93. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 5th July, says that double assessment has been levied from certain ryots of Chadalavada, Tenali taluk, on the ground that they made a breach in a channel and got their lands irrigated. The opening is caused by the cattle treading the place. The local officers turned a deaf ear to the petitions of the ryots. The karnam is telling the ryots that five times the assessment will be imposed if water is taken by means of the opening. The correspondent prays that the Government will enquire into the matter and do justice to the ryots.

Double assessment.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

94. The Desamata, of the 4th July, states that many influential persons and leaders of the people are joining the Home Rule leagues, ever since the adoption by the Government of repressive measures, and gives a list of such persons.

Home Rule Leagues.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 4th, 1917.

95. The Desamata, of the 4th July, publishes a Telugu version of the message of Mr. Ritche, which contains:—England helping to regenerate India, is only paying back her debt to India. . . Your liberty depends upon your own efforts. . . Every race on the face of the earth is fit to govern itself. It is absurd to say that India is incapable of self-government. They, that say so, only defame that ancient race, which not only governed itself for thousands of years, but also gave shape to the civilisation of many races. . . I exhort the leaders of the Home Rule propaganda not to give up their fight till they reach their goal. . . Victory will be yours ultimately.

The message of Mr. Ritche.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 4th, 1917.

96. Tha Hitakarini, of the 8th July, writes under this heading:—Some Europeans and Americans are proud of their white skin. They take it to be a badge of superior intellect, strength and valour. Their rule, the result of times, they attribute to their skin. To prove the hollowness of this theory, another white race has been discovered in the forests of South America, remote from the habitations of civilised people.

The white race.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 8th, 1917.

97. In its leader on Dadabhai Naoroji the Hitakarini, of the 8th July, writes:—The seeds of swaraj that he had, from the beginning, sowed, could not strike root in the hearts of the Indians and sprout. In his presidential speech, at the Calcutta Congress of 1906, he gave a commentary on the principle of swaraj. The new spirit that had so far been lying dormant, burst out at once, as if in a deluge.

Self-government.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 8th, 1917.

98. The Hitakarini, of the 8th July, writes that it is a matter for regret that the Government of the United Provinces have not taken into their consideration the question of providing against any disturbances that may arise in the coming Dasra and Mohurram festivals.

Coming Dasra and Mohurram festivals.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 8th, 1917.

99. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, gives a Telugu version of an article on this subject from the Times of India, which contains the following:— . . As the system of the Indian administration develops, the power of the Parliament in England will decrease. The Parliament cannot give greater power to the bureaucracy in its administration of India. And unless the Parliament is assured that there are political bodies formed by representatives elected by the people themselves ready (to take up the administration) the Parliament will not hand over the Government of the country to them (Indians). In examining the Indian political condition we must well understand the electorates. At present election is not directly carried on in this country. All know that members are not directly elected to the Political institutions—India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

district boards and the local and imperial (legislative bodies). . . . The Parliament must make the idea clear that India should enjoy self-government within the empire. May the Parliament give publication to this idea, and consult the Indians on the question of India realising its aspirations and show them the way by which the country may prosper.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Resignation of the members of the Bengal Legislative Council.

100. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, publishes a note that the Leader reports in the words of the Bengali that Hon'ble Mr. A. Rassule and Hon'ble Mr. Mowlvi Fazul Haque have resigned their seats in the Bengal Legislative Council to express their disapproval of the internment of Mrs. Annie Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

The Punjab Government and the Lahore meeting.

101. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, writing on this subject observes: . . . The Punjab Government is the first to prohibit the publication of the proceedings of a meeting once allowed to be held. The application of the Defence of India Act for such purposes cannot but be surprising.

From to-day's telegrams we learn that the said order has been cancelled We are glad that the Punjab Government has reconsidered the question and adopted the right method. In all civilized countries both the rulers and the ruled show equal zeal to protect the freedom of press. . . The Press Act has made the freedom of Press in India nominal. If any freedom is still left, the application of the Defence of India Act has made the management of newspapers intolerable . . . We pray that other Local Governments may also reconsider the justice of the orders they have issued under the Defence of India Act and adopt peaceful methods.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Prohibition of a protest meeting in Delhi.

102. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, referring to the order issued by the Commissioner of Police in Delhi prohibiting the holding of a public meeting for protesting against the orders issued for the internment of Mrs. Besant, etc., observes: "To what a pass has the application of the Defence of India Act come?"

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Protest meeting at Berhampur.

103. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, reporting the proceedings of a public meeting held at Berhampur protesting against the internments states that the following resolution was adopted:—A reply to the action of the Government is to work out swaraj movement with still greater persistence

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Non-Brahman protest meeting at Perambur.

104. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, reports that a meeting of non-Brahmans was held at Perambur protesting against the internments of Mr. Besant, etc.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Present agitation.

105. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, writes:—. . . We thought that owing to the loyalty . . . evidenced by our heroic deeds in other continents the suspicion and racial prejudice which some authorities and the proud European merchants entertained against us would disappear. . . We believed in every word contained in the proclamation of Queen-Victoria; and our trust that the English people who are devoted to truth will at some one time put it into force has not yet left us. Though the ostentatious and jealous Lord Curzon misinterpreted the words of that great and pious Queen, and tried to treat the charter in her own hand as a diplomatic writing, and though the members of the Public Works Commission unhesitatingly treated it with disregard . . . and dared to treat her with disrespect, the faith of the Indians in her words is not shaken at all. . . We can never dare to treat her proclamation as a false document . . . such defects there are many and though we are trying to remove them by constitutional means it is regrettable that the Government should suspect us and try to oppose us by the application of drastic measures. . . Under such circumstances it is regrettable that a law which has to be applied to traitors should be applied to people of world-wide reputation. . . Governors of presidencies do not respect the suggestions of their Legislative Council members who are the representatives of the people. Much less do the District Collectors send for men who are acquainted with the experiences of people and wish to learn the affairs of their districts. As Sir William Wedderburn has written in the "Life of Hume," they rely on the spies appointed by them, who are selfish, hypocritical, and wanting in honour. It is not surprising that such persons should cause agitation in the minds of the authorities by false reports, regarding their own gain and safety as important. . . If our rulers trust such honourable gentlemen as Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar, Mr. Madhava Rao . . . and not allow the wealthy persons and the title-holders, whose business is always to deceive them, to approach them, the present agitation amongst the people will die out and the country will enjoy peace soon. The unnecessary fear now growing in the minds of the people will vanish, and there would be no reason for the Indians who entertain great hope to be disappointed after the war. If the rulers and the ruled stand together with one intent and one purpose, they will be strong enough to defy the whole world.

Extension of His Excellency Lord Pentland's term of office.

106. Referring to the news regarding the extension of His Excellency Lord Pentland's and Lord Willingdon's terms of office, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 6th July, says:—A doubt might arise in the minds of some as to what is meant by the term "restrictions in force at the present time" in view of which the extensions have been granted. But Reuter removes this doubt by explaining that the restrictions are in connection with travel. It is certainly not advisable that persons of the exalted position of Governor should venture upon overseas journeys in these days. No one would grumble even if these Governors should extend their regime by another ten years. So long as the administration is not responsible to popular representatives and the people have not the right to choose their officers, they would naturally ask for extension of the services of only practically sympathetic administrators of the type of Lords Hardinge and Carmichael. If perchance with the grant of larger rights and privileges, we should have the good fortune of seeing that these representatives of the Crown are also the chosen representatives of the people, there would surely be no objection to their continuing for any length of time.

Swadesabhimani, Mangalore, July 6th, 1917.

Extension of Lord Pentland's tenure of office.

The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 6th July, writes:—It has been announced that Mr. Chamberlain, Secretary of State for India, has, with His Majesty's approval, extended the tenure of office of our kind and popular Governor, Lord Pentland, and His Excellency has consented to remain on.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

There is, no doubt, that Lord Pentland, during his tenure of office, especially at the present time, has adopted a sound policy in restricting the clamour of seditionists and their supporters, and keeping these noisy agitators within bounds.

The editor, referring to the baseless attacks made by some speakers and writers on the present administration, and their making it the object of their taunts, abuse, and unfair criticism, while endeavouring to assure weak-minded and ignorant persons, that the remedy for all ills is the upsetting of the existing Government, observes that such procedure is not only dangerous to peace and tranquility, and obstructive to the internal progress of the country but interferes with the prosecution of the war.

Lord Pentland's speech is perfectly right; for His Excellency has found, after nearly five years' experience, that no other form of Government, than the present one will suit India, and that there is no reason for reforming it. Mussalmans are well aware of the consequences that will accrue from Home Rule.

The future administration of Lord Pentland will prove to be a golden rule for us; for, the present critical time requires a ruler who is gifted with foresight and is well acquainted with the country and the people. As Lord Pentland is fully aware of the state of this Presidency and appreciates the feelings and aspirations of every community, it will be a matter of great satisfaction to the people and the country to learn that his period of office has been prolonged.

We congratulate Lord Pentland on his extension.

The present situation in India.

107. Referring to the present situation in India, the Manorama, of the 6th July, points out that, while the efforts of Indians should be so regulated as not to injuriously affect the attainment of self-government which is their goal, it is absolutely necessary that the tone of the writings and speeches on the subject should be soft and moderate, as otherwise they are likely to be misunderstood, and as they may, as at present, lead to repressive measures, and hopes that the proposal to hold an extraordinary meeting of the All-India Congress Committee, will result in putting a stop to the present unrest.

Manorama, Calicut, July 6th, 1917.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 7th, 1917.

India in Parliament.

108. Referring to the Secretary of State's answers to the questions in Parliament on Indian affairs, the Kerala Patrika, of the 7th July, points out that, inasmuch as these replies show that the Government of India have not resorted to those repressive measures of their own accord, India's representatives should carry on the agitation in England, but that, if the Indians create disturbances here by talking of Home Rule and other matters, and thus bring down upon themselves the hatred of the Government, this attempt will be of no avail, and observes that Indians must have now learnt from experience that to create unrest by talking of Home Rule, swadesism, etc., during this colossal war cannot be pleasing to those who are responsible for the peace of the country. The paper adds that it has reason to believe that its view is disliked in certain quarters, but that it is its decided opinion that the people should pay due regard to the present circumstances (created by the war).

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 7th, 1917.

Havoc wrought by wild beasts.

109. The Kerala Patrika, of the 7th July, draws attention to the letter of its correspondent from Trikidiri, which speaks of the great havoc wrought by wild beasts, and to the necessity of increasing the number of licenses for the possession of guns, and thinks that it is desirable that the Revenue officers should be called upon to make enquiries and report as to where the trouble from wild beasts has increased.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 7th, 1917.

The Punjab Government and the Madras internment.

110. Referring to the order of the Punjab Government, prohibiting the publication of the proceedings of meetings, protesting against the Madras internments, the Kerala Patrika, of the 7th July, points out that these orders, being issued under the Defence of India Act, cannot be taken exception to, and that it would therefore be advisable to put off the holding of large meetings for some time.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 10th, 1917.

Lord Hardinge's defence in Parliament

111. In commenting upon Lord Hardinge's defence of himself, necessitated by the publication of the report of the Mesopotamia Commission, the Manorama, of the 10th July, agrees with His Lordship in thinking that the commission's observations, that India's help in the matter of the war loan was quite inadequate, and that even the little which she gave was solely due to pressure from England, will make the Indians think that their sacrifices were not properly appreciated, thinks that a perusal of His Lordship's explanation will remove the bad impression, if any against himself, which the report may have produced, and that His Lordship's peroration cannot fail to gladden the hearts of the Indians, and observes that whatever may be the nature of the report and the decision of Parliament thereon, His Lordship's explanation will be affectionately accepted in toto by the whole of India.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 10th, 1917.

Appointment of persons with Indian degrees to places hitherto reserved for Indian Medical Service officers.

112. Referring to the acceptance by Government of the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanujachariar relating to the appointment of graduates with Indian degrees in medicine to places hitherto reserved for Indian Medical Service officers, the Manorama, of the 10th July, points out that the Governments of the Punjab and the United Provinces have already made such appointments, and that they have produced satisfactory results, and observes that it is a matter for gratification that the Madras Government have, now at least, waken up to the necessity of doing so.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, June 28th, 1917.

The present condition and Mussalmans.

113. The Qaumi Report, of the 28th June writes:—On the one hand flatterers are singing songs of peace and tranquility and on the other the agitation of the present state of affairs is blazing forth. Up to the present time there has been silence in Muslim, Madras, but instead of the wagging tongue there is the unrest of hearts and of minds. We certainly do not wish to deceive the Government. Certain people may, if they choose, regard falsehood as expedient but they are either blind or are intentionally so for their mess of pottage. We have no desire to interfere with the enjoyment of their lives.

We have already written that the present agitation is making the Mussalmans also restless. The Hon'ble Muhammad Ali Jinnah has put his name in the list of of the believers in Home Rule. The Hon'ble Mr. Rasul and the Hon'ble Mr. Moulavi Fazl-ul-Huq (Bengal) are enrolling themselves in this army; and now comes the news of the mass meeting of the Rifah-i-Am Club, Lucknow, in which the Hon'ble Samī-ullah Beg, Dr. Naziruddin Hasan, Mr. Azhar Ali and others have taken a prominent part. The most interesting feature of it all being that the Hon'ble Rajah Sahib of Mahmudabad intervened in a special speech in support of Home Rule.

An Associated Press telegram announces that Rajah Sir Ali Muhammad Khan Bahadur, Chief of Mahmudabad, in moving a resolution on the subject of Home Rule said :—"When the Defence of India Act was passed at the Imperial Legislative Council, no member thought that it would be improperly used. My compatriots desire that equal rights may be granted to them as is done in the case of other territories of the Empire. Call it Home Rule or self-government or swaraj, we are all aiming at this one object. If the Government wishes to frustrate this endeavour or to throw obstacles in the way, I plainly declare it will be a blunder on its part. It will be necessary to intern not only the leaders in the country but all my countrymen, but, even so I will not desist from this procedure."

Can these aspirations be called peace and tranquility? Flatterers and foolish friends will get afraid, do nothing but try to be lavish in the use of butter. But justice will cry out; no! the present agitation is surely doing its work.

An ungenerous wag may, if he likes, call these people spectators, nay, even actors performing their parts, but men of discernment know that political meetings are not theatres. To dub Mussalmans as spectators is tantamount to calling them fools. If the Gokhale Hall was a theatre and the Mussalmans, who attended, were spectators, what is the explanation for the retired Deputy Collector Khan Bahadur Muhammad Safdar Husain Sahib, who published in the Hindu, etc., that the object of his going to the meeting was to publicly announce what the ideas of his co religionists are, but that on account of the great crowd, he was unable to get in.

To dismiss the importance and seriousness of the present situation as a joke and to cover up facts with the pall of ignorance, is not wise. This is the time to save and instruct the community. Can any fool say that the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah's action has produced no effect on any Mussalman? Can any one prove that the aspirations of the Hon'ble Rajah Sahib of Mahmudabad have not stirred the hearts of the community? The fact is the personality and influence of these people are very powerful. If they do not produce any effect to-day, they will tomorrow.

If we wish to destroy this power, then to stop one's ears and paint things in glowing colours, is not the way to go about it.

After all what is the use of doing so? The people know, the Government knows, and we know and all the world knows. Therefore where is the necessity for an application of butter? Can any reasonable person deny that the Bengal Muslim League passed a resolution the other day to the effect that all members of councils should resign in a body as a protest against the present procedure of the Government. Is this a jest or a farce? Have these sentiments been expressed by Mussalmans or by spectators? We unreservedly declare that by speeches and proposals such as these our ideal cannot be reached.

The effort that the Raja Sahib and others wish to make is superfluous. If Home Rule is our real desire, the Government is not opposed to it. Aspirations are essentially original in their essence, but sentiments also must be appreciated. Mussalmans are more desirous of acquiring the method of assuming responsibility than of obtaining Home Rule itself. We repeat that self-government and constitutional freedom are undoubtedly our national and religious goals, but this requires the forces that will revive our nationality, otherwise it will be a case of the well-known proverb—

"The dead are at the mercy of the living."

Can any one deny the truth of that statement?

Qaumi Report, Madras, June 30th, 1917.

The Qaumi Report, of the 30th June, in continuation of the above article on the same subject, writes:—Our compatriot New India writes thus in last Thursday's issue:—

The decision, which Mussalman patriots have made with reference to the policy of coercion, is marked by impartiality and ingenuousness and this is a characteristic of the political sentiments of our Mussalman brethren. The Bengal Muslim League, feeling the gravity of the present situation, has advised those of its members, who have not yet joined the Home Rule League, to do so immediately. It has suggested to certain elected members of the Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils to resign in a body. The statements made by the Raja Sahib of Mahmudabad at the Lucknow meeting are couched in dignified expressive and impartial language essential to the speech of a leader. He expressed his own opinion and that of his followers when he said:

> Although not only all leaders of the country but also all our compatriots may be interned, we will not give up the procedure adopted by us for gaining our object.

We have recently expressed the fear that by Mussalmans joining and supporting Home Rule, the movement is deriving advantage and that the community should immediately consider whether it can follow the leaders in their ideas and their utterances or whether it should adopt some other procedure! The community should save itself both from foolish friends and wise enemies. The fact is the political atmosphere is affecting our constitutions and many people are getting uneasy owing to this unrest in the country.

We appreciate the importance and influence of the Raja Sahib of Muhmudabad but in this case the opinion expressed by him is of his compatriots, but not of his co-religionists.

A real leader is one who adjusts the aspirations of his community and proclaims his own opinion in trumpet tones. Was the Hon'ble the Raja Sahib bold enough to express his indignation at the internment of any unfortunate Mussalman? Can he advance the plea before the community that Messrs. Muhammad Ali, Shankat Ali, Hasrat of Mohani and Abul Kalam did not deserve sympathy and fairplay?

If they did deserve it and they certainly did deserve it, what steps were taken by any leader of the Muslim League to render them lawful support? Is it not a fact that the silence of our leaders has dealt a death-blow to the aspirations of our community and dashed their hopes down to the depths of indifference and oblivion?

The Home Rule Movement is a distinct problem and has nothing to do with the internment of any person. Apparently the Government has not interned Mrs. Besant; because of her belief in Home Rule, but because it probably regarded her method of writing and speaking as deserving of punishment. Possibly there may be mistake; but it is mere sophistry to argue that we should nolens volens join the Home Rule League and induce our elected members to vacate their seats in Legislative Councils simply because two or three persons have been interned.

The proposal is absolutely pernicious, because at the re-elections people who are in no way able to represent the community may be returned. The Government will not hold itself responsible for this calamity and this saying will apply to us—

> "Whatever has come upon us is our own bringing on."

Resigning our appointments is not the way to get interned nationalists or compatriots released or to obtain the object in view. We think that instead of harrassing the Government, we should try to convince it.

Home Rule or self-government, Mussalmans, of course, recognise this much that the present mode of administration is capable of reform.

There will be marked changes in the political condition of the country after the war. The community wishes to prepare for them. One way is this. We must get from the Government higher honours not merely for the sake of drawing higher salaries, but in order that competent men of the community may learn the secret of government that the numbers of such men may be multiplied in the community. Such an endeavour will train us for Home Rule or self-government. We do not think there are more than ten or twenty Deputy Collectors and Tahsildars. In a large High Court, such as Madras, there are only one Judge and a couple of vakils. If Home Rule were to be granted tomorrow, we do not know whether our peons, shopkeepers or coachmen would do duty as Collector, Doctor or Governor, or whether they would farm out their shares to our compatriots or hand them over for the sake of peace. It is a matter of regret that, while the community is alive to these dangers, some of our leaders are not.

Qaumi Rapour, Madras, July 3rd, 1917.

The present condition and Muhammadans.

The Qaumi Report, of the 3rd July, in continuation of the article in its previous issue on the same subject writes:—From what we have written in our previous issue under the heading, "the present condition" viz., "that the Government should now promptly feel its responsibility", it appears we have not been singular in expressing such sentiments. Although some foolish persons have opposed and taunted us but the sensible people and men of foresight have expressed exactly the same opinion as we did. Amongst them is the Times of India. The logical reason, why the question of self-government perplexes the minds of a few persons, is that they want the Government to make a definite promise regarding Home Rule, as the Parliament has not yet decided the future fate of India. We do not raise the question of the immediate or gradual grant of self-government, but simply request them to announce that self-government will be gradually given to India.

The real cause of dejection and indifference among Muhammadans, is that they are absolutely unaware as to whether self-government will be granted to them or not. What they are concerned about is, whether self-government is granted immediately or gradually, that they will not be entitled to derive any decided advantage from it; for, the Hindu community will object on the grounds that, inasmuch as, they (the Muhammadans) took no part in sowing the seeds, they should, therefore, be excluded from participating in the enjoyment of the fruits. We do not know whether the self-government, to be granted to India, will be provisional and limited like that of Ireland, or whether the sphere of its operation will be broad and extensive.

If the Government will be pleased to declare its aim, then this doubt can easily be removed and we shall be able to adjust our needs to our condition. In the present backward and unsatisfactory state of Muhammadan education, we cannot blame those members of the community whose minds are disturbed by the present agitation.

The progress of the world, the predominating influence of constitutional principles and revolution assure us that in the future educational and constructive plans for the generality of humanity, India cannot be set aside, for, it too is a populous and flourishing part of the world, and its Empire is the primary defender of the fundamental principles of national equality and liberty.

Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, Madras, July 4th, 1917.

Improper agitation.

114. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 4th July, writes:—We observe that attempts are being made to forcibly draw the Muhammadans into the ranks of the believers in Home Rule and a few Muhammadans, who are responsible for their own statements and actions, give out that they are giving expression to the sentiments and aspirations of Muhammadans. Muhammadans' political deputation terminated when the All-India Muslim League was merged into the Congress and we can now assert, without fear of contradiction, that the Muhammadan followers of the Congress are simply expressing the opinion of that body.

We are not opposed to reforms. We consider that India is certainly entitled to reform, but it is quite wrong to create improper agitation and adopt impracticable measures. The position is this:—The Government of India has submitted to the Secretary of State a scheme of reforms which is still under his Lordship's consideration. In addition to this the memorandum of the nineteen members of the Legislative Council has also been submitted and it is not known whether the reform scheme, submitted by the Government of India, contains, more or less, the same proposals as those contained in the memorandum of the nineteen members, or whether any additions have been made It is foolish to make further demands without first ascertaining what has happened to those already submitted.

Those who are pressing for reforms should wait a short time and act with patience and forbearance so that they may know what the proposed reforms of the Government are, and what decision the Secretary of State has arrived at in regard to them. They can submit any further reforms after ascertaining what official action has been taken.

We are amazed at the prudence and foresight of those persons who claim to represent public opinion without first appreciating that the public has not yet reached the position essential to the enjoyment of constitutional freedom and self-government. The reins of Government cannot be made over to Indians, merely for the sake of five or ten of their learned men. If it is done, public interests cannot be safeguarded.

Further, the Royal Public Services Commission Report has just been published and local Governments are collecting opinions from the public regarding its recommendations. No one can yet say how many of these recommendations will be adopted and what practical advantage will be derived therefrom.

In conclusion, the editor suggests: "We should first of all consider the means necessary for our national progress. When we fit ourselves for Government, it will certainly come. The great history of the world testifies to the fact that a nation, incapable of improving its own condition by education and training, has never succeeded in its aims. How, then, is it possible for us to reach the zenith of our ambitions when we are still at nadir of development? Muhammadans should not be duped by persons who do not take into consideration the general condition of the country, but simply look at themselves through spectacles and think that the whole country is educated and trained like themselves".

IV.—Native States.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 10th, 1917.

Mysore budget.

115. In an article reviewing the Mysore Budget for 1917-18, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 10th July, remarks:—We are glad to observe that all the most pressing items in the furtherance of popular welfare have been adequately provided for. It is very much regretted in some quarters, however, that the proposal to associate some non-officials with the officials who are engaged in effecting retrenchment was not accepted by the Government. It is to be hoped that patriotic non-officials who have any suggestions to give in regard to retrenchment would submit them for the consideration of the authorities, in which case the Financial Secretary would appoint the authors of those suggestions as Members of the Retrenchment Committee.

Vrittanta Patrike, Mysore, July 12th, 1917.

Mysore Railway Administration.

116. Commenting on the Mysore Railway administration, the Vrittanta Patrike, of the 12th July, in a leading article observes that while the zealous efforts of the Mysore Government in the direction of railway expansion are admittedly very laudable, and there is reason to hope that some of the newly constructed lines, despite the losses entailed by them at present, will be found profitable in course of time, the Government seem to lack sufficient experience in regard to railway administration.

Vokkaligara Patrike, Mysore, July 11th, 1917.

The Mysore Public Works Department.

117. In a leading article reviewing the report on the Public Works Department in Mysore for 1915-16, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 11th July, says:—A careful examination of the report shows that the administration of this department has not been quite satisfactory. Under the guidance of an Engineering expert like the present Diwan, it should have been possible to show more satisfactory results. A large part of the allotments remained unutilised and it has been explained that this is due to the difficulties in importing machinery during the present war time. But it can scarcely be correct to say that this one reason can account for the entire amount of the unutilised balances. The Government do not accept the departmental explanation that slackness in the execution of works was due to the difficulties of commanding labour and neglect on the part of the contractors. The Krishnaraja Sagara Works have been proceeded with very expeditiously on receiving the sanction of the Government of India for the same. The attempt to manufacture water metres locally in the Public Works Workshop is very laudable, as it will effect a considerable saving in the money that had to be paid to foreign manufacturers for these metres. The Government have asked the Chief Engineer to obtain an explanation from the Executive Engineers whose work of supervision has been regarded as unsatisfactory. Although the Government have remarked that the administration of this department was satisfactory "on the whole", it seems to us that the Government are at heart dissatisfied with the work shown by it.

Mushir-i-Dakhan, Hyderabad, July 3rd, 1917.

Something which calls for the attention of the Hyderabad Residency Local Fund Committee.

118. The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 3rd July, writes:—In spite of the fact that the Residency Local Fund Committee has for a long time been levying a tax on private conveyances, it seems that many roads in the Residency limits are bad. The people, who pay the taxes, complain that, owing to the roughness of the roads, their carriages are liable to be broken or damaged with the inevitable consequence of a large outlay for repairs.

The Residency Local Fund Committee should take immediate steps to remove the cause for this complaint: for it is, indeed, astounding to hear of and to see this bad state of the roads and the streets after levying a tax on vehicles for their maintenance.

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.

Kerala Patrika Calicut, July 7th, 1917.

The condition of crops in Malabar.

119. The Kerala Patrika, of the 7th July, draws attention tot he bad condition of the crops consequent upon the failure of the monsoon, and dwells upon the necessity of village officers and revenue inspectors being called upon to enquire into and report on the true condition thereof.

Errata.

Report No. 27.

Page 1868, paragraph 24, line 2, for "was" read "were".
„ 1894, line 1, for "called" read "cabled".
„ 1894 „ 19, for "loose" read "lose".
„ 1894 „ 19, for "crops" read "corps".

Issued, 17th July 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 29 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 21st July 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(a) Police—
The Police and public meetings	1979
Internment day	ib.
(b) Courts—
The Madras High Court	ib.
(d) Education—
The Agricultural College prize distribution ..	ib.
Protest meetings and aided institutions ..	1980
Mrs. Besant and poor students	ib.
Brahmans in the Educational service	ib.
(e) Local and Municipal—
The Madras water-supply	1981
The President of the Corporation of Madras ..	ib.
The Revenue officer, Madras Corporation ..	1982

II.—Home Administration—cont.	PAGE
(k) General—
The Congress Presidentship	1982
Home Rulers and Extremists	ib.
A meeting at Coimbatore	1983
The day of France's liberty	ib.
Great Britain and Self-Government for India.	ib.
The manufacture of agitation	1984
The Home Rule flag at Ootacamund	ib.
Theosophy and politics	ib.
Repression versus Reason	1985
The Government of India and the political situation	1986
The new Secretary of State for India	ib.
IV.—Native States.
The Mysore Efficiency Audit Department	ib.

CONFIDENTIAL

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

Air-raid on London 1987
China .. .. ib.
Chinese political revolution .. .. ib.
The war .. .. ib.
Enemy's aeroplanes 1988
A special congress of the Allies .. .. .. ib.
Political electuary .. .. ib.
Absurd criticisms by the German press .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police—

Police Circle Inspectors .. .. ib.

(b) Courts—

Judges of the Madras High Court 1989

(c) Education—

Education among Non-Brahmans .. .. ib.
Indian Universities .. .. ib.
A school for the Panchamas .. .. .. ib.
Amalgamation of the School Final and Matriculation examinations in the Bombay Presidency .. .. ib.
Higher education of Muhammadans .. .. ib.
Progress of education among Muhammadans .. 1990
The Patna University Bill .. .. .. ib.
The Presidency College, Madras, and the Government College at Kumbakonam .. .. ib.
The Intermediate examination 1991
A stir in the "Caithness Hall" .. .. ib.
National education .. .. ib.
Vernacular educational institutions 1992
Elementary schoolmasters .. .. .. ib.
Education in India and in England .. .. ib.

(d) Local and Municipal—

Water-supply in Madras .. .. ib.
Cows 1993

(h) Railways—

The Tirutturaippundi-Vedarannyam railway .. 1994
Railway matters .. .. ib.

(k) General—

The role of the bureaucrats .. .. .. ib.
The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia 1995
Protest meetings 1997
The action of the authorities and the protest by the people 1998
Home Rule Leagues 2000
Swadeshism .. .. ib.
A committee to examine the needs of India .. 2001
The Tittagudi assault case .. .. .. ib.
Brahmans and Home Rule .. .. .. ib.
Rumoured appointment of Mr. Montague .. 2002
The closure of the District Press in Trichinopoly .. .. ib.
Industrial advancement .. .. .. ib.
Extension of the term of office of the Governors of Madras and Bombay .. .. .. ib.
Lord Hardinge and the Report of the Mesopotamia Commission 2003
Brahman and Non-Brahmans 2004
The situation in South Africa 2005
Indians in the Council of the Secretary of State for India .. .. ib.
The representatives of landholders of this Presidency in the Legislative Council .. ib.
The resignation of Mr. Austin Chamberlain .. ib.
"Wanted a declaration of policy" 2006
India and Home Rule .. .. ib.
Indian members in the Executive Councils .. ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.

The Secretary of State for India and the order of the Government regarding the publication of Mrs. Besant's theosophical works .. 2006
The repressive measures adopted by the Government 2007
A change in the angle of vision 2008
Permission for moving resolutions in the Legislative Councils .. .. ib.
The present situation .. .. ib.
Home Rule .. .. ib.
The Theosophical Society and politics .. 2009
The evils of western civilisation .. .. ib.
Administrative autonomy .. .. .. ib.
The war loan .. .. ib.
Parsis are Indians .. .. ib.
Zamindars and the Home Rule .. .. .. ib.
The London Times and reforms 2010
Lord Pentland's speech .. .. ib.
Freedom for India .. .. ib.
The Maharaja of Bobbili and New India .. ib.
Swaraj .. .. ib.
The prophecy of a Japanese astrologer .. 2011
Impossibility .. .. ib.
Sir Rabindranath Tagore 2012
The Guntur protest meeting .. .. .. ib.
Our essential duty .. .. ib.
Paniyam tank, Kurnool district 2013
A Revenue Standing Order .. .. .. ib.
A cablegram to the Premier regarding internments, etc. .. .. ib.
Lord Ronaldshay and self-government .. ib.
Infatuation of nationalism .. .. .. ib.
Ireland, India 2014
Punjab Government Order .. .. .. ib.
President of the coming Congress 2015
The Round Table .. .. ib.
Political reforms .. .. ib.
The message of Mr. Ritchie .. .. .. ib.
Sub-Assistant Surgeons .. .. ib.
Loyalty .. .. ib.
Cablegrams about internments .. .. .. ib.
The internment of the Kistna district .. .. ib.
Justice 2016
Service of the mother country .. .. .. ib.
Maharaja of Bobbili .. .. ib.
The Maharaja of Bombay .. .. ib.
The benefits of British rule .. .. .. ib.
Threats held forth by Home Rulers 2017
The Home Rule propaganda, a separate association .. .. ib.
The India Council .. .. ib.
Reforms in the Indian administration .. .. ib.
Indian self-government 2018
Sanitation in India and in England .. .. ib.
India and democratic principles of administration .. .. ib.
The resolutions of the Home Rulers 2019
Renewal rates of the Zamorin's estate .. .. ib.
The spectacle of hope and action .. .. ib.
We and Home Rule .. .. ib.
The procedure of the liberal gentlemen .. 2020
Why nationality is being destroyed? .. .. ib.
A few Muhammadan aspirations 2021
"The Swadeshi vow" .. .. ib.

III.—Legislation.

The melting of gold coins .. .. ib.

IV.—Native States.

Railway administration in Mysore 2022
The Home Rule movement in Mysore .. .. ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

1. The Hindu, of the 16th July, writes:—"Police Assistant Superintendent William John Duncan Rowley of Arni has gone one step further than Inspector Jaffer Hussain of Tuticorin. He has prohibited not a protest meeting against the internments, but a public meeting at which a lecture on swadeshism was to have been delivered. . . . In the circumstances, the action of the Police appears to us either to bespeak lack of discretion or a gross abuse of power. In neither case, will the prestige of the Police for fair dealing be enhanced and it behoves Government to set their face against petty annoyances to the public such as these."

The Police and public meetings.

Hindu, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

2. The following appears in New India, of the 16th July:—"We hear that orders have been served by the police on a number of leading people in the Madras City, who are to take part in to-day's meetings, prohibiting the projected processions. These orders will, we hope, be tested as to their validity in due course: but we shall say here that it is a most serious and uncalled-for infringement of fundamental civic liberties. If we disapprove of any act of Government, we ought, as British subjects, to have full liberty to express our disapproval in all constitutional ways; and demonstrations in the form of processions have been a very well recognised mode in England, in India and in all constitutionally governed countries. We need hardly say that the meetings will be held as arranged, though the processions will be dropped."

Internment day.

New India, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

(b) Courts.

3. The Hindu, of the 17th July, remarks:—"We understand that Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar has, in an interview with His Excellency the Governor to-day, definitely declined to take up the office of a temporary Judge on the Madras High Court, and will revert to the Bar for practice. His decision will be received by the public with keen appreciation and satisfaction. The manner in which the Madras Government, and the authorities higher up, including the Secretary of State for India, have been tinkering with the constitution of the High Court, and appointing what are called temporary or additional Judges, is a grave scandal. . . . Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar was by far one of the few ablest Judges in the High Court. We understand that he expressed his willingness to accept the office of temporary and additional Judge if he had an assurance that on the number of the present permanent Judges, viz., eight, being increased, he would be given the next available permanent seat. This he was entitled to get in all fairness on personal grounds, as well as in the interests of the public. Failing to get this assurance, he has resolved to be no longer willing to act as a mere stop gap, but to revert to the Bar, and we cannot congratulate the Government on its course of action which has driven him to take this step."

The Madras High Court.

Hindu, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

(d) Education.

4. Writing under the heading "Practice and Precepts", New India, of the 17th July, says:—"One would have thought that a prize-giving function at an educational institution could hardly furnish the occasion for the utterance of other than the veriest platitudes. But the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew, as the senior member of bureaucratic officialdom in Madras, is capable of extracting political sermons out of agricultural substances. . . . By a process of arguing in a vicious circle, he demonstrated that the conditions of Indian society and the ways and circumstances of the Indian ryot rendered any substantial progress of Indian agriculture, on improved modern lines, practically impossible for a long time to come."

The Agricultural College prize distribution.

New India, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

New India, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Protest meetings and aided institutions.

5. In an article commenting on the prohibition against protest meetings being held in Government aided schools, New India, of the 18th July, writes:—"It is obvious that Government did not expect and do not like the holding of so many and such indignant public meetings all over the country, protesting against the impropriety and unwisdom of applying against political leaders engaged in ordinary constitutional agitation, the provisions of an extraordinary war measure, such as the Defence of India Act, undoubtedly is. . . Our Government is like the physician who wants to cover up the sores in his patient's body with fine clothes, and exhibit him as perfectly sound. The prohibition of public meetings, of the publication of their proceedings, the issuing of orders that speakers should not use strong language—all this is obviously for the purpose of concealing from the world in general, and from the higher authorities in England in particular, the formidable indignation and discontent caused among the people by the Government's highhanded policy of repression. . . The tendency of the executive to scent sedition in the most constitutional and law-abiding methods of agitation is notorious. When the Government as a body has embarked on a policy of repression, almost every officer is disposed to be highhanded and tyrannical. It will be much better to prohibit once for all criticism, however fair, of Government's actions, than to allow it in law, but try to put it down by executive persecution."

New India, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant and poor students.

6. New India, of the 18th July, has the following:—"We have received some letters from students who have for a number of years been helped by Mr. Besant with money for their school or college fees and food charges. . . They do not know probably that the orders of internment issued against her have absolutely cut off all the sources of her income and that, therefore, it is impossible for her to continue the help in any form or to any extent. This surely is one of the most tragic results of that unjust official action. But then what do they care what happens to these young men?"

Justice, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Brahmans in the Educational service.

7. Justice, of the 19th July, observes:—"To say that the Brahmans have enjoyed a disproportionate share of Government patronage in almost all departments of the public service open to Indians, is but to state a truism. In the Educational department, something akin to a monopoly has been established, candidates other than Brahmans being seldom, if ever, preferred except under very exceptional circumstances, and for reasons which no amount of sophistry can suppress. . . To give point to the above statement we shall refer to a recent example. Government lately sanctioned the creation of Personal Assistants to Inspectors, Assistant Inspectors and Inspectresses of Schools, and the appointments made to fill up these posts appeared in the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 19th June last. Out of twenty-three appointments then made, we notice that twenty went to Brahmans and only three to non-Brahmans. Surely, it cannot be reasonably urged that there were not more of the latter class in the service or outside it who would have satisfactorily discharged the duties of Personal Assistants. Plausible reasons may be adduced to justify preference of the particular candidates, but it is obvious that in order to prevent inequalities, it is necessary to see below the surface. Rightly or wrongly it has been a standing complaint that because a Brahman rules the roost, non-Brahmans have no chance. Under the circumstances, the Director, before sanctioning appointments, ought to have scrutinized the proposals submitted, not only with care, but with a certain amount of shrewdness. The somewhat suggestive questions put in the Legislative Council at the last Madras session ought to have served as an eye-opener to the Director, but hints to him have been fruitless of results. . . Constituted as he is, we do not hope for any change of policy or method in the Director, but there is no room for despair. Education is His Excellency the Governor's portfolio, and we appeal to Lord Pentland to look more closely into the matter and to insist that flagrant inequalities such as we have pointed out are remedied. The office of the Director of Public Instruction, especially the administrative as distinguished from the financial portion of it, is so singularly fortified with reinforced Brahman concrete that the only chance of success lies in a coup d' main. Intermittent bombardments hold out no promise of success. In the interests of the vast majority of the people of this Presidency, we venture to hope that His Excellency will not hesitate to aim a bold stroke and break a close monopoly which has had a pretty long and undisturbed innings."

(e) Local and Municipal.

The Madras water-supply.

8. The Indian Patriot, of the 13th July, writes:—"From the frequent notices appearing in the press about the water-supply of Madras City, the fact is forced on the public mind that Mr. Molony has not yet gone to Mesopotamia to rule a newly-carved out province there, but finds yet much to do with the antediluvian monsters that we are. If Germany had not been at present engaged in war, its highest exponents of kultur could have taken lessons from our Health officer, who now supplies the city with a scientific decoction of filtered and unfiltered water. . . We are against blind criticism of two such highly successful report writers as Mr. Molony and his Health officer, especially on such trifles as water-supply, or a few loss of lives, may be, if we have an attack of cholera. And there are those who bewail that for an expenditure of so many lakhs of rupees for a filtered water-supply we should not have any filtered water. We simply shudder to think what Mr. Molony will have to say in his next report—what striking phrases and funny stories—about these unfortunate misers who have the audacity to enquire about their taxes after they have once paid them. . . The fact is, the Madrasi is an antediluvian creature; he does not know that one of the effective marks of progress is to have crores of rupees spent on a drainage which does not drain and a water works that do not filter. Madras ceased to be benighted the moment it had these; and we wait to read Mr. Molony's scorching words against the imbeciles who do not know to distinguish between progress and backwardness. Our sympathies are entirely with Mr. Molony and his Health officer until they go to Mesopotamia."

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

The President of the Corporation of Madras.

9. The Hindu, of the 18th July, states:—"Mr. J. C. Molony, President of the Corporation of Madras, did not come with flying colours out of the meeting of the Corporation held last evening. He was severely handled by many of the Commissioners in regard to his part in a few matters that came up for discussion and the President only feebly attempted to reply to the well-directed criticisms made in the course of the discussion. His long and laboured statement as to the water-supply of the city has left us absolutely unconvinced, and has not tended to throw any fresh light on an affair which is a conspicuous example of unrelieved bungling. . . Mr. Molony's part in the matter of the removal of the Special Engineer's office to the Ripon Buildings is more than a blazing indiscretion. It is a perverse, highhanded proceeding for which there is no pretence of an excuse. He has been from the beginning against the removal, and had once characterised the suggestion as absurd. . . We cannot conceive of a worse case of insult to the Commissioners who feel rightly that the situation is intolerable. Is the President the master or the servant of the Corporation?"

Hindu, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 18th July, says:—"Yesterday's meeting of the Madras Corporation brought to light an interesting feature of the administration of that body. There is a rule that on a requisition signed by ten Municipal Commissioners for a special meeting of the meeting it 'shall' be called by the President. There was a requisition for a special meeting over the location of the office of the Special Engineer. . . But the President would not call the meeting. He wrote, three days after he got the requisition for a special meeting, that he had already located the Engineer's office elsewhere and no meeting need be held. We must express our surprise that a right enjoyed by the Commissioners should thus be trampled under the foot. Those who signed the requisition for a meeting are responsible men, at least as much interested in the administration of the Corporation as the President. If they wanted a particular question to be more elaborately discussed, it was because they felt the need for it. There was absolutely no necessity to treat the Commissioners with such scant courtesy openly defying a rule. We think self-respecting Commissioners must resent such contemptuous treatment: there is no use taking it lying down. Of course, the President of the Corporation defying even the resolutions passed by a majority of the Commissioners is by no means uncommon; the question is how long is this kind of treatment to be tolerated."

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The Revenue officer, Madras Corporation.

10. The Indian Patriot, of the 19th July, states:—"We understand that Khan Bahadur Bazlullah Sahib has been appointed Revenue officer of the Madras Corporation. No better appointment could have been made. The Khan Bahadur is an able officer, and as Presidency Magistrate in Madras and for some time acting Chief Presidency Magistrate, he carried out his duties with efficiency and popularity. He commands a large measure of public confidence. As Revenue officer he may have to perform duties which may not be always pleasant. . . . He has been very popular in every position that he occupied and is highly esteemed by the public in general and the Muslim community in particular with whom he is a persona grata. He was made a Khan Sahib in 1914 and a Khan Bahadur recently, and these distinctions conferred upon him in quick succession sufficiently indicate that Government has not been slow to recognise his undoubted ability and high character. We congratulate the Government on his selection for the responsible post of Revenue officer."

(k) General.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 12th, 1917.

The Congress Presidentship.

11. The West Coast Spectator, of the 12th July, writes:—"We have very great respect for Sir Subramania Ayyar; his old age, his past services and high position are entitled to our respect, but it does not, neces-arily, follow from this that we are bound to accept whatever he says as binding on us. He writes to the papers demanding that Mrs. Besant should be elected to the presidentship of the forthcoming sessions of the Congress, and that if she is not released from internment before December, he himself should be glad to occupy the chair as her deputy. We must at once say that we are not prepared to endorse this direction.

"Mrs. Besant, they say, is suffering for a righteous cause; and that the people should make it very clear to all those it may concern that the old lady is regarded as a martyr and therefore they desire to honour her by conferring on her the most exalted dignity in the gift of non-official India—that is the presidentship of our non-official Parliament. If the Home Rulers desire to canonise Mrs. Besant, by all means let them do so, but we do not think that the Congress as a body approves Mrs. Besant's propaganda and methods of work. Why then was she not elected to the presidentship of the last Congress though her followers had carried on an aggressive campaign? . . . . We hope the Congress will not lose its head, and shout with theosophists and other followers of the Besantine cult, stultifying its reputation for clear thinking and sanity. Some allowance must be made for the fact that Sir Subramania Ayyar is a staunch theosophist whose feelings have been excited, rather wildly, by the internment of his guru and leader. But all Congressmen are not theosophists and do not subscribe to the creed and methods of political agitation the white prophetess has promulgated."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 12th, 1917.

Home Rulers and Extremists

12. The West Coast Spectator, of the 12th July, remarks:—"There are Home Rulers and Home Rulers. We have no quarrel with those Home Rulers who are identified with temperate constitutional agitation avoiding all excesses and who desire steady development. The other type of Home Ruler is militant. He is a fanatic and revolutionary combined, whose talk about British connection is mere bunkum intended to save his skin. He desires to see Europeans in India packing off bag and baggage tomorrow, leaving the country to himself and his gang. These people long for the day when a fleet of P. and O. liners would range alongside the Ballard pier to take every Englishman and Englishwoman in India on their homeward voyage. It would be their 'Der Tag'.

"They see glorious visions of the 'Tag', of rejuvenescent Mahrattas and Chitpavan Brahmans garlanding each other, after a 'May pole dance' round the portrait of Mrs Besant, in celebration of the event, on the spacious lawn of the Bombay Yacht Club. It is better these people are allowed to stew in their own juice. It is politic the moderates give them wide berth; the instinct of self-preservation, if nothing else, demands that the Congress should bolt and bar its doors against these visionary idealists."

13. The Hindu, of the 14th July, remarks:—"His Excellency Lord Pentland will give little thanks to the organisers of the Coimbatore meeting—which ended in a fiasco—convened to pass a resolution of thanks to the Secretary of State for India for extending the period of office of His Excellency as Governor of this Presidency. . . The proposition of thanks-giving was, after animated discussion, withdrawn and the meeting dissolved." HINDU, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

A meeting at Coimbatore.

14. Writing under this heading, New India, of the 14th July, says:—"It was on the 14th July 1789 that the people of France finally shook off the fear of the potentates and bureaucrats, that for years had kept them under servitude, and proclaimed the liberties of man in terms, which are now firing their souls in the great fight they are making in the cause of Freedom. . . What needed a bloody revolution and more than a generation of tribulation for a country like France—so long under heel of monarchs who claimed that 'L'Etat c'est moi'—was accomplished by a more gradual and peaceful process of reform and political revolution in England; and we, in India, who have been trained under British traditions, cherish the confident hope that the principle for which the French nation rose in revolt against their King on this Great Day in 1789, for which Russia compelled, but three months ago, the Tsar of All Russias to abdicate his ancient throne, will find speedy recognition and acceptance as an article of faith in the every-day Government of our great country." NEW INDIA, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

The day of France's liberty.

15. New India, of the 14th July, writes:—"The question of the Liberty and Self-Government and the undictated development of all peoples, whether European or Asiatic, is the most pressing of practical questions at the present moment, according to these statesmen; and it must be settled, as President Wilson has observed, by immediately undertaking practical means. It is certainly not a question whose solution can be put off now: nor will such solution ever be accomplished by pious sentiments and fine phrases, such as those in which some of our 'candid friends' have recently been indulging. The aspirations of Indians for securing to themselves 'a fair chance of life and liberty' have led them to undergo sacrifices and sufferings for ideals which they share with Great Britain, France, Russia, America. India has won for this the unstinted admiration of English statesmen and the Prime Minister himself has spoken of satisfying her aspirations. There is, therefore, no manner of excuse, for the autocrats and bureaucrats in this country to arrogate to themselves the right of judgment in this matter. The right is not theirs, as the late Governor of Bengal was careful to remind the public once; and in professing to determine the future fate of this country, the Indian bureaucracy is trespassing on the sovereign rights of their masters, the British democracy. In declaring open war against the legitimate and just aspirations of the educated classes in this country, they have undertaken a policy for which they have received no mandate whatever or even support from that sovereign authority. NEW INDIA, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

Great Britain and Self-Government for India.

"In the course of the un-British and cowardly steps which have been recently taken to remove Mrs. Besant out of the fight, they spoke, through the mouth of the Great Moghul, till recently holding sway at Downing Street, of Mrs. Besant's activities (which simply represent and typify the exertions of all Indians for freedom), as 'dangerous'. Yes, they are dangerous—to bureaucratic tyranny and misrule. All assertions of liberty are dangerous to autocracy; all work for the extension of popular Government on democratic lines must 'prove disastrous' to despotic sway exercised by an official supercaste. . . If the movement worked by Mrs. Besant and others is to be impugned by British officials as a danger to British rule here and to the Empire as a whole, then the whole vaunted mission of Britain in the world, together with the words of her leaders and the work of her soldiers, must be declared a mere sham. . . Great Britain cannot allow her sons to deny that justice and freedom to people over whom for the time being they happen to be placed in authority and go before the Council of Nations to plead for justice and freedom for other peoples. Such a situation would not only be extremely humiliating, but would furnish an effective weapon in the hands of her enemies to cast a slur on her fair name and fame."

NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

The manufacture of agitation.

16. In an article on this subject, the Non-Brahman, for the week ending 15th July, observes:—"In this connection we must protest against Madras being dumped by Bombay agitators, and we look to some of these very noble men being sent back to Bombay, leaving Madras to evolve its own fate. And we have no doubt that Madras Government will move when it knows as much as we know. We are in favour of the Government declaring a policy and pursuing it with vigour, but we quite realise that the false and exaggerated language of the babbler politician makes it impossible for the Government to move. No one can tolerate lies, and mystic references to repression. . . We can assure the Government that Home Rule emissaries go about convening meetings and sending telegrams and cablegrams all around. It is this false nature of the agitation that detracts from its value, and when a police inspector stops a meeting, it is because even he cannot help looking upon such meetings without contempt. But then newspaper accounts exaggerate, and there is the inevitable leading article. We call upon the moderates to save the country by standing between the vagabonds and responsible public life which has become an object of derision. If anything were to happen we must have less heroics and less of lies, and more of responsible leadership."

JUSTICE, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

The Home Rule flag at Ootacamund.

17. Justice, of the 16th July, states:—"The letter of an Ooty correspondent to the Bombay Chronicle describes the heroic feat of a gardener in climbing a smooth pole wet and slippery, forty-eight feet high, in order to pass a rope through a pulley to hoist the Home Rule flag. We are told that the gardener accomplished this work to the admiration and astonishment of the little household party present to witness this. Everything connected with Home Rule has something heroic about it. As our contemporary the Madras Times suggests the rope might have been passed through the pulley before the pole was put up. That would be common place. Climbing a greasy pole forty-eight feet high in order to hoist the Home Rule flag sounds grander. . . This little fact shows that Mrs. Besant is very careful about the necessary details to make her performances on the Home Rule stage completely theatrical. Our readers will remember the careful arrangements which this lady made for making a theatrical exit from the Home Rule stage last year when proceedings were taken against her under the Indian Press Act. She wrote her last will and testament, addressed her final speech to the audience and was ready to quit the stage, but unfortunately something went wrong and the curtain would not go down. That was a stage mismanagement for which the Government were responsible. . . What desperate straits the Home Rulers are getting into in order to keep up a pretence that their movement is still above water. . . What with the Home Rule flag at Ootacamund with the coloured lanterns at night and the Sir Robert Borden story at Calcutta, the Home Rulers are beginning to furnish us with the comic element very much needed in India to relieve the monotony of ponderous Home Rule speeches."

JUSTICE, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Theosophy and politics.

18. Justice, of the 16th July, observes:—"Reuter wires that Mr. Chamberlain stated in the House of Commons that Mrs. Besant has refused the offer of the Madras Government to permit her to carry on her theosophical work if she abstained from political agitation. She was not content merely to decline the offer, but did it, so the telegram says, in a violently worded communication emphasising the unity of the Theosophical Society with the political aims of other organizations by which, we suppose, are meant chiefly the Home Rule Leagues. In other words the Theosophical Society and Home Rule Leagues are twins—interchangeable terms—with the common political object of attaining immediate Home Rule for India. . . If Mrs. Besant's interpretation of what the Theosophical Society stands for is correct—and we have neither reason nor locus standi to question her on the point—we question whether Government servants, whether of British India or of Native States, can continue as members of that Society without breaking the letter and spirit of that wholesome rule that such servants should not take part in politics? Such of them as continue in the Society or contribute to its funds after this authoritative declaration of its character by the President, must be held to violate the ruling of the Government."

Writing under the heading "Having it both ways", New India, of the 19th July, says:—"There is at least one aspect of the political situation in this country that is unenviably unique. We have had repeated instances of it, but the crux in which affairs just now lie is the most glaring and reprehensible example, that we can at the moment recall. This is that the campaign against reform is marked by a singular lack of chivalry, even of fair-play, on the part the opponents of India's progress to the goal of Home Rule, a lack which few Englishmen would for a moment countenance in England, even those of them, who though liberal there, become here so intolerably reactionary.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

"Repressive measures, like the Press Act, prevent outright and plain speech. And then, when a law-abiding, but freedom-loving writer or speaker attempts to give voice to the truth, and, being compelled by such drastic legislation to be mild and roundabout, speaks or writes at length to make up for the vigorous brevity which is denied him, he is described, with thoughtless heartlessness, as long-winded and a mere talker. An Arms Act has been laid heavily upon the people, and the growth of martial spirit discouraged; an inadequate educational system has ruined all initiative in the flower of the youth of the land in every way; even when the need of the empire is great and when there is a burst of enthusiasm in the youths and the leaders, there is no trust shown. And then the taunt is thrown at the nation that it lacks spirit and enterprise. The growing generation is attempted to be malformed on the Procrutean bed of the present day school system, by arrangements like G O. No. 559; and even to men fitted for their work posts and opportunities are denied. And then we hear the old cry that Indians are not fit.

"A gallant lady, scrupulously law-abiding, in spite of all the restrictions and hazards of these days, is deprived of her liberty in the way we know; and then, when she is made incapable of self-defence, she is said to have committed herself to a statement, which is the precise contrary of what she has repeatedly said while she was free. Now she cannot, without breaking the law—which she will never do, as her opponents know,—deny or explain the curious words of Mr. Chamberlain; and so she stands committed to something, which it is impossible she could have said, and branded as the user of violent words, which she has certainly never used, while she was free. And instead of the denouncement of all this in every newspaper in the country, we find that the words ascribed to her are accepted in some quarters of Anglo-India as truly hers and homilies preached upon them, as if matters were as represented. Few things have been more discouraging than this in recent times; for this incident, while, like the others, it betrays a lamentable want of chivalry and fairplay, makes only one of two explanations possible: either that the writers who so eagerly hold forth against Mr. Besant are exceedingly ignorant of what she has said in the past; or that they are willingly and gladly and without consideration accepting, as true, words ascribed to her by her jailers, of the accuracy of which, as yet, we have no guarantee. A little knowledge or a modicum of chivalry on the part of these people would go far to make times like these less bewildering to lovers of truth and freedom."

19. In an article under this heading, New India, of the 17th July, remarks:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

Repression versus Reason.

"Amidst the infinite diversity of methods adopted by the Executive in all the provinces of India, to carry on the policy of the repression of the Home Rule campaign, there is a singular unanimity of aim animating the actions of the agents of the bureaucratic administration. This aim, as the fates would have it, is asserting itself in these actions the more forcibly, as one act of repression succeeds another. The more clearly the responsible heads of the administration declare that they would not interfere with legitimate constitutional agitation, the more severely do their agents in the several provinces and districts repress legitimate, peaceful, constitutional agitation. It may be the Police Act, the Criminal Codes, the Defence of India Act; whatever, in their view, is handy enough to be used for stopping meetings, demonstrations, speeches or comments in newspapers relating to the internments, to Home Rule Leagues or Swadeshi lectures, is quite sufficient for a number of these officers, European and Indian, to avail themselves of, to see that these things are put down.

. . It is high time that the legality of most of these acts of Executive high-handedness are tested before the courts of the land. If, as Sir Narayan Chandavarkar has proved in his learned article printed by us yesterday, even some of the actions of the Executive taken under the all-powerful Defence of India Act can be impugned before the courts as 'frauds upon power,' it seems obvious that actions, for which some of the Executive officers quote or misquote the provisions of the ordinary law of the land, ought not to be left unchallenged."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 17th, 1917.

The Government of India and the political situation.

20. The West Coast Spectator, of the 17th July, remarks:—"It is beyond our comprehension to understand the rationale of the policy of negation, of sitting on the fence, the Government of India are following. Mere repression will not clear the atmosphere and allay the anxiety that is stamped on every moderate's face. Neither the moderates, nor the Government, can allow the Extremists or Home Rulers to stew in their own juice, for stews have the awkward knack of boiling over. Can the Government leave the moderates to their fate, to be laughed at, ridiculed and wiped the floor with by the other party? Our answer is an emphatic no.

"The Government and every individual officer should stand by the moderate. By their assuming a policy of silence relieved by sporadic cases of repression they are handing the moderates over to the extremists. The silence is overpowering, chilling and dangerous. While the Government are silent and halting, probably, debating within themselves whether to announce the policy or not to announce, that is the question, the moving finger writes and having writ moves on. Even now we cannot bring ourselves round to believe that the Government of India are barren of statesmanship."

Hindu, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The new Secretary of State for India.

21. The Hindu, of the 19th July, writes:—It may seem incredible but it is absolutely true, that a leading Anglo-Indian paper in Calcutta is of opinion that 'the prime qualification' for the holder of the office of Secretary of State for India is that he should be in complete ignorance of India. After this we can understand the contention of Anglo-Indians that most of the high offices in this country should be held by men of British birth. . . We have never before come across the expression of so insane a view as that ignorance of India and of the duties of his office, is the chief qualification for the Secretary of State, or indeed of any office involving responsible duties. It is asserted that not only should the Secretary of State be in profound ignorance of India, but that he should not take steps to have his ignorance removed during the tenure of his office and Lord Morley's administration is condemned on this score. . . The concern of Anglo-Indians is of course to see that everything is left to the men on the spot."

IV.—Native States.

Karnataka, Bangalore City, July 18th, 1917.

The Mysore Efficiency Audit Department.

22. The following appears in the Karnataka, of the 18th July:—

Gutter Politics.

"It is said that the pay of the officer in charge of the Efficiency Audit work has been raised to a new grade of Rs. 500—700; and Mr. N. Madhava Rao, B.A., B.L., will start at Rs. 550. . . We must be pardoned for saying that the above promotion savours of favouritism, and it is needless to say that the harm done to administrative efficiency by such invidious preferences is far greater than the good that is supposed to be done by ponderous sermons and formidable-looking manuals on 'efficiency'. There is already any amount of discontent and heart-burning among our officers, and we trust Government are not bent upon driving those feelings deeper. Speaking from the standpoint of the general public, we have no hesitation in saying that any addition to the number or to the emoluments of offices in the higher grades would be a sheer extravagance. The non-official members of our Legislative Council have not done their duty properly and courageously as regards Government's appointment-policy; and it is our honest feeling that the policy now in vogue is unsound not only financially but also ethically. . . At present, Mysore is blindly copying, and even over-doing, the models of British India as regards appointments and salaries; and naturally the one motive that reigns supreme in all ranks of our public service is the mercenary motive."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Air-raid on London.

23. Adverting to the recent air-raid on London, the Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, observes:—From what the London papers say of the appearance of hostile air-craft and their attack on London, it must indeed be said that the arrangements for the defence of the town were not adequately made. A paper asks what explanation could be offered for the injury done by the German æroplanes which came and threw bombs over the city leisurely and flew low over the city, seeming to despise all arrangements made for its defence. Though it may not be possible to prevent the appearance of the German æroplanes, none can gainsay that extensive and adequate provision should be made for guarding the town from such attacks, and for arresting the further advance of these raiders and punishing them properly. There is a great excitement in London in consequence of this. Though the Air-craft Department was reformed only recently, yet there are reasons to say that, as a result of this excitement, further reforms will be introduced in that department.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

China.

24. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, refers to the pro-republican movement in China, and says:—An army of 50,000 republican soldiers are pouring over Peking. That city will surely fall into their hands. The leaders of the people have resolved to make Shanghai the capital. What will the critics, who are glad that the republican form of Government in China has disappeared, now say? History bears evidence to the many changes that France had passed through in the matter of her Government. It is natural that such changes take place all over the world without distinction of east and west. History teaches the truth always with different illustrations.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Chinese political revolution.

25. Hailing the prospect of a re-establishment of the democratic form of Government in China, the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, wishes that that Government may be permanently established and that it may help on the future prosperity of the Chinese people.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The war.

26. The Kistnapatrika, of the 14th July, writes:—The submarines are, as usual, doing damage. The Germans have centred their hopes in these, but the results are not so effective. Even the Germans must admit that, though there is a slight dearth of provisions in England, it is not so keen as to interfere with the preparations for war. Their next hope is their Zeppelins. These have been frequently carrying on raids on the East Coast of England and on London and are doing some damage. Mr. Lloyd George himself admitted that it is impossible to completely prevent these raids. The Germans may have meant them as a means of diverting the British airships inflicting great damage on the enemy in the French front and the words of Mr. Lloyd George that it is undesirable to call back the British airships are commendable. . . Russia has intimated to the allies that she does not like any interference with the affairs of Greece, and the Allies are going to meet for discussing the question. We understand that another meeting will be held to determine the terms of peace.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, July 14th, 1917.

The war.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th July, says:—It is to be regretted that in London only five British airships were sent to attack 21 airships of the enemy. The anti-aircraft batteries were not of much use. More æroplanes only are required, or many innocent people will be subjected to death. The opinions of papers found in today's news bear testimony to the fact that there has been great agitation among the people. The papers say that the defencelessness against air-raids should be remedied and that German towns should be raided by way of retaliation. . . The Germans can never gain the victory in the western theatre, but the troubles and losses that the French have suffered excite pity. . . France was able to arrest the advance of Germany but she suffered heavily and could not herself march onward, owing to the troubles in Russia. . . Germany will hereafter fight in a spirit of despair. The submarine outrage and air-raids will increase. The Germans will sacrifice their armies in large numbers. Their endeavours will all fail. They will be tried and will sue for peace. The allies should accept only such terms as will maintain the independence of small States, or they will be giving room for another terrible war.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

Enemy's æroplanes.

27. The Andhrapatrika, of the 12th July, says:—The newspapers in London are angry that the authorities have not taken proper steps to protect the people from air raids. The Prime Minister told them that the object of the Germans in these raids is to divert the English æroplanes from the war theatre. The English æroplanes are doing immense service to the allies at the war theatre, and if they be sent back to England the situation of the allies at the war theatre will suffer. It is not good to obstruct the war operations in order that small losses may be prevented.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

A special Congress of the allies.

28. Referring to the disapproval by Russia of the allies' Greek policy and to the proposed special Congress of the allies, the Andhrapatrika, of the 12th July, says:—We do not see anything objectionable in what the English and the French did for the safety of Greece and the emancipation of small States. All parties in the proposed Congress should sink all petty differences and agree to prosecute the war to a victorious end.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 5th, 1917.

Political electnary.

29. The Quami Report, of the 5th July, has the following item:—It is not within the power of every man to understand the logic of the appointments made by the Secretary of State in Council. The principle of the selections made by Mr. Chamberlain will, perhaps, be understood by him later on. But our esteemed contemporary of Lahore has up to a certain point correctly disclosed the matter.

"If Mr. Basu is fire, Sir Parabsanker is earth and the Sahibzada Sahib is water. In short, this talismanic firm of Indian representation which is composed of the three elements, fire, earth and water apparently looks very fine, but it remains to be seen whether the spirit of Home Rule will be infused into this talismanic mass."

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, July 11th, 1917.

Absurd criticisms by the German press.

30. The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 11th July, writes:—As Great Britain's victory over the enemy is becoming increasingly certain, the foes in general and the Germans in particular, are becoming bewildered. In this frame of mind they are persisting in their scurrilous attacks on Great Britain's peace-loving policy—a policy that is well known in the four corners of the earth and is as evident as the sun by day and the moon by night.

An outstanding illustration of this is furnished by the telegram published in our issue of the 9th instant, on the authority of the Civil and Military Gazette, in order to show with what insolence and impunity the German press attributes to a high-souled people like the English things that are not true.

Well! How can any one believe the statement of the German paper the Koelnische Volkszeitung that the British Prime Minister said or wrote that England's object in waging war is conquest and plunder when the world knows that the reverse is the fact, and that the reason why Great Britain entered the war is to save the world from the devastating hand of pirates and plunderers like the Germans.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Police.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Police Circle Inspectors.

31. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 9th July, says:—The grade of Police Circle Inspectors is unnecessary. They interfere with every act of the Sub-Inspectors, write to the higher authorities false reports about them and prejudice the minds of those authorities against them. This is the only thing the Circle Inspectors do, and it will tend to the good of the department to abolish the grade altogether.

(b) Courts.

Judges of the Madras High Court.

32. Referring to the recent changes made in the number of the Judges of the Madras High Court, the Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, says:—It is a rule that except on certain special occasions, the Judges should be permanent. By the appointment of temporary Judges for such short periods as four months or six months, it may not be possible for the orders of such Judges to be in accordance with the principles of justice. Now that the number of the permanent Judges has been raised from 8 to 10, only 2 of these appointments can be given to vakils. If the number of permanent Judges were 9, 3 of these would go to vakils. What is the reason for the arrangements made by the bureaucrats being always to their advantage? Is the capacity of the vakils in any way less than that of others? If even in the matter of appointment of High Court Judges, no attention is paid to qualifications or to equal rights of the people of the country, but only the interests of certain special classes are cared for, why should we speak of the appointments in other departments?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

(d) Education.

Education among Non-Brahmans.

33. Dwelling at length on the present low condition of education among the Non-Brahmans and on the important part played by education in the advancement of civilization, the Dravidan, of the 9th July, observes with regret that the number of dramatic associations in which youngsters take part have increased of late, and suggests the desirability of the members of the local Legislative Council taking interest in the matter, reporting to the Government the baneful effects of such associations and securing the enactment of a law prohibiting dramatic associations from enlisting the young men of the country to the detriment of their future life.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Indian Universities.

34. Referring to the system of education as it obtains in India, the Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, gives in Tamil the substance of the speech recently made by Professor Chiplunkar in Bombay, in which he is said to have compared the condition of education in India with that in America, and stated that while the Indian Universities are always particular in seeing a good number of students fail in the examinations, the American Universities are ever anxious to pass 99 per cent of the students, and that the system of education as it obtains in America is such as to benefit all the people inclusive of women and is unlike that obtaining in India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

A school for the Panchamas.

35. Adverting to the condition of the Panchamas of Edappadi, a union village of the Salem district, a correspondent to the Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, refers to the want of a school for the benefit of the Panchamas of the place, and trusts that, for the advancement of these Panchamas, the President of the Taluk Board will devote his attention to the establishment of a school in the locality.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Amalgamation of the school final and matriculation examinations in the Bombay Presidency.

36. The Kaliyuga Vartamani, of the 23rd June and the 7th July, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran of the 23rd June on this subject, which is abstracted in paragraph 31 of Report No. 26 of 1917.

KALIYUGA VARTAMANI, Madras, June 23rd & July 7th, 1917.

Higher education of Muhammadans.

37. Referring to the attempts made by certain members of the Muhammadan community to raise the Islamiah school at Vāniyambādi to a college with financial aid from His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad to be named after him as the Usmania College, and to the attempts also made by some other members of the same community to start another college in the same place with the aid of public funds, and to the opinion expressed by His Excellency the Governor that he is not prepared to encourage the establishment of a Muhammadan

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

College at Vāniyambādi or any other place until the needs of higher education for Muhammadans are more fully examined, the Hindu Nesan, of the 10th July, observes that, in its opinion, it would be excellent for the Government to hand over the Madrasa-i-Azam to the South Indian Muhammadan public to be converted into a college.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

Progress of education among Muhammadans.

38. Writing on this subject the Dravidan, of the 11th July, deploring the low condition of education among the Muhammadans, makes the following observations:—Some papers actuated by jealousy try to separate the Muhammadans by saying that, as they have no separate college for themselves, they do not like to study along with others. We have seen with our own eyes that certain Brahman students alone loathe to read with Muhammadan youngsters. But neither Muhammadan youngsters nor those of other castes have ever thought it injurious to read along with others. Ha! What a trick! O Muhammadan brethren! You know that many of the Brahmans look at you with hatred. If you and the Dravidians, that is the Non-Brahmans, join together as sons of the same mother and study with perseverance, will the efforts of those, who look on you as poison, be successful? No. They are mostly proud of their high education and think of you with contempt. Never hope that the Brahmans will help you or represent your grievances truly to our benign Government. Whenever the opportunity occurs, they indeed try to spoil you and your brethren, the Tamilians, and seek to advance only the interests of their relations.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

The Patna University Bill.

39. Detailing the several defects in the original Bill which made the people think that it would be better to have no University at all than to have one of the type proposed in the Bill, and referring to the alterations now made in it by the Select Committee, the Swadesamitran, of the 11th July, observes:—The constitution of the Senate has since been altered so that it will now consist of 60 to 75 members instead of 40 to 60 as originally proposed, and 50 of these would be elected members. There is, therefore, a possibility for the graduates of the University to wield greater influence. The Senate will have powers to manage and control all the affairs of the University. It is not, however, desirable that in certain matters the Syndicate can act independently of the Senate. Though there is a provision to the effect that the Senate can investigate into a particular action of the Syndicate when five members thereof apply for such an investigation, it is not consistent with the relationship obtaining between the two bodies that the Syndicate, which is the executive body of the Senate, can in certain matters act independently of it. As this revised Bill has been approved by many of the representative members of the select committee, it will soon be passed into an Act. The University that will be established in pursuance of this Act will not be in a position to grow in such a way as to meet the requirements of the country. Its Chancellor will have all powers and its Vice-Chancellor will practically become the head of the Educational Department. The Syndicate will be a more powerful body than the Senate. Though the Hon'ble Messrs. Bupendranath Basu and Srinivasa Sastri have expressed the opinion that Universities, which may be newly started hereafter, should not be constituted on the lines of the Patna University, it is not known for what reasons they approved of the constitution of this University.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

The Presidency College, Madras, and the Government College at Kumbakōnam.

40. Adverting to the reports on the working of these two colleges during the year 1916–17, the Swadesamitran, of the 13th July, observes:—It is understood that it is not possible for many students to prosecute higher studies as the colleges have not kept pace with the increase in the number of students every year. It is observed that in the colleges of Madras, such as Pachaiyappa's College, the Christian College and the Royapettah College, there is accommodation enough to admit only such students as have completed their school final course in the high schools attached to them. But there are several high schools which are not attached to colleges. Where can the students, who have studied there and desire to continue their collegiate course, go, unless they are admitted in the Presidency College which is a Government institution?

The Principal of this College says that out of 376 students who sought admission, only 100 were selected and of these only 87 joined it. Many students, unable to secure admission into the colleges in Madras, run from place to place, and after all have to discontinue their studies for want of seats. It is not known what steps are being taken by the Educational authorities or the Government to avoid this situation. The report of the Kumbakōnam College also reveals the same state of affairs. It is said that 120 students who were qualified according to the list published by the Syndicate, for admission into colleges, sought admission into the Intermediate class. The Principal of that College writes that he did not admit many of them. What is to be the fate of all these students who are rejected like this in each college. In Europe many colleges have been established with financial aid from private persons who are of a charitable disposition. We have to remain without higher education, unless capitalists of our country come forward to establish colleges as Rao Bahadur Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar has done by helping the Madura Hindu College with the necessary funds Till then, we think that the Government should do one thing. They should secure seats for students who are desirous of joining colleges. If there are not seats enough, they should arrange to open additional classes in each college.

The Principal of the Kumbakōnam College has also made certain observations in his report to the effect that the relation between the examinations and the education received by a student should be determined before adopting measures to remedy the defects now found to exist among the students. But the Government, without understanding the necessity for considering them, have merely recorded the report. They might have avoided considering these on the impression that they come within the province of the University. Will the University at least consider them ?

41. Referring to the report of the Principal of the Government College at Rajahmundry, on the working of that college during the year 1916-17, the Swadesamitran, of the 14th July, observes :—The Principal writes that he did not admit students indiscreetly, but admit only such of them as secured good marks in the School Final examination, and that such being the case the reason is not known for the extraordinary failures in the Intermediate examination. This statement of the Principal should be carefully considered by the Syndicate. The Principal of the Kumbakōnam College has also written to the same effect. From what these Principals write, it appears that it is a vain task for the Syndicate to prepare a list of Secondary School Leaving certificate holders eligible for admission into the colleges. For the failures beyond number in the Intermediate examination, the indiscreet admission by Principals cannot be the reason. There must be some other reason. The Principal of the Rajahmundry College says that the reason is that the text-books prescribed and the questions asked are not suitable to the standard. We have also heard many students complaining of the same. It has also to be thought that the system of valuation is not the same always but is changing every year. It is the duty of the Syndicate to consider all these matters and effect the necessary reforms.

The Intermediate examination.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

42. Referring to the admission, by the authorities of the Madras Christian College, of some Christian students in the "Caithness Hall", which is one of the hostels attached to the college and intended for non-Brahmans alone, the Hindu Nesan, of the 17th July, observes that, as there is a separate hostel known as "Fenn Hostel" for the Christian students, it is not desirable to forcibly introduce certain social reforms among the students and that, if there is not adequate accommodation for the Indian Christians, the authorities of the college should make other suitable arrangements.

A stir in the "Caithness Hall".

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

43. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th July, publishes an article on national education, which purports to be a translation of an article in the Bombay Chronicle, in which that paper is reported to say that the present system of education has nothing to do with the student's future life, that it blunts the intelligence, affects health, and does not promote spirituality and patriotism and that it brings about many other evils. It differs much from the system prevailing in England. In India the student is always under fear of forgetting what he got by heart. It is desirable to introduce better methods which develop the intellect and encourage the student to think independently. Under the present-day education, the whole intellect is wasted for merciless ends. That is the reason why we have the present horrible war. . . If the Indian student should be devoted to the unselfish service of the mother country, he must be taught the history of Indian heroes. His character must develop. There is no use reading books. The student must be enabled to put his knowledge into practice in life.

National education.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

Vernacular educational institutions.

44. The Andhrapatrika, of the 12th July, writing under this heading observes:—". . . When a conference of the Directors of Public Instruction was held recently, Mr. Stone exhibited his stone-like hardness (hard-heartedness) by boldly asserting that the movement regarding vernaculars concerned only a few individuals and has not assumed any important character. It is, perhaps, his opinion that if proficiency in English decreases India will become uncivilized. Does this happen in the case of the Indians only or do all nations suffer from the same difficulty? In Japan education is not given in English. And yet Japan has gained the reputation of being one of the most civilized countries in the world. In Germany which is the fountain of progressive scientific knowledge, such knowledge is not imparted through the medium of English. Marconi who invented wireless telegraphy did not learn his lessons in English. Study of English is not essential in France which is famous for its civilization. . .

The present system of education is found useful only to enable men to eke out their livelihood as clerks in Government service and as school-masters and lawyers. . . The Indians are spending all their time in acquiring proficiency in the (English) language and wasting their lives. They are subjected to physical weakness. Their intellects become rusted for want of use. If a fourth of the trouble taken to gain proficiency in English is taken (in the matter of vernaculars) there may arise amongst the Indians learned scientists, scholars of vernacular languages, and great poets. . . The Japanese language has not made any greater progress than our vernaculars and yet when the Japanese could import into their language all the great knowledge of the west how is the same work impossible for us? . . . One of the objections raised against introducing vernaculars as the medium of instruction is that disputes may arise between people who speak different languages. No observation can be more short-sighted than this. The Andhras need no answer for such an objection. Instead of differences arising in the country, vernaculars will prosper and contribute to the prosperity of the country.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

Elementary school masters.

45. The Andhraprakasika, of the 12th July, says that the Government of India have failed to improve the hard condition of elementary and secondary school teachers, and prays that their status may be raised by raising their scale of pay.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 13th, 1917

Education in India and in England.

46. After an appreciative reference to what is being done in England in the matter of education, the Manorama, of the 13th July, points out that in no other country is the pay of the schoolmaster so small as in India, and that it is not known when and how the Government of India would utilise the amount of thirty lakhs of rupees set apart for the purpose of increasing their salaries, and asks when the Government will realise the truth that the prosperity of a country depends on the progress it makes in education, and that those who are indifferent in this matter will be causing the downfall of their country.

(e) Local and Municipal.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

Water-supply in Madras.

47. Referring to the notice published by the President of the Corporation of Madras resuming the old practice of supplying filtered water mixed with unfiltered water to the city, the Swadesamitran, of the 11th July, observes:—The Corporation has found it difficult to supply the adequate quantity of filtered water to the city and is now arranging to supply filtered water mixed with unfiltered water as before. If what the Health officer says is true, this will result in an increase of death-rate, and nothing else is necessary to prove the incompetency of the Municipal authorities. The President, however, warns that the water should be boiled before use. But have the masses education enough to understand the benefits of using boiled water? We have kept them in ignorance and, when occasion requires, expect them to possess scientific knowledge. The solution to the present problem is to construct some more filters. But there is no money. The Corporation should avoid any other item of expenditure and consider the feasibility of undertaking this expenditure which is inevitable.

The Muslim Dutan, of the 14th July, reproduces the above.

MUSLIM DUTAN, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 11th July, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Hindu of the 10th idem on the subject of water-supply in the city of Madras.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

The same paper also publishes a communication from a correspondent on this subject dwelling at length on the difficulties felt by the people on account of the inadequate supply of water to the city especially on the day of the last lunar eclipse when the water was completely stopped, and remarking on the incompetency and indifference of the Municipal authorities and on the very large sum of money belonging to the rate-payers which in his opinion has been wasted in connection with water-supply.

The Lokopakari, of the 16th July, writes:—The people of Madras are put to great inconvenience on account of the intermittent supply of water in the city. There is no regular supply even during the hours notified by the Corporation. It is, indeed, due to the want of attention on the part of the Corporation authorities. The executive officers of the Corporation are stated to have ordered the supply of filtered water mixed with unfiltered water. If the quantity of filtered water falls short of the requirements of the city, it is the duty of the Corporation to increase the number of filters. It is, indeed, strange that, instead of doing this, they should say that they would supply filtered water mixed with unfiltered water.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Water-supply in the city of Madras.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 11th July, refers to the inconvenience caused to the Madras public by the intermittent supply of drinking water, and states that if this state of things should continue for sometime longer, the confusion from contagious diseases in Madras will become indescribable. . . The pay of the Engineer is being raised in proportion to the reduction in the supply of water. It is cruel to bring about this scarcity of water. Taxes are increased without proportionate conveniences being afforded. The Commissioners should now look to the convenience of the public or they will be dishonouring their position. We are glad to learn since sending the above matter to the press that the authorities have directed a constant supply of a mixture of both filtered and unfiltered water. But it is regrettable that they could not supply pure water in Madras, which is in this respect far behind Bombay and Calcutta. It is intolerable that an unlimited amount of peoples' money has been spent without providing corresponding comfort to the people. We suggest that the Madras Corporation should hereafter at least see its way to provide the people with a constant supply of pure drinking water.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

Water-supply in Madras.

48. The Andhraprakasika, of the 10th July, refers to the order of the Corporation of Madras, directing that cows should not be kept within the city, but that they should be kept outside its limits in places set apart for the purpose. This order, it says, not only inconveniences the shepherds and consumers of milk, but it is an inauspicious order inasmuch as it requires the shepherds to drive the cows, to which people attach a religious importance out of the city. The paper fears that the authorities might have made the order because there was none to speak on behalf of the shepherds. Perhaps they had in their minds the convenience of the Europeans only who live in gardens. . . We pray that the authorities will reconsider the order and allow the shepherds to keep the cows within the city limits, only requiring them to keep them cleaner.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Cows.

(h) Railways.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

49. The Hindu Nesan, of the 10th July, publishes a communication from a correspondent on this subject, in the course of which the following observations occur:—The work of this railway was completed some eight months back, and it is indeed highly regrettable that the line has not yet been opened for traffic. As enormous sums of money have to be sent for such items of expenditure as the purchase of coal and the payment of the station-staff, motor railways are run in several places. It will be a great convenience to the public if a motor railway runs between Vedaranyam and Tirutturaippundi at least once a day. As the railway work was being carried on hurriedly, people relying upon this traffic sold their carriages and are now helpless. Tne few that own carriages have availed themselves of this opportunity and increased their rates of hire. Great difficulty has thus been caused to the poor. It will, therefore, be a great boon to the public if the South Indian Railway would, in consideration of the inconveniences caused to the people, run at least a motor railway before the next Adi-Puram festival.

The Tirutturaippundi-Vedaranyam Railway.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

50. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 12th July, says:—It is said that hitherto the stationmaster of Kurichedu used to be paid a mamul of Rs. 2 for every waggon supplied, for exporting cotton, etc., produced in the Darisi and Podili divisions. But it is to be regretted that in their anxiety to export the produce, the merchants are obliged to pay anything demanded by the stationmaster, on account of scarcity of waggons. The merchants prefer exporting their goods by road to exporting them by rail under such circumstances. May the Railway authorities put an end to such absurd mamuls.

Railway mamuls.

(k) General.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, writes:—Although the Secretary of State is holding a position superior to that of the Viceroy and the members of his Council, the Government of India are indeed free to act as they like, except on occasions when it would be prejudicial to the interests of England, so long as there is a Secretary like Mr. Chamberlain who says that the Government of India will do their work properly and that he is responsible for whatever they do and gives up his powers of control. The report of the Mesopotamia Commission proves that the administration of the Government of India is productive of evil both to India and the British Empire on extraordinary occasions, as they are responsible only to the Secretary of State, who is at a very great distance, and not to anybody on the spot. As soon as war was declared, most of the army and ammunition in India were sent to the battlefields in France, Egypt and East Africa. Thus, after the military strength of India was reduced, the idea of attacking the Turks in Mesopotamia was started. As sufficient succour was not sent to General Townshend, his army fell into the hands of the Turks. There were not adequate conveniences to render medical aid to the wounded. Who is responsible for all this? Lord Hardinge says that he remained quiet as he considered that his intervention in military matters would be misunderstood. Was Lord Hardinge the only person in the Government of India? What were the other members of the Executive Council doing? The London Times condemns their action in having neglected their joint responsibility and allowed their powers to be appropriated by the military authorities and gone to air themselves in the cloudy heights of Simla. What is the reason for their not realising their responsibility and their inability to manage such important affairs as those relating to the war? There are none here to question them. In England questions are every day asked in the Parliament about the conduct of the affairs of the Military department. Therefore the Ministers have to be very careful, and they fear condemnation by the Parliament. But as this is not the case in India, it gives room to the executive authorities to act as they like. In India also, if the Legislative Councils were to meet every day for half the number of days of the year, and the members of the Executive Council realise that it would not be possible for them to get on in their Council unless they secure the regard and confidence of the members of the Legislative Councils, will they resort to the height of the hills as not to hear the voice of the people, leaving the work of the several departments to be carried on as usual? The Government stubbornly resort to the hills, although protests have frequently been made that such an exodus dissociates them from the people. It is said that the brain can set itself to think about the big questions relating to the administration of the country, only when they are in a cool and breezy place! Are not a great many of the Europeans who are attending to responsible duties doing their work properly without resorting to the hills in summer? The reason for such conduct on the part of the Government is their being not responsible to any one here. It will not therefore be possible hereafter for the bureaucracy to govern the country with all the powers in their hands. Administration on the usual lines can no longer be possible unless the Government of India becomes responsible (to some one here), as is the British Cabinet to the Parliament in England.

The rule of the bureaucrats.

Internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

52. Referring to the explanation given by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab for issuing certain orders in connection with the publication in the newspapers of the proceedings of a meeting held at Lahore to protest against the internment orders of the Madras Government, the Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, observes:—The orders of the Punjab Government referred to above and the reasons now given for the issue of such orders are strange. We do not understand what wisdom there is in objecting to the publication in the newspapers of speeches which have been heard by a large number of people at the meeting. It is now quite evident that the Government were not in a position to understand that the determination and perseverance with which the people agitate for Home Rule are not opposed to the sense of loyalty innate in them. It is now also clear that the bureaucrats have without reason formed mistaken impressions of the feelings of our popular leaders, and are adopting repressive measures. How is it possible for the authorities in a Government where the popular opinion does not prevail, to realise thoroughly the true mental condition of the public? It is not an administrative policy that can be accepted by all to entertain false suspicions about the loyalty of the people and on this flimsy basis adopt repressive measures and then to offer an explanation for their action. It will be seen how dangerous it is for the authorities to presume that repressive measures such as the Defence of India Act have been enacted for being enforced only on such occasions. It will also be clear how incompetent the authorities are to rightly grasp the political situation.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

The Kaliyugavartamani, of the 23rd June, and 7th July, reproduces the observations of the Swadesamitran of the 23rd June, on the reply of Mr. Chamberlain to Sir A. Williamson in the Parliament regarding these internments, which are abstracted in paragraph 8 on page 1847 of Report No. 26 of 1917.

KALIYUGAVARTAMANI, Madras, June 23rd & July 7th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, publishes the proceedings of the meetings held at Tanjore and Tiruppur and in the village of Panditharkkudi, to protest against these internments and the repressive measures adopted by the Government. A resolution to take a vow for purchasing only swadeshi goods is reported to have been passed at the meetings held in Tanjore and Tiruppur. At Panditharkkudi, one of the speakers is stated to have observed that it is a mistake on the part of the Government to have thought that the Home Rule agitation would cease with these internments.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

The Swadesamitran, of the 14th July, publishes in Tamil the report of the proceedings of a public meeting held at Tiruvallur to protest against these internment orders, in which a vow to purchase swadeshi goods alone is stated to have been taken.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

The Swadesamitr an, of the 17th July, publishes in Tamil the proceedings of public meetings held on the 16th idem in different centres in Madras to protest against these internments, which appear in detail in the Hindu of the same date.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, publishes a Telugu version of the letter of Dr. V. Varadarajulu Nayudu, Tiruppur, appearing in New India of the 6th July, under the heading "Police and protests".

Internments.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 14th, 1917.

With reference to the going of Mr. E. L. Ayyar and Mr. Baptista to England and similar moves, the Kistnapatrika, of the 14th July, observes:—We may firmly assert that our leaders are bent upon securing the emancipation of the interned persons and of our country. An American, we are told, has allowed Mrs. Besant credit for Rs. 1,20,000 in the London Bank.

Internments.

ANDHRACHANDRIKA, Proddatur, July 5th, 1917.

The Andhrachandrika, of the 5th July, writes under this heading:—At last, the Local Government have restrained the freedom of Mrs. Annie Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia. It seems that the Government are not themselves able to determine the grounds for their action. On the day previous to that on which the order of internment was issued against this trio, Lord Pentland's Government published a communiqué on behalf of Lord Pentland as President of the Legislative Council, in which they accepted that the ideal of self-government was a proper one for India. They declared that they had no objections to constitutional agitation calculated to train up the people for it, but indicated that they were displeased with the methods of some. They said they could not show any toleration towards those who make it their business, to calumniate the Government and, by covert suggestion, put a perverse interpretation on their acts. They declared as strictly condemnable the demand for complete independence for India, all at once, after the war. Nowhere has it been stated that the expression "Home Rule," or the expression "self-government" or "swaraj" as used by the National Congress and the Muslim League, means complete independence. It is strange that such a meaning has suggested itself only to the genius of great personage who drafted the Government communiqué. Forgetting that, if he wanted to maintain his self-respect, he should keep his official life impartial, he ascribes to others ideas which were not in their minds, following the example of disputant school-boys. If, leaving this aside, we take "complete independence" to mean only the complete independence enjoyed by the members of the Empire, who is the writer of this communiqué to determine by how many steps such independence has to be secured? And how is the ruler of a province like the Governor of Madras competent to do so? Have they had a peep into the minds of the Indians who have to obtain self-government, have they dived into the minds of the English people who have to grant it, or, have they entered into the mind of Providence which ordains everything? Granting that they have dived into anyone of these and arrived at the opinion that self-government could be granted by some instalments, can this opinion be a law and those who, in contravention of it, hold that some steps, say four, ten or all, may be curtailed, be deemed to have broken the law? Has England which has vouchsafed freedom of thought to everybody ever tolerated this strange love of authority, or can she? Why did Lord Pentland descend to this inconsiderate policy? Did he forget, on account of the bureaucratic methods prevailing here, that he belonged to the Liberal party? While he declared that he did not intend to decide by how many steps self-government is to be granted, could it be just on his part to blame in the same breath those that carried on a sacred agitation, not indeed for complete independence but for a single step towards it, in the name of Home Rule. Is it proper to taste a bitter thing with a mouth which retains the sweet relish? Left without a means for punishing those who calumniated the Government, properly and publicly, Lord Pentland had to seek the aid of the Defence of India Act, which is a war measure. Was it not recently stated in the Imperial Legislative Council on behalf of the Government that this Act was passed to meet the exigencies of the war in Bengal and the Punjab? What horrible contingencies have come about so soon calling for its application to ordinary matters in this peaceful presidency? Mrs. Annie Besant's paper has deposited a security of Rs. 10,000. Could it not have been forfeited? Could not Mrs. Besant and others have been tried under ordinary laws? Did the Government fear that they could not make out a case against them in the law courts? In such a case, why should they think of putting persons to trouble? Could they not have left them alone? Was the Government under any danger if the influence of Mrs. Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia was not somehow suppressed? Gentlemen like Lord Pentland might think that the British Government was based upon such weak foundations, but none of the Indians, who are loyal to the Crown think so. Indians cannot but, all, regret the short-sightedness and the self-deluded policy of Lord Pentland's Government which tries, so needlessly and groundlessly, to supress by the exercise of special powers of authority a constitutional agitation, which can never stop. The general talk is that the bureaucracy has interned Mrs. Besant and Mr. Wadia to kill New India and the agitation for Home Rule, and Mr. Arundale, to suppress the national education propaganda. So be it. The Indians who know the path for national progress may for a moment feel sorry for this, but they cannot fail to find their way further, the very next moment. The only reply that they can give to Lord Pentland's Government is to march forward carrying on their constitutional agitation as usual, with a calm and courageous mind and a devotion to the cause of freedom. The high road (to their goal) is to distribute among ten of themselves the work that New India, Mrs. Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia had been carrying on, and to carry it on with re-doubled vigour. It will then be plain how long the bureaucracy will go on suppressing constitutional agitation and themselves prove to be the cause of their fall.

The internment of Mrs. Annie Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia.

Dravidan, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

53. Adverting to the meetings held in different parts of the country to condemn the action of the Madras Government in interning Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues, the Dravidan, of the 9th July, observes:—Can such protest meetings be considered to be seditious or not? Do not these meetings bring into contempt the administration of the Government, or endanger the safety of Government, in so far as their action is criticised at such meetings as being unwise and unjust? These questions are difficult to answer. When with the help of our commonsense we consider these questions, we will see that such meetings are seditious in their character and tend to lower the prestige of the Government in the eyes of the ordinary people. People of low status have no powers of discretion, and merely echo the opinions of certain vakils and merchants who have learnt the English language. These have a high opinion of the laws of the British Government and are devotedly attached to the King-Emperor. These protest meetings encourage such persons to speak disparagingly of the actions of the British Government, and infringe their laws and create disorders and riots. The orders issued by the Government for the internment of Mrs. Besant and others were the means sought with the advice of great officials to avoid danger to the public safety. The Government anticipated danger to the country and to avert it had recourse to these means under the Defence of India Act, and in the protest meetings that are held these acts are being spoken of as being reprehensible. The meeting of Home Rulers in different parts of India forebodes danger. It is a bad omen. If the Government should still remain quiet and take no notice of these protest meetings, they will suffer for it afterwards. If they take action now, there will be no necessity to say that it is too late. Is it not good to nip the evil in the bud? Though Home Rule Leagues are condemned as being unconstitutional, there are many who have declared that they are permanent members of such leagues. Their heroism and their willingness to sacrifice their life can be tested only by time and incidents. Though they are aware of the results of seditious acts, they incessantly continue in their action, so that they may not lose the esteem of their admirers and others. Unless the Government adopt stringent measures now, it will afterwards become very difficult for them to remove the several evils. If something is done now, it will have the effect of checking all evils and troubles. The Home Rulers can, instead of engendering in the ignorant and peaceful people of India hatred and anger towards the Government and rousing them, indeed in a body go to England, the land of liberty and prove before the English public by the mastery of their tongue that the action of the Madras Government is illegal and that their agitation, protest and prayers alone are just!

Protest meetings.

DESABHIMANI, Guntūr, July 15th, 1917.

Protest meetings.

The Desabhimani, of the 15th July, writes:—Large meetings have been held all over India as well as in Madras to protest against the Madras internments. . . Whatever is done the Government is not paying any heed to it. The Governors, the Viceroy and the Secretary of State are at one as regards this matter. There are signs indicating that a despondency has been engendered among the people that no notice will be taken of whatever may be done in India. Educated persons are of opinion that we cannot have our salvation unless and until our leaders proceed to England and represent to the British public our grievances. . . Swadesi vows are also being taken whereby the British public may be made to feel the urgency and pressure of our desires. . . This will also improve the economic condition of India, and supply food for our labourers and our workmen. We therefore point out the need of every one taking the swadesi vow.

The same paper publishes the speech of the President of the protest meeting held at Guntūr which contains the following passages:—The cause that pierces sharply the hearts of the people all over India and agitates them, the order that strikes surprise and grief in the hearts of our countrymen like the thunderbolt that descends from a sunny midday sky, the arbitrary power that throws obstacles even in the path of constitutional agitation, . . . has made us to assemble here. . . The grounds for this internment order are not understood from any speech made by Lord Pentland or order issued by His Excellency. . . It is unjust to pass over all ordinary laws and inflict this punishment under the Defence of India Act. . . It is highly regrettable. . . If such repressive laws are allowed to be easily available, persons in authority will be tempted to have recourse to them when they are enraged at their acts being criticised. . . These orders therefore interfere with constitutional agitation regarding political matters, and so does His Excellency's order prohibiting students from attending political meetings. . . It is regrettable that His Excellency is not well acquainted with the aims and methods of work of the National Congress, the Moslem League and the Home Rule Leagues. . . It is regrettable that our Governor, our Viceroy and the Secretary of State for India should be hostile to our agitation for self-government. It appears that our rulers are of opinion that this agitation has emanated not from the people but from some individuals such as Mrs. Besant, and Mr. Arundale. . . I exhort you to carry on this agitation, with perseverance all over the country till we secure self-government and equality. We have no other and better course.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 11th, 1917.
DESABHIMANI, Guntūr, July 15th, 1917.

The Desamata, of the 11th July and the Desabhimani, of the 15th July, reproduce from the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, the proceedings of the Guntūr protest meeting and the summaries of the speeches delivered thereat, already abstracted supra.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

54. The Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, writes:—It is but natural for the authorities to be excited when they see that the repressive measures adopted by them rouse the feelings of the people and result in a reasonable condemnation of such measures by them. As soon as the people heard that Mrs. Besant and two others were interned, they held meetings at different places to signify the spontaneous outburst of feeling against the measure. Then the authorities not only urged that strong language should not be used at such meetings, but also prohibited the holding of those meetings. We regret to note from the Leader of Allahabad that the restriction caused by the authorities was great in that Province when the people made arrangements to hold meetings in three places there. Again, before arrangements were made for convening a meeting at Farukabad regarding these internments, some of the Police authorities of the place interviewed the leading citizens and asked them not to hold the meeting.

The action of the authorities and the protest by the people.

Have these authorities the right of prohibiting the holding of a public meeting? No. So, twenty seven prominent citizens published a notice for convening this meeting. Letters were individually sent to these persons immediately asking them to see the Collector. Of these only 22 went to the Collector, and we learn that he had a long interview with them advising them not to attend the meeting or to make any agitation. However, the meeting went on peacefully. It appears again that the meeting, which was proposed to be held at Sultanpur, could not be held on account of the strong pressure of the authorities. It must be well observed that something extraordinary happens when the authorities try to prevent the people signifying their protest in a constitutional manner or cause hindrance in the matter. Why should the Government try to prohibit the public from declaring that the issue of the internment orders was not proper?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

The authorities and protest meetings.

The Swadesamitran, of the 11th July, writes on this subject as follows:—From a telegram received today, it is seen that the Collector of Rae Bareli prohibited the holding of a public meeting at the Town Hall of Rae Bareli. The public meeting was held in a dwelling house. The Madras Government thought that the Home Rule agitation was confined to a few attached to Mrs. Besant, and adopted repressive measures with the idea that these would receive the support of the public. Moreover, they led even the Secretary of State to believe this. What is the result of all this? The Home Rule ideal and agitation have taken a firm root throughout the country. Even those who differed from Mrs. Besant in their views have, without hesitation, joined the Home Rule League, to signify that the acts of the league are constitutional, and come forward to support her and the league wholeheartedly and to make any sacrifices necessary therefor. Though Mr. Chamberlain has taken for gospel truth the words of the bureaucrats that this agitation is a dangerous one and is productive of evil, the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Ali Jinnah, the members of the Bombay Presidency Association and others have wired to our Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State for India that the agitation is a constitutional one and has nothing wrong about it. It is not known what the reply of the Secretary of State for India would be. Are not the public condemning the repressive measures instead of supporting them as expected by the bureaucrats? Why, then, should the authorities, who showed such fortitude in the adoption of these measures, try to prohibit the people from freely expressing their opinion on this subject? Is it fair to try to gag the people so that the British public and the Government of India may not find out the truth and rectify the error?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

The action of the authorities and the rights of the people.

Adverting to the prohibition by the District Collector of a public meeting proposed to be held at the Town Hall of Rae Bareli, to protest against the internment orders of the Madras Government, and to the statement made by the Collector in support of his action, that the meeting, if held, would be a source of annoyance besides affecting the public peace, the Swadesamitran, of the 14th July, writes:—The details of the order are not throughout consistent with each other. When the Collector knows that the holding of the meeting is likely to cause annoyance and affect the public tranquility, the order should have been to the effect that the meeting should not be held anywhere. Why then should he have issued an order prohibiting the holding of the meeting in the Town Hall? Whose property is the Town Hall? It has been built only for public use and with public money. When the people have a right to hold a meeting on constitutional lines, we do not know which law provides for prohibiting the exercise of that right. The Collector says that the holding of the meeting is likely to cause annoyance. It is not known to whom such annoyance would be caused. Truly has the annoyance been caused to the people by the prohibitory order. While the allied powers are shedding their blood in the great war to establish the rights of the people, we doubt whether the authorities here have well understood the same.

Referring to the statement reported to have been made, in a communication to the Bombay Chronicle, by Mr. Raghavendra Rao, a vakil in the Dharwar district, a member of that District Congress Committee and the Secretary of the Home Rule League, that rumours are afloat in his district about orders having been issued prohibiting the holding of public meetings in that district except with the previous permission of the police authorities, the same paper comments as follows:—People will not be so much excited if an executive officer occasionally interferes with the rights of the people. If, on the other hand, it is understood that a number of officers, including the Provincial Heads, interfere in the same way, we regret that the people begin to entertain fear and contempt in their minds and are driven to the necessity of condemning the acts of the authorities. Will anarchists or seditionists speak in public meetings? The laws are indeed vying with one another ready to support the institution of proceedings against anything objectionable that may transpire in the speeches delivered in public meetings. While such is the case, is it good statesmanship to go on interfering with the rights of the people without proper forethought and consideration of the consequences, entertaining unnecessary fears? Already the feelings of the people are greatly roused, and we will urge once again on the authorities that it is their duty to see them pacified.

Lokopakari, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Referring to the prohibition of the protest meeting at Rae Bareli and to the holding of the same in a dwelling house, the Lokopakari, of the 16th July, observes that this shows that the authorities have issued an order to no effect, that it would be more honourable for them to be indifferent in the matter, and that it would be futile for the Government to try to suppress the Home Rule agitation as it has already spread throughout India.

The same paper, while referring to the public meetings, which are held to protest against the orders of the Madras Government interning Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues in different places, observes as follows:—Certain Provincial Governments are coming forward to prohibit these protest meetings. The Government thought that, by the internment of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues, the strength of the Home Rule party would be affected. Their action has, on the other hand, caused great excitement contrary to their expectations, roused people from sleep, brought together the moderates and the extremists, and made the Muhammadan and Hindu patriots strive for the same object. All parties have decided to join together and steadfastly work for the Home Rule cause. Some Provincial authorities, not realising the present situation of the country, are, without discretion, prohibiting the holding of public meetings in connection with the internment of Mrs. Besant. It will indeed be a cause for unnecessary agitation that the authorities do not recognise that the Defence of India Act was not intended to be used on these occasions. The authorities are not unaware of the fact that the Home Rule movement cannot be suppressed by these repressive measures.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

Home Rule League.

55. The Swadesamitran, of the 12th July, reproduces in Tamil the letters written to Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar by Mr. S. Ganapativelu of Kombai, Periyakulam taluk, Madura district, and by Mr. Tahi Ram, Zamindar and Honorary Secretary, the Punjab Zamindars' Association, the former of which contains a request for permission to organise a Home Rule League in Kombai, and the latter a suggestion for the publication in the vernaculars of the pamphlets of Mrs. Besant on the Home Rule movement. Both these letters appear in the Hindu of the same date.

The same paper also reproduces in Tamil the letter written on the work of the Home Rule Leagues by Mr. M. B. Vasudeva Ayyar, Secretary, Home Rule League, Salem, which appears in the Hindu of the 11th July 1917.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Swadeshism.

56. The Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, publishes from the pen of a correspondent the proceedings of a public meeting held at Kumbakōnam on the 7th idem under the presidency of Rao Bahadur N. Krishnaswami Ayyangar, when Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar is reported to have referred to the services rendered by Mrs. Besant to this country, the action taken against her by the Government and the prohibitory orders issued in Lahore, Delhi and other places against the holding of meetings to express the sympathy of the people for her and the publication of proceedings of such meetings in the newspapers and to have exhorted all those present to take a vow to buy only swadeshi goods, in the interest of the progress of the people.

Swadeshism.

The Swadesamitran, of the 12th July, also publishes, as reported by a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held on the 10th July 1917 in Kumbakōnam, under the auspices of the Swadeshiya Pracharana Sabha, to advocate swadeshism, at which a vow is reported to have been taken by those present to purchase only swadeshi goods.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

Swadeshism.

The Dravidan, of the 13th July, deprecates the idea of taking the swadeshi vow in the frenzy that Mrs. Besant has been interned, as it is not practicable to keep up to it, seeing that several things, such as medicines have yet to be obtained only from foreign countries, and observes that the people would do well to gradually provide themselves with the necessary machinery and funds for making these things here alone as far as possible, and then, with the support and co-operation of the benign Government, try to improve the swadeshi industries.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

A committee to examine the needs of India.

57. Reproducing in Tamil the letter written by the London correspondent to the Times of India on the subject of reforms to be introduced in the administration of India, the Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, suggests the desirability of a committee consisting of members of both the Houses of Parliament being appointed to carefully examine and report on the proposals of the Government of India and the representations received on the subject from the two great organizations of this country, viz., the Congress and the Muslim League, and from the 19 representative Members of the Imperial Council.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

The Tittagudi assault case.

58. The Desabhimani, of the 7th July, has the following in English:—"There was a sensational case of assault and hurt transferred to the file of the Vridhachalam Magistrate from Tittagudi in which a clerk of the Public Works Department was the complainant. This was pending here for about three months and was disposed of a few days back by the acquittal of all the accused. The result was received with extreme surprise and dissatisfaction by the people."

DESABHIMANI, Cuddalore, July 7th, 1917.

Brahmans and Home Rule.

59. The Dravidan, of the 11th July, writes on this subject as follows:—What is Home Rule? It means the rule of Brahmans and the death of Dravidians. It means the domination of Brahmans and the degradation of others. Such Home Rule we do not require. There is no necessity for this rule at present. Great are the sufferings we experienced from the Brahmans! It is known to all that many of them are not sincere inasmuch as they talk one thing but feel differently at heart. We hate Home Rule and completely oppose it. It is the English rule that can give us greater benefits. The Brahman is like a person who has a rosary in his hand but secretes a dagger in his arm-pit. We will no longer trust the outward show of such Brahmans.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

Non-Brahman opposition to self-government.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, writes:—"... I am sorry for and astonished at the Justice proving adverse to the Indians, the Brahmans and to self-government. It is the bane of self-respect. It sides with the bureaucracy and, nodding its assent to their policy of 'divide and rule', argues accordingly. ... The Justice must now learn that the bureaucracy is desirous to rule by employing the cunning policy of creating division among the people. The Justice has become an easy subject to this policy. If the Government intends to accuse the paper of having excited racial animosity it is liable to punishment. The editor of Justice is under the hypnotic spell of the bureaucracy and is dancing according to their suggestions. .. The world does not fail to see that 99 per cent of what Justice writes is written under external pressure. ... If the Justice association is able to extricate itself from the chains of the hypnotic spell of the bureaucracy, they will be able to see what great offence they are committing against their mother country and the British Empire. To awaken them from this infatuation and to make them understand that by misleading the Government they are destroying the loyalty of the people, it is necessary that all wise people who are loyal as well as patriotic must work with sympathy to that association. It is very necessary that representatives of the Congress and the Moslem League and men and women from every district should go in numbers to England and represent the state of things in India to the British public."

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Rumoured appointment of Mr. Montague.

60. Referring to the rumours prevalent in England about the appointment of Mr. Montague as the Secretary of State for India or as the Reconstruction Minister, the Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, observes that his appointment to either of these posts would be welcomed by the Indians, that as the Under Secretary of State for India during the years 1910 to 1914 he evinced great sympathy towards them and even toured to India to have a personal knowledge of her condition, and that, as the Reconstruction Minister has also to attend to the reforms to be introduced after the war in the administration of India, his appointment as such will be received with satisfaction by the people.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

The closure of the District Press in Trichinopoly.

61. A correspondent writes as follows to the Hindu Nesan of the 11th July:—While the closure of district presses is under consideration in the several districts, in this district alone does the Collector appear to be very zealous in the matter. He has notified in the District Gazette for July 1917 that the next gazette will issue from the Government Press, Madras. We do not know why this Collector alone should be hasty in the affair. It is known to all that Madras is too costly for people of low salaries to live in. It is not known how the Government have approved of the transfer of the aforesaid press to Madras during the period of war. It is not easy to secure houses in Madras; and now there is a loud cry that water too is scarce. The Government will do well to reconsider the matter and remove the difficulties of the low-paid men.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

Industrial advancement.

62. Adverting to the backward condition of industries in this Presidency and attributing the present opulent condition of Bombay to her industrial advancement, the Dravidan, of the 11th July, observes that the people in this Presidency should not feel depressed by initial failures in industrial enterprises and that in order to attain advancement in this direction, funds should be raised on co-operative lines as it is not possible for a single individual to subscribe the required capital for a business. It suggests that the Government should also co-operate with the people and render them the necessary help in the beginning by starting and working certain industries, by aiding private industries with loans at low rates of interest, by guaranteeing the purchase of things manufactured in private factories and by rendering pecuniary assistance to such industries as do not yield any profit at the outset. It adds that the Government should also secure the services of experts in industries, and improve industrial education in this Presidency and, paying them from the Government funds, arrange for frequent inspections by them of these industrial institutions.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Extension of the term of office of the Governors of Madras and Bombay.

63. Referring to the reason for the extension of the term of office of the Governors of Madras and Bombay and to the statement made by the Englishman that this extension is, indeed, good for the country as both the Governors are men of good capacity and sound judgment, the Swadesamitran, of the 9th July, reports the Bombay Chronicle to have remarked thereon as follows:—Why has not the term of office of the heads of other provinces also been extended for the same reason? In spite of the restrictions in force in the matter of sea voyage, Lord Pentland told Mrs. Besant that arrangements would be made in her case for safe voyage to England. He showed no hesitation in giving this assurance. Perhaps these restrictions do not exist in the case of Mr. Bupendranath Basu and two others who have been nominated to the Council of the Secretary of State for India and in the case of Sir Reginald Craddock who will shortly return to India as the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Adverting to the extension of the term of office of the Governor of Madras, the Dravidan, of the 10th July, writes:—Lord Pentland has done great service to this country. He was a Member of the British Cabinet before he left for India.

He is one of those who seek to advance the interests of the people. He was of great assistance to Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, who gave self-government to South Africa. He won a good name as the Governor of Madras and has earned the reputation of being good and great even at this time when it is not possible for one to earn the same. He has evinced great interest in every movement having a good object in view. He attended the Congress when it met here in 1914 and was the first head of a province to attend a session of that assembly.

64. Referring to the charges brought against Lord Hardinge by this Commission, the Dravidan, of the 10th July, writes:—Lord Hardinge is a very good man. He always cared for the well-being of India and the progress of the Imperial Government. Indeed the difference in the internal condition of India at the time he came here as the Viceroy and at the time he left India bears testimony to his greatness, popularity and capability. It is our view, therefore, that, instead of our being grateful to him for all the services rendered by him at that time of pressure, we should not unnecessarily wound his feelings on account of the faults of others.

Lord Hardinge and the Report of the Mesopotamia Commission.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

In commenting on the statement of Lord Hardinge on the report of the Mesopotamia Commission, the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, remarks that Lord Hardinge who had both the future welfare of India and the interests of the British Empire at heart could never have neglected his duty at a time when the Empire was plunged in a great war. It says:—We already remarked that it is an act of jealousy to reprove Lord Hardinge who did so much for the war, devoting all his time to it. The statement made by him astounded the House of Commons. The Times also declared him innocent and praised his administrative skill. . . It will be well if hereafter at least, the Anglo-Indian papers cease to make jealous remarks about Lord Hardinge.

Lord Hardinge.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 9th July, says:—The words of Lord Hardinge that India was bled absolutely white during the first weeks of the war cannot but attract the attention of the Government. . . Lord Hardinge was able to govern India with an army of fifteen thousand white soldiers. At that time the Germans were making conspiracies in India. They tried to persuade the Amir and bring ruin to the country. The north-western frontier was a menace to the rulers. It was possible only for Lord Hardinge under such circumstances to send away the armies to the European theatre and govern the country in peace. We, therefore, think it improper that Lord Hardinge should be found fault with by the Mesopotamia Commission. It was unjust that the commission should have ignored the telegrams that passed between the Secretary of State and Lord Hardinge in October 1915. The Government of India suggested that the army of General Nixon should not go beyond Kut. It is unjust to ignore this and throw the whole blame on Lord Hardinge, who, in spite of many difficulties, stood by his post and governed the country in peace. We pray that the Parliament will take into their consideration the facts adduced by Lord Hardinge before giving their opinion on the Mesopotamian question.

Lord Hardinge's statement.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

In an article giving a summary of Lord Hardinge's reply to the report of the Mesopotamian Commission, the Mysore Star, of the 15th July, in the course of a leading article says:—Although loyalty is inherent in the Indians, it is due to the statesmenship of Lord Hardinge that it produced results so beneficial to England and India alike. It is impossible to overrate the value of Lord Hardinge's services in this connection. If, therefore, the report should overlook the help rendered by India and cause a blot on Lord Hardinge, it will doubtless be regarded with the deepest regret by the Indians no less than by Lord Hardinge. If Lord Hardinge should receive any blow consequent on this report, surely, it will hurt the Indians doubly. Lord Hardinge's words that he relied also on the verdict of his Indian fellow-subjects on his administration have further emphasised his esteem and regard for Indians. Even if unfortunately there have been some slight faults in his administration, the Imperial authorities will have recognised India's losses and sacrifices in this great war, if, in view of the valuable services rendered by Lord Hardinge, the Parliament as well as the Cabinet should affirm the irreproachable nature of his Viceregal regime.

Lord Hardinge.

MYSORE SATAR, Mysore, July 15th, 1917.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 18th, 1917.

In a leading article on the same subject, eulogising Lord Hardinge's Viceregal regime, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 18th July, says:—It is during his time that the people came to be in earnest about Home Rule. Some people who are alien to British traditions accuse him of being responsible for the cry of Home Rule and of having granted privileges to Indians which are prejudicial to British authority in India, and they urge that he should be taken to task for all this. Some journalists who are advocates of autocracy hold that Lord Hardinge is guilty of having made the Indians expect privileges which cannot be granted to them, and of having lowered the prestige of the Government. These people are the foremost among autocrats. Some people are wholly blind to all true statesmenship; and these are condemning Lord Hardinge's regime. If Lord Hardinge had not thrown light on the principles of British justice and if he had brought about any differences between Indians and Englishmen, the latter would never have had the help which they obtained from India in the present crisis. It is owing to this view of things in the United Kingdom that the Viceroy and Governors here have kept the advocates of Home Rule in confinement. It is evident that these officers are not by themselves autocratic, but that they act as they do, owing to the instigation of others who are so, and will thereby bring their own name into disrepute. That is why Mrs. Besant said that His Excellency was not personally to blame, but had nevertheless done a great disservice to the empire. The highhandedness had not its desired effect. Those who were for Home Rule at heart alone were forced to avow it openly. Germany seeking to profit by mutual ill-will among the European States, entered this war, lost tens of millions in men and money, and is now suffering untold distress, being unable either to make peace or to continue the war. We very much regret that the authorities in India are in a similar frame of mind owing to the evil advice of some autocratic Anglo-Indians. The safety of the empire lies in the continuance of the liberal policy enunciated by Lord Hardinge. Those who fail to realise this and seek to condemn Lord Hardinge and lay the foundation of autocratic rule are, without doubt, the worst enemies of the empire.

Dravidan, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

65. In an article on the mode of eking out a livelihood contributed by a correspondent to the Dravidan of the 12th July, the following observations occur:—Many are the non-entities that live by eating the bread and wearing the clothes we give them and yet call us sudras without any diffidence. Many are the priests who work in our temples, maintain themselves on our money, and yet are displeased with us. Many are the Brahman youths, who prosecute their studies with our financial aid, pass the examinations, enter the Government service, rise high in their position and power, but do not condescend to speak to us when they see us or to come to us when we call them. Alas! Should the money of our people be spent in this way? Are there in this world men who are so ignorant as to water a field of grass? Why not throw our money into an ant-hill or into the bushes rather than give it to these low men who have no gratitude? All our sastras declare that there is but one swami (God). But in our Dravida country all Brahmans are sāmis (Gods).

Brahmans and Non-Brahmans.

The man who, in hotels, cooks and serves our meal is a sāmi; the man who supplies drinking water on the railway platform is a sāmi; the man who sells sweets is a sāmi; and the man who cringes for alms is also a sāmi. Thus everywhere we see sāmis. In short, every Brahman is a sāmi. When we see a Brahman, we greet him as sāmi. It does not strike us that all these are unwise acts. Just as we call a person who is stone-blind a man of good vision, we call the Brahman, who has all vices in him, a sāmi. Is this proper?

If everyone, who wears a thread, is a sāmi, even the blacksmith and the potter are sāmis. There is no reason whatever to call an idiotic and obstinate Brahman a sāmi. Therefore let our students and other Tamilians give up from today the bad practice greeting the Brahman as sāmi.

66. The Swadesamitran and the Hindu Nesan, of the 11th and 12th July, respectively, reproduce in Tamil the substance of the interview of the editor of the Mahratta of Poona with Mr. Polak on the condition of the Indians in South Africa, which is published in New India of the 11th idem.

The situation in South Africa.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 11th, 1917; HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 11th July, publishes in Telugu the conversation between the editor of the Mahratta and Mr. Polak, in which Mr. Polak refers to an incident in which an Indian in Johanesburg was pushed down by a European from a tram-car, from the effects of which he died. Mr. Polak says that the Indians took a case like that to the High Court and obtained a decision that the Indians could go in tram-cars. He says that it should not be deemed that all Europeans behave like that. There are many Europeans who treat the Indians in South Africa with regard. But both these classes of Europeans do not like any more Indians landing in Africa. Mr. Polak says that the Indians are not admitted into colleges. He urges that the Indian and the Imperial Governments should help the Indians in South Africa.

The South African Indians.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

67. The Desabhimani, of the 14th July, republishes the comments of the Dravida Patrika of the 4th idem regarding the nomination of Messrs. Bupendranath Basu and Prabhashankar Pattani to the Council of the Secretary of State for India, which are abstracted in paragraph 39 of Report No. 28 of 1917.

Indians in the Council of the Secretary of State for India.

DESABHIMANI, Cuddalore, July 14th, 1917.

68. The Dravidan, of the 13th July, has the following short note:—Now that the views of Messrs. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar and K. R. V. Krishna Rao Pantulu are condemned by zamindars, what do they propose to do? They should either prove that many of the zamindars follow their views, or vacate their seats in the Legislative Council. It seems somewhat curious that the zamindars, who are mostly non-Brahmans, should have elected Brahman landholders as their representatives. Because they have done so, the Brahmans, consistent with their nature, have adopted views advantageous to their own community. These two Brahmans have taught the zamindars the good lesson that they should expect their classmen alone to represent them on the Legislative Council and not rely on others.

The representatives of landholders of this Presidency in the Legislative Council.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

69. Adverting to this resignation, the Swadesamitran, of the 13th July, writes:—Though Reuter has merely wired that Mr. Austen Chamberlain has resigned his office of the Secretary of State for India, we are sure that this country will be relieved a little of its anxiety. It is clear from the Mesopotamia affair that the rule of the bureaucrats has come to be ineffective that even Lord Hardinge, who governed India with great capability and sympathy, had to exercise his political powers only bound by the shackles of the bureaucrats, and that these shackles stand in the way of the aspirations of the Indians being realised. But the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain who, without showing the least sympathy towards our political aspirations, openly and resolutely supported the adoption of repressive measures by the bureaucrats, will dispel the fears of our people to a large extent. We trust that the Prime Minister will nominate to this place one who understands the present requirements of this country, which is an important member of the British Empire, and knows and respects the chief principles of Mr. Lloyd George, viz., freedom and self-government.

The resignation of Mr. Austin Chamberlain.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

Referring to the same subject, the Hindu Nesan, of the 14th July, observes that it would be well and good if a member of the Liberal Party be appointed to succeed Mr. Chamberlain as the Secretary of State for India.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

Referring to this subject the Dravidan, of the 16th July, writes:—The Secretary of State for India might have had some part in the expedition against Baghdad. But this matter is not directly connected with the administration of India. The Mesopotamian affair brought on only an unforeseen responsibility, which the Government of India had to bear with difficulty. It is wrong to think that the Secretary of State or the Governor-General of India is incompetent to carry on the administration of India, merely because the object of the Mesopotamian expedition was not realised. Many papers pray that Mr. Chamberlain will reconsider his resignation and accept his office again, as he has shown great sympathy and love towards India. At the time he was appointed the Secretary of State for India, great doubts were entertained as to how he would manage his business. Yet, as soon as he assumed charge of his office, he worked hard with great zeal and earnestness to ascertain the nature of the Indians and the past and future condition of India, and with his acute intellect he understood the situation very quickly. He strongly supported the cause of India in the matter of cotton duty.

The resignation of Mr. Chamberlain.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

It is not desirable that frequent changes should take place in the administrative machinery of a country. For this reason only, has it been arranged that Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon should continue to be the Governors of Madras and Bombay for some time more. There is not room to think that this arrangement has been made on considerations of the restrictions in force in the matter of sea voyage. There is, however, reason to believe that this arrangement has been made in order that certain measures undertaken by them may be completed in their regime itself. Similarly, if Mr. Chamberlain continues as the Secretary of State for India for some time more, it would help the administration of the country being carried on on the same lines and avert the dangers ensuing from constant changes.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

The Lokopakari, of the 16th July, writes on the same subject as follows:—It can almost be said that during his regime nothing good has been done to India. He has nominated men with no sympathy for the Indians as the Viceroy of India and the Governor of Bengal. He has extended the term of office of the Governors of Bombay and Madras, but has not extended that of Lord Carmichael who governed Bengal with sympathy. From these it will be seen that he acted without paying any heed to the opinion of the people. India will find some relief if his successor belongs to the Liberal Party.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 14th, 1917.

Resignation of Mr. Chamberlain.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 14th July, welcomes, as good news, the message that Mr. Chamberlain has resigned his office.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

"Wanted a declaration of policy."

70. Reproducing in Tamil the substance of the speech delivered by Sir Krishna Gupta when he presided over a condolence meeting held at Calcutta in connection with the death of Dadabhai Naoroji, the Hindu Nesan, of the 14th July, observes:—All the Indian leaders raise a loud cry that the Government should now declare what their political policy is. The Indians are greatly dejected when they see that repressive measures are adopted at a time when they expect many good things from the Government. The words of Sir K. Gupta at this juncture only lend support to the prayer of the people, and it is desirable that the Government should pay regard to their views now expressed by him and make an open declaration of what their administrative policy will be.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

India and Home Rule.

71. The Swadesamitran, of the 14th July, publishes in Tamil the speech delivered by Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji in 1904 on this subject, which appears in New India of the 10th idem.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Indian members in the Executive Councils.

72. The Lokopakari, of the 16th July, observes that rumours are current that the number of Indian members in the Executive Councils will be increased to two, that the nomination of these members by Government is not productive of any good results and that their administration would be highly efficient if, like the members of the Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils, they are also elected.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

The Secretary of State for India and the order of the Government regarding the publication of Mrs. Besant's theosophical works.

73. The Swadesamitran, of the 16th July, reproduces in Tamil the letter written by Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar on this subject, which is published in the Hindu of the same date.

Theosophical works of Mrs. Besant.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, gives a Telugu version of the letter of Mr. Ikbal Narayana Gupta, ex-Secretary of the Indian section of the Theosophical Society, expressing his gratification at Mrs. Besant refusing to have her theosophical works published after being examined by the Government, and expressing his desire that the Government should publish the details of Mrs. Besant's letter of refusal.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The repressive measures adopted by the Government.

74. The Swadesamitran, of the 16th July, writes on this subject as follows:— When the Government interned Mrs. Besant, they expressed that it was not their intention to object to the agitation for Home Rule which is carried on peacefully and on constitutional lines. It was with this object in view that His Excellency Lord Pentland asked the popular leaders to support the repressive measures adopted by the Government. But the action of the executive authorities could not be said to confirm the above view. Police officers and Magistrates are showing great activity in unnecessarily interfering with the holding of public meetings, prohibiting such meetings and the publication in newspapers of the proceedings of these meetings, and in several other ways in preventing the public from manifesting their feelings. These executive officers have exercised the powers which they deemed fit for the occasion and have had for their support Acts such as the Defence of India Act, the Police Act and the Criminal Code. The prohibition by the District Superintendent of Police of the public meeting proposed to be held by the Home Rule League in Arni, the prohibition by the authorities of processions being conducted in the streets of Madras today, and the application of the Defence of India Act by the Inspector of Police, Tuticorin, to stop a meeting at the place may be quoted here as instances in point. It seems, therefore, imperative that we should decide in a court of law the legality of the actions of these executive officers in thus prohibiting, in exercise of the powers conferred on them by various Acts, public meetings of a constitutional character, where the least sound of swadeshi or Home Rule is heard. The Secretary of State for India also has offered the same explanation in the Parliament, as that of the Government of Madras, that popular agitation on constitutional lines will not be objected to. But one reason is being advanced, viz., that, as the Government are bound to take such steps as are necessary for the maintenance of the public peace, they are repressing popular agitation. If that is so, is it the view that, of the several kinds of public acts, the agitation relating to Home Rule alone is dangerous? What, then is the meaning of issuing a communiqué that there is no objection to an agitation for Home Rule that is carried on on constitutional lines? While the meetings of Home Rule Leagues have been held in many places, what reason is there to object to their being held in certain places alone? How can the reason, that the public peace is likely to be affected will in itself be a sufficient reason for obstructing the right of the people to hold public meetings. Rights, when exceeded, will always be dangerous, and is it proper on the ground of such a possibility to deprive people of these rights? It is an open truth that in many public meetings which have till now been held in India, no riot or disorder has ever occurred at any place. Further, there is indeed no obstruction whatever to the Police being present at Home Rule meetings to maintain peace and order as they usually do at other public meetings. It cannot, therefore, be an acceptable procedure to prohibit the holding of Home Rule meetings on the mere ground that danger to the public peace is likely to be caused thereby. The Government have full powers to enforce certain repressive measures which are prejudicial to the rights of the public. It is, however, necessary that the Government should act in such a manner as to create confidence in the minds of the public, that they are aware of the vast difference there is between the agitation for Home Rule, that is conducted on peaceful and constitutional lines, and an agitation which, on the other hand, is dangerous. There are already signs enough to show that the procedure which is now adopted by the executive officers will only tend to the Home Rule agitation gaining stronger ground among the people and not suppress it.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

A change in the angle of vision.

75. The Swadesamitran, of the 16th July, observes:—Mr. Charles Roberts, the Under Secretary of State for India, said at the beginning of the war that there would be a change in the angle of vision which would be favourable to India. It is indeed true that on hearing this the Indians were pleased. The Bengalee has written that the nomination of the Hon'ble Mr. Bupendranath Basu as a member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India may be cited as an instance of this change in the vision, and that we will have many more reforms. But, when we observe the recent acts of the bureaucrats, the utterances of responsible Provincial heads and the attitude of the Anglo-Indian Press, it is a question whether the Home Rule party could have satisfaction or joy. Many have desired that there should be concrete instances to prove that the angle of vision is changed or is likely to change to the better. Now, one thing about the Hon'ble Mr. Basu. He is one of the nineteen members who recommended the abolition of the Council of the Secretary of State. Many will note that he is now going to have a seat in that council. It will be appropriate to quote here the remarks of the Amrita Bazaar Patrika that certain leaders do not consider what becomes of the political ideals of the people and what would be the views of Government, when they approve and accept the paltry reforms which are introduced.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Permission for moving resolutions in the Legislative Council.

76. The Swadesamitran, of the 16th July, writes as follows:—All are aware that, when our popular leaders desire to move resolutions in the Legislative Councils in the interests of the public, leave is not sometimes given for moving them. The Provincial heads have power to refuse such leave and the statute too allows it. But the important questoin is whether the leave is refused on proper grounds. All are aware that the Governor of Madras refused to grant leave to the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar and some other representative members to move a resolution or two in the Council. We understand, from the Leader received today, that a resolution was disallowed there for a curious reason. The Hon'ble Mr. Chintamani desired to move, and asked for permission to move, a resolution in the Legislative Council of the United Provinces to take steps to ensure that the Superintendents of Police do not bring their influence to bear on the Deputy Collectors in the administration of justice in criminal cases. Permission was not granted to him to move this resolution, and a rule was quoted in support of this refusal. An idea may be said to arise in one's mind as to whether Superintendents of Police use their influence in such a way. When there are grounds for the formation of such an idea, it is the duty of the mover to prove the same, and that of the Government to disprove it. It will not be possible for both the parties to fulfil their duties, unless leave is granted to move the resolution. If the people have the least idea or suspicion in the matter referred to in the resolution, other representatives also will support it. Otherwise, none will support it. We cannot commend the action of the Government in their refusal to grant permission to move the resolution. If this resolution is objectionable, the Leader asks for an explanation as to how a similar resolution was permitted to be moved in the Council last year and another is permitted to be moved at the next meeting. The rights and influence of the representatives of the people in the Legislative Council and the advantages that the people may derive therefrom are already meagre, and we will say that it is unfair to see to their being reduced further.

SWADESAMITRAN Madras, July 16th, 1917.

The present situation.

77. The Swadesamitran, of the 16th July, reproduces in Tamil, the speech reported to have been delivered by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya on this subject when he was entertained by the Servants of India Society in Bombay on the 10th idem. The speech is published in the Hindu of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

Home Rule.

78. The Swadesamitran, of the 17th July, publishes an open letter by Mr. Chinnaswami Ayyar, one of the oldest ryots of the North Arcot district to his countrymen on this subject— a translation of which appears in the Hindu of the 18th idem—and trusts that both the authorities and the people would give their best attention to his opinions, as he is one of those who have well understood, by long experience, the condition and attitude of the people in the villages.

Home Rule.

The Desamata, of the 11th July, contains the gist in Telugu of the letter of Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar encouraging the Home Rulers, found in New India of the 2nd July, under the heading "Work for Home Rulers".

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 11th, 1917.

The Theosophical Society and politics.

79. The Swadesamitran, of the 17th July, reproduces in Tamil the letter written by Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar on this subject, which appears as the leading article of New India of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

The evils of western civilization.

80. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th July, reports the Bengalee to have written:—The first thing that Sir Rabindranath Tagore has learnt is that the ideas of nationalism developing in Europe and America are a poisonous tree, to stay under whose shade is to ruin the soul. So the westerners could not realise the brotherhood of man and thus impede his advancement. The present European war is, in the opinion of Sir Rabindranath Tagore, the result of this nationalism.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

Administrative autonomy.

81. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th July, publishes a Telugu version of the article on administrative autonomy by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao, which appears in the Hindu of the 4th July.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

The war loan.

82. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 6th July, says:—The authorities in the Rajoli taluk threaten the people in the villages and collect subscriptions to the war loan. Not less than Rs. 7-12-0 is collected from every ryot, however poor he may be. They are told that if they do not pay, their houses will be raided by the police, that any money paid by them into the Sub-Registrars' offices, etc, will be credited to the war loan, and that their income-tax will be raised. The poor ryots are all complaining. On account of the compulsion of the authorities, we borrow money on interest at 2 annas per rupee and buy war bonds. The village officers assist the authorities and bring the ryots to ruin.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

Parsis are Indians.

83. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th July, refers to the remark of the Statesman that Mr. Dadabhoy Naoroji and his co-religionists are as foreign to India as the British, the same paper says:—The British do not treat the Indians as brother citizens. Indians are not enabled to sit in the same railway compartment as the British. The money that the British earn in India and their pensions should be spent in their own country. They view every Indian question from the standpoint of the English and rarely from that of the Indians. England is their mother country and India is made use of by them to carry out their purposes. They do not make India their abode, and have no love for India as for Canada and Australia. They do not rule the country like the Moghuls from some Indian capital. It is ridiculous to regard the Parsis as foreigners like themselves. . . If the British want to call themselves Indians, they must make India their mother country, be patriotic and work for the realisation of the ideals of the Indians. The Parsis do so. India will protect those who love her, and treat her as her children, just as she treats sister Nivedita and Mrs. Besant. . . It is no wonder that the Anglo-Indian papers which create differences between Hindus and Muhammadans, between Brahmins and non-Brahmins, between ryots and landlords and between extremists and moderates also create differences between Parsis and other Indians. But Indians will not thus be imposed upon. Mr. Dadabhoy Naoroji will always be worshipped by the Indians as a sage. . . May the Statesman know its ignorance and express regret.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

Zamindars and the Home Rule.

84. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th July, says:—It is the object of the advocates of Home Rule to carry on an agitation for it in a constitutional way. . . It is their programme not to hang on others' favour but to find out the means of the welfare of the country and work personally. It is difficult to see if there is anything unconstitutional in this. The Masulipatam Home Rule League required the zamindars who, in their communication, stated that the methods pursued by the advocates of Home Rule were unconstitutional, to show how they were or to withdraw their statement. . . The interests of the Zamindars and those of the general public are identical. The Home Rule movement will help on the advancement of all, and so the Zamindars will help on the advancement of the country by giving their help to the movement. If the Zamindars find anything unconstitutional in the present methods, they must suggest to their erring brethren better methods.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 6th 1917.

The London Times and reforms.

85. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th July, says:—One of the reforms suggested by the London Times is the delegation to provincial Governments of some of the powers now exercised by the central Government. If by this the paper means the grant of provincial autonomy, then the reform is supremely desirable. Another reform is to grant greater liberty to Indians to administer their own affairs. . . . It is not plain to what extent this self-government will be granted. The Times makes it plain unless the Government come down from the hills and mix with the people, the administration will not be efficient. It is necessary that this reform should be put into effect at once. The rulers are considering what reforms they should introduce into the administration. This is just the time when Indian leaders should go to England and place the Indian ideals before the people there. If we lose this opportunity, we will certainly be obliged to have unsatisfactory reforms.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 8th, 1917.

Lord Pentland's speech.

86. The Hitakarini, of the 8th July, says:—Sri Venkateswara Samachar published in Bombay says, as follows, in its review of Lord Pentland's speech:—Lord Pentland is not our King. He is only the Governor of a Province. The authority to amend the laws of India is not in his hands. It is vested in the British Parliament. For this reason his opinion must be his own. Or it should be the opinion of a Local Government. So it is useless to treat it as an evil. When, after the war, all meet together peacefully, mother Parliament will settle the matter. So it is well that all should be peaceful at this time.

The same paper briefly describes the proceedings of the meeting held at Ellore to protest against the Madras internments

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

Freedom for India.

87. The Andhraprakasika, of the 6th July, says:—India will one day have independence but not so soon as the advocates of Home Rule think. India never had independence. The English have imported the idea of independence in this country of internal dissensions, and are carefully protecting it. So long as the benign British are in this country, we need not fear that we will not get liberty. If in the present situation, we sever our connection with the British, the whole country will be in great danger. We commend the words of Count Okuma that if the Indians give up their evil customs and come up to the standard of the English in character, they need not toil for free Government but it will come of itself.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 14th, 1917.

Freedom of India.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 14th July, refers to the statement of General Smutts, "No part of the British Empire should be ruled by the sword. The main principle of the empire must be fellowship fostered under mutual independence," and remarks that the truth of these words will be established only when India, which is a part of the British Empire, is also vouchsafed such a freedom.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 6th, 1917.

The Maharaja of Bobbili and New India.

88. The Andhraprakasika, of the 6th July, says:—New India has written a long article criticising the views of the Maharaja of Bobbili on the Home Rule Propaganda. We believe that this article is unsurpassed in vomiting fire, in encouraging contempt for authority and in teaching disloyalty.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Swaraj.

89. The Calcutta correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, says:—It does not appear that the bureaucrats will easily renounce the powers that they now wield. The speech of Lord Pentland, the Madras internments and similar things have created great commotion in the whole country. From the words of Mr. Chamberlain, it does not appear that the Government are going to reduce this commotion. They have turned a deaf ear to the complaints of the people. The resolutions of public meetings have been consigned to the waste paper baskets. The fact that the terms of offices of the Governors of Madras and Bombay have been extended shows that the Government are determined to disregard the views and wishes of the people and to treat lightly of their dissatisfaction. The arbitrary acts of the Government are beyond all limits. The people are growing more and more indignant. The voice of Dadabhoy Naoroji would have been of some use now. . . . The only way in which we can manifest our gratitude to Mr. Dadabhoy Naoroji is to work incessantly for the attainment of swaraj.

Swaraj.

In a leading article under this heading, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 17th July, writes:—Those who provide money for the administration of the country ought to see that the money is spent in their best interests. Unless they do this, it will not go towards promoting popular welfare. It is said that Home Rule or swaraj or democratic rule is no other than this popular control over the money paid to the Government In the United Kingdom they have this system of administration. The British people in general do not wish that they should have self-government only for themselves and keep Indians alone under autocratic rule. A few among the British, however, have come to cherish this desire after coming to this country. But it can never be fulfilled. The disappointment arising from it will produce calamitous results. We have done the utmost in our power to help the British and their Allies in the present crisis. The proper return for this is self-government or swaraj. Swaraj does not mean absolute automony, but self-government under the British. What we mean is that the Indian administration should be conducted by Parliamentary bodies consisting of popular representatives under the supervision of the British. In Imperial matters the British authorities may exercise all powers; but in all local matters our representatives should have full voice. It is only reasonable that the British Government should consent to this arrangement. Thousands of Britishers who are far-seeing and just are agreeable to this proposal. A large section of the British themselves are agreed that in the absence of any such system one can never ensure the true loyalty of a subject race. That is why Ireland is about to be granted Home Rule. To deny it to us alone would be against the traditions of the British justice. The Indians have given up all their social and religious differences and begun to demand Home Rule with one voice. Some are of opinion that with Mr. Gandhi's formidable and unfailing weapon of passive resistance our country can obtain Home Rule. To unanimously demand Home Rule, despite the opposition thereto by some autocratic persons, and if this demand meets with punishment, to be united in suffering the punishment without allowing ourselves to be swayed by the passions of anger and hatred, and to avow loyalty from time to time, to be wholly indifferent in mind, word and deed to all repression, to persist in the demand universally until it is obtained, to tamely suffer the punishment meted out by autocratic persons,—this is what is meant by passive resistance. There is no harm whatever in adopting this policy. Even if only the leaders of the 300 millions of our population should unite in making the demand, Home Rule will be sure to come. All persons exercising unrestrained authority including the Viceroy will have a check on their powers. We hope that all our Indian brethren will give their earnest thought to this.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 17th, 1917.

90. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, publishes a Telugu version of "the prophecy of a Japanese astrologer" about a new war in 1930 published in the Hindu of the 5th July.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The prophecy of a Japanese astrologer.

The Desamata, of 11th July, contains a Telugu version of the prophecy of a Japanese astrologer about the end of the war found in the Hindu of the 5th July.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 11th, 1917.

The prophecy of a Japanese astrologer.

91. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, says in its leader:—The gist of the speech of Lord Ronaldshay at Dacca is that self-government is impossible of attainment now. The rulers of Madras, Bombay, the Punjab, and the Central Provinces have already said the same thing. His Excellency the Viceroy also asked the public not to waste their time in asking for revolutionary changes. Mr. Chamberlain is an advocate of bureaucracy, and places much confidence in its opinions. His opinions and the opinions of the bureaucracy coincide with one another. . . Lord Ronaldshay is a favourite disciple of Lord Curzon. . . Lord Ronaldshay said at the East India Association that his views had changed and that he would govern the people with sympathy. Reliable information about his sympathy was received by the Amrita Bazaar Patrika, which then ceased to criticise his views and began to praise him. . . In his speech at Dacca, Lord Ronaldshay does not appear to show any contempt on his part for the ideals of the people. It was well that he spoke about self-government in mild language without showing any contempt. But the essence of his speech is not encouraging. Lord Ronaldshay referred to the words of Sir S. P. Sinha. Is Sir S. P. Sinha's words of advice to be followed by the people only or by the Government also? If both are to follow them, will the Government note his words that in ten years India will become fit for self-government and act accordingly.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Impossibility.

In concluding the leader, the paper reproduces the remarks made by Sir S. P. Sinha to Saint Nihal Sing, already abstracted, and remarks that self-government is the goal of both the rulers and the ruled, though they differ as to when India should get it. The paper then exhorts the leaders to go to England and place their views before the British public before it is too late.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore.

92. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, says:—In expressing his sympathy with Mrs. Besant in her internment, Sir Rabindranath Tagore wrote to say that her martyrdom would bring great good to the country and that the grant of a small boon to stop the agitation would not be of much use to the country. Sir Rabindranath knows by experience the happiness of self-sacrifice. When such a great person as Sir Rabindranath gave such an opinion, the Government will do well to reconsider their order and cancel the internments.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 11th, 1917.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore.

The Desamata, of the 11th July, reproduces from the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, its comments on the observations of Sir Rabindranath Tagore on the Madras internments, already abstracted supra.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The Guntūr protest meeting.

93. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, says that a protest meeting was held at Guntūr in which a resolution was passed to the effect that only swadeshi clothes should be worn even at a sacrifice, that the members of the Legislative Councils should not go to the Councils till the internments should be repealed, and that the Home Rule methods should be followed.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Protest meeting at Guntūr.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, publishes the proceedings and summaries of speeches delivered in a public meeting held at Guntūr on the 4th instant for protesting against the interments of Mrs. Besant, etc. One of the resolutions is reported to refer to the necessity of all members in the Legislative Councils absenting themselves from the council meetings to indicate their disapproval of the internments and of the statements made by Lord Pentland in his speech regarding the methods of self-government and political agitation. Another resolution related to the boycotting of foreign goods.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 14th, 1917.

Our essential duty.

94. In its leader under this heading, after briefly describing the circumstances that led to the memorandum of the nineteen members of the Imperial Legislative Council, the general demand for political reforms, the Home Rule movement and the internments, the Kistnapatrika, of the 14th July, writes:—After this, the leaders have all begun to declare, with greater unanimity, in unmistakable terms, with an unhesitating determination, and with unflinching courage that the representation of the nineteen, the self-government resolution of the Congress and the Moslem League, and the keen Home Rule agitation, are all one and the same, that they conformed to law and that they are demanded by duty. . . The abusive writings of the Justice are kindling enthusiasm in the hearts of even those who have been strangers to political enterprise. . . The revival of New India has proclaimed the futility of the repressive acts of the authorities. . . The very words of the manifesto of the zamindars have betrayed the weakness of their cause.

But there is one thing that the people have to note. . . The bureaucracy and the people are both parties before the Parliament. It is the Parliament that has to give a verdict and not the bureaucracy in India. No one is demanding the immediate grant of self-government. What the people demand is that it should be declared that self-government under the British Empire is the goal of Indian administration and that the Legislative Council should be invested with some controlling authority in view of reaching the goal in a reasonable time. The bureaucracy say that the people are not yet fit for it. The British Parliament, that has won the name of the seat of liberty and mother of representative institutions, is the tribunal to decide the question. The bureaucracy have none but the Justice and a few zamindars to back up their cause. Our essential duty is to bring this strong public opinion to the notice of the Parliament. From the replies in the Parliament of Mr. Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for India, it is understood that the Parliament is not acquainted with the public opinion. We doubt whether the cablegrams of the people are duly reaching the Prime Minister. Some of our able leaders must proceed to England to represent the popular cause to the British public. We should not ask for Royal Commissions. What we want is a parliamentary committee. No Indian bureaucrats should be appointed to it and if any one, as many Indian representatives should be added on to the committee. . . We should not think that the time is not opportune on account of war. They have been considering many questions now. They have been reforming the Educational Department and the House of Lords. . . When recently Sir P. Sinha told the Prime Minister of Canada that India had no self-government, he declared that it must be granted that very day. The hearts of the members of the Parliament are now glowing with a desire for freedom. We should not miss such a golden opportunity. The Congress Committee is going to meet at Bombay on the 28th instant and this matter should be considered then.

Paniyam tank, Kurnool district.

95. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, reports that the fresh-water tank of the Paniyam village, Kurnool district, is in a very insanitary condition, that the villagers are suffering from fever which is proving fatal, that the death-rate has risen to three per every day in a population of five thousand, that the inhabitants are more afraid of this disease than of plague and cholera, and that no medical help is forthcoming though the Medical officer of Nandyal paid a visit to the village and that 300 persons died within two months. The streets, drains and lanes are very dirty emitting a foul smell.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

A Revenue Standing Order.

96. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July from Cocanada, writes :—"The Collector has published in the District Gazette in English only the Revenue Standing Order exempting from water-cess irrigation by rain-water collected in pits . . How are the ryots to know this?"

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

A cablegram to the Premier regarding internments, etc.

97. The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, gives in Telugu as well as in English a cablegram sent by the Hon'ble Pandit Motilal Nehru to the Premier communicating the disappointment of Home Rule League regarding the statements of the Secretary of State on recent internments and the Home Rule movement.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Lord Ronaldshay and self-government.

98. The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, gives in Telugu as well as in English the remarks made by the Bombay Chronicle regarding the opinion given by Lord Ronaldshay on the Indian demand for self-government

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Infatuation of nationalism.

99. The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, writing under this heading observes: —"The nationalism in the western hemisphere has forgotten its goal and has adopted as a permanent end of its life a condition of over-watchfulness which should be adopted only temporarily for self-preservation. Instead of, therefore, a feeling of love towards other nations developing the bad qualities of a constant hatred, resentment, fear, etc., have grown up. As the great poet Rabinthra has said, 'It is necessary to be alert like the police when thieves are attempting to enter one's house. But the man who spends his time with anxiety and starts with alarm will suspect every man who walks by the side of his house. Such mental condition is not desirable. It does not indicate a healthy condition' . . . When such a condition (of a society) has come into being the rulers will, owing to a thirst for autocracy and a fear for social opinion, begin to drive the populace as a machine. In this process individual liberty is lost. The western nations have become thus petrified. Hatred for other nations has grown. Every man instead of moving with his fellowman with feelings of brotherhood assumes the character of an enemy. That national spirit which was fostered for helping on the work of perfecting humanity is dragging man down to degradation.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

"Of all the western countries it is in Germany that this self-conceitedness has outgrown proper limits. The people have completely lost their individuality and are made to move like puppets in the hands of the Prussian race . . All knowledge of natural sciences is utilised for the destruction of man and not for ministering to his comforts. . . The brotherhood of man has now begun to emerge from its concealment. The bliss of individual liberty is shining in its glory. Man is preparing himself to embrace his fellowman without looking at him as a fearful demon. Even Germany understands this, but fights for its prestige. . . The people in the western countries are realising the damage done by the impetuosity of nationalism. Many of them have asked Rabinthranath to show them a way out of their degraded condition. But he said that there is no use in replacing one order of things by another. The only means for this end is that each community should think independently for themselves and try to tread in the path of virtue. . . It is necessary that the Indians should take a lesson from the history of the world. All our social, sectional and national movements should flow along proper channels without falling into the sea of disaster as in the west and help the cause of human progress. The national movement of India should proclaim the message of spirituality. The movement should work out its evolution without coming into conflict with eternal bliss."

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Ireland, India.

100. The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, referring to the Irish problem, writes under this heading:—"When the British Empire has concentrated all its forces for gaining a victory in the war, what urgency is there for the Irish problem to be solved now. Resolutions have been sent from Canada on one side advocating the necessity to grant self-government to Ireland. The other colonies have also done the same. While on the other side America has used all its influence for the same purpose. The London Times correspondent giving an abstract of the opinions of the Americans has observed that unless the Irish problem is satisfactorily solved there would be no value for the vow of England declaring that she has entered into the war for upholding the liberties of small States Both in the colonies and in America there are many Irish people who are rich and influential. They have left their own country and are living in foreign countries. It is necessary to satisfy them in order to obtain success in war. . .

". . . What can be the reason for the people of any country not taking similar interest in the matter of obtaining self-government for India? Is a distinction made because the Irish are Christians and are white people? The instance quoted by the Indian Opinion recently serves as sufficient evidence for the fact that distinction of colour prevails among western nations. A native travelling in the same tram-car with a European in South Africa was thrown down from the car and left to die. What a great arrogance prevails! But so long as India depends for national salvation on others it cannot prosper. . . We must exhibit our own genius in the matter of poetry, painting, music and scientific progress and astound the world. There must be born in India any number of Vivekanandas, Ravinthras, Ramamoorthies and Jagadeesa Chandra Boses and make the country glow with their lustre. Which country can then fail to treat us with regard?"

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

Punjab Government Order.

101. Referring to the withdrawal of the order given by the Punjab Government regarding the publication of the reports of the protest meeting at Lahore, the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, observes:—"It is good that Sir M. O'Dwyer has learned the truth now at least. But why is the explanation published? The acts of authorities are incomprehensible to the ordinary people.

102. The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th July, gives a Telugu version of the letter of Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar, proposing Mrs. Annie Besant for the place of the President of the coming Congress at Calcutta. ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

President of the coming Congress.

The Desamata, of the 11th July, publishes in Telugu an article from the Mahratta recommending the selection of Mrs. Besant as the President of the next session of the National Congress. DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 11th, 1917.

President of the next session of the Congress.

103. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th July, says:—The chief object of the members of the Round Table appears to be that the Colonies also should share in the government of the empire. This matter will surely be considered in the Imperial Conference which is to meet after the war. In the meanwhile it is essential that the Indians should acquaint the British people and the British Government with their desires. Until we are granted self-government like the one enjoyed by the Colonies, the Colonies should not be vested with the power of governing the empire. If it is resolved to fulfil the desires of the Colonies, India must be granted self-government. Indian leaders should now plainly say to the British that India will not agree to be governed by five countries. ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

The Round Table.

104. The Andhraprakasika, of the 7th July, says:—There are some auspicious indications to show that the hopes of reforms entertained by the people will be realised. All the papers require the Government to publish the reforms they mean to introduce so that the public may express to the Government their views thereon. From a Reuter's telegram received yesterday, the Ministers are consulting experienced men on the question of these intended reforms. One general head of reform contemplated is to associate the people sufficiently with the administration of the country. . . The Home Rulers who accepted the separate representation of the Muhammadans for bringing about a union between the Hindus and the Muhammadans now want to see the system of separate representation refused to the various communities. It is a pity that the advocates of Home Rule do not even now see that it is such obstinacy that stands in the way of a united Indian nation. ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

Political reforms.

105. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th July, reproduces from the Desamata, of the 4th July, the article on the message of Mr. Ritche, already abstracted on page 1967 of the weekly report. ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

The message of Mr. Ritche.

106. The Andhraprakasika, of the 10th July, says that under the present grading of the offices of Sub-Assistant Surgeons, they have no prospects of promotion and suggests that, instead of making their pay range from Rs. 30 to Rs. 100, they may be paid from Rs. 50 to Rs. 120 in four grades, each Sub-Assistant Surgeon in a grade being enabled to rise to the next higher grade in a space of five years. ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Sub-Assistant Surgeons.

107. The Andhraprakasika, of the 10th July, says:—In our country, as a result of the internments, the swadesi and the Vande Mataram movements are trying to make their appearance, but the profound loyalty of the people of the Madras Presidency will not be shaken by newspaper articles, platform speeches and the threats of other provinces. We pray that the Government will not fear these threats and warnings but will preserve the peace of the general public. ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Loyalty.

108. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th July, publishes in English and the Andhrapatrika, of the 11th July, publishes in Telugu a copy of the cablegrams sent by Mr Jinnah, President of the Bombay Home Rule League, to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State about the Madras internments. ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Cablegrams about internments.

109. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 11th July, criticises the article of another correspondent to a previous issue of the same paper recommending the constitution of Nidadavole as the headquarters of the new district proposed to be formed out of the present Kistna district, which has already been noted on page 1965 of the weekly report. ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

The bifurcation of the Kistna district.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

110. The Andhraprakasika, of the 11th July, says:—The resolutions of the Varnasramadharma Sangham bear testimony to the fact that the Brahmans have made up their minds to keep the Non-Brahmans in as low a social state as the white men intend to keep the coloured races in a low political condition. Our leaders are casting about for means to thwart the attempts of the white men. Do they not mean to tell us that we should see that white men are not benefited by us? Does this not require many newspapers and other means? So also are papers such as Justice required to annul these resolutions of the Varnasramadharma Sangham that are opposed to the interests of Non-Brahmans.

Justice.

ANDHRACHANDRIKA, Proddatur, July 5th, 1917.

111. A correspondent to the Andhrachandrika, of the 5th July, says:—India which formerly occupied a very eminent position has by an irony of fate been reduced to this poor condition. We must undertake not only to devote our whole energy but also sacrifice our wealth and our lives in order to free the country from this state. I wish that the people will adopt the means necessary for the welfare, independence, and protection of the country. . . Our motherland is suffering without independence. Can anybody quietly bear, like a widow on the tenth day of her husband's death, to see his mother insulted by another? He would rather die fighting with him than earn the ridicule of the public. In England every individual is taught politics from his very boyhood and is informed of the extent of his independence. In our country, not only is this absent, but a hard order has been passed that students should not attend political meetings. Ah! This is due to bad times. Is it a sin to serve the mother country? Is it a crime to know in what state it is? Is it disloyal to set it right? I hope that the Government will soon cancel the order. The Justice and the Non-Brahman are reproving Mrs. Besant who has been working for 25 years for the uplift of India. . . Are these not papers that are patronised by the Government?. . . O, great men, do not waste your time in useless quarrels. Try to do away with these ruinous papers. advise their conductors and see your way to reach the goal.

Service of the mother country.

The paper remarks with reference to the above: Though we do not agree with our correspondent in some of his views, we commend his observations as important and afford space in the columns of our paper for a discussion of them.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 11th, 1917.

112. The Andhrapatrika, of the 11th July, publishes a Telugu version of the comments of the Leader on the letter of the Maharaja of Bobbili, which contains the following:—The Maharaja echoes the principle enunciated by Justice Pinhey that "protest meetings are unlawful". In this the Maharaja outstrips Lord Pentland and his colleagues.

Maharaja of Bobbili.

* * * * * *

Is it true that the Government of India have advised the Local Governments to look to help from the members of the aristocratic classes in the matter of working against the Home Rule movement?

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

113. The Andhraprakasika, of the 12th July, writes:—The Government have ordered the constitution of a separate battalion of the Mahars of Bombay, who belong to the depressed classes. What harm is there if they are admitted into the mixed battalion already constituted? We are of opinion that if facilities be afforded for them to mix with other classes, their status will soon improve. We pray that the Government will afford such facilities. We fear that the Mahars will be looked upon with contempt as ever if separate branches of service are created for them. . . When a member of a depressed class becomes a Christian, we respect him, because of the regard that the Government have for Christianity. Everything that commands respect at the hands of the Government commands respect at the hands of the Indians. We, therefore, submit that if the Mahars should be treated respectfully they should be admitted as sepoys into the ordinary battalions. We pray that the Government will adopt this suggestion if they find it just.

The Mahars of Bombay.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

114. The Andhraprakasika, of the 13th July, has a leader on this subject, in introducing which it says:—Before the advent of the British into India, the Hindu kingdom had,

The benefits of British rule.

like the Ganges that flows from the head of Siva to this earth which is full of sin, passed from the great Hindu kings into the hands of the Muhammadans who could not discriminate between good and evil, and had been suffering in many ways.

115. The Andhraprakasika, of the 13th July, reports the Indian Mirror to have written as follows:—It appears that in the conversation between His Excellency Lord Pentland and Mrs. Besant, the latter said that Madras would be reduced to another Bengal. . . If there be any indications of anarchism following such a threat, the Government will not hesitate to suppress it without showing any mercy. When there was anarchism in Bengal, the leaders of the people said that a few misled young men were the authors of it. Those very leaders now agree with those young men and state that if such and such a thing is not done, anarchism will prevail. It cannot be believed therefore that national leaders will establish peace in the country. The conduct of the advocates of swaraj has now become plain. No Indian would join a Home Rule League unless he is a traitor to his King and mother country.

Threats held forth by Home Rulers.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

116. Under this heading, the Desamata, of the 11th July, reports New India to have written:—The sign of the association is to wear the portrait of Mrs. Besant along with the Home Rule sign. Every member has to pray every day that God may enable the association to make the necessary enterprise and sacrifice in the matter of getting liberty. . . The members should observe any two of the principles such as, that they should spread swadeshism; they should deliver one lecture at least every week; they should take one new member at least into the association every week; they should find out those who hoist the Home Rule flag on their houses every day; they should compose national songs and spread them; they should arrange for processions on national days to be fixed hereafter. . .

The Home Rule propaganda, a separate association.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 11th, 1917.

117. Referring to the recent appointments to the India Council, the Mysore Star, of the 15th July, says:—If while increasing the number of Indians in this Council, the men who were chosen for the distinction were insignificant persons, there would have been no particular benefit from the increase. The presence of men of the type of the Hon'ble Mr. Basu and Sir Pattani in the Council, however, is likely to produce some real good. Men of this type are truly able to advice the Secretary of State as to the best means of promoting the advancement of the country. The policy indicated by the selection of such men will doubtless be regarded with satisfaction by all Indians. It will also serve to stop the agitation that the Council itself should be abolished. This is the first practical step in confirmation of the sympathy avowed by the British towards India since the meeting of the War Conference. We may confidently expect that Mr. Basu's presence in the Council will be of great assistance in formulating the privileges to be granted at the close of the war.

The India Council.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, July 15th, 1917.

118. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 13th July, says:—The question of reforms in the administration of India seems to be already engaging the attention of the British statesmen. Seeing the views of a section of the British press, however, we must conclude that the reforms to be introduced shortly are not of a very progressive nature. Although it is the duty of the statesmen to discuss openly the questions as to how far they would grant the postwar reforms demanded by the Indian representatives, and, in case these are not to be granted, what reforms they themselves propose to grant, they have chosen to be studiously silent on these points; and when they are constrained to express their views, they would only say "not this, not that". What are the people to conclude from this? It is true that administrative matters have to be kept confidential to a degree. But, if the reforms that are to come approximate popular expectations, what is the purpose served by keeping them a secret? That we must therefore expect these reforms to be not highly progressive from the point of view of Indian opinion may also be conjectured from the opinion expressed by the London Times. It is not possible to say that the forecast of the reforms as given by this paper would be in accord with Indian public opinion.

Reforms in the Indian administration.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 13th, 1917.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 13th, 1917.

Administrative reforms in India.

Referring to the reforms to be introduced in India as a result of the Mesopotamia Commission, the Manorama, of the 13th July, points out that the third reform suggested by the Commission, which relates to the granting of more liberties and privileges to Indians, is more important to them than any other, but that, as a preliminary enquiry has to be held on this subject, some time must elapse before anything is done to India in this matter; approves of the suggestion that the "exodus" of the Viceroy and of the Provincial Governors to the hills, which is both unnecessary and expensive, should be put a stop to; thinks that, if this had been given up when the war broke out, it would have enabled the Government to offer a large amount towards the expenses of the war, without increasing the tax on the necessaries or without reducing the expenditure on education and sanitation, and that the amount saved by curtailing the expenditure on the hill exodus should be utilised for the improvement of education and sanitation; and observes that Indian leaders should be allowed to take part in the discussions on the proposed changes in the Indian administrative machinery, and that to settle such questions without consulting them will not be consistent with the policy and principles of the British democracy.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 13th, 1917.

Indian self-government.

119. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 13th July, writes:—The Governor of Bombay made known his view of the question of self-government for India; the Governor of Madras gave expression to his and the administrator of the Punjab followed suit; the Viceroy too pronounced his views in the matter. When all these authorities are striking the same note, who would say that it was wrong on the part of the Governor of Bengal to have echoed the same opinion? In his reply to the welcome address presented to him at Decca, His Excellency said that he did not think it practicable that they would get so large a part of self-government as they expected, and that, during his regimé. He reminded the advocates of Home Rule of the words of Sir Sinha as President of the Congress at Bombay regarding the obstacles that lay in the path. Although Lord Ronaldshay's views find support in Sir Sinha's words, they are not in agreement with Lord Hardinge's opinion. When His Excellency advises us on the strength of Sir Sinha's words, it would not be wrong to remind him of Lord Hardinge's liberality. If it is true that the public should respect the views of one who was at one time their leader, it is also true that an administrator should respect the views of one who was once a glorious administrator himself. Further, it is pertinent to ask whether Lord Ronaldshay endorses also the views of Sir Sinha in regard to the reforms suggested by him on the same occasion.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 13th, 1917.

Sanitation in India and in England.

120. After a reference to what is now being done in England in the matter of "public health", the Manorama, of the 13th July, points out that in India where infant mortality is greater than anywhere else, sanitation is equally bad in towns and in country parts, and that from 1914 the Government have, on the plea of want of funds, been curtailing the expenditure under this head, and observes that, while it is the duty of parents to bring up their children carefully and well and of the schoolmaster to pay attention to their physical development, it is the Government that should guide and encourage the people in such matters.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, July 13th, 1917.

India and democratic principles of administration.

121. After stating that the British Parliament is the model after which other Parliaments are moulded, the Yogakshemam, of the 13th July, asks why India cannot still be governed according to the will of the majority, why she should be held in the position, as it were, of a minor even after one hundred and fifty and more years of British rule, and whether democratic principles cannot be applied in the case of Indian administration, and observes that the delay in answering these questions tends to increase the number of impatient Home Rulers, that when a majority of the people become such those who now oppose Home Rule will realise their foolishness, and that therefore it needs no mention that the more the Government delay in answering these questions the less will be the strength of those who now support them.

122. In commenting adversely upon the four resolutions, passed at the various protest meetings, the Nazrani Deepika, of the 17th July, points out that, while the resolution, requiring the members of the Legislative Councils to resign in a body, is a stupid one, that demanding the recall of Lord Pentland, whose term of office, however, has now been rightly extended, is both rash and stupid; that the opposition of the zamindars, landholders, Rajas, etc., to the immediate grant of self-government to India, which forms the third resolution, shows clearly that several great men in India think, and rightly too, that it will not be conducive to her welfare; and that the present Swadesi Movement must share the fate of that which was started at the time of the Partition of Bengal or when Messrs. Tilak and Lala Lajpat Rai were deported.

NAZRANI DEEPIKA, Mannanam, July 17th, 1917.

The resolutions of the Home Rulers.

123. The Kerala Patrika, of the 14th July, points out that the rates of renewal fees, fixed by the Collector of the Zamorin's estate, will cause considerable hardship to the tenants, and that the janmis, few of whom now collect such high fees from their tenants, are likely to follow this example, asks how the tenants could expect to have their grievances redressed, if the Court of Wards too were to act like this, especially at a time when they were clamouring for a tenancy regulation to save themselves from janmi oppression, and hopes that the Collector and the Estate Collector will reconsider the matter and recommend a modification of the rates.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 14th, 1917.

Renewal rates of the Zamorin's estate.

124. The Qaumi Report, of the 7th July, gives a history of itself and in enumerating the difficulties, that have confronted it in its progress, mentions that it has added another sheet to its former dimensions in spite of the fact that the price of paper is rising every day. In conclusion, the writer appeals in the following terms to the community to subscribe to the Qaumi Report.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

The spectacle of hope and action.

For God's sake read, hear, understand and buy the Qaumi Report. I am not its owner; it is the property of the community. It is not my means of livelihood; God provides. Do not blame it for my faults. Look at the revolution of the time and also at its course and circumstances. The time will soon come when the community will have to take a larger share in the affairs of the country, and for that time and opportunity it is Qaumi Report alone that is able to prepare the community.

125. The Qaumi Report, of the 7th July, has the following correspondence with the remark that "it does not hold itself responsible for the views of its correspondents". The latter is as follows:—There was a time when people were inclined towards monarchy, and were under the impression that it was difficult to administer a country without a powerful and independent Sovereign. They were accustomed to bear the tyranny of oppressive monarchs. But the atmosphere has since changed, those ideas have gone, that time too has departed. It is now liberty's turn. People have had enough monarchy and they have no desire to be under a powerful ruler. Rather do they wish to be their own masters. It is a long time since America declared her independence. Then other States followed France and America. Before our very eyes China has become a democracy. Only yesterday Russia raised the standard of government of the people, by the people, and the Powers warmly congratulated her on her achievement. The democratic flag will soon float over every State in Europe. In these circumstances it is not surprising if we Indians are desirous of equal treatment, independence and self-government. In no circumstance does India wish to sever her connexion with her benefactor and teacher, Great Britain. But she does desire that instead of being a contemptible slave of Britain, she should be a free albeit obliged student and given an opportunity of proving her loyalty. India desires no new thing. The object of Great Britain has been and is to educate her for, and to give her, self-government and whereas the time for it has now arrived she is very restless.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 7th, 1917.

We and Home Rule.

Certain short-sighted and selfish writers to newspapers are trying their utmost to convince us on the one hand that we are not fit for self-government, and on the other, they wish to assure the Government that they themselves are the interpreters of the ideas of the public and that the party, singing the song of self-government, is only a handful of people in error.

Alas! that they deceive both the Government and the people and they represent that the real well-wishers of India are the Anglo-Indian papers whose articles are submitted to the Government. Would that newspaper writers understood that in the opinion of high officials real honour belongs to those lovers of liberty who at present consider it advisable to restrain their pens and hold their tongues, or that these are the true interpreters.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 9th, 1917.

The procedure of the Liberal gentlemen.

126. The Qaumi Report, of the 9th July, writes:—Among Mussalmans there are a few such gentlemen who call themselves Liberals, that is to say, they are Liberal Members of the British Parliament. There is no doubt that liberty is a thing to be valued. Every Mussalman by virtue of his religion is a supporter of liberty. In this regard we consider all true Mussalmans to be Liberals. The gentlemen who are imitating the Liberal party, however, are dealing a death-blow to Muslim Independence and by their "new fangled" methods adding to the appalment and regret of Muhammadans.

We observe that the Liberal party has been scattering burning words in support of Home Rule. But have they, at any time, thought of the community as to why its house is on fire and as to who is injuring? They say that the whole of India is clamouring for self-government. But how extensive is this India and on what principle is its geography based? Is this clamour echoing in their logical India or among the denizens of the realm of their imagination? We know nothing about it. But in the India of actuality and in the concrete community loud are the lamentations deploring the backwardness of education, the decline of nationality and the failure of religion. Mussalmans are deploring the waning of their civilisation and education and lamenting desolation of mosques and the hermit's cell. They are heaving deep sighs because of the slackness of trade and labour. A consciousness of slavery is making them shed tears of blood. Have these Liberal gentlemen ever seen these admonitory signs or viewed this painful spectacle? The idea of self-government is as dear as life itself to us and our life is bound up with its hopes, but "Thou art our life, but is there any hope of life?"

"Thou art our life, but can life be depended upon?"

When the life of the community is being involved in disgrace and poverty and when the soul of the community is being bruised by the blows of spiritual decay, what benefit can be derived from Home Rule? The house is on fire, but we are quite unconcerned about it and preoccupied with ushering in the quest.

If in this state of ruin and desolation we obtain self-government, what good is it going to do us? We are listening to the Home Rule cry, but are terrified at the sight of the face of the community? Will the community then have to sigh sadly and say:

"The report of his coming is persistent,
"But today the house is bare."

Have the people who are desirous of being interned or imprisoned for some political fad, ever displayed such readiness and determination in any religious matter? Have the people who emphasise the demand of the Congress and the League ever shown like firmness in keeping the sacred law of God and the Prophet? If they have not done so then remember the question of political freedom can be raised only by the Mussalman who has been benefited by religious freedom. We do not condemn political demands; on the contrary we are strong supporters of them, but we think that they should come first (sic).

The editor asks those who are expressing their grief and sorrow at the internment of Mrs. Annie Besant and others to say if they acted similarly when Mr. Zafar Ali, etc., were treated in like manner.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 10th, 1917.

Why nationality is being destroyed.

127. The Qaumi Report, of the 10th July, writes:—India claims to be the parent of a powerful community and that her children should necessarily be given these rights which have been admitted by the wisdom of international Government. We do not deny the truth of this claim, but are we to look in vain for a practical proof in corroboration thereof.

If dress is a mark of nationality there is no appreciation of the Indian costume in India, for western dress has made us mere imitations in the matter of apparel. If language is the sign of nationality the Hindustani language is colourless as all our conversation and views find expression in a western tongue. If nationality is the name for mutual concord and unity, patriotic enthusiasm in India is dead and all our concord and self-respect are being stamped out by violent contact with alien influences.

Is this the nationality that will procure us national liberty? Is this the nationality in the name of which we shall be able to govern ourselves? India has a nation but no nationality.

We are being assured that the time for the realization of our hopes and aspirations is a long way off. Endeavours are being made to convince us that the stage of "constitutional freedom" along the path of which we are treading day and night is very remote. But how is it that our object is receding from us and the distance to our destination is being lengthened?

Why should such a state of affairs exist, and why should we not govern ourselves? The only logical answer is because we cannot help ourselves. Our nationality has departed from us and we are adopting an alien garb, fashion and style. In fact we cannot bear the burden of these difficulties and we lack the spirit essential to endure the hardships of foreign custom. When we emancipate our souls and bodies from the bondage of mimicry and imitation we may expect time to gladden us with the grant of constitutional freedom.

The chief reason, why Australia and Canada, etc., have obtained constitutional liberty is that they are firmly bound with iron bands of nationality. They regard nationality as a power stronger than powder and shot. In Europe it is nationality that rules and from its angle of vision every question becomes international in its comfort. Here nationality is a political delusion which is established speculatively but is entirely impractical.

In conclusion, the editor emphatically remarks "unless we revive our nationality we cannot obtain liberty, salvation or any kind of advancement. Our own self-forgetfulness blocks our way and the removal of this obstacle is in our own hands. A freedom obtained by foreign means cannot touch (emancipate) our souls. Liberty must be personal and internal."

128. The Qaumi Report, of the 12th July, writes:—Muhammadans had been maintaining silence for a long time but the heat of their patience, which was suppressed in their minds, is now being stirred up and they have begun to give expression to their heart-ache. (A few Muhammadan aspirations.)

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

The editor, referring to the speeches of Doctor Sir Subramania Ayyar, the Hon'ble Raja Sahib of Mahmudabad, Mazharul-Huq, Mr. Muhammad Ali Jinnah of Bombay, and Mr. Fazul Hussain, says:—"There is no doubt that the state of affairs which has hitherto existed cannot continue after the war. Those who are now against reforms will step forward and proclaim that reforms are urgently needed."

He also refers to the revolutions in Russia and Turkey resulting in the overthrow of their respective ruling monarchs, and suggests to the Government the advisability of checking such movements.

129. The Qaumi Report, of the 14th July, has an item on the marginally-noted subject which is to the following effect:—Two or three gentlemen are enquiring whether there is any harm in taking the swadesi vow, and if there is none, why does not the Qaumi Report use its powerful influence in support thereof? ("The swadesi vow.")

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

The editor in reply says:—The swadesi vow and its procedure are opposed to Islam. Mussalmans should never take any such vow. They can, of course, without covenant or vow practise swadesi principles. We shall return to this subject on some future occasion.

III.—Legislation.

130. The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 18th July, in its column of notes and comments, says:—It is imperative that the recent order prohibiting the melting or breaking of (The melting of gold coins.)

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore, July 18th, 1917.

sovereigns should be more widely made known to the people. We do not know what steps the Government of India have taken to this end. The order will get known only among a section of the population which is in the habit of reading newspapers. If the rural population remains ignorant of this order, it will certainly be a great hardship; for it is a practice among the Hindus to use sovereigns as an ornament for the neck. Those who are ignorant of this order will become liable to be punished. It is to be hoped that the Government will refrain from enforcing the order until it gets fully known.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 13th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 13th July, in a leading article explains that in view of the currency difficulties created by the war, it is only reasonable that the Government should take powers to prohibit the melting or breaking of gold coins. The paper incidentally remarks that it is difficult to see why the Secretary of State being a member of the British Cabinet should be paid by India and not by the Home Government as in the case of the other members of the Cabinet.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, July 18th, 1917.

Railway administration in Mysore.

131. In a leading article on the progress of railway expansion in Mysore, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 18th July, says:—In regard to the question of constructing a line connecting Mysore with the West Coast, it seems probable that the line to Bhatkal alone will eventually be decided upon While we heartily appreciate the efforts of the Government to promote railway expansion so as to provide better facilities for trade and travel, it seems to us scarcely expedient to show any great vigour in this direction just at present when the prices of articles to be imported for these works have doubled on account of the war. If the lines already begun and those the preliminaries of which, such as survey, have been finished, are completed, Mysore will have had more than enough in the matter of railways to meet her requirements.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 19th, 1917.

The Home Rule movement in Mysore.

132. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 19th July, writes:—Our readers are aware that the Doddanna School at Bangalore has been placed under the Theosophical Trust. We learn from a correspondent that the educational authorities have stated that the Government would not recognise the school unless they are assured that neither its teachers nor the students will associate themselves with political matters such as the Home Rule movement. Now, our State has Home Rule already. We have no need to trouble ourselves on this account. Our Representative Assembly, our Economic Conference, our Legislative Council are all thorough Home Rule Institutions. It is the duty of all our teachers and students alike to help the progress of these and to promote loyalty towards His Highness the Maharaja as well as the King Emperor. We do not think it expedient to wish for more at present. It behoves all patriots to consider this matter and ensure that there is no room for any sort of agitation during the continuance of the war.

ERRATA.

Report No. 27.

Page 1916, line 51, omit " , " after " blunder ".
" 1916 " 55, insert " a " before " fad ".
" 1919, paragraph 113, line 19, substitute " wafted " for " waffled ".
" 1920 " 114 " 12, substitute " Let sleeping dogs lie " for " Let sleeping do go, lit. "
" 1920 " 114 " 19, omit " as " before " far ".

Page 1920, paragraph 114, line 24, insert "Mandamas" in italics.
„ 1921, line 6, substitute "lease" for "base".
„ 1921, paragraph 115, line 5, insert "," after "said".
„ 1921 „ 115 „ 12, substitute "also should" for "should also".
„ 1923 „ 117 „ 3, omit "truth" after "love".
„ 1923 „ 117 „ 45, insert "," after "but".
„ 1923 „ 117 „ 46, insert "," atfer "Birmal".
„ 1924, line 7, insert "," before "lacking".
„ 1924 „ 14, insert "a" after "however".

Report No. 28.

Page 1938, paragraph 22, line 5, for "admissions" read "admission".
„ 1939 „ 23 „ 34 for "deals" read "deal".
„ 1942, line 7, for "addititional" read "additional".
„ 1944 „ 2, in the first marginal heading, for "Mesers." read "Messrs.".
„ 1950, paragraph 43, line 6, for "drive" read "derive".
„ 1951 „ 45 „ 10 for "No, if" read "No. If".
„ 1955, line 32, for "intend" read "intent".

Issued, 24th July 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 30 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 28th July 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(a) Police—
"Spies"	2027
(c) Jails—
Jails in the Madras Presidency	ib.
(d) Education—
A Rajkumar College for Madras	2028
(e) Local and Municipal—
The Madras Corporation	ib.
The President of the Corporation of Madras ..	2029

II.—Home Administration—cont.	PAGE
(k) General—
The Congress Presidentship	2030
The political situation	2031
The Indian Defence Force	ib.
Theosophy and politics	2032
A protest against secrecy	ib.
The Government of Madras and British Cochin.	ib
The Congress and the Madras internments ..	2033
The Madras internments	2034
Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar	2035
Ireland and India	ib.
The political crisis in India	2036

CONFIDENTIAL

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

Indians in the European Army 2037
A prophecy about the war .. .. ib.
India's gift of £100,000,000 to the war .. .. ib.
Greece .. .. ib.
Germany .. .. ib.
The German air raids 2038
The Russian revolution .. .. ib.
The European situation .. .. ib.
Troubles in China .. .. ib.
German wire-pullings in India 2039
Mr. Austen Chamberlain .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police—
Police administration in India .. .. .. ib.
The Commissioner of Police and the Madras procession .. .. ib.

(b) Courts—
The resignation of Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar of the office of a temporary Judge of the Madras High Court 2040
Pattipadu news .. .. ib.

(c) Jails—
Jail administration .. .. ib.

(d) Education—
The Patna University Bill 2041
Educational department .. .. ib.
A stir in the Caithness Hall .. .. .. ib.
The first-grade colleges of Government in this Presidency 2042
A sad tale .. .. ib.
Vernaculars .. .. ib.
Schools and the Swadeshi movement .. .. ib.
The western educational policy 2043
Education and students .. .. ib.
National education .. .. ib.
Vernacular schools and colleges .. .. ib.
Principals' Conference .. .. ib.
Teachers' College, Rajahmundry .. .. ib.
The problem of earning their livelihood by the educated .. .. ib.
The increasing cost of school education .. 2044
Compulsory education .. .. ib.
Students and politics .. .. ib.
A Muslim College in Madras .. .. .. ib.

(e) Local and Municipal—
Water-supply in Madras .. .. ib.
Corporation of Madras 2045
Revenue Officer of the Madras Corporation .. 2046
Sanitary arrangements in the Corporation .. ib.
Local self-government .. .. ib.
Akidu Road .. .. ib.
Water scarcity in Nizampatnam .. .. ib.
The District Municipalities Act 2047

(k) General—
The authorities and the people .. .. .. ib.
Brahmans and Non-Brahmans .. .. .. ib.
The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia 2048
Tuberculosis Institute 2049
Mr. Chamberlain .. .. ib.
The exodus to the hills 2050
The new Secretary of State for India .. 2051
Mr. Montagu and the Anglo-Indian Press .. 2054
Application of the Press Act 2055
Swadeshi meetings .. .. ib.
Swadeshism .. .. ib.
Publication of the theosophical works of Mrs. Besant 2057
Home Rule and Swadeshi .. .. ib.
"A poor All-Agraharam Committee" .. .. ib.
"Congress-Muslim League Scheme" 2058
Administrative autonomy .. .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.
Lord Ronaldshay on Home Rule 2058
A ray of hope .. .. ib.
The manners of a Civilian officer 2059
Wet cultivation near village-site .. .. ib.
Sympathy with the people .. .. .. ib.
The dawn of wisdom .. .. ib.
Lord Hardinge .. .. ib.
Committee concerning self-government .. 2 60
The staying of the Mesopotamian enquiry .. ib.
Newspapers and the Kistnapatrika .. .. ib.
Political agitation and the internments .. 2061
Home Rule Leagues in the Andhra country .. ib.
Internment day—a protest meeting .. .. ib.
A Swadeshi mart in Madras 2064
The drink evil .. .. ib.
A criticism of the zamindars' manifesto .. ib.
Mutual abuse .. .. ib.
Mr. Chamberlain's explanation 2065
Chendalur, Ongole taluk, Guntur district .. ib.
Slave trade .. .. ib.
The present atmosphere .. .. ib.
Sir James Meston 2066
Kilore Home Rule League .. .. .. ib.
Repression .. .. ib.
The generosity of a Home Ruler .. .. ib.
Division of the country on a language basis .. ib.
The attitude of the Bengalees 2067
The generosity of Mr. Ratan Tata .. .. ib.
The claim of India .. .. ib.
The Pathans .. .. ib.
Ganjam Collector's office .. .. .. ib.
Pandit Malaviya's visit to His Excellency the Viceroy .. .. ib.
Pandit Malaviya on political work .. .. ib.
Mayavaram Home Rule League 2068
Parliamentary Committee for Indian reforms. ib.
Hides traffic .. .. ib.
Poet Babindranath .. .. ib.
Modern civilisation .. .. ib.
Condolence .. .. ib.
The Indian Defence Force .. .. .. ib.
Immediate Home Rule 2069
The defence of the British Empire .. .. ib.
Provincial Governments .. .. ib.
Provincial autonomy .. .. ib.
Control of the Parliament over India 2070
Sir D. Wacha .. .. ib.
Airships and submarines .. .. ib.
Colonies and the Indian problem .. .. ib.
Suggestions of papers 2071
Coolies .. .. ib.
Gosha hospital at Tuni 2072
Revival of Russia .. .. ib.
The condition of the times .. .. .. ib.
Lord Hardinge and the Mesopotamia affairs .. 2073
The Mesopotamian Commission Report .. ib.
Indian self-government .. .. ib.
P. Varadarajulu Nayudu 2074
Foreign goods .. .. ib.
Self-government and Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya .. .. ib.
Lords Pentland and Willingdon .. .. .. ib.

III.—Legislation.
Madras Village Courts Act Amendment .. .. ib.
The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao's Educational Bill 2075

IV.—Native States.
Educational progress in Mysore 2076

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.
Obstacles to agricultural advancement .. .. .. ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

1. New India, of the 21st July, has the following:—"The Manchester Guardian reports that at a recent Conference of Railwaymen in England, while a protest was being recorded against 'the police sending shorthand writers to record the speeches' at meetings of that kind, it was discovered that 'there was a shorthand writer sitting among the journalists, who had been sent by the Government to take a note of the proceedings'. A member of the Conference

"Spies".

New India, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

asked the delegates to demand his withdrawal. This caused great excitement, and there were cries of 'Spies!' at which the shorthand writer thought it best to leave.

"The Guardian's correspondent comments on this—

The employment of police shorthand writers thinly disguised as reporters at meetings has always been the cause of great irritation. It was first generally used, I believe, during the militant suffrage agitation, and those who followed the legal proceedings at that time are aware how little reliance was to be placed upon the reports compiled by these amateurs.

"In India there is no disguise, either thin or thick: these 'spies' simply flaunt themselves in the faces of constitutional agitators and sometimes try to overawe and insult people. As for the reliance that is placed on their reports by the authorities here, we know that the honour of even the greatest and noblest in the land is dependent upon the tenor of such reports. We wish that some of these worthies were treated here, as the 'spies' were treated at the Railwaymen's Conference But that would bring down the Defence of India Act upon all concerned, we are sure."

(c) Jails.

2. The Indian Patriot, of the 20th July, writes:—"We published yesterday some interesting particulars about the administration of jails in this Presidency. The Government have again to draw the attention of the magistracy to give particular attention to the detention of under-trial prisoners. This has been repeated in almost every report, and yet the situation has not improved, at any rate to the extent of doing away with this warning to magistrates. We must confess to a feeling of intense pain that, in spite of the general humanitarian policy of progress adopted by the Government of Madras in its jail administration, the disgraceful tale has to be told that young girls were committed to prison under the security section or under the Criminal Tribes and Forest Act. . . . The Inspector-General of Prisons, who does not surely seem to be very merciful, to judge from the increased corporal punishment and penal diet administered last year to convicts, has grasped enough of the new jail policy in civilised countries protests against this sending girls to jail. The Government have so frequently impressed upon the magistracy the impropriety of committing boys and girls to jails that it is rather unsatisfactory to find that any magistrate should consider it necessary to commit girls to jail under the security sections, Criminal Tribes Act, or the Police Act, and it is extremely desirable that some other means should be devised for disposing of such cases. . . . We read with concern the quiet explanation of the Inspector-General of Prisons that in spite of an increased population during the year there was a slight fall in the total expenditure on diet due 'to the issue of rice diet to a smaller number of prisoners.' We thought that prisoners accustomed to rice diet were generally given rice. This comes upon us as a revelation and no doubt will engage the attention of members of the Legislative Council who will not allow any return to scientific diets without a protest. We draw the attention of the Government to the sudden and marked increase in the number of cases of penal diet and whipping under the Gadsden regime. We do not know whether this subject is to be dismissed with the mere remark that 'these will vary year by year according to the idiosyncrasy of different Superintendents.' We are afraid that the humanitarian policy inaugurated by Sir Harold Stuart, who, under the guidance of Diwan Bahadur Kesava Pillai, reclaimed the Madras jail population from the scientific experiments of Lieutenant-Colonel Macnamara, is rapidly dying out. . . As for whipping, only the habituals, we are told, are whipped and the Inspector-General is sure that in every case the whipping was deserved. We ask whether the Government of Madras is satisfied with this explanation of the most degrading form of punishment. If this callousness to humane feeling should be the characteristic of the Madras jails, we are afraid the change inaugurated by Sir Harold Stuart will have died too early. We are concerned to find that the Government is enamoured of Mr. Gadsden's administration and notices his work with particular delight. There is, we admit, much in the report to show that the angle of vision has changed; education is imparted to the convicts: juveniles are segregated; habituals are held in separate prisons: a well-regulated system of remission is in force, by which prisoners who work and behave well are given remission in their term of imprisonment. But if the high ideas and noble conceptions of duty to fallen fellowmen, which are behind the question of rice diet and discouragement of penal diet and corporal punishment can be so soon forgetton and so lightly explained away, we fear the worst."

Jails in the Madras Presidency.

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

(d) Education.

Hindu, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

A Rajkumar College for Madras.

3. The Hindu, of the 24th July, observes:—"We understand that His Excellency Lord Pentland, when he was in Madras last week, met a few zamindars to discuss with them the question of the establishment of a college for the sons and relatives of the landed aristocracy of this Presidency. . . We must protest against the proposal to set apart tax-payers' money for this purpose. In the first place, we do not think that it will do the young men belonging to the class much good if they are to be separated from students of the middle class and segregated in a conclave of their own. . . There is now greater necessity than ever for the growth of a feeling of amity and perfect understanding between the zamindars and the other classes, and it is a thousand pities that the authorities do not realise this need of the moment and are engaged in encouraging a movement which is bound to perpetuate class exclusiveness. . . A hundred schemes are hung up on account of want of funds. In the circumstances, any allocation of money for founding and maintaining a Rajkumar College is a highly retrograde step."

(e) Local and Municipal.

Justice, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

The Madras Corporation.

4. Justice, of the 23rd July, states:—"The Madras Mail announced a few days ago that Mr. Molony, the President of the Madras Corporation, would avail himself of some leave soon and that Mr. T. Vijiaraghava Achariyar, Deputy Collector, would act as the President of the Corporation. On a previous occasion, some months ago, Mr. Vijiaraghava Achariyar did act for the President for about a month. That was an undesirable experiment, and as it is to be repeated now we feel it our duty to point out the inadvisability of doing so. . . On one occasion the President went on three or four months' leave, and then an I.C.S. officer was appointed to act for him. On all other occasions when the President availed himself of short periods of leave the senior of the remaining three officers was 'in charge,' so far as the office work was concerned, and the meetings of the Corporation held during such times were presided over by one of the Commissioners elected at the meeting. . . It may be perfectly legitimate to appoint the Revenue Officer or the Engineer or the Health Officer to look after the routine work of the office in the absence of the President, but it sounds rather unreasonable that one of these subordinate officers should be appointed to preside over the meetings of the Corporation or of its Standing Committee when there are thirty-six Commissioners available who are far more competent to do that work. . .

By appointing officers of the standing of Deputy Collectors as Presidents of the Corporation to preside over its meetings, the Corporation does not gain either in dignity or knowledge. . . After all these years when the object of the Government ought to be to raise the status and dignity of the Madras Corporation higher and higher the idea of putting a Deputy Collector to preside over the deliberations of that body is a distinctly retrograde one. . . The manner in which the affairs of the Madras Corporation have been permitted to be mismanaged is almost assuming the proportions of a public scandal. We are constrained to remark that the failure of the Government to help and direct the development of local self-government in this Presidency into healthier and more prosperous channels has in a large measure contributed to the development of unhealthy political ideas among us. . . It is not conducive to the development of local self-government in this country that its progress should be impeded by actions such as the contemplated appointment of a Deputy Collector as the President of the Madras Corporation. The Madras Corporation began with high promise, but it has fallen into bad ways when it has an assistant surgeon for a Health Officer, a Deputy Collector for the President and probably a Public Works supervisor for its Engineer. . . We do not want to stand in the way of the Government promoting any of their servants who have deserved promotion. If a Deputy Collector has done good and satisfactory work, by all means let the Government promote him by appointing him as the Collector of a district or Sarishtadar of the Revenue Board or Superintendent of Poramboke lands or Collector of penal assessments or any other of the many hundreds of appointments which are in the gift of the Government. But please do not disfigure the local bodies by dumping down on them your Deputy Collectors or your tahsildars or your assistant surgeons. We feel strongly in the matter. And if the Madras Government will continue to persist in their present policy of neglecting, mismanaging and otherwise hampering the progress of municipal bodies in this Presidency. they will deserve all the public disapprobation that is or may hereafter be manifested against their policy."

The President of the Corporation of Madras.

5. The Hindu, of the 26th July, writes:—"Mr. Molony, the President of the Madras Corporation and a Member of the Indian Civil Service, is not the person to show himself worsted in an encounter with the Commissioners. . . We find from a notice published elsewhere as an advertisement that the President has called for the special meeting to take place on the 30th October 1917, that is more than three months from now and more than four months from the date of the requisition. We cannot conceive of any more flagrant act of flouting the authority of the Commissioners than this. The discretion as to the time when the special meeting is to be held is no doubt vested in the President, but it is a matter of ordinary commonsense that the discretion must be used in a reasonable manner, and not as the previous observation of Mr. Molony, coupled with his fixing the date four months after the date of the requisition clearly shows, in a contumacious and defiant manner."

Hindu, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, Justice, of the 27th July, says:—"Mr. J. C. Molony, I.C.S., the present President of the Madras Corporation, is a man of some originality. It used to be an old understanding that a man with an original mind has no place in the Indian Civil Service. Mr. Molony is one of the exceptions to that rule. Since he became President of the Corporation his administration of Madras municipal affairs has run on quite original lines. When he found on his assuming office that the conservancy of Madras was badly done he personally supervised the sweepings of the streets. He took off his coat and joined the sweepers, acted as their captain and cleaned some streets. To demonstrate how a street ought to be swept he concentrated the coolies from all parts of Madras on a particular locality and got the streets in that locality cleaned under his personal supervision. That the remaining portions of Madras remain dirty was a matter of detail. He succeeded in demonstarting that if a large number of coolies headed by the President were to concentrate their attention on a particular locality, that locality can be cleaned. . . Mr. Molony also discovered that if three parts of filtered water are mixed with one part of unfiltered water the resulting mixture would be three times as pure as the unfiltered water. That is an original discovery, and the practical application of that discovery has produced 'Molony's mixture' which the inhabitants are now drinking. . . . It is by his interpretation of the sections of the Act that he has distinguished himself. Ten commissioners sent in a requisition to call a special meeting on a particular subject. Special meetings are called when the commissioners want to discuss any particular subject before the next general meeting of the Corporation. . . . Such a requisition for a special meeting was sent on the 20th of June, and Mr. Molony has fixed a special meeting in accordance with the requisition on the 30th of October. This might seem an extraordinary action on the part of the President to a casual observer, but Mr. Molony is only interpreting the Act literally. . . . We are sure that he has done this to demonstrate the absurdities in the wording of the present Act in order that commissioners may learn what amendment in the Act to ask for when the new Madras Municipal Bill is introduced into the Legislative Council. . . . We are sure now that Mr. Molony has taken his stand on the Municipal Act, the whole Act and nothing but the Act. The commissioners might also try to do the same. For instance the commissioners might send a requisition to call a special meeting under section 9 (2) to ask the Government to remove the President from office. Of course Mr. Molony will fix the date of that meeting a month after the date on which he will have to retire from the Indian Civil Service after 35 years' service. That will be a check to the commissioners, but then the next move will be by the commissioners, and we can see that there are means of covering the check and crying check to the President in turn. . . . Mr. Molony's practical demonstration of how to use the discretion of the President, we shall not be surprised if the Municipal Commissioners were strongly to object to every section and clause of the new Bill wherein any discretion is proposed to be vested in the Municipal Commissioner who is to be the chief executive officer under the proposed legislation; and the objection will be hard to meet when it is backed up by examples selected from Mr. Molony's performances. However, we shall wait and see what the Madras Government propose to do in the matter where the President's discretion is liable to be converted into the President's 'indiscretion'."

Justice, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

(k) General.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 19th, 1917.

The Congress Presidentship.

6. The West Coast Spectator, of the 19th July, remarks:—"We are glad to see our contemporaries of the Leader and the Hindu objecting to the election of Mrs. Besant to the presidentship of the Congress. They belong to the Besantine republic, and objection coming from the quarter is therefore to be considered of value. We hope that the elderly leaders will reject the nonsense that is being ejected on behalf of the interned lady, and save the Congress from becoming the laughing stock of the impartial world. A political body like the Congress should give wide berth to sentiment and cant and deal with practical politics in a cool and dignified manner. Heat and gas ought to be foreign to an organisation of the character and antecedents of the National Congress."

Malabar Herald, British Cochin, July 21st, 1917

Writing on this subject, the Malabar Herald, for the week ending 21st July, says:—"Dr. Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar who took an active part in connection with the Madras meeting to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues, makes the naive suggestion that Mrs. Besant should be the President of the next Indian National Congress; but should she be prevented from occupying the presidential chair when the Congress meets by the reason of her internment, Doctor Subrahmanya Ayyar would undertake to perform the office of President. This is the funniest way of making a suggestion; as, if the person proposed for the chair would be unable to occupy it, the proposer himself would act as a deputy. This amounts to a mutual scratching of the back. Apart from the incongruity of the proposal we do not think that Mrs. Besant will have the chance of being the President of the next Congress unless the political leaders in India lose their heads and give this National Assembly a character which will be repugnant to the feelings of those who desire to elevate the political condition of India by means other than those adopted by the President of the Theosophical Society. This assumption may be strengthened by what has been declared by Mrs. Besant that theosophy is inseparable from politics. This is an interesting revelation and one that is likely to give the authorities sufficient ground to view theosophy as a suspicious cult, having a comprehensive political programme at the back of it. We admit that Mrs. Besant, being a woman of extraordinary abilities, is competent to be the President of a National Assembly; but, what we think is that when she has fallen foul with the Government she is not likely to make an impression in their minds deeper than what has brought about her internment."

7. The West Coast Spectator, of the 19th July, observes:—"Sir Krishna Govind Gupta's plea for sober politics has come in very opportune at a time when even those expected to know better are showing a tendency to wild talk. Abuse of the bureaucracy and those responsible for the Government is no doubt fine and might win cheap popular applause and enthuse the rag-tag and bob-tail, but the sensible will never endorse or listen to such language. At Monday's Town Hall meeting, the bureaucracy, as usual, came in for strong censure which exhorted rounds of applause from the pit and the gallery, but there were many present who did not at all relish such language. . . . The fact is we Indians are at home in destructive criticism and rarely attempt the constructive. In fact, we have seen people who believe that criticism means finding fault! It is our conviction that a campaign based on wild and ungentlemanly talk cannot succeed or extort the confidence of any right-thinking man. The late Mr. Gokhale was a gentleman in politics. Though his speeches in the Imperial Council and elsewhere were veritable sledge-hammer blows, he never hit below the belt and never used a single ungentlemanly or rabid expression. In these trying times when we see mad hatters rushing along the streets setting up tremendous volleys of abuse, we sigh for the days when our leaders refused to borrow the vocabulary of the Hyde Park orator.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 19th, 1917.

The political situation.

"The danger the people have to guard against is the advent of cow-boy politicians of the backwoods variety or scheming demagogues who hope to clean past black records in the torrent of popular applause. We can understand honest differences of opinion expressed in forcible terms but when we attribute dark motives to our opponents and deliberately attempt to paint them in the blackest colour we can expect no sympathy from the impartial observer. To say that the bureaucrat conserves power in his own hands actuated by selfish motives or for self-aggrandisement and self-gain is to speak criminal nonsense which no sane politician can tolerate."

8. New India, of the 20th July, writes:—"We are grieved and surprised to see that Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar, in trying to persuade Indian youths to join the Defence Force, while protesting that speaking to students on politics was 'forbidden ground' proceeded to speak about the internments—a burning political question. Leaving that aside, Sir Sivaswami Ayyar is taking upon himself a very heavy responsibility by not explaining to the young men, whom he invites to place themselves—as the Viceroy pointed out—under Military Law, the conditions of service. Pay and temporary status are trifles, and Mrs. Besant, when she was free, earnestly begged the students to disregard these. But things have changed, the Government have entered on a course of repression hitherto unknown in India, and are causing widespread resentment and alarm, and the young men should be honestly told in what position they may find themselves. Until they have passed the medical examination and have 'attested' they are free to withdraw. Once they have attested, they are under Military Law, and must obey whatever orders are issued to them. Principal Wood very honestly pointed this out, and told the students that they might be called on to put down rioting, firing on their countrymen. At that time rioting was unlikely, but now that the Governments are using every means of repression, none can say what will happen, and it is well to be on the safe side. The young men should know to what they are committing themselves, and should consult their fathers as to whether they approve of their taking the risks pointed out by Mr. Wood. If they do, it is all right. But the lads should not be betrayed into such a position without knowing what they are doing. The argument that the opportunity may not return is futile. If India wins the Congress-League Reforms—within two years, the Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya said at Bombay—she will train her own sons. If she does not, she remains 'a subject race,' the hewers of wood and drawers of water for the empire, and she will be exploited for the enrichment of British and Colonial capitalists, who will 'develop the resources of the empire,' and, incidentally, fill their own pockets."

New India, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The Indian Defence Force.

New India, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Theosophy and politics.

9. New India, of the 20th July, states:—"We understand that the Executive of the Theosophical Society is applying to the Government of Madras for the publication of Mrs. Besant's letter, refusing the 'relaxation' of the order of internment in one respect. On this matter two contradictory statements have been issued. One came directly from Ootacamund to the Indian public through the Associated Press. . . It is clear that the Government has made two contradictory statements, one for home and one for foreign consumption. We demand the publication of Mrs. Besant's letter in order that we may know which is false. The Government is on the horns of a dilemma, for its direct and indirect statements cannot both be true. It is scandalous that it should make such statements, while it holds Mrs. Besant a helpless captive, and forcibly silences the President of the Theosophical Society while traducing her before the world.

"For our part, we shall follow the good advice of Mr. S. Guruswami Chetty and 'boycott everything, official and bureaucratic'. Lord Pentland, Sir Alexander Cardew, Mr. Gillman and Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar are responsible for the above statements, one of which must be false. As honest men we shall ignore all their utterances in future, except statements of Government policy. It will not hurt them, for they are all-powerful and irresponsible to public opinion. But it shows our opinion of their unjustifiable treatment of Mrs. Besant."

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

A protest against secrecy.

10. The following appears in the Indian Patriot of the 21st July:—"The policy of meaningless secrecy in matters in which the public are deeply interested, now and then, observed by the Government, cannot be too severely condemned. Except that the authorities have been accustomed to observe such secrecy before, there is absolutely no justification for it. The time has surely come when officials must prepare themselves for the changed conceptions of the people. We claim the right to know about the origin and progress of measures which affect us. There is no reason why we should not, except that the officials have not yet learnt to wrench themselves from the habit of secrecy."

Malabar Herald, British Cochin, July 21st, 1917.

The Government of Madras and British Cochin.

11. The Malabar Herald, for the week ending 21st July, states:—"We must, at the outset, be candid in saying that we do not wish to assume the rôle of carping critics of Government measures and their actions; nor do we wish to characterise them as being unsympathetic or intolerant when circumstances there are to warrant the verdict. Not being infallible, a Government may go wrong; but that contingency does not imply the idea that a Government should be unsympathetic. Human patience has its limitation and when that is reached, the feeling of disappointment will naturally overtake any sense of subordination and thereby free the agent to express his feelings. This is our plea in making a few remarks as to the unsympathetic attitude which the Government of Madras have been showing towards British Cochin, which, they know, as well as others do, is one of the few important commercial centres in India. . . Of all commercial ports in India, Cochin, by far, is the best for a first-class harbour, possessing as it does all the natural and other facilities for it, in spite of them, however, Cochin has been without one for the last fifty years or more, and Heaven alone knows the time when she would possess it. If in days of plenty Cochin could not be provided with a harbour we do not know how remote are the chances for it in the coming days of distress and want. The attitude of Government is fully demonstrated by the decision of the Cochin Harbour Committee to the effect that Mr. Lanchester's scheme for the extension and improvement of the town should be taken along with the harbour construction and executed by a Harbour Trust. The prospect of the latter is, therefore, as remote as that of the former, and so the alliance of the two is a conclusive proof of the attitude of Government which needs no explanation.

"Another disappointment, and we do not want to lengthen this article as it is purely on a local subject, is in connection with a proposal for the improvement of the drainage. It will be remembered that a special officer was deputed to survey the town for this purpose. He was here for a long time and could be found everywhere with the chain and the theodolite. He prepared a report and submitted it to Government. But they could not find their way to sanction the expenditure necessary for the improvement of the drainage, and consequently the scheme has been pigeon-holed. . . We have shown enough to bring home to those who care about the welfare of Cochin the conviction that the Madras Government have been unsympathetic, whether wilfully or not we do not know, towards Cochin and its people. We cannot understand how this attitude could be justified when we recur to the fact that Cochin yields a revenue far in excess of what other places contribute, while in such places the Government have been liberal in their equipment, however costly it might have been. Let us hope that at least as a post-war measure the claims of Cochin will receive that degree of attention commensurate with its importance both from a commercial and revenue point of view."

12. In a leader under the heading "The Besantine Causus", Justice, of the 21st July, says:—"A press announcement tells us that the All-India Congress Committee is to meet at Bombay towards the end of this month to consider the situation created by the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two associates. . . We understand that something over five or six hundred Indians have been interned in Northern India and elsewhere under the Defence of India Act. We never heard of any protest meetings in this Presidency against the internment of these citizens of India. It is thus clear that protests are to be made only when the liberty of the High Priestess of Home Rule is threatened, not when the liberty of the ordinary Indian citizen is involved.

Justice, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

The Congress and the Madras internments.

When beggars die no comets are seen
Heavens themselves blaze forth the death of kings.

"We have had enough of the farce of a few vakils constituting themselves into a protest meeting and sending telegrams in the name of the citizens of the towns in which they live. . . We understand that at the forthcoming meeting at Bombay Mr. Patro will not be present as he has declined to attend it. Mrs. Besant, of course, will not be there, and so the Presidency of Madras will be represented by thirteen Brahmans and we give below their names in order that the people of this Presidency may know the gentlemen who speak in their name. . . These are the thirteen worthies who call themselves the representatives of the Madras Presidency. A better illustration of the fact that the one and a half millions of Brahmans in this Presidency would usurp the position of leaders of the forty millions and odd people cannot be found. Surely the Provincial Congresss Committee which, we suppose, was electing representatives on the All-India Congress Committee could easily have found a few more Non-Brahman gentlemen to serve on that committee. . . The committee is carefully packed with Brahmans who will now go to Bombay and probably send telegrams to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State, in the name of the inhabitants of the Madras Presidency, protesting against the internment of Mrs. Besant. Impudence can go no further. . . Good Lord! What a travesty of representation this committee of thirteen Brahman gentlemen for the forty and odd millions of the people of this Presidency! Where are the Brahman leaders in this Presidency if of course Brahmans are to constitute practically the whole of the committee? Why is it that the name of Mr. Vijayaraghava Achariyar of Salem is not on the committee? Why is it that Mr. Kasturiranga Ayyangar is not on the committee? Aye, it is a case of fools rushing in where angels fear to tread. All-India Congress committe indeed! The Madras section of the All-India Congress committee is at the most an All-Agraharam committee, and a poor one even at that. We wonder if these are to be the lines on which the Home Rule Government is to be constitued and carried on."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 21st, 1917.

The Madras internments.

13. Writing under the heading "Emotionalism", the West Coast Spectator, of the 21st July, says:—"The public meeting held on Monday last at the local Town Hall was an 'overflow meeting', and it must have gladdened the hearts of the protagonists of the Home Rule movement who have pressed the biggest drum into their service. But numbers do not always count for much, and judged by this truism, the rag-tag and bobtail that swelled the galleries and swarmed the verandahs ought not to be regarded as indicating the strength of the feelings excited, they allege, by the internment of She Who must Be Obeyed. There were thunders of applause which threatened to bring the galleries down; every attack on a thick-skinned Government was cheered from the pits, and the galleries cheerfully took up the tale. . . It is alleged—we have to accept the statement with a liberal supply of salt—that the Home Rule ideal is identical with the Congress ideal. If it is, what necessity has there been to start a separate organisation from the Congress? The fact is the Congress having failed to meet the strong craving for excitement, a new movement was necessary, and the militant propaganda came in handy. Who will say that the Home Rule movement is a 'temperate movement'? It is not, and it is keeping up the emotions at the boiling point by its periodical meetings, processions, stump oratory and perfervid declamations. It is the emotional, the youthful, who have largely gone into the camp, while the language used by its protagonists, by the youngmen who have been drawn into its vortex, clearly indicates that it has strongly appealed itself to the emotional nature in Indian character. . . The Madrasees are naturally benighted; their emotions are harmless; they set up tremendous noise, but never take themselves to undesirable courses. In spite of the heroic and frenzied appeals of the stalwarts of the league its strength has not gone over a couple of thousands of the utmost—and this in a Presidency harbouring 42 millions! Our emotions are transitory. We join demonstrations, shout the loudest, talk the tallest and beat brobdingnagian drums. But as soon as these performances are over we sink into the even tenor of our existence. Our public meetings partake more the nature of kathakali or pantomimes or Gilbert and Sullivan operas than serious assemblies. It is this characteristic in the Indian nature that has debarred real progress; we talk but do not act."

New India, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

In a leader headed "The Resort to prayer", New India, of the 24th July, remarks:—"If the Government had the smallest touch with the Indian masses, it would take alarm at the resort of villagers and townsmen to their temples, to pray for divine interference with the present oppression. For 28 years Mrs. Besant has been recognised—as the Rev. Mr. Campbell said in the City Temple—as one of the greatest spiritual teachers in the world. . . It is this religious sentiment that the Government of Madras has aroused. Not without reason was Mrs. Besant ordered to confine her first work in India to the destruction of materialism and the revival of religion.

"Sir Valentine Chirol, who is no fool, recognised, in his Indian Unrest, that it was this that made her so potent a factor in the arousing of the national spirit. . . How strong is the feeling evoked is shown by the fact that all denominational barriers have been overleaped, and Muhammadans have been welcomed into the Hindu temples where the prayers for the interned were offered. The union between Hindus and Muhammadans for which she laboured so assiduously has thus been sealed.

"Speaking of this union, we cannot forget how earnestly Mrs. Besant, while editor of this journal, spoke for the liberation of Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali, with whom she had an affectionate correspondence. We can imagine nothing which would please her more than that their names should be included with those of her own and her two colleagues in the demand for release. Why should they, the earlier victims of the misused, and probably illegal, Defence of India Act, be omitted from the prayers and the demands of a United India? Let prayers go up from every temple, from every masjid, appealing to Ishvara, to Allah, to set the captives free. The answer to those prayers will include the victory to the British arms, for if success does not yet crown the arms of the Allies, it is because England supports in India the autocracy against which she fights in Europe. Her prayers for victory fall back to earth like broken-winged birds, because they are not offered with clean hands and from a pure heart."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

New India, of the 25th July, observes:—"We quote below some remarks from the Message regarding Mrs. Besant's refusal to accept the 'terms of peace' offered by the Government of Madras. . . The insulting nature of such offers is on a par with the utter ignorance of the Madras Government as to the personality against whom they have raised their hand. That they should have expected Annie Besant, the lion-hearted champion of liberty, to treat these proposals with anything but a scornful refusal, shows clearly that they are unable to appreciate what towering self-respect and absolute honesty and earnestness of purpose really signify. It seems also that they are under the fond delusion that such a show of fatuous considerateness will influence the public to relax in their efforts to secure, by their agitation, the release of the three interned, the life and soul of the great movement for liberty on which the nation's heart is unflinchingly fixed. The people rate at their true worth the value of such 'concessions' and have been made painfully aware of their illusory character. No; the agitation must go on and will go on; and, as it goes on, will assume more and more stringent forms. We are at present mainly engaged in protesting against these acts of repression and demanding their annulment. We have the beginnings of the Swadeshi-Boycott too. We will presently have to engage in a widespread movement on that line and later to undertake some form of passive resistance. We cannot pocket these insults to the nation and to the nation's leaders, and all means, within the law and the constitution, must be used."

NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, July 22nd, 1917.

14. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 22nd July, observes:—"It is time that a public meeting were held to proclaim Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar mad. The old man's mind is unhinged. It is all Annie Besant with him; it is Annie Besant when he is awake; it is Annie Besant when he is asleep, and he pours his aged nonsense in Home Rule papers, which is nectar to the insincere agitators, who want something to quote. When five years ago Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar was saying that India was not fit for swaraj, the Hindu was calling him a valetudinarian. But now Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar is god himself. The wonder is that such insincerity should pay in India. It is the strongest proof of our absolute unfitness and against any responsibility being placed in the hands of the upper layer which claims all power."

Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

15. New India, of the 23rd July, has the following:—"'Many Home Rulers quote Ireland' bemoans a writer in the Times of India, 'but Ireland had its martial law after the rebellion'; and so, according to this writer, who makes rather a parade of his 'commonsense,' India has to have her martial law in the shape of the Defence of India Act. That in India there has been no rebellion, no short-lived republic set up by hair-brained youths and despairing elders, is a circumstance that of course, he conveniently omits to take into consideration. But apart from this, is it true that Ireland does not furnish an analogy to India? . . . Any unprejudiced survey of the conditions in Ireland and India will convince any one that Ireland and India stand on almost the same footing, though physically and geographically Ireland cannot be compared with India. But the conditions of political, social and economic Government have a striking similarity. In India the complaint is the same. Romesh Dutt's Economic History of India, Victorian Age, is an imperishable indictment of the industrial and political system, which directly and indirectly has led to the moral and material impoverishment of the people. That our rulers have been actuated by the best of intentions and have set about their work with a view to ameliorate the condition of the people, does not detract one whit from the evils which a wrong-headed policy has wrought on the people of this once contented and prosperous land. . . Ireland is getting Home Rule in spite of the Ulster clique, because, as Mr. Bonar Law recently remarked, on the debate on the Indian cotton duties, it is a case of 'whoever gives more trouble'. But even though Indian agitators are less clamant and more reasonable in their demand than their Irish fellow-citizens, not only is there no convention sitting to thresh out a solution of India's problems, but all talk about it is being repressed and Ireland and India.

whatever is to happen about it is all kept carefully behind the veil. Indians must put more insistence and more force into their agitation, if they wish to see this simple problem of Indian Home Rule, advancing, within a measurable distance of time, towards a final settlement."

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

16. In a leader on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 26th July, says :—

The political crisis in India.

"The plan we recommended to the Government yesterday for dealing with the problem of Indian reforms may not perhaps commend itself wholly to them, because of the conflict between them and those who speak loud on behalf of the people of India. There is no doubt that the forces arrayed against the Government of India are not inclined to be compromising in their attitude, and the Government very probably will be as firm in adhering to their attitude and discountenancing public criticism.

It is a tug-of-war between Government on the one side and the people on the other. It is true that Government may employ repression for a time, but British policy would not allow it to employ it always. There must be an end sooner or later to repression, for it is not in the experience so British history that repression, unrelieved by concessions, is permitted as a course of policy."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Indians in the European Army.

17. Adverting to the statement made by Saint Nihal Singh that Indians in Canada are not permitted to enlist in the Canadian Army and to an instance quoted by him where the request of an Indian, who voluntarily applied for enlistment, was at first declined, but was subsequently granted when he urged his claim for enlistment in consideration of the active service rendered by him for His Majesty the King-Emperor on three different occasions previously, the Swadesamitran, of the 19th July, trusts that this would enlighten the minds of those who complain that the Indians have no desire to enter the military service.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

A prophecy about the war.

18. The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 12th and 16th July, republishes the Tamil version of the prophecy of a Japanese astrologer about the end of the war published in the Hindu Nesan of the 6th idem and referred to in paragraph 14 of Report No. 28 of 1917.

Liva-ul-Islam, Madras, July 12th & 16th, 1917.

India's gift of £100,000,000 to the war.

19. The Vaisyamitran, of the 9th July, reproduces in Tamil the substance of an article contributed to the Nation by Mr. Lala Lajpat Rai from New York, in which the following observations occur:—The action of the Government of India in agreeing, with the approval of the Secretary of State for India, to contribute this sum is neither just nor proper, and that it is erroneous from the standpoint of the economical condition of the country, and foolish from the standpoint of statesmanship. How did the Imperial Government sanction this large amount with a single stroke of the pen, when India is suffering from debts and from other financial difficulties? This is not a great thing for England. But every poor man in India will suffer much on account of this action. There are still many millionaires in England, who are ready to give whatever is required. Why, then, should this large amount be expected from India?

Vaisyamitran, Devakottai, July 9th, 1917.

Greece.

20. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, says:—When the English and the French armies dethroned the King of Greece, the Russians expressed their disapproval of this action. Until the Grecian problem is satisfactorily solved, it will not be possible to help Servia, to invade Bulgaria or to emancipate Rumania. The Russians should hereafter at least see the good intentions of the English and the French and help to establish a Government in Greece that is favourable to the people.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Germany.

21. The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, writes:—We may safely assert that the results of the war depend upon the internal adjustment of Austria and Germany. For if the German people should accept, of their own accord or by external pressure, the ideals for which the allies have been dragged into the war, the war, of itself, comes to a natural end. The chief aim of the allies is to afford opportunities and provide guarantees for the evolution of each race unfettered by another. They have no idea of destroying Germany. But so long as the German administrative machinery does not undergo a change in conformity with this doctrine, there is no room for believing that Europe, or, for that matter, the world, would have permanent peace. It is most essential that German administrative methods should be relieved of Prussian domination and placed on democratic lines. There are signs discernible that such a prospect is at hand. These signs have first shown themselves in connection with the Russian revolution. The complete overthrow of the ancient despotic aristocracy of Russia has shed a new light and given a new strength, not only to Russia but also to the whole world. The whirlwind of democracy blows over the whole world across Europe. Most ancient dynasties, thrones, aristocracies, seats of Ecclesiastical authority, and all such institutions are being cast to the winds. The earthquake in Russia shakes Greece, Italy, Spain and other countries. The manifestation of democratic power reduces to dust ancient political rights, and helps to the reconstruction of new political institutions.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

There must be either a limited monarchy as that in England, or a complete republic as that in France. No other form of Government will suit the present requirements. This evolution has already assailed Austria, Germany, like a wild fire, and is reducing to ashes their old deformities. . . Germany has to adopt her Government in conformity with the wishes of the people. If this happens, the war will come to a happy termination. Will, then, the Kaiser's position be preserved or destroyed? Will Prussia be merged in the rest of Germany? Will the component parts of Austria become independent, or will Austria be brought under a federal Government? We cannot say how these problems will be solved. The socialist power is in the ascendancy in all countries, and inherited rights are becoming extinct. Great changes are expected to come even over Germany. The resignation of Bethman Holweg, who has been the Chancellor for five years and another taking his place, we believe, points to the prospect of Germany, that has been hitherto bowing to military power attaining a freedom that will contribute to the welfare of the world.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 25th, 1917.

The German air raids.

22. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 25th July, writes:—Despite the unceasing destruction of the German æroplanes, the enemy is frequently raiding London and other places in England with bombs. In one of the æroplanes brought down, it was discovered that the sole occupants of the machine were a clergyman and a lad of 18. Their daring was wonderful. These solitary ventures on the part of their men in utter disregard of life go to show how the enemy's clergymen even are ready to fight in the interests of their country.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 25th, 1917.

The Russian revolution.

23. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 25th July, writes:—Even when all the rest of the world had come under constitutional Government, Russia was still under the throes of autocratic rule. In the course of the recent revolution, however, the people were awakened to a sense of their duty. Seeing that subsequent to this revolution some of the men in power were turning autocratic, they are aiming at another revolution. Following the example of Russia other countries, too, such as Spain, have begun to act as they choose. Neither rulers nor officers of Government can avert trouble to themselves if they act like autocrats. An ignorant people can be kept under subjection. But a people who understand their rights and responsibilities can be governed only with a policy of justice and confidence. If autocratic methods bring Emperors to grief, what shall we say of lesser folk? It behoves the Government to consider this point. The British are trying to induce the Russians to be loyal and law-abiding. Russia abolished the monarchy and formed a Republic. It is necessary that the republican authorities at least should be obeyed. But even this is not done. It is most regrettable that even the soldiers are running amuck.

Swadeshabhimani, Mysore, July 20th, 1917.

The European situation.

24. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 20th July, gives an optimistic review of the European situation, laying stress on the points favourable to the Allies, such as the renewal of the Russian offensive, the failure of the submarine campaign and internal political troubles in enemy countries.

Uttara Taraka, Parur, July 14th, 1917.

Troubles in China.

25. Referring to the troubles in China, the Uttara Taraka, of the 14th July,* points out that, though there do not exist so many castes or sects in that country, yet there seems to be no unanimity among the people, and that much less of it can therefore be expected in this caste-ridden country, and that the Home Rulers will do well to remember that the grant of immediate self-government to India will be the beginning of her end.

* Received this week.

Writing on the same subject, the Malayali, of the 21st July. points out that the present troubles in China show clearly that, though republican form of Government is a good thing, people should not try for it, until public opinion becomes sufficiently strong on the point, and observes that the Indian Home Rulers will do well to make a special note of this fact.

Malayali, Quilon, July 21st, 1917.

German wire-pullings in India.

26. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 13th July, writes:—Just as modern scientific inventions have staggered humanity in the present war, the effect of German wire-pullings upon the minds of credulous and the simple-minded has been more than magical. We have repeatedly had proofs of the Kaiser's intrigues and cunning. His calling himself the Muhammadans' friend, his pretending to be a Haji and then prohibiting Muhammadans from erecting mosques in the African Colonies and preventing them from performing their devotions and his proclamation to the public that they should not perform the rite of circumcision without the permission of the Government, etc., constitute a powerful indictment sufficient to prevent the densest person from regarding the Kaiser as the Muhammadans' friend.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

The first success, achieved by his espionage, was in the inveigling of the "Young Turk party" into his deceitful snare.

He subsequently practised wire-pulling in Persia and Kabul, but without serving any useful purpose. He has now been trying to disturb the tranquility of India through some traitorous ingrates, but all these evil-doers have been arrested. Such is the result of German wire-pullings and espionage.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain.

27. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 19th July, writes:—Mr. Austen Chamberlain has just resigned the office of the Secretary of State for India. The reason for his taking this step has not been shown. It is supposed that the publication of the Mesopotamia Commission's Report made him think it undesirable that he should remain any longer at the India Office.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Although Mr. Chamberlain was not a great statesman like Lord Morley, yet the wise and enlightened manner in which he discharged the duties of the exalted office of the Secretary of State for India affords abundant evidence of his great natural gifts. Some people rank him with Lord Crewe.

There is no doubt Lord Crewe was a sympathetic Secretary of State who, thanks to his mental alertness, experienced no difficulty in solving India's intricate problems, and always held the balance even.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

Police administration in India.

28. Referring to Police Administration in this Presidency, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 18th July, points out that, though it has not become what it ought to be, a comparison of the last ten or fifteen years' administration with that of the previous years will show that it has greatly improved, and that now-a-days criminals are seldom put to torture by the police, and observes that the authorities will do well to pay more attention to the selection of officers, especially Sub-Inspectors, whose pay should be so increased, as to attract graduates and people of social standing, and that the inclusion of non-officials in the Selection Committee shows that this matter has received the attention of the Government.

Kerala Sanchari, Calicut, July 18th, 1917.

The Commissioner of Police and the Madras procession.

29. Referring to the prohibition, by the Commissioner of Police, of a procession in Madras in connection with the recent interments and of a public meeting at Arni by the Assistant Superintendent of Police therein, the Manorama, of the 17th July, draws attention to the impropriety of such orders, congratulates the Collector of Malabar and the Police Superintendent therein on their action in this matter, and observes that all District officers will do well to remember that unnecessary interference on their part in such matters will, instead of doing good, only tend to create unnecessary stir and dissatisfaction among the people.

Manorama, Calicut, July 17th, 1917.

(b) Courts.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

The resignation of Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar of the office of a temporary Judge of the Madras High Court.

30. The Hindu Nesan, of the 18th July, reproduces in Tamil the substance of the comments of the Hindu on this subject, which appeared in its issue of the 17th idem.

Adverting to the same subject, this paper observes as follows:—We would say that Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar is a very bold man. Many there are who hanker after Government posts. Such men will not feel the least compunction even though they may be kept as temporary Judges for an indefinite length of time. But Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar is not one who has such an attitude of mind. By continuing as a Judge of the High Court, he was only a loser in his income. He has decided to give up the post of a Judge, not covetous of the dignity of the silver mace to the risk of his income. It will be no wonder that such troubles occur until the regulations relating to the constitution of the High Court are amended.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

The Madras High Court.

Referring to the recent addition made to the number of the permanent Judges of the Madras High Court, the Lokopakari, of the 23rd July, observes:—It would have given satisfaction to the Indians if the Secretary of State for India had acted upon the recommendations of the Government of Madras. It has to be inferred that his object in not acting upon the said recommendations is to benefit the Anglo-Indians. In consequence of the present arrangement, Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar, who had been a temporary Judge for two years, lost the chance of being confirmed, and resigned his office. The step taken by him is, indeed, a honourable one.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Pattipadu news.

31. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 16th July, says:—The Deputy Tahsildar of Pattipadu division adjourns cases many times if the parties are not prepared for a compromise. They are fortunate if they enter into a compromise. If they do not, the accused is fined heavily. However insanitary Pattipadu may be and however impure the water in tanks may be, nobody is there to remedy these evils. All the same, persons accused of nuisance, ryots who occupy lands unauthorisedly and cartmen who refuse to allow bamboos being taken gratis from their carts, are fined after being forced to admit their offences.

(c) Jails.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Jail administration.

32. Adverting to the report on the Administration of Jails in this Presidency during 1916 and the order of the Government thereon, the Swadesamitran, of the 20th July, writes as follows:—Of the 91,956 persons incarcerated during the year, only 22,632 were prisoners who had been convicted. Though for the convenience of judicial administration, it is but necessary to proceed with the conduct of trials confining in jails a large number of persons who are charged with crimes, yet, as many of them might not be guilty and as we know that such persons are often ordered by the magistrates to be kept on remand in sub-jails, it is but just that the cases against them are disposed of as expeditiously as possible. While there is a decrease in the average number of days on which prisoners under trial in the Sessions Courts were kept in jails last year, there is an increase in the number of days on which prisoners under trial in the magistrates' courts were kept during the year. We think that this is due to the fact that the magistrates yield to the wishes of the police. Magistrates mostly accept the plea adduced by the police, that the prisoner, if released on bail, would tamper with the police witnesses and commit him to jail again and again. We believe that this often causes hindrance to the proper administration of justice. It is quite possible for the low-paid police subordinates to tamper with the witnesses of the accused in the same way as the prisoner can with the witnesses of the police. It will, therefore, be in keeping with justice, if the Government impress on the magistrates that it will be against the spirit of the law to remand a prisoner to custody, unless they suspect that he would abscond and not appear for trial before the court.

Ninety-four of the number convicted and sent to jail last year were below 16 years of age, while in the previous year this number was 148. This fell in the number of juvenile offenders is a matter for satisfaction. If the authorities see that the juvenile offenders do not lose their sense of shame while in jail, it will be quite possible for these offenders to live an honest life after their release. The practice, however, prevails in certain places, of the police people watching their movements in their villages after their release and speaking about them to others. It is essential that this practice should be put an end to.

Of the 12,010 convicts released from jails last year, 2,801 are said to have lost their weight. The reason for this is not mentioned in the report, but the head of the department would have done well to have referred to this. If he is not aware of it, we trust he will ascertain the same and see whether there is anything wrong in the administration of the jails concerned. The efforts taken to educate the convicts and to impart instruction to them in religion bear testimony to the fact that the jail administration is now carried on with greater sympathy than before.

Jails in the Madras Presidency.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 25th July, writes:—Owing to want of accommodation in the jails in the Madras Presidency, the prisoners have to be huddled like sheep. Their health is thus undermined. Seeing that more men than can find room in the jails are convicted, it is remarked in some quarters that the Magistrates are overzealous in warding off crime and that persons punished for petty offences are being thrown into the company of criminals. It seems desirable, therefore, to appoint a Commission to enquire into this matter.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 25th, 1917.

(d) Education.

The Patna University Bill.

33. The Viveka Chintamani, for July 1917, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran, of the 11th July on this Bill, which are abstracted in paragraph 39 of Report No. 29 of 1917.

VIVEKA CHINTAMANI, Madras, July 1917.

Educational department.

34. Referring to the very large number of Brahmans employed in this department as in the other departments of public service and to the appointment of personal assistants to the Inspectors and Assistant Inspectors of Schools notified in the Fort St. George Gazette of the 19th June 1917, the Dravidan, of the 20th July, observes that out of the 23 appointments of personal assistants, only 3 have been given to Non-Brahmans, that it cannot be believed that more Non-Brahmans with the requisite qualifications for this post are not available and that this injustice is due to the fact that in every department of public service, the Brahmans wield greater influence, and hopes that the authorities will hereafter at least consider the claims of the Non-Brahmans in the matter.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

A stir in the Caithness Hall.

35. Adverting to the commotion caused in the Caithness Hall attached to the Madras Christian College by the admission of certain Christian students therein the Lokopakari, of the 23rd July, observes:—There is a separate home for the Christians, and yet the conduct of the College authorities in coming forward to forcibly admit Christians with Hindus in the same hostel is creating unnecessary hatred among the students. It is an irregular procedure on the part of the managers of the institution to force social reform on the students with authority. As the Hindus are sub-divided into several classes, there is no union among them. We expect that the College authorities will consider well that such Hindu students cannot live together with Christians who are of a different religion altogether, and take steps to see that this excitement does not develop any further.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

Caithness Hall.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, says:—If it is a fact that the Christian College authorities are introducing into the Caithness Hall Christian students against the will of the non-Brahmin students in it, for whom that hostel is intended, the conduct of the authorities is unsatisfactory. This interference with the religious rules of the Hindus is sure to cause commotion in the Hindu society. It is not creditable for the authorities to stoop to this without the consent of the parents. What was the necessity for this new procedure? Hindus will not keep quiet if they think that their religious feelings have been interfered with. That is why the Government follow a neutral policy in religious matters and thus maintain peace. If the college authorities forget this they will bring discredit to the college. All the Hindus should, without minding the differences between the Brahmins and the non-Brahmins, unite together, firmly represent their opinions to the college authorities and thus free the students from their troubles.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

The first-grade colleges of Government in this Presidency.

36. Adverting to the reports on the working of the three First-grade colleges in this presidency during the year 1916–1917, the Hindu Nesan, of the 24th July, observes that, if the heavy expenditure incurred in the management of the Presidency College is also incurred in the case of the other two colleges, they would also turn out highly commendable results.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

A sad tale.

37. Under this heading the Andhrapatrika, of the 16th July, describes the difficulties of the student population in the course of which it writes:—The reports of the Government Colleges give a vivid picture of the difficulties entailed on the student population by the present system of education. How many students are not yearly landed in despair, having failed in their examinations, wasted their money and energy, physical and mental, and become good-for-nothing? Their life is gradually becoming more and more insupportable. . . There is no wonder in Mr. Stone not being satisfied with the proposal made by the Principal of the Rajahmundry College for remedying this evil. Examinations are like gambling. The number of text-books is fast increasing. The incidence of the questions is not regulated so as to include all the books. Questions bear on out-of-the-way and neglected nooks and corners and are calculated more to pluck than to test. The abnormal failure cannot be ascribed to defective teaching on the part of the professors or defective understanding on the part of the students. The appointment of examiners from the various colleges may, in some measure, set right this evil. It is natural that questions set by the examiners bear on the portions treated by them as important for purposes of teaching and this confers an advantage on the students of the metropolitan colleges under the present system of the selection of examiners. This leads to the flocking of students from the mufassal colleges to the metropolitan colleges, and to disappointment consequent on not securing seats therein. The Educational authorities have to remedy this evil. The number of students that waste their money and youth and are ultimately landed in despair is on the increase. Their only salvation lies in taking to national education, which provides both for their culture and their living. National Colleges are inviting them. Many are plucked in English. Why should they spend so much energy for acquiring a foreign language and come to disappointment? . . Why should youths, as Mr. Couldrey remarks, become victims to these unnatural slaughters, and have their future enveloped in darkness? . . May our countrymen, hereafter at least, give national education to their youths and contribute to national progress!

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Vernaculars.

38. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, says in its leader:—The Mahratta says:—"The difference in ideals that now exists between the educated and the masses is due to our failure to give due importance to vernaculars. If prominence had been given to them in education and in the administration of the country, the country would have by this time risen to eminence." As stated by Mr. Gandhi, if the mother tongue is not respected, no method of self-government can make us fit for self-government. The importance which the people of Bombay are giving to their vernaculars is growing day by day. But they must recognise that to start vernacular schools, and to give importance to vernaculars in administration and in education the country should be divided into provinces on a language basis. Then facilities will be afforded for imparting higher education through the medium of the vernaculars.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Schools and the swadeshi movement.

39. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, says:—Our schools are rather so many markets for the sale of the books of foreign merchants than schools. They will be rid of this bad name if all the schoolmasters and the Educational authorities see their way to prescribe books written and published by Indians. May the school authorities thus help on the swadeshi movement.

40. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, represents a lady speaker to have said on the occasion of the opening of the Madanapalle National University College, that she was appointed to speak on behalf of the westerners, who have not properly understood national education methods and whose educational policy has brought about regrettable results in students both in mind and body.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The western educational policy.

41. In an article contributed to the Andhraprakasika, of the 20th July, under this heading, a correspondent remarks that the present education concerns itself more to testing than to teaching, that education was better in the times of Doctor Miller and other former educationists, and that the examination scare contributes to the large percentage of failures in the Intermediate Examination.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Education and students.

42. The Desamata, of the 18th July, publishes a Telugu version of the article by Mr. Earnest Wood on the subject which contains the following remarks:—Our educational system is not adapted to the ideals of the country, and calls for a revolution and not merely a reform therein. It is sixty years old, and is calculated to train youths for service in Government offices and not for enabling them to lead independent lives. . . Our present education has been the cause of the ruin of our national arts, and of virtues such as independence. It has been a plague to our patriotic spirit. While such are the facts, those that have introduced it forget that they are the authors of all these evils, and proclaim that we are useless in every way, devoid of enterprise and unfit for responsible public rights. . . The demand of the present generation for "complete life" cannot be discarded by anyone.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 18th, 1917.

National education.

43. The Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd July, in a leaderette under this heading, refers to the six objections raised by the Times against the imparting of instruction in the vernaculars and refutes them. It concedes that there is some truth in the sixth objection to the effect that, in the capital towns containing a mixed population, the use of English is necessary, and suggests as a remedy the division of the country into provinces on linguistic basis before attempting to impart education through the medium of the vernaculars, and establishing vernacular schools and colleges.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

Vernacular schools and colleges.

44. The Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd July, writes under this heading:—The Hindu says that the discussion bore on the Government order prohibiting students from attending political meetings. We understand that all the Principals, with one exception, expressed themselves against the Government order. There is a report that the Principal of the Christian College declared that the order may lead to more evil than good. This order is difficult to enforce. Professors and lecturers of colleges must go to every meeting to note the names of their students. This is impossible, and police surveillance will be fruitless. . . It is said that a Principal proposed that a list of undesirable speakers must be published. . . The matter may be entirely entrusted to the Principals, who will impose healthy restrictions on their students to secure their well-being. If the report is true that the Principals gave such advice, we request His Excellency Lord Pentland to revoke his order and win the gratitude of all.

The same paper gives a Telugu version of the article of the Hindu referring to this meeting of the Principals and expressing its comments thereon.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

Principals' Conference.

45. The Desamata, of the 18th July, expresses its gratitude to the Director of Public Instruction and the Government for having given a Teachers' College manned by Andhra teachers to the Telugu country.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 18th, 1917.

Teachers' College, Rajahmundry.

46. Referring to the suggestion made by the Times of India that the Indian Universities should try to provide employment to those that they educate, as certain societies attached to the Oxford and London Universities are doing

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The problem of earning their livelihood by the educated.

in England, the Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, asks:—Will the Indian Universities discharge their duties even now. Our opinion is that, unless the Indians give their boys national education, this problem will not be satisfactorily solved.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 20th 1917.

The increasing cost of school Education.

47. A correspondent of the Swadeshabhimani, of the 20th July, complains that the cost of maintaining children at school even in the lower classes, has increased enormously during recent years chiefly owing to the present practice of changing text-books every year, so that it is no longer possible to use them for the younger children in succession and the enormus demands made on the students in regard to costly exercise books and other stationery articles.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 21st, 1917.

Compulsory education.

48. In commenting favourably on the Bill to be introduced by the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao, making education compulsory in municipal towns, the Kerala Patrika, of the 21st July, points out that, in addition to the increased grant which may be expected from the Government, it may necessitate the imposition of a special tax in certain municipalities, which in view of the importance of the subject, cannot be grudged, and hopes that the few defects in the Bill, the exclusion of female education from its scope for example, will be got rid of at its committee stage.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 24th, 1917.

Students and politics

49. Referring to the recent conference of the principals of the first- and second- grade colleges in the presidency at the Banqueting Hall at Madras, the Manorama, of the 24th July, endorses the remarks of the principals, congratulates them on their having freely and boldly expressed their views, instead of encouraging the Government to walk through a wrong path, and hopes that the Government will not reject their views altogether.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

A Muslim College in Madras.

50. The Qaumi Report, of the 23rd July, writes:—In the columns of our issue of the 5th instant we wrote that Muhammadans have an idea that Government can bring about reconciliation and concord between both parties and gather together the different factions under its wing. We do not despair of His Excellency Lord Pentland taking as much trouble and interest in the establishing of a Muslim College in Madras as His Honour Sir James Meston took in the founding of a Shiah College at Lucknow.

Subsequently, on the 13th July, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim published his statement in which he showed that the college should be established in Madras. The next day we threw further light on the subject. The decision of the Government in the matter was anxiously awaited and speculation was rife as to what the Government procedure would be; whether it would maintain its former neutral attitude, or give effect to our proposal of the 5th instant.

It is very gratifying to learn that, just as Justice Abdur Rahim concurred in our views, His Excellency Lord Pentland has caused our hopes to be realised. On Thursday last, His Excellency held a conference, consisting of a few official and non-official members, at which it was unanimously resolved that a Muslim College should be established in Madras, and that the Government should supplement Muhammadan efforts and assistance.

We are deeply indebted to His Excellency for rightly appreciating the nature of this domestic squabble among the Mussalmans and for acceding to our request that he should endeavour to bring the various factions together under his personal patronage.

In this His Excellency has, up to a certain point, been successful.

The editor sums up the past situation in the concluding lines—

What the sage performs the fool will do,
But after exposure to public contempt a thousand times.

(e) Local and Municipal.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Water-supply in Madras.

51. Adverting to the question of water-supply in the city which was discussed in the recent meeting of the Corporation of Madras, the Swadesamitran, of the 18th July, writes:—The Corporation authorities either supply filtered water inadequate to the requirements of the people, or else grow wild with complaints about this inadequate supply and provide a liberal supply of unfiltered water. Is it after all for this that fifty lakhs of rupees of the people's money had been spent? From the statement made three years ago by Mr. Lloyd, the then President of the Corporation, when the water works were opened by His Excellency Lord Pentland, it appeared that the water scarcity in Madras had ended. But judged by experience, all the statements then made now seem to be like those made in a dream. What is the reason for the filters being now found insufficient? Is the salary that is paid to the Special Engineer a mere waste as observed by Mr. K. N. Ayya Ayyar in yesterday's meeting? Whatever that may be, when will there be a relief from this condition? When the President notified some days back that there would be a continuous supply of water hereafter, he warned that it should be boiled and used. What good can the people derive from this advice when it is not possible to enforce them to boil and use the water? Many people drink water from the street taps, unable to contain their thirst, while passing on the way. Further, it will be an impossibility for many to boil the water even in their houses on account of the high price of firewood. Is it really necessary that the water should be boiled before use? Even this is not known. Colonel Donovan himself stated that he could not say whether filtered water mixed with unfiltered water could or could not be deemed to be scientifically fit for use, unless it was examined. This water is being daily examined in the Guindy Institute. It was decided yesterday by the Corporation to send for the results of this examination and ascertain the opinion of experts thereon. Whatever the opinion of the scientists may be, from a commonsense point of view, the supply of water appears to be in a pitiable condition. If the heavy expenditure incurred in this connection is to be justified, the supply of filtered water alone should be preferred. If it is said that the supply of filtered water mixed with unfiltered water is not injurious to health, the money already spent for the purpose has only been spent in vain. As this matter has caused party feeling in the Corporation, the interests of the tax-payers are prejudicially affected. The Government, too, are quietly countenancing all this. As this city is the head-quarters of the Government, it is their duty as well to see to proper supply of water being made therein. The people would be anxiously waiting to see what action the Government would take. Until this problem is finally solved, they will have to suffer from diseases such as dysentery, as the result of using the present supply of water, if the opinion of the Health officer happens to be correct.

The Mahavikatadutan, of the 21st July, reproduces the above. — Mahavikatadutan, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

Water-supply in Madras.

The Viveka Chintamani, for July 1917, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran of the 11th July on this subject, which are abstracted in paragraph 47 of Report No. 29 of 1917. — Viveka Chintamani, Madras, July 1917.

Water-supply in the city.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 14th July, expresses its disappointment at the inability of the Corporation of Madras to supply the required quantity of filtered water. It says that the poor cannot afford to boil the mixed water now let out before drinking it. It asks who will boil the water for houseless beggars, etc., in the city. There is danger of contagious diseases bursting out and ruining the city. The Corporation, says the paper, will do well to supply even at an additional cost only filtered water at all times of the day. — Andhraprakasika, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

Water-supply in Madras.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 18th July, refers to the present drinking water-supply in Madras and suggests that to obviate the present evil, the authorities should sink some deep wells and use the water thereof for purposes of watering roads, etc., supplying filtered water for drinking only. — Andhraprakasika, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Corporation of Madras.

52. The Iswa-ul-Islam, of the 12th July, republishes the comments of the Hindu of the 4th idem, on the subject of water-supply in the city of Madras abstracted in paragraph 30 of Report No. 28 of 1917. — Iswa-ul-Islam, Madras, July 12th, 1917.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Corporation of Madras.

Referring to the conduct of Mr. Molony, the President of the Corporation of Madras, at the meeting of the Corporation held on the 17th July 1917, in giving his casting vote in favour of those who opposed the recommendations of the committee appointed to consider the removal of the Special Engineer's office to the Ripon Buildings, the Hindu Nesan, of the 20th idem, writes:—We accept that Mr. Molony has great powers of management. But, sometimes, he is very obstinate and acts as he pleases even infringing the regulations of the Corporation. This is not desirable. What for have so many commissioners been appointed? The object of their appointment is to enable the President to act in consultation with them on important matters, while they give their opinions in the interest of the citizens. While such is the case, is it proper for the President to set aside the regulations and act as he likes paying no heed to the opinions of the commissioners? If, when the President was informed that a requisition would be made by ten commissioners for the purpose of convening a special meeting to reconsider the resolution regarding the location of the Special Engineer's office, he ordered for the renewal of the lease of the building in which that office is at present located, does it not prove that he pays no heed to the commissioners? It is not at all proper for the President to act infringing the regulations of the Corporation and without caring for the views of the commissioners. The President seems to have said that, even if the commissioners requisitioned for the convening of a special meeting, he had the discretion to fix the date of the meeting. This statement of his does not show his skill. No explanation can be offered for the orders given by him to execute the rental agreement, knowing that the commissioners proposed to requisition him for a special meeting. It is strange that Mr. Molony has, instead of taking the commissioners to be his colleagues, deemed them to be persons who should nod their heads to whatever he said.

HINDU NESAN & DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Revenue Officer of the Madras Corporation.

53. The Hindu Nesan and the Dravidan, of the 20th July, express their satisfaction at the appointment of Khan Bahadur Bazl-ul-lah Sahib Bahadur as the Revenue Officer of the Madras Corporation.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Revenue officer, Madras Corporation.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 20th July, is gratified to learn that the present Senior Presidency Magistrate, Madras, has been appointed the Revenue officer, Madras Corporation.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

Sanitary arrangements in the Corporation.

54. Adverting to the minute of dissent recorded by Sir D. E. Wacha in the report of the committee appointed by the Bombay Corporation to consider and report on the proposal to provide for certain sanitary arrangements being made for the comforts of the lower classes who reside in huts in certain crowded parts of the city, the Hindu Nesan, of the 21st July, says:—The observations of Sir Wacha about the Bombay Corporation apply equally to the Corporations of other presidency towns. Lack of funds is the usual cry that is raised against any sanitary reforms proposed. This plea will never cease to be adduced. The sanitary arrangements that must of necessity be done must indeed be done.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

Local self-government.

55. The Dravidan, of the 24th July, reproduces in its leader in Tamil the substance of the leader of Justice on the same subject in its issue of the 5th idem.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 15th, 1917.

Akidu Road.

56. A Bhimavaram correspondent to the Hitakarini, of the 15th July, complains that the Akidu Road, which is always under heavy traffice, is in great disrepair, and prays that the authorities may take steps to see that it is repaired so as to be fit for traffic. He remarks that the road had never been in such a miserable condition before the advent of the present Taluk Board Assistant Engineer, and that the evil is due to the want of authority on the part of the Taluk Board to exercise any control over the engineering staff.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Water scarcity in Nizampatnam.

57. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, draws the attention of the Taluk Board concerned to the difficulties experienced by the people of Nizampatnam, Repalli taluk, in getting a supply of drinking water in that village, and prays that the Taluk Board may take steps to free them from water scarcity.

58. The Andhraprakasika, of the 20th July, is gratified to learn that the officials and the non-officials forming the committee appointed to enquire into the law relating to the reform of District Municipalities have agreed on the points that came up for discussion. It says that it is praiseworthy on the part of the rulers to consult non-officials and approve of their advice.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The District Municipalities Act.

(k) General.

59. The Swadesamitran, of the 13th July, reproduces in Tamil the review by the New Statesman, a western paper, of a book on the Indian morals and nationality, by Mr. Benton, a retired member of the Indian Civil Service, and the review is said to contain the following observations:—The attitude of our Government towards the education and religion of the Indians is an instance to illustrate how far they have failed to understand the spiritual and intellectual life of millions of the Indian people. The attachment of the Indians to their religion cannot be measured. Yet 90 per cent of the civilians pay very little attention to this fact. It is indeed shameful even to think of it. If the authorities of the Government only show hearty sympathy towards the Indians, the people of the east and the west can move with each other more intimately. The feelings of one party will be wounded. When it is seen that such sympathy has not in the least been shown by the authorities. We will tell Mr. Benton the reason why the educated Indians grow to be anarchists. It is not because they swerve from the righteous path of life while they read in the Government Schools, that they become anarchists. The reason is indeed the growth in their minds of the feeling that the authorities are not showing any sympathy towards the religious, spiritual and political aspirations of the people.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

The authorities and the people.

60. In the course of a communication from a correspondent under the heading the "Arrogance of Brahmans and the evil resulting therefrom" published in the Dravidan of the 17th July, the following observations occur:—The injustice caused to others by those, who have come out in this city of Madras and elsewhere, styling themselves as Brahmans, is not small. In the beginning they approached our people as household priests and made a living by this profession. Now, by the grace of Kali (the deity of the Yuga) they pass B.A. and B.L. and enter service in big offices. If there are 10 Brahmans and 5 non-Brahmans in an office, all these ten join together, grow intimate with the officers and try to oust the aforesaid other castemen who are our people. If the officers do not yield to their wishes, they secure recommendations to the highest officer and see that the other castemen are completely removed from their office and replaced by Brahmans. Do officers in charge of every office notice this? No. Even if they sometimes do, these Brahmans say something or other to them and hush it up. Besides, these Brahmans tom-tom and blab that they alone belong to the high caste. But they come in large numbers, like swarms of bees, to receive with open arms the alms that are being given to them by our people. Do these belong to the high caste or do we? Even from the standpoint of the Sastras, there is indeed no reason to make such a statement. For, they say that the Brahman came out from the face of Brahma, the Kshatriya from his shoulders, the Vaisya from his abdomen and the Sudra from his foot, and that those that came out of the face alone are, therefore, of the highest caste. If what they say is true, Brahma should have indeed created men in different ways to suit the different castes. But there is in fact no such thing. All men are exactly of the same type. If a tree grows up with flowers and fruits, can one of its branches yield sweet, one sour, one brackish and one bitter fruits? Many of these Brahmans are still ignorant of this and vaunt that they alone form the high caste, and our men still trust these Brahmans and allow themselves to be duped. These Brahmans attempt to join together and completely root us out. I hope that hereafter at least you will not allow them to conduct the ceremonial rites on the occasion of marriages, etc., in your homes.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

Brahmans and Non-Brahmans.

In the course of a letter from a correspondent published in the Dravidan of the 20th July, the following observations occur:—We should firmly believe that the time has come for us to acquire all rights. It is our duty to help the Non-Brahman brethren to advance in every respect. Alas! It is indeed regrettable that, instead of doing this, the Non-Brahmans, both rich and poor, have not given up the practice of making presents of all kinds to the Brahmans alone. The Non-Brahmans should not hereafter acquiesce in the fraudulent deeds of Brahmans, done under guise of friendship, as the object of the latter is indeed to root out the Non-Brahmans completely. Is it not the money of Non-Brahmans that makes the Brahmans treat them with contempt? Is it the result of destiny or the fruit of past actions that Non-Brahmans should construct temples and choultries at great cost and allow Brahmans to earn a living therefrom?

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Brahmans and Non-Brahmans.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia.

61. The Dravida Patrika, of the 18th July, publishes the proceedings of a public meeting held in the village of Agaramangudi, near Ayyampet in the Tanjore district, under the presidency of Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar of Kumbakōnam, to protest against these internments. The president of this meeting is reported to have spoken to the public about the past and the present condition of India, the Congress and the Home Rule movement. Many of those present at the meeting are stated to have taken the vow of buying swadeshi goods only.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 18th July, publishes in Tamil the proceedings of a public meeting held in Mylapore on the 16th idem, under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, protesting against these internments. The proceedings are published in extenso in the Hindu of the 17th idem.

This paper also publishes in Tamil the proceedings of the meetings held in this connection on the same date at Kumbakōnam, Madura, Tanjore and Satyanagaram. In the meetings held at the first three places, those present were exhorted to take the vow of buying swadeshi goods only. The last two meetings were held under the auspices of the local Home Rule Leagues.

The same paper publishes also the proceedings of the public meetings held at Rameswaram, Idamanal and Tirumullaivasal to protest against these internments. People present at the last two meetings are reported to have been asked to take the vow of buying swadeshi goods only.

The same paper reproduces in Tamil the substance of the letter written to the Hindu of the 17th idem by its London correspondent regarding these internments and the repressive measures adopted by the Government.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 20th July, publishes, as reported by correspondents, proceedings of public meetings held at Panruti, Palghat and Tirumiyachchur on the 16th idem to protest against these internments. A resolution was passed at the last meeting to purchase and patronize swadeshi goods as far as possible. At Palghat, those present at the meeting were exhorted to take a vow to purchase only these goods.

The paper also publishes from the pen of a correspondent the proceedings of a public meeting held at Sattur where resolutions are stated to have been passed to protest against these internments and to continue the efforts made for the acquisition of Home Rule under the British Empire.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, June 24th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues.

The * Prapanchamitran, of the 24th June, writes as follows on this subject:—We would venture to say that the order of the Governor to intern these three persons, who worked for the welfare of the poor people, in these days, when England has taken part in the great war, the like of which was never seen before, to crush the tyranny of Germany, and when it is imperative to pay more attention to gain the love and co-operation of the Indians and to collect contributions for the war, clearly shows his short-sighted policy which is opposed to the principles of the liberal party to which he belongs. We will consider that the internment, in her seventieth year, of the lady, who is worshipped as a deity by the people, is good in one respect. The crucifixion of Christ was the cause for the spread of Christianity in the world. Muhammadanism acquired prominence through the troubles experienced by Muhammad Nabi. Similarly, it is a fact accepted by the Sastras, that the endeavours now and then made for the reformation of the world have acquired strength only through the sufferings of the initiators. This is not a fact unknown to Lord Pentland Though we are glad that his stringent repressive measures have been helpful towards the development of such eminent qualities as union and patriotism, yet we are overtaken by sorrow that the action of the Madras Governor is not in keeping with the saying that the British flag has been hoisted for establishing liberty, equality and brotherhood.

*Received during the current week.

Tuberculosis Institute.

62. The Swadesamitran, of the 19th July, reproduces in Tamil the letter written to the press by Doctor Nanjunda Rao regarding this Institute, which appears in the Hindu of the 18th idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

A tuberculosis hospital at Madras.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, gives a Telugu version of the letter to New India of Mr. Nanjunda Rao criticising the advisability of establishing a tuberculosis hospital at Madras.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Mr. Camberlain.

63. The Dravida Patrika, of the 18th July, writes:—The resignation of Mr. Chamberlain of the office of the Secretary of State for India, at the present juncture, has given great relief and satisfaction to the Indians. It may, perhaps, cause regret to many of the bureaucrats in India and the Anglo-Indian Press, as Mr. Chamberlain conducted himself as one supporting their views. It is the principle of many of the Hindus not to speak ill of those that are dead and those that have retired from service. It is not our object to infringe this principle. But it is our duty to give out the truth so far as it relates to public affairs. At the time he was appointed the Secretary of State for India, the Indians did not receive the nomination with much satisfaction as he belonged to the conservative party. But the bold attitude taken by him in support of India, when the Manchester merchants raised a loud cry against the increase of cotton duty by the Government of India, caused great satisfaction to the Indians. Then he spoke impartially caring for justice alone. The proceedings of the Imperial Conference also were in a way responsible to draw the Indians nearer to him. The nomination by him of Mr. Bupendranath Basu as a member of his council is also worthy of notice. But the statements recently made by him in the Parliament about the internment by the Madras Government of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues and the action of the authorities in India led to the abatement of the confidence which many of the Indians had in him.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Mr. Chamberlain.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, says:—Whatever might be the reason for Mr. Chamberlain's resignation, his administration did not satisfy the Indians. His knowledge of India and the ideals of the Indians was so small that the Indians called him the "no nothing Chamberlain." He had to depend on his subordinates. He used to nod his assent to everything done by them and never did anything independently manifesting his individuality. Every one considered his reply regarding the recent internments as insipid. It would have been better if he had enquired into the matter and then given his opinion. Instead of doing so, he tried to justify the internments on the strength of the reports sent to him. This dissatisfied the Indians. Responsible leaders like Mr. Wacha informed the Prime Minister of the resentment and surprise that the words of Mr. Chamberlain have caused to the Indians. But the heart of Mr. Chamberlain is pure. In the matter of the raising of import duties in India, he fought with the Lancashire merchants on behalf of the Indians. If it is a fact that Mr. Montagu is to be appointed, that may do some good to India. Mr. Chamberlain took up the responsibility of office at a critical juncture and did honest work. We sympathise with him.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

Mr. Chamberlain's resignation.

Under this heading, the Andhraprakasika, of the 14th July, says:—The advocates of immediate Home Rule say that after hearing of the internment of Mrs. Besant and others the Prime Minister and His Majesty the King-Emperor got angry with Mr. Chamberlain and reproved him harshly, and that this is the chief reason of his resignation. This is not to be believed in. It is not a fact that Mr. Chamberlain gave his assent to the order of internment without the knowledge of the Prime Minister and His Imperial Majesty. If the Prime Minister and His Majesty the King-Emperor reproved Mr. Chamberlain, why did they not cancel the internment, and thus remedy the wrong? So we think that the surmise of the Home Rulers, made out of youthful enthusiasm, is not right at all.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

It cannot be said that Mr. Chamberlain is comparable to the distinguished State Secretaries. We think he has nothing in common with Mr. Morley. When Mr. Chamberlain was appointed as Secretary of State certain newspapers remarked that he was altogether useless, but those very newspapers began to applaud him when on behalf of India, he made a bold stand against the threats of Lancashire merchants in the matter of the additional import duties in India. From the moment of his appointment as State Secretary for India, he had been following a liberal policy. We were hoping that he, who was praised by the very same men who first decried him, would become a true friend of India. We even heard that he would be liberal in granting some political concessions to our country after the war.

Immediate Home Rulers want complete self-government after the war. Non-Brahmans want separate representation for separate classes. The Maharaja of Bikanir said that the Government would grant to India some political concessions after the war. The Government do not publish what reforms they are going to introduce after the war. At this juncture a firm person should be appointed as Secretary of State for India. It may be said that Mr. Montagu who has personal acquaintance with the State of affairs in India is a fit man for the post. He has great love for India. If he is appointed, Indians will be gratified.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 18th, 1917.

The resignation of Mr. Chamberlain.

The Desamata, of the 18th July, writes in its leader under this heading:—The few small political privileges that we had of late, we had during the tenure of the office of the Secretary of State by Mr. Chamberlain. They are, the representation of India in the Imperial War Conference, the creation of an additional Indian membership in the Council of the Secretary of State for India, and the increase of the tax on cotton imports. These privileges are not, however, of much consequence to us. Judging from the repressive policy of the Governments in India, representation in the Imperial Conference does not appear to have led to any change in the angle of vision of our rulers. At a time when the abolition of the India Council is desired, it gives little consolation that an Indian member has been added on to it. The increase of the taxes on the cotton imports is but a temporary war measure. . . It is said that Mr. Montagu belongs to the liberal party and has some sympathy for Indian aspirations.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Resignation of Mr. Chamberlain.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, gives a Telugu version to the following effect of an article from the Indian Patriot which is said to have republished it from the Amrita Bazaar Patrika on this subject:—There is a school in a village. The schoolmaster was a very cruel and hard-hearted man. He used to beat boys to death and close their ears. By God's grace he died. All the boys were delighted as if their troubles were over. An intelligent lad among them said: "Why are you so jubilent. As the proverb goes: If a man who eats fowls is gone, one who eats sheep may come instead. Our fathers will not keep quiet; because this schoolmaster has died. They may bring in a man still more cruel. For the termination of our troubles the only means is that our fathers should die." The delight felt by the Indians on account of the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain is like the delight of the said schoolboys.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The exodus to the hills.

64. Adverting to the observations incidentally made in the report of the Mesopotamia Commission regarding the exodus of the Government of India to the hills, the Dravidan, of the 19th July, observes:—It is impossible for officers, who have to use their brains with the sweat of their brow dripping on the ground, in the discharge of their Executive and Legislative functions, to remain here during the summer without resorting to the hills. Even a man of very low status, who has the funds to go to the Nilgiris, will not decline to go there. So it is not in the least justifiable to object to the exodus of the Government to the hills merely on the ground that it involves heavy expenditure. This exodus does not in any way interfere with the work of the Government, and is found to be necessary to save the officers from the excessive heat of the sun. It is only those persons who are highly ignorant and cherish evil thoughts, and who are actuated by strong jealousy and false patriotism, that will condemn and scoff at the action of the Government in going to the hills. But this condemnation should be treated with indifference.

65. Referring to the report of the Mesopotamia Commission and the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India, the Swadesamitran, of the 19th July, writes:—

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The new Secretary of State for India.

Two or three defects in the administration of India have been brought to light by this report. It is necessary that we should refer to one or two of them. The first is that relating to the arrangement made by the late Commander-in-Chief, Lord Kitchener, after great altercation with Lord Curzon, regarding the political relations which should obtain between the Military Department and that of general administration. The weakness of that arrangement is now said to be the cause of the present mismanagement. The second is the condemnation in the report of the delay caused in the conduct of business by the exodus of the Government of India to the hills. The third is the observation made in the report that the mutual responsibility between the Secretary of State and the Government of India has not been properly defined, and in consequence great blunders had been committed, in connection with which Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Hardinge are liable to blame. It is in order to refute this charge that both of them tried to resign their respective offices so that they might freely defend their cause in the Parliament. As Lord Hardinge was holding an office in the Civil Service which carries a permanent pay, his resignation has not been accepted but he has been permitted to defend himself. But Mr. Chamberlain, who was holding an office connected with the Parliament, seems to have made up his mind to give up the same while matters relating to his conduct were to be discussed in the Parliament. Whatever may be his reason for giving up the office, it is unnecessary for us to say once again that no Indian is dissatisfied with his resignation. It is our duty to express to Mr. Montagu, who was formerly the Under Secretary of State for India under Lord Morley, our immense satisfaction at his having accepted that office in place of Mr. Chamberlain especially at this juncture. It will be in the memory of our readers that under Lord Morley he supported and completed the reforms relating to the Legislative and Executive Councils. The bureaucrats are now stringently adopting repressive measures with the help of the Viceroy and the full support of Mr. Chamberlain, who was till now the Secretary of State for India, in such a way that these reforms may, as far as possible, prove to be ineffective, and may not be extended. The result is that many patriots have to lose, without any judicial trial even the preliminary rights to which the subjects of a country are naturally entitled. At the time when the great war broke out, Lord Hardinge, the then Viceroy, supported with magnanimity the loyalty and patriotism of the people and encouraged them to sacrifice men and money profusely for the war. After his retirement from office, the broad view that is being taken throughout the empire on account of the great services rendered by him to the war and the movement that is going on as a result of this war, for reforming the world have spread very widely among the people. However, in the actions of the bureaucrats, it is indeed difficult to find either the liberal views consistent with the above, or an earnestness in the matter of the Indians acquiring Home Rule soon. In this situation, repressive measures are resorted to both openly and secretly and actions taken so that the Home Rule agitation may be suppressed in every possible way, and this has given rise to a condition of increased excitement and anger among the people. The Indians are making sacrifices of money and other materials and are fighting, shoulder to shoulder, along with the other members of the empire, for the successful termination of the war which was begun to crush the enemy who has indeed come as an opponent to truth and liberty. This new feeling has been created even in the rural parts of India, and the reciprocity that is being shown to us by the other members of the empire is also being commended. All the Indians, therefore, are with immense faith and eagerness hoping that, on the reconstruction of the empire after the war, they will also acquire self-government and an equal position in the empire and that the British rule will continue long. How can it be said to be good statesmanship at this juncture to intern persons revered by the people, to subject lectures and newspapers to restrictions and make endeavours to suppress the Home Rule agitation? All Indians have confidence in Mr. Montagu that he has the acuteness of intellect to rightly realise the present situation and rectify the same. Would he boldly make use of his ability and his experience of the bureaucrats and change the present policy and adopt the principles of Home Rule? The Indians eagerly await his reply and decision in this matter. In this they have for their support the statement made by him in the Parliament when the Report of the Mesopotamia Commission was discussed. What he said then was that those responsible for the administration of the Government of India should conduct themselves in such a way that they are more responsible to the Indian public than to the authorities at home. This indeed is the object of the reforms proposed by the great assemblies here. If he is prepared to give a liberal interpretation to his words and adopt them with courage, Mr. Montagu should set aside the illiberal proposals for reform submitted by the Government of India, and give effect to the liberal reforms suggested by the great assemblies here. This indeed is the proper course for him to follow.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Adverting to the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India, the Hindu Nesan, of the 19th July, writes:—This news will give satisfaction to all Indians, for, during the four years he was the Under Secretary of State for India he has shown beyond doubt his care and sympathy for the welfare and the comforts of the Indians. He even toured throughout India to personally learn her condition. Is there no difference between a Secretary of State for India who never came to India but attends to the disposal in London of matters relating to India relying on the despatches of the Government of India, and a Secretary of State who toured throughout India, consulted the opinion of the officers of the Government and a few of the leaders of the people at different places about Indian affairs and returned home after learning the true state of India and her people? Others cannot know of the magnificence of India and of the greatness and weakness of the Indians. If the Secretary of State for India belongs to the Conservative or the Unionist party, it is not possible for him to do any good even though he knows personally of matters relating to India. But Mr. Montagu is neither a Conservative nor a Unionist, but belongs to the political party of Liberals. As such, we can safely trust that he will do all the good he can to India during his tenure of office as the Secretary of State.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The new Secretary of State for India.

The Dravidan, of the 20th July, writes:—We trust that the nomination of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India will give pleasure to all. He is a gentleman of vast knowledge and broad views. He not only has wide experience of matters relating to India, but is also inclined to afford all facilities for her advancement. It is indeed most fortunate for her to have him as her Secretary. At this time when everything is in confusion and disorder on account of the war, the appointment of a kind-hearted and sympathetic person as the Secretary of State for India is highly desirable, and the nomination of Mr. Montagu to that office would, therefore, be acceptable to all. There is not the shadow of doubt that he will ever act for our good as did Lord Hardinge, who, during his tenure of office as the Viceroy, ascertained the opinion of the people, and worked day and night for their advancement. This will indeed result in harmonious relations being established between the Government and the people and root out all differences of opinion among them. In this matter there is room to believe that the regime of Mr. Montagu will be productive of greater benefits than that of Mr. Chamberlain.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 21st July, observes:—The adverse comments made by the Anglo-Indian press in India on the nomination of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India bear strong testimony to his liberal political views

We must note that it is natural with the Anglo-Indians to write in the same strain of statesmen like Lord Ripon, Lord Morley and Lord Hardinge, who showed sympathy towards the feelings of the Indians. The London Times, which is accustomed to write prejudicially to our progress, supporting the bureaucracy, has already given a severe warning to the new Secretary. It says that the statement made by him regarding the reforms to be introduced in the Indian administration should be deemed to be an expression of his own opinion and not as a definite pronouncement in his official capacity. The London Times is again alarmed at the statement recently made by him in the Parliament, that a larger share of the responsibility in the administration of India should, in course of time, be given to the Indians, and says that this is not the policy to be adopted by one holding office of the Secretary of State. But we must point out that the warning given by that paper is not proper. He has expressed similar views in connection with the administration of this country while he was the Under Secretary of State for India. He stated in the Parliament some years back that the two important problems worthy of consideration were, how much of the powers of control the Parliament have over India should be delegated to the Indians and how the powers that remain with them should be exercised. As, after the close of the war, the time would come for a solution of these problems with a liberal spirit, it will no longer be possible to put off the consideration of these without coming to a final decision thereon.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

The Lokopakari, of the 23rd July, expresses its satisfaction at the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India for the same reasons as those advanced by the Swadesamitran and the Hindu Nesan of the 19th idem, and trust that, during his tenure of office, the administration of this country will be conducted with due regard to the aspirations of the people and that it will, therefore, be conducive to their advancement.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The new Secretary of State.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, writes under this heading:— New aspirations have sprung in the minds of the people of India in accordance with the times. The ideal of swaraj is agitating their minds. Our rulers do not like this and the Government of India is also opposed to it. Constitutional agitation is thus suppressed. The Defence of India Act is employed to put down political agitation. Internments are increasing in number. Mr. Chamberlain, who has been the Secretary of State for India till now has not been able to understand the condition of things in the country personally and he gave his assent to the repressive measures. The people are growing more and more despondent. While things stood thus, as if it was a God-send, the Mesopotamia Commission's report was published and the Government intended to appoint a special tribunal for the trial of those who were therein stated to be at fault. Mr. Chamberlain was also found fault with. We have already declared that the appointment of such a tribunal was not in keeping with the honour of the country. Mr. Chamberlain could not bear the dishonor shown to him and he resigned his appointment. The trial was given up on the advice of the English people. The Madras Mail thereupon rejoiced supposing that Mr. Chamberlain would withdraw his resignation. For some reason or another he did not change his mind. He might have felt the burden of Indian administration too much for him. Though he is kind-hearted, it must be said that it was for his good to have given up the responsibility of Indian administration, as he had little knowledge of the country.

The resignation of Mr. Chamberlain has proved a blessing for India. . . It is but natural that the people should eagerly expect him (Mr. Montagu) to show that unflinching courage which he showed when partition of Bengal was annulled. Unlike Mr. Chamberlain, who knows nothing of India, Mr. Montagu possesses knowledge of India gained by experience and he is also well disposed towards it. He is only 38 years old. He is not therefore too old to learn new opinions and to change the old if necessary. . . Mr. Montagu does not like that the bureaucracy should merely for the sake of prestige disallow a change, even when change is absolutely necessary. A few years ago Mr. Montagu said that it is the principal duty of Government to work for the prosperity of the subjects and that it is not statesmanship to stand in the way of the progress of the people. On the 12th instant in his speech in the House of Commons on the question of the Mesopotamia Commission's report, he emphatically asserted that the Indian Government should adopt a form of administration more responsible to the Indians. It is not therefore surprising that the Indians should be glad that Mr. Montagu who possesses such excellent ideals should hold the reins of administration. . . The Anglo-Indian press is feeling anxiety as regards this appointment. . . Whatever be the opinion of the English papers, Mr. Montagu has already declared: "We have promised to take a forward step and we intend keeping our promise." We believe that his administration will help on the realization of the aspirations of the Indians. It is customary with statesmen to forget their old promises after taking up an office. Lord Morley who had spent his whole energy for the Irish Home Rule forgot his generous intentions after he became the Secretary of State for India. We believe that Mr. Montagu will not do so, but that he will satisfy the people of India by his administration.

Lokaprakasam, Trichur, July 23rd, 1917.

The Secretary of State.

In commenting very favourably upon the appointment of Mr. Montagu as Secretary of State for India, the Lokaprakasam, of the 23rd July, points out that the Indian papers are pleased with the appointment, which is the very reason why the Anglo-Indian papers, which are opposed to India's progress, express fears and misgivings, and observes that there is reason to believe that Mr. Montagu, who possesses a knowledge of India and of her affairs which no other Secretary of State had, and who must have known that the Indians were very much displeased at the ignorance displayed by Mr. Chamberlain on Indian affairs will, instead of being a mere puppet at the India Council or one who blindly believes the reports of the Indian administrators, consult the wishes and views of the Indians, especially of their leaders, before he takes action in any matter.

Manorama, Calicut, July 17th, 1917.

Secretary of State for India.

Referring to the resignation of Mr. Austen Chamberlain, the Manorama, of the 17th July, points out that, owing to his ready acquiescence in all that the men on the spot do, there will not be many in India who regret it, and that his replies to the interpellations on the subject of the recent internments shows that he does not know much about India, and observes that the present troubles in India will practically come to an end, if Lord Hardinge succeed him as Secretary of State.

Manorama, Calicut, July 20th, 1917.

The Manorama, of the 20th July, comments favourably on the appointment of Mr. Montagu as Secretary of State for India, which in the present circumstances will, it thinks, give some relief to the Indians.

Yogakshemam, Trichur, July 20th, 1917; Kerala Patrika, Calicut, July 21st, 1917.

The Yogakshemam, of the 20th July, and the Kerala Patrika, of the 21st, also comment favourably on the appointment of Mr. Montagu in place of Mr. Chamberlain, whose administration, the former thinks, was not a success.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu and the Anglo-Indian press.

66. Anent the remarks of the Statesman of Calcutta regarding the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India, that as the Under Secretary of State for India he has proved himself unfit for that office, the Swadesamitran, of the 20th July, observes:—In whose opinion was his incapacity proved? The then Secretaries of State for India, Lord Morley and Lord Crew, had great regard for him. We are aware that his speech with reference to Indian Budget on the reforms to be introduced in the administration of India were highly commended by the House of Commons. It seems the statement then made by him that, as India was progressing day by day, the administration of that country should also be reformed, is still causing pain to the Anglo-Indian press. Further, Mr. Montagu has indeed committed another serious mistake recently! When the Mesopotamia affair was discussed in the Parliament, he said that the responsibility of the Government of India to the British Government should gradually decrease and that the former Government should be held responsible to the Indian public. The Statesman can never support this statement, and has therefore ventured to find fault with him for fear that the reins now held tight in the hands of the bureaucrats may be loosened, as one with liberal views has become the Secretary of State for India. What would not this paper write, which only a few days back came out with a curious theory, that one without any knowledge of India should be the Secretary of State for India?

Anglo-Indians.

Our Anglo-Indian friends are trying their best to obstruct India getting liberty. It is said that Mr. Irwin proposed the establishment of a European Association in England to thwart the endeavours of the Indians to prevail on the English people to grant them swaraj. Let us see how long our Anglo-Indian friends can hide the real conditions of India from the freedom-loving British people.

Mr. Montagu.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

With reference to the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India, the Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, remarks:—It remains to be seen how far he will satisfy the Indians.

The appointment of Mr. Montagu.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, gives a Telugu version of an article in the Times of India on this subject, which contains the following remark:—A few petty reforms may be expected of him, but not changes of importance.

Mr. Montagu.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 24th, 1917.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 24th July, writes:—Mr. Montagu had been to India some two years ago when he came to our province too and paid a visit to His Highness the Maharaja. He is by no means autocratic. We already see happy auguries of the future since his accession to his new office. The Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces made a speech expressing his sympathy with the people in regard to the internment of Mrs. Besant and the Home Rule question. The Viceroy is privileged to make speeches of this kind but not a Lieutenant-Governor. From the fact that he spoke as he did, it is surmised that His Excellency the Viceroy's views too have probably changed, and that this mode of giving expression to the change in views was resorted to because it would otherwise be too sudden a reversal of the policy already avowed, and that Lords Pentland and Willingdon might also be more democratic in their principles in course of time. Even the Pioneer which is seldom surpassed for its irresponsible writings has suggested that conferences should be held in the various parts of the country in order to ascertain the wants and wishes of the people in regard to administrative reforms. It is indeed most surprising that a paper like this should say that Indian public opinion should be ascertained and respected. Let that pass. We have been associated with the British for the last 316 years. Although many of them in this country have proved themselves autocratic, we know that in their own country they are a perfectly democratic nation. We know also that they have deported their autocratic rulers and even sent them to the gallows. The Indians taking an example from their history have come to realise that a just king deserves to be worshipped as a God and that a highhanded ruler ought not to be recognised as a ruler. As Mr. Montagu has excellent qualities in him and is known to be democratic in his views, the news of his appointment as Secretary of State has been hailed with joy in all quarters in this country. We trust Mysore, too, will share this joy and convey its congratulations to him.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore City, July 25th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 25th July in an article welcoming the news of the appointment of Mr. Montagu, observes that it may now be confidently affirmed that with one like Mr. Montagu as Secretary of State, the objects of the Home Rule League will not be long in fulfilling.

Application of the Press Act.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

67. Adverting to the security of Rs. 500 demanded from the New Times of Karachi by the Magistrate of that district and to the action of the people of the locality in coming forward to help the paper and contributing more than twice the amount required as security, the Swadesamitran, of the 20th July, observes that the high-handed acts of the authorities indeed sometimes result in good to the people.

Swadeshi meetings.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

68. The Swadesamitran, of the 20th July, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held at Swamimalai, at which the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar and another speaker are reported to have spoken of the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues, and dwelt at length on the importance of swadeshism as a means for the acquisition of Home Rule for India.

LIVA-UL-ISLAM, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

69. The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 19th July, reproduces the comments of the Dravidan of the 13th idem on this subject, which are abstracted in the second paragraph on page 2001 of Report No. 29 of 1917.

Swadeshism.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 21st July. reproduces in Tamil, from the pen of a correspondent, the speech delivered in 1906 on this subject by Babu Surendranath Banerji before the Swadeshi Vastu Pracharani Sabha of Bombay, which is published in New India of the 16th idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 21st July, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held in Kumbakōnam on the 19th idem under the presidency of the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar. The president and a few others who addressed the audience referred to the memorandum of reforms submitted by certain representative members of the Imperial Legislative Council, and dwelt on a variety of subjects, such as the hardship caused by the Press Act, the report of the Public Services Commission, the present economic condition of India, the need for compulsory primary education and the acquisition of Home Rule for India under the British flag, and those present took the swadeshi vow as a means for the acquisition of Home Rule.

Swadeshism.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 21st July, writes:—There is a movement throughout the country to the effect that people should buy articles manufactured in this country in preference to foreign articles, even though the former may sell at a higher price or be inferior in quality. The desire to improve the industries of this country is the reason for this agitation. At the time when the Europeans began to establish themselves here, several industries were flourishing in this country to supply the articles required for us. But when they began to acquire the country and establish their Government here, the industries of the country lost patronage and gradually declined. Therefore articles necessary and unnecessary for us began to be imported from the western countries. Our money began to go out of the country gradually. Savants like the late Justice Ranade found out that this foreign enterprise was a drain on our country and would gradually impoverish us, and began to rouse us from our profound sleep with the result that the swadeshi movement was started. But several obstacles cropped up in the way of its spreading to the extent we desired. As the western articles are manufactured by machines on a great scale, they are cheap. Our people have not the experience to manufacture articles either by hand or by machine and sell them at the same price. Therefore, if the Government could levy a heavy import duty on the western goods and thereby slightly enhance their cost, it will be conducive to the starting of new industries in this country and to the advancement of those industries already started. But until the war was declared, the party advocating the free-trade policy were the most influential in England. Moreover, as the levy of the aforesaid import duty would affect prejudicially not only the British, but also the other European merchants, both the Government of India and the British Government were not prepared to take any action which would affect the interests of the European merchants. If our Government had acted with careful consideration, they should have levied an import duty on the articles that abundantly came here from foreign countries such as Germany, Austria and France, and endeavoured to manufacture those articles here. But in the interests of their nation and their country, they kept quiet. So long as the Government do not come forward to patronise the swadeshi industries, they cannot thrive unless the people support them. When Bengal was partitioned by Lord Curzon against the wishes of the people, their indignation gave rise to the swadeshi movement. Even the Congress passed a resolution supporting the same, and the spirit that then spread like wild fire throughout the country has not been in vain. A few factories were then started at several places, and some of them have firmly established themselves and are now in a flourishing condition. If we have only the will, it is possible for us to use clothes made in India alone, and use only

Indian soaps for bathing and washing purposes. But on account of the want of co-operation on the part of the Government, the swadeshi movement did not result in as much good as was compatible with the enthusiasm created by this movement. But now the Government themselves are anxious to start industries in this country. They have imposed import duty even on English cotton goods unmindful of the inconvenience thereby caused to the English merchants. The great war has proved to the British statesman that the empire itself should be in a position to manufacture the articles required for it without expecting them from other countries like Germany and Austria. But it is understood that some men of charitable disposition intend improving our raw products and exporting them to foreign countries to be converted into manufactured articles, so that they may be useful to this and the other countries. This, indeed, is the thing that should not be done. Endeavours should however be made to improve the raw products. But we must use them as far as possible, and convert them into manufactured articles. What remains after our use, others can buy. Though it is not possible in the present condition of our industries, to manufacture articles on such a scale as to admit of their being supplied to others after our consumption, yet we must endeavour to manufacture them at least to such an extent as is enough to meet our demands. This is possible only when it has the support of the people. Capitalists would develop their industries only when they have the confidence that the manufactured goods will find a sale. If we let lose this opportunity, the western capitalists will, it appears, go over here after the close of the war, and try to establish factories. Without therefore giving room to this, we must come forward to strengthen the swadeshi factories and industrial institutions. We must, indeed, begin to use only those articles that are produced in India so that we may not lag behind in the commercial competition of nations that will begin at the close of the war. A few Anglo-Indian papers speak disparagingly of this movement as one due to the internment of some of our popular leaders, and not begun with the object of improving our economical condition. Our leaders are not taking part in this agitation merely with the object of getting the internment orders cancelled. As we have not the political rights enjoyed by the westerners, there is no other way of showing our political unity. The swadeshi agitation is indeed carried on at present only to show that the same political opinion prevails throughout the country. As a result of this, our industries can flourish, and the authorities should realise the common feeling of the country and see to the fulfilment of our political aspirations. Even if they do not fulfil our aspirations, it is our belief that these aspirations will themselves be fulfilled.

Publication of the theosophical works of Mrs. Besant.

70. Adverting to the statement made in the Parliament by the Secretary of State for India, about the reply of Mrs. Besant to the Madras Government declining to take advantage of the permission granted to her for publishing her religious and theosophical works, that it was violently worded and that it identified the objects of the Theosophical Society with the political aims of other organizations, the Swadesamitran, of the 17th July, writes as follows:—While yet the reply of Mrs. Besant remains unpublished by the Government, it is unfair to create a suspicion about the objects of the Theosophical Society basing it on the inference drawn from the brief statement made by the Secretary of State for India. When he referred in the Parliament to these objects and to the violent language of Mrs. Besant's letter, he should have published the letter in support of his statement. The publication of this letter is all the more necessary, especially when she is not in a position to reply, then and there, to the statement openly made by him in his official capacity.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

Home Rule and the swadeshi.

71. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st July, says that in Guntūr on the 11th and in Bapatla on the 14th and the 16th July, lectures were delivered on Home Rule and internments, and the people were exhorted to follow the swadeshi movement.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

A poor all-agraharam committee.

72. Under this head, the Dravidan, of the 23rd July, writes:—It is understood that a meeting of the All-India Congress Committee will be held in Bombay at the end of this month to consider the matters which have happened in consequence of the internment of Mrs. Besant. This All-India Congress Committee is a body which is organised by a few of the Indians but which professes to represent the whole of India. Only fifteen members represent Madras on this committee Of these, thirteen are Brahmans, one a non-Brahman (Mr. Patro), and one an Irish lady (Mrs. Besant). Mr. Patro has expressed his inability to attend the meeting at Bombay. It is indeed unnecessary for us to say that Mrs. Besant also cannot attend. Consequently those that go to the Bombay meeting as representatives of this Presidency are all Brahmans! Thirteen Brahmans are going to labour hard for the comforts of forty millions of people! This committee deserves therefore to be styled as the "All-India Agraharam Committee" and not the "All-India Congress Committee".

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

A London correspondent writes to the Times of India that the Secretary of State for India proposes to constitute a committee from among the members of both the Houses of Parliament to consider reforms to be introduced in the administration of India, and that the needs of India can be learnt from the popular leaders that are to be selected by the Congress and the Muslim League for deputation to England. It is, indeed, our opinion that it is impossible for the Congress and the Muslim League, which are conducted only by a few persons, to properly represent the opinions of the very large number of the Indian people. It will be improper, under any circumstances, to deem them to be representative bodies of the Indian public.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

"Congress-Muslim League scheme."

73. The Swadesamitran, of the 24th July, publishes in Tamil the speech delivered by its editor Mr. A. Rangaswami Ayyangar, at the Gokhale Hall, on the 23rd idem, under the presidency of Mr. P. K. Telang, on this subject. The speech appears in New India of the same date.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

Administrative autonomy.

74. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, publishes a Telugu version of the latter part of the article of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao on the subject of autonomy appearing in the Hindu of the 11th June 1917.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

Lord Ronaldshay on Home Rule.

75. The Calcutta correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, says:—From the speech of Lord Ronaldshay it will be plain that the whole bureaucracy from Mr. Chamberlain down to the small European official is opposed to Indian liberty. But there is some difference between the speeches of Lord Pentland and Lord Ronaldshay. Unlike the other speeches, there is no vilification of others in the speech of our Governor. His Excellency was kind enough to say that he would, with a view to develop local self-government, increase union panchayats. . . It is gratifying that although our Governor has no regard for other Presidents of the Congress, he has respect for the opinion of Sir S. P. Sinha. It is not possible to say whether the authorities, when making such speeches, feign ignorance or are really ignorant of certain things. Has not His Excellency read in any paper the conversation that took place between Saint Nihal Singh and Sir S. P. Sinha?

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

A ray of hope.

76. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, says in its leader under this heading:—There is no room for factions among those who carry on a constitutional agitation in India. The goal of all is the same, and the methods adopted, constitutional. Why should not all join together then and serve the country? Even in England where there are factions, all have united together under war conditions. When the Indians have no independence at all, the existence of factions is in no way advantageous. Indians should work with this truth in mind. The President of the Reddi Conference said:—"In the theatre of new India, there is no room for any endeavours against the congress and other institutions which follow the congress, bearing fruit. Every institution wishing the welfare of India should consider that the welfare of the Indian nation is its welfare and that the goal of the Indian nation is its goal." From these words it is plain that even sectional institutions have for their end the realisation of national ideals. If we represent our wishes to the British public, we will certainly have them fulfilled. For this, the Indians should first sink all their differences. Presiding at the Naoroji condolence meeting, Sir K. G. Gupta said that all people were impatient in India about the post-war problems. The Government should, therefore, publish the policy they are going to pursue after the war. May the Government and the people note this advice of this veteran statesman!

77. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, contains under this heading a Telugu version of the letter of Mr. Doraiswami Ayyar, High Court Vakil, which appears in the Hindu of the 12th July 1917. ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

The manners of a Civilian officer.

78. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, says:—A correspondent suggests that in order that the ryots may not, for the sake of sanitation, cultivate land round the village-site to the extent of 50 yards with wet crops, the Government will do well to acquire that land paying compensation to the ryots. ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

Wet cultivation near village-site.

A correspondent to the Hitakarini, of the 15th July, refers to the order of the Tahsildar of Bhimavaram directing that a zone of 50 yards all round the village-site should not be cultivated with wet crops, and recommends that the lands should be acquired on payment of compensation. HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 15th, 1917.

Wet cultivation near village-site.

79. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th July, reproduces from the Bombay Chronicle the comments of the New Statesman on the work of Mr. Benton of the Indian Civil Service regarding Indian Moral Teaching and Division of Castes, in which occurs:—It is plain that the Government have utterly failed in their attempt to understand the religious side of the Indians. It is regrettable that 99 per cent of the Indian Civil Servants do not spend for this purpose even a thousandth of the time they spend in shooting game. Sympathy with religion is the chief means of bringing about a close union between the east and the west. This, it is to be regretted, is wanting in the Government officers. The reason why an Indian youngman turns out to be an anarchist is not that he loses his moral sense in the Government schools. We inform Mr. Benton that the reasons of anarchism are that the Indians consider that the rulers do not have a sympathetic interest in the religious and political development of the Indians, and that the Government officers think they are heaven-born and are indifferent to the Indians, who instead of being contended with the roads, railways, etc., provided by the rulers, are demanding the grant of their rights. ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

Sympathy with the people.

80. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th July, refers, under this heading, to the remarks of the Justice, that India should, as far as possible, be divided so that each race in the country may have a separate provincial Government, and that the whole country should be under a federated Government, and says:- It is surprising that the Justice which has been deprecating the Andhra movement and the idea of an Andhra University, should suggest that, as far as possible, each race in India should be granted a separate provincial Government. This is just what the Andhra movement has for its object. The Andhras wanted a division of the country on a language basis. The Justice also desires it. Though the Justice may disapprove of Home Rule, will it at least agitate for a division of the country into separate independent provinces? If India, containing as it does, different races, is unfit for self-government, self-government may be separately granted to different races living in separate parts of the country. . . . The Andhras have been telling from the very beginning that if India be divided as the United States of America and each division granted self-government, self-government in India will then be efficient. ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

The dawn of wisdom.

81. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th July, says:—We are of opinion that it is not proper to punish those connected with the first Mesopotamian campaign just at a time when we are glad that a town like Bagdad has been included within the British Empire. It was because of the defects of the first expedition having been revealed that the second was crowned with success. . . . It is stated that although Lord Hardinge wanted to resign his office three times, Mr. Balfour declined to comply with his request. This shows the regard the authorities had for Lord Hardinge. The ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

Lord Hardinge.

people are grateful for Lord Hardinge for the confidence he reposed in the people. The Bombay Presidency Association and the Allahabad Home Rule League have cabled to the Prime Minister their opinion that Lord Hardinge was not responsible for the defects of the first Mesopotamian campaign. So also all the Indians should now give expression to their confidence in him. We hope that Lord Hardinge's character will come out of this enquiry unstained.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

Lord Hardinge.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 14th July, says:—If Lord Hardinge is found guilty in the Mesopotamian affair, it is the same as finding fault with India. Indians have to remember how he worked to maintain the honour of India and how he thereby incurred the displeasure of his countrymen. There can be no Indian who would not try to maintain the honour of Lord Hardinge who is now being accused by the English people. We must at once pass a vote of confidence in him before the tribunal appointed to enquire into the report of the Mesopotamian Commission expresses its opinion.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Committee concerning self-government.

82. The Andhrapatrika, of the 16th July, writes under this heading:—A London correspondent to the Times of India writes that Mr. Chamberlain has been advised to have a committee constituted consisting of members from both the Houses of the Parliament for discussing this question, and remarks that such a committee alone is competent to decide the difficult question of self-government for the Indians and that a committee consisting of members delegated by the National Congress and the Moslem League may help the said committee in their deliberations. The idea of a committee is unwelcome to the Indians, who have had experiences of the work of committees such as the Welby Commission, the University Commission, the Public Services Commission and the Industrial Commission, which ended in bulky, costly and disappointing reports. Such committees, says the paper, instead of securing any benefits, may take away existing privileges. The Times observes that the Government of India is only saddled with responsibilities, but has not been invested with adequate powers to discharge them and that this state of things is due to Lord Morley's having discarded the proposal of Lord Minto. The Times of India, therefore, desires that the Government of India must be invested with greater powers. But there is no use of increasing the powers of the Government of India before making it responsible to the people. It is no profitable change to transfer the arbitrary powers of the Secretary of State to the Government of India. Increased powers to the Government of India will benefit the people of India only when the members of the Legislative Councils are authorised to control the work of administration.

It is gratifying that the Times of India, though an Anglo-Indian paper, has understood the truth that with apparent superficial differences, the people of India are actuated with the same aims and aspirations. The aim of the Home Rulers, as well as of the others, is one and the same, namely, self-government, and the methods of all are alike constitutional. Those that make mountains of mole-hills are no friends of the country.

The Times of India observes that it is not proper to plead that the present moment is inopportune on account of the war, seeing that many such questions as the reports of the Dardanelles and Mesopotamia Commissions and the Irish problem are now engaging the attention of the Government. Whensoever such an enquiry may be taken up, it is necessary that Indians must forthwith prepare themselves to lay before the Parliament and the British people their national aims and aspiration clearly and impressively.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

The staying of the Mesopotamian enquiry.

83. The Andhrapatrika, of the 16th July, feels gratified that the British Government has, for whatsoever reasons, given up constituting a tribunal for carrying on this enquiry.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Newspapers and the Kistnapatrika.

84. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 15th July, writes under this heading:—The Andhraprakasika has, since it became a daily, changed its policy, and begun to hate the Brahmans and praise the non-Brahmans. In these days when the prayer for self-government should go out in one voice, it is better that such a paper that expresses a discordant note should cease to exist. The Andhrapatrika is the only paper that is helpful to us in every way.

It is the newspapers that educate the public in political, educational and other matters and help to bring about momentous changes such as the French revolution and the change in the English Cabinet.

The Kistnapatrika is the best of our weekly papers, and it would be a great boon to us if it should be made a daily or a bi-weekly at least. . . If all the Andhras earnestly try, it may very soon be made a daily, and then the Andhraprakasika will be silenced and our desires will be fulfilled.

85. The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th July, refers to what the Indian Chronicle has written in which occurs:— . . . Neither the zamindars nor the Government have decided which is lawful, and which is not, in agitation. This places political writers and speakers in a critical position. Many that do not know Mrs. Besant and are not interested in her internment, are agreed that this has violated the liberty of the people. . .

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 15th, 1917.

Political agitation and the internments.

86. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, says that Mr. G. Harisarvottama Rao, secretary of the fifty-two Home Rule Leagues in the Andhra country, delivered an interesting lecture at Tenali on the Home Rule agitation and the swadeshi movement in a loyal spirit, and urged the importance of the movements.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

Home Rule Leagues in the Andhra country.

87. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, gives a Telugu version of the proceedings of the internment day protest meetings held at Triplicane, Mylapore and Georgetown and also gives a gist of the speeches made thereat.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

Internment day—a protest meeting.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, gives a Telugu version of the cablegram sent to the Prime Minister by Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar, the President of the Madras Home Rule League, requesting the cancellation of the internment order.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 13th, 1917.

Internment.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, reports Pandit Madan Mohan Malavia to have said at a dinner given to him by the Servants of India Society at Bombay that the internment of Mrs. Besant was an unjust act, that if she committed any offence, the authorities would have done well to have her tried in a court of law, and that the Defence of India Act was not intended to be used in such cases.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

Internments.

Under the heading "A very sad news," a correspondent to the Divyugnanadeepika, for July 1917, says:—Excepting some unwisemen of perverse intellect, there is none on the earth who are not sorry to hear of the internment of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers. This will hasten the appearance of the world preceptor, who is perfect and whose representatives the interned persons are Sri Krishna says in the Lord's song that when unrighteousness prevails and cannot be suppressed by common people, a Mahāpurusha will be born to set right matters. It is my opinion that there can be no greater injustice than to cause pain to persons belonging to all the religions in the world. Many have been reading her valuable religious books and adding to their knowledge. The reading public should consider the spiritual progress of how many persons a prohibition of the sale of such books affects. What greater sin is there than this? As such a great injustice has now been done, it is the duty of everyone to pray that the world-preceptor may appear and free Mrs. Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia. The 16th day of every month should be observed as a day of fasting and meditation and a holy day. Just as the days on which great men of the past suffered difficulties have been observed as holy days, it is good to observe the days when Mrs. Besant and her co-workers were interned. . . Some students who have been trained in the Benares Hindu College under Mr. Arundale are trying their best to devote their lives to the work of removing the evil at the present critical juncture.

DIVYAGNANA-DEEPIKA, Chittoor, July 1917.

Internments.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 15th, 1917.

Internment.

The Hitakarini, of the 15th July, asks why Lord Pentland could not win the gratitude of the people by cancelling the internment of Mrs. Besant, as the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab did, by cancelling His Honour's order prohibiting the publication of the proceedings of the Lahore protest meeting.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, publishes a Telugu version of the letter of Sir N. Chandravarkar addressed to the Times on the subject of internments, which appears in New India of the 16th July.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, reports a speaker at the meeting held at Ellore on the internment day to have remarked that by interning Mrs. Besant and her co-workers, Lord Pentland created a confusion which had not existed before.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, says:—The disapproval, by the people, of the internments is day by day becoming more and more manifest. Even Sir N. Chandravarkar, who does not take part much in political agitation, has stated that it is unlawful to enforce the Defence of India Act to suppress the agitation of Mrs. Besant and that it will be just to try her in a court of law and punish her if she is found guilty. . . Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar has asked Mr. Snowden and Mr. Wedgwood, who are Members of Parliament, to put questions in the Parliament about the internments. The London correspondent states that it is the common opinion of the people in Westminster that the internment of Mrs. Besant, etc., is a thing to be regretted. He also says that Mr. Snowden will question in the Parliament about this matter and that papers like the Herald will strongly criticise the action of the Government. It is said that Sir Archibald Williamson, M.P., an intimate friend of Lord Pentland, has been already taking some pains about Mr. Arundale. The correspondent says that the influential members of the Theosophical Society will express their firm disapproval of the internment. The correspondent is of opinion that it is not right on the part of the Government to declare by means of internment that the Home Rule movement, which is based on constitutional methods, is unconstitutional. He says that a similar attitude in Ireland produced undesirable results and urges that the Government should not create such conditions in India, but should cancel the internments. The Government will do well to cancel the internments which are giving rise to many controversial issues, which are undesirable at a time when both the rulers and the ruled should unitedly work to prosecute the present war to a victorious end.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

Internments.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, gives a Telugu version of the article contributed to New India by Raja Rama Varma, criticising the manifesto of the zamindars about the Madras internments.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

Internments, and Home Rule League.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, gives a Telugu version of the letter of the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda, one of the nineteen elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council who subscribed to the memorandum, addressed, on the occasion of his seeking admission on the Bengal Home Rule League, to Mr. Chakravarty, the president, which contains:—"Mrs. Besant has been working for a cause which I should have espoused if I had the leisure to do so. So I am liable to the punishment that she now undergoes, as also every member that subscribed to the memorandum and every delegate to the Congress that supported the self-government resolution. . ." It is incumbent, says the paper, on every council member and congress-man who has not already joined the Home Rule League, to follow in the footsteps of the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

Home Rule.

The Calcutta correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 21st July, reports the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda to have written to the President of the Home Rule League, into which he sought admission:—Mrs. Besant was working as my representative. I think I am naturally responsible for the trouble that has overtaken her. Myself, those elected members who subscribed to the memorandum of the nineteen, and those who approved of the resolutions of the Congress, ought to be today in her place. She alone is suffering internment instead of all of us. Our duty should be openly to take a part in her propaganda and work for the ideal for which she suffers. The correspondent reports the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda to have said as president of the meeting held on the swaraj day at Calcutta:—Lord Pentland said that he would suppress Mrs. Besant's endeavours. He is mistaken. He can restrain her freedom of movement but not her endeavours. India will certainly carry on her propaganda.

The correspondent reports Mr. Pal to have said on the occasion:—If there should be anybody who is pleased with the internment of Mrs. Besant, he must be either a German or an anarchist.

He says that it is satisfactory that Bengal also has been drawn into the agitation.

Internments.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The Andhrapatriku, of the 19th July, publishes a Telugu version of the second letter of Sir Narayan Chandravarkar to the Times of India, on this subject which contains the following:—" . . . Conduct violating the law of sedition is unconstitutional. But there is difference between this kind of seditious movement and movement made with the intention of discrediting Government. It was because Mr. Chamberlain knew this that he avoided giving a direct answer to the question of the Chancellor." . . . The authorities should give up their policy of aloofness and silence. They should move with the people freely and find out their opinions.

If constitutional agitation has taken the form of unconstitutional agitation here the responsibility lies more with the Government than with the people. . .

The internment day.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, writes from Vizagapatam:— . . Hon'ble Mr. Bhupathi Raju Venkatapathi Raju presided over a meeting of the Home Rule League held on the internment day, and spoke in Telugu to the following effect:—The people must join the Home Rule League, represent to the English by means of memorials that amongst themselves there is no difference of opinion with regards the movement, contribute towards the Besant fund, take the swadeshi vow and prove to the English that we are working for our country with heart and soul.

Mr. Prabala Lakshmi Narasimham in supporting the resolution (that the interned should be released) observed: " . . . Whatever be the object with which the Government took this step, they must have by this time learned that their intention was frustrated. The zamindars took an opposite view probably, because they thought that the swaraj movement may cause a national calamity. In which country did the landlords help the cause of popular liberty? World's history shows that the landlords are naturally the enemies to the liberty of the people. Perseverance is all important for us. Mrs. Besant and others are making penance at Ootacamund. Their penance will become fruitful. The atmosphere surrounding them will become holy. There they have planted the banner of swaraj. We may take it the banner of the liberty of India. We must bow to that standard mentally. Some are hesitating to join the Home Rule Leagues. It is cowardice on the part of those who have known that there is nothing wrong either in the ideal or in the idea of swaraj, not to join it."

The same paper reports of similar meetings having been held at Guntūr, Nellore and Tenali.

The same paper reports that prayers were offered in the famous temple of Tirukkalikundram for the release of Mrs Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia.

Home Rule.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore City, July 25th, 1917.

The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 25th July, writes:—The desire for self-government within the empire is now cherished by every popular leader. The advocates of Home Rule are steadily increasing in number. Some of our brave ladies too are engaged in this Home Rule propaganda. Branches of the Home Rule League have been formed at every important place. These Leagues are meeting with a counterforce too in some quarters. This reminds us of the saying that the path of glory is always thorny. It is nothing unnatural that movements of this kind tending to the popular good have these obstacles to overcome. We learn that even Sir Rabindranath Tagore of worldwide reputation has expressed his earnest sympathy with the Home Rule movement. A few Rajas, Zamindars and others in the Madras Presidency, who wish to curry favour with the authorities, might be condemning the Home Rule League. What if? Will the harmless methods of the league be in any way affected by their criticism?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The internment day.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, contains in Telugu the proceedings of a meeting held at Bezwada on the internment day, and a gist of the speeches delivered. It says that resolutions were adopted to take the swadeshi vow and ask the Government to cancel the internment order.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

A swadeshi mart in Madras.

88. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, also gives in Telugu the gist of Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar's speech made on the occasion of the opening of the swadeshi mart in Madras.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

The drink evil.

89. In its review of the report of the District Association of Gōdāvari, the Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, says:—The endeavours that the Government are making to put down the drink evil are very small. Drinking has been prohibited in Russia since the commencement of the war. During the Mohurram, His Highness the Nizam prohibited the sale of liquor in Hyderabad. The Maharaja of Mysore has prohibited the opening of liquor shops during the periods of industrial exhibitions. His Majesty the King-Emperor and his followers gave up using liquor and have thus set an example to their countrymen. Why should not the rulers of India then put an end to the evil and thus uplift the country?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

A criticism of the zamindars' manifesto.

90. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, gives a Telugu version of the letter of Raja Rama Varma criticising the manifesto of the zamindars on the Home Rule propaganda.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 16th, 1917.

Mutual abuse.

91. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 16th July, says:—If our enemies try to gloat over quarrels which we bring about among ourselves, it is not manly on our part to conduct ourselves so as to give them an advantage. . . Some think that, at the instigation of some foreigners, certain traitors have undertaken to create differences among us. If there be such men anywhere, it is our duty to treat them with contempt rather than give them greater prominence by abusing them. Why should we forget that when one hand is moved, no noice is produced while noice is produced by clapping the two hands. If there should be any such men anywhere in countries like America, the people would sink them under water, so that their whereabouts might not be known. Or, the general public would trouble him in many ways. It is good that there are no such outrages here, but they are abused. If this is also given up and they are treated like brothers, their bad endeavours will soon disappear. . . Even some English papers write in favour of the Government granting self-government by stages. But commotion is created by the writings of the Government and their sympathisers that it is difficult to introduce methods of self-government in the country, and that even supposing that such a Government is commenced, it is impossible to grant powers soon. Indian people are of opinion that though the British have been ruling the country for a long time, they have not made any progress in education and in administrative knowledge. Even the common people surmise that by refusing to grant more extensive powers of election to the people, the Government betray a lack of interest in the matter of the development of local self-government. The people, therefore, fear that they will not have any permanent advantages. If the Government make only a beginning in the matter of self-government and help the people in every way by correcting their mistakes, no reasonable man will grudge even if self-government is granted in fifty years. But from what the authorities say, it does not appear they will grant us self-government even in a hundred years. In reply to questions they say "Not yet" and do not promise the fulfilment of our desires. Each man should know for himself whether under such circumstances it is not natural that the people set up an agitation.

92. The Andhraprakasika, of the 17th July, says under this heading:—From what Mr. Chamberlain said in regard to the Mesopotamian question, it may be said that the Ministers who formed the War Council and their military advisers were also responsible for the Mesopotamian muddle. If it is decided that the Military authorities only and not the civil authorities have a right to consider and settle such things, Lord Hardinge's action can never be found fault with. It must be said that the Mesopotamian Commission was rather hasty in drafting the report. Its members are ignorant that even great men commit faults. From the speeches of the Ministers, it will appear that the commission also made a mistake. Until the Tribunal decides the matter, we cannot attach importance to the report of the commission.

Mr. Chamberlain's explanation.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

It is clear from Mr. Chamberlain's words that today or tomorrow some reforms will be introduced into the Indian administrative methods. If everything be right there is nothing to be said. If, on the other hand, those that cry with loud voices are only heeded and the other communities are shoved aside, old bickerings and differences will remain as usual.

93 A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 17th July, says that the tank at Chendalur (Ongole taluk. Guntūr district), which is the only source of fresh water-supply to that village, now contains stinking water. Those who have used the water are suffering from fever and have no proper medical help. The people have represented their grievances to the authorities, but they have not as yet taken any steps to mend matters. This, says the correspondent, is regrettable. He prays that the Government will enquire into the matter and do the needful.

Chendalur, Ongole taluk, Guntūr district.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

94. The Divyagnanadeepika, for July 1917, refers to a case in Bombay in which a Pathan who had woman slaves was sentenced to death for murdering a woman who escaped from his custody, and remarks:—In the western countries, slave trade is still being carried on. . . It sometimes happens that when a woman cannot be persuaded into submission, she is murdered. Woman slaves are sent to South America, Singapore, Java, India and other places. They are in those places reduced to a very low condition.

Slave trade.

DIVYAGNANA-DEEPIKA, Chittoor, July 1917.

95. Under this heading, the Hitakarini, of the 15th July, after briefly describing the growth of political freedom with reference to China, Turkey, Russia, Phillippine Islands and other countries, sketches the evolution of political ideas in England about the members of the British Empire, especially India and remarks:—When every country is striving hard for freedom, how can India alone keep quiet? We have rendered all possible help to England in her noble efforts to maintain the freedom of the world, so much so, that our British are themselves proposing to confer some privileges on us. Though, unlike Lord Hardinge, Lord Chelmsford was not for giving us any extensive privilege, the nineteen members of the Imperial Council prepared a liberal scheme. . . Mr. Bonar Law, Mr. Balfour and even Lord Curzon in England expressed themselves in our favour. But, somehow, our star has not been ascendant in our own country; and while we are demanding reforms, the Anglo-Indians have begun to "bark" in a hostile manner. While the session of the Congress was being held at Calcutta, Lord Chelmsford preached that we should not ask for abrupt changes. Even before this, had Mrs. Besant been prohibited from entering the Central Provinces. . . Then Lord Pentland admonished the members of the Legislative Council at Ootacamund like schoolboys and held out a threat that if the methods of political agitation were not changed, they would be repressed by the application of law. Mrs. Besant and her co-workers who had been working days and nights were interned. This had an effect contrary to what was desired. It only enhanced the desire for liberty among the people. Resolutions of protest poured in from all parts of India at the offices of the Governors, of the Viceroy, of the Secretary of State, and of the Prime Minister. . . . It awakened self-sacrifice for and devotion to the cause of Home Rule all over the country. At the same time some have taken delight to foment race prejudices and it goes without saying that the bureaucracy have availed themselves of this opportunity to show their spontaneous concern for us. The writings of Justice and the Andhraprakasika show clearly that their efforts are opposed to the just intentions of the British Empire. It is a lie to say that India does not enjoy freedom under the wing of the British Empire. Would Emperor-George, who is devoted to freedom, say that India should not have national freedom?

The present atmosphere.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 15th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Sir James Meston.

96. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, says:—Sir James Meston said that it is not good that the unrest now prevailing in the country should increase, that the Indians are not rendering adequate help for the war, and that the Imperial Government are considering the recommendations of the Government of India. These words have been spoken already by the rulers of other Provinces. All speak in one fashion. What can be the reason for this?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

Home Rule.

97. A correspondent to the Swadesamitran, of the 23rd July, says that, on Sunday the 22nd idem, the members of the branch of the Home Rule League at Tiruvallur, went from house to house and exhorted the Muhammadans and merchants of the locality to take part in the work of the league, and agitate, that Mr. N. C. Srinivasa Achariyar offered to enlist 100 members to the league within a month, and that the Home Rule flags were hoisted on many houses.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Home Rule.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, contains a Telugu version of the letter of Mr. Tahl Ram, Zamindar and Honorary Secretary, Punjab Zamindar Association, addressed to Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar, which appears in the Hindu of the 12th July 1917, as well as some other letters sent with remittances to Mrs. Besant fund, addressed to the same gentleman and expressing sympathy with the cause.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Ellore Home Rule League.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, says that Mr. A. Suryanarayana Moorty of Chatrapur came to Ellore and delivered a lecture on Home Rule, criticising the manifesto of the zamindars and exhorting the people not to keep quiet in discouragement but to join the Home Rule League and work with faith.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Home Rule.

The Calcutta correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, says:—The Bengal lion has awoke from his sound sleep, and our leaders have all made up their minds to carry on the Home Rule agitation fearlessly on constitutional lines. . . Mr. Choudari said at a meeting that the Prime Minister of Canada asked Sir S. P. Sinha whether India did not enjoy self-government. On being told that she did not, he said that it must be granted that evening. This, said Mr. Choudari, changed the opinion of Sir S. P. Sinha. The president of the meeting said, "I deem it a good omen that Mrs. Besant, who may be compared to a sage and a mother, has been interned. The death bell of bureaucracy is already ringing.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Repression.

98. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, reports Mr. Jinnah to have said that it is very much to be regretted that while India is devoting her everything to the defence of the empire, the Provincial authorities are unfortunately enforcing repressive laws, and His Excellency the Viceroy is indifferently sitting quiet in the cloudy atmosphere of Simla.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

The generosity of a Home Ruler.

99. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, says under this heading that a certain gentleman wrote to the Amrita Bazar Patrika saying that to express his disapproval of the internments he would supply certain Home Rule papers free of cost to libraries, etc.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Division of the country on a language basis.

100. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, refers to certain remarks of Mr. Gandhi and the Mahratta about the vernaculars and says:—Under the present circumstances of the Madras and the Bombay Presidencies, where there is a diversity of languages, it is not practicable to carry on the administration in any vernacular or to establish vernacular schools, unless the country is first divided on a language basis. Such a division will also solve the question of self-government for India. The Home Rulers do not all seem to have realised this. Mr. Tilak has included such a division in his scheme of self-government. Mr. Panikar also says in the Indian Emigrant that if self-government should be a success, the country should be divided on a language basis before it is given.

The attitude of the Bengalees.

101. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, says:—When Bengal was partitioned all the other parts of India sympathised with the Bengalees. But the Bengalees are indifferent to the question of what we have to do at the present critical period in the history of India. The Bengaleese have refused to attend the meeting of the Congress and the Moslem League, that is to come off on the 28th in Bombay. The Bengalee said that there is as much difference between the ideals of Home Rulers and those of the Congress as there is between the object of the extremists and that of the moderates. It writes that though the Home Rule agitation is repressed, there is no need on the part of anybody to interfere so long as the work of the Congress is not thwarted. We do not see any difference between the Anglo-Indian papers who try to thwart constitutional agitation and the Bengalee. The failure on the part of Mr. Surendranath Banerji to help in matters relating to the welfare of the country is improper. It is no exaggeration to say that the leaders of the United Provinces are now taking the lead in the present political agitation. Now that Mr. Montagu has become the Secretary of State for India, Indians will have their wish accomplished if they work unitedly.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The generosity of Mr. Ratan Tata.

102. Referring to the promise of Mr. Ratan Tata to give a big sum of money to the London School of Economics every year to make researches in the matter of doing away with poverty in the world, the Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, says:—India is full of poverty and Mr. Tata should ask the school authorities to study the conditions of India also and make an investigation. If by the help of Mr. Tata, the question of poverty is solved to any extent, the whole mankind and especially the Indians will be benefited.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The claim of India.

103. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th July, contains a Telugu version of the article under this heading reproduced by the Hindu of the 18th July from the National Weekly.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

The Pathans.

104. Refering to an incident in Calcutta in which a Pathan was seen on a public road stripping a helpless woman of her cloth, the Andhraprakasika, of the 20th July, remarks:—Though we thought that the cruelties of the Pathans were a matter of the past, it now appears that they are on the increase day by day.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Ganjam Collector's office.

105. The Andhraprakasika, of the 20th July, invites the attention of the Government to the great difference in the number of Brahman clerks and that of non-Brahman clerks in the Ganjām Collector's office and requests them to improve the condition of the latter by equally distributing the appointments between the two classes.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Pandit Malaviya's visit to His Excellency the Viceroy.

106. The Andhraprakasika, of the 20th July, says in its leader with reference to the visit paid by Madan Mohun Malaviya to His Excellency the Viceroy at Simla:—It is said that His Excellency stated that he had not sufficient authority to liberate Mrs. Besant and others, that their release would not take place so early, and that the Pandit should do his level best to see that some of the demands of the nineteen Elected Members of the Supreme Legislative Council, which were impracticable, were not pressed.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Pandit Malavya on political work.

107. The Desamata, of the 18th July, publishes a Telugu version of the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya on the occasion of the entertainment given to him by the "Servants of India Society" with Sir Narayana Chandravarkar as President. The speech contains:—India is now passing through a great crisis and the nation has to bear the brunt. We must carry on steady work till the Government in this country and the British people show proper regard to the demands of the Congress and the Moslem League. All parties must merge their differences and enlighten the public both in towns and villages. . . If we neglect our duty now, we shall be liable to the censure of the coming generations.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 18th, 1917.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Māyavaram Home Rule League.

108. The Andhraprakasika, of the 20th July, says that the Māyavaram Home Rule League has passed a resolution to the effect that it will be proper on the part of the Parliament to recall Lord Pentland from India. It was stated, it says, that if Lord Pentland should be recalled, the interests of the Empire would be protected and that the Indians would then help the rulers well in the prosecution of the war. The paper exclaims "Behold their generosity!"

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1917.

Parliamentary committee for Indian reforms.

109. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, reproduces the comments of the Mahratta on the remarks about the Parliamentary Committee of the Times of India referred to in the leader of the Andhrapatrika of the 16th July already abstracted supra.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 20th, 1917.

Hides traffic.

110. The Andhraprakasika, of the 20th July, refers to the orders of the Government imposing certain restrictions on traffic in hides, says that the merchants in Madras suffer therefrom badly, and recommends that the authorities will redress the grievance of the said merchants.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

Poet Rabindranath.

111. The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, writes:—Rabindranath in his American speeches stigmatised western civilisation as a diabolical civilisation embracing within itself cannibalism. Rabindranath is a poet. Poets cannot generally see the whole truth relating to human life. What they see in the world of their creation is fragmentary truth. In Rabindra's ideal world, love beauty and peace reign. . . Rabindra had fought no great battles in his life, which was passed in the midst of prosperity, freedom, and cheerfulness. So he could not understand that force that manifests itself in conflict is also an attribute of God. His soul could not therefore revel in competition, hate, egotism, war, famine, rebellion, revolution, bloodshed and such stern, aweful and shocking manifestations of force. . . It is not proper that Rabindra should condemn western civilisation as a demon's play judging of it by the present war. Like Arjun on the field of Kurukshetra, he gave himself up to a misplaced compassion. If we, but examine with keen insight, we can see that humanity in the west is regenerating itself by this war and preparing itself for new ideals of duty.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

Modern civilisation.

112. The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, publishes a Telugu version of Rabindranath's message to the Americans condemning their civilisation as one that is based on self-seeking ambition, and one that is destined to be crushed under its own ponderous weight bringing about the ruin of the world along with its own. The message suspects that signs are already visible of such a state of things, expresses a hope that on its extinction eternal light may dawn on the east, the cradle of the history of humanity, and bows to that dawn; glimpses of which, it fancies, are already visible in the eastern horizon.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

Condolence.

113. The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, publishes an imaginary message of condolence, addressed by Mother India, from Vizianagram to her eldest daughter "Kistna" (perhaps the Kistnapatrika), and painting in glowing terms her grief at the internment of Mrs. Besant, her satisfaction that some of her (Mother India's) sons are trying in various ways to secure her freedom and her disappointment at the silence of Vizianagram, which on a previous occasion paid a grand homage to Mrs. Besant.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

Indian Defence Force.

114. The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, refers to the query of Sir P. Sivaswami Ayyar to the effect "what has Mrs. Besant and her internment to do with the Indian Defence Force?" and enumerating the various obstacles for successful recruitment, remarks:—The motives that produce human action are innumerable, especially those that exercise influence over the tender hearts of the youths. To understand them, mere culture will not do. To discern the peculiar mental habits of the youth and lead them to take up a desired course, much tact, sympathy and latitude are necessary. What is the use of deploring that young men are not taking to the Defence Force, while they are prohibited from attending political meetings, while their beloved leaders are punished without a trial, while disabilities are continued that constantly remind them of their racial inferiority, and while their best aspirations are discouraged that inspire them with confidence in the empire, all the while Government refraining from fostering enthusiasm in them for military service for which they have been long unaccustomed. We wish that they do their duty in this matter, for the sake of duty, but those that understand human nature will not fail to see that this is improbable.

Immediate Home Rule.

115. The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, writes under this heading :—The Congress, the Moslem League and the Home Rule Leagues, that carry on political agitation now have all one and the same aim as evidenced by the declarations made by their leaders. They unanimously accept the memorandum of the nineteen elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council. . . Of those congress-men that have not yet joined the Home Leagues there are many that think it is needless to do so while they can carry on their work as members of Congress Committees. It is groundless to infer merely from this that their aims and methods are different. There are none now in this country that require that self-government should be granted all at once. All that they require is that it should be declared that the ideal of British administration in India is a complete democracy, and that as a first step towards it, to grant after the war the instalment of reforms demanded by the Congress. What the Congress has demanded is not complete Home Rule. It is only that the representative element of the Legislative Council should be increased and that they should be entrusted with control over some at least of the Executive departments. All statesmen must admit that this is but the initial and not the final stage of self-government. There are no immediate swarajists except anarchists. It is condemnable to conceal the real state of things and try to create wrong notions.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

The defence of the British Empire.

116. The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, gives a Telugu version of the article contributed by Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal to the Commonweal on this subject declaring that self-government must be granted to India as a necessary preliminary for the development of an army and navy for India that can efficiently defend that country and the empire in the wars that, from reading the signs of the times, we see, are imminent in the Asiatic theatre. The article declares that it is safe neither for India nor for the British empire that the rulers should seek to put down the present Home Rule agitation. Our submitting to such efforts, it is stated, may end in the violation of the peaceful political evolution of our country and in the disintegration of the British empire. The article exhorts all parties to merge their differences, and persevere in their constitutional agitation being prepared for punishments if necessary and concludes with a prayer that God may vouchsafe farsightedness and political insight to the rulers, and a courage and resolution to the ruled that would enable them to stake their very lives in the discharge of their duty.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 21st, 1917.

Provincial Governments.

117. The Desamata, of the 18th July, reproduces from the Andhrapatrika of the 13th July, the Telugu version of the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao's article on "Provincial Governments", already noticed supra.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 18th, 1917.

Provincial autonomy.

118. In its leader under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd July, writes :—At a time when self-government is desired, the Times of India and other Anglo-Indian papers recommend the immediate grant of provincial autonomy, while the Mail advocates the mere grant of increased powers of local self-government. Congress leaders have long been demanding provincial and fiscal autonomy. Dadabhai Naoroji urged for it a quarter of a century ago. Our present aspirations go further. The grant of provincial autonomy gives the people a share in the administration only when the Legislative Councils exercise control over the executive. This is what the National Congress demands as the first step and foundation of self-government. Be that as it may, we shall show how, even in the matter of provincial autonomy, Government have delayed the fulfilment of their promise. The well-known declaration made by them so far back as in 191[illegible] is not given any effect to. It is regrettable that it has not even been taken on hand as yet. . . The government of the finances is mostly centred in the hands of the Secretary of State, and what little remains thereof, in the hands of the Government of India. The Local Governments are entrusted with none of it. The evil of such a system has been exposed by the Mesopotamian Commission. England has just opened her eyes to it, and the London Times finds that such arbitrary powers will, at some time, lead to disaster. . . The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachendra Rao has revealed that the Government of India follow no principle in the allotment of funds to the Provincial Governments which may not even spend the funds allotted to them as they please. . . This leads to the stagnation of all provinces, both progressive and backward, alike. Bengal and Burma are on the same level in the matter of elementary education, sanitation, industries, irrigation, etc. . . With the concession of autonomy, the responsibilities of the Provincial Governments in these matters will grow definite and increase. This renders it impossible for the Imperial and the Local Governments to shirk their responsibility, say in the matter of elementary education by shifting it on to the shoulders of each other. . . The Government of India is now fettered by the Secretary of State, even as the Local Government are, by the Imperial Government and they cannot, even if they will, delegate any authority to the Local Governments. A change must be wrought in the administrative machinery itself. Whether such a change be brought about by an Indian or a Parliamentary Committee, that it may bear fruit, autonomy must be granted to the Imperial and the Local Governments, and the India Council must be altogether abolished. When such independence is conferred on the Governments, to see that it is properly used, people must be entrusted with a control over them. It is just that funds collected from the people must be used for their benefit. To secure this end, people's representatives in the Legislative Councils must be invested with power, and this is what is demanded by the Congress leaders, the 19 elected members of the Supreme Council and the members of the Moslem League. All point to the same principle and there is nothing revolutionary in this. The rulers are requested to grant this measure of freedom after the war to train people for self-government.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

Control of the Parliament over India.

119. The Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd July, publishes in Telugu an article under this heading by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

Parliamentary control over India.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st July, contains a Telugu version of the article of the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur Ramachandra Rao on the subject of parliamentary control over India, which appears in the Hindu of the 20th July.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

Sir D. Wacha.

120. In a note under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd July, reports Sir D. Wacha to have said, citing instances, that the accounts published by the Government for the last forty years appeared to him to have been purposely kept in confusion.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

Airships and submarines.

121. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st July, publishes in Telugu the letter of Saint Nihal Singh from London, describing the havoc caused by the German airships and the popular indignation aroused in the land by these and the submarines.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

Colonies and the Indian problem.

122. In its leader under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 21st July, says:—The report of the Indian representatives on the question of Indian emigration to Colonies has been published. But the so-called Indian representatives are not really Indian representatives elected by the Indians. They had no instructions from the Indians. They were appointed by the Government. The sympathy of Mr. Marjoribanks for the ideals of the Indians is well known. So there is nothing strange in that the report does not make mention of the aspirations of the Indians. Fearing that the Colonies may grow indignant, the gentlemen who drafted the report say in an apologistic spirit that some of the objections of the Indians are exaggerated and that some others are due to the ignorance of the difficulties of the Colonials but that in the interests of the unity of the empire it is necessary to grant the Indians some rights. They have misled the Imperial Council by failing to report the grievances of the Indians against which Mr. Gandhi and certain others have agitated, not minding even imprisonment, and by giving their own views. Indians should assert that these views are not theirs and insist on the colonials being subjected in India to the same disabilities as the Indians are subjected to in the Colonies. . . . Is it the opinion of the drafters of the report that this inequality should be perpetuated? What dishonour would they have come to if they had spoken out the truth?

Endeavours are being made everywhere to see that the Indians do not set their foot in the Colonies, and every possible obstacle is placed in their way. But the Japanese are freely allowed to enter the Colonies and the readers will guess for themselves the reason for this difference in treatment. . . . The Australians may refuse to admit into their country one who, though knowing English, is ignorant of another European language. Indians in Australia and New Zealand cannot take their wives and children. Indian women cannot go to Canada because of the rule that they should sail in the same vessel in a single voyage. The Japanese are not put to such restrictions. The difficulties of the Indians are indescribable because they could not take their families, which are in their eyes holy. The Europeans may not understand this family tie. Did the remarks of the Indian representatives, contained in the report about this family tie, come from persons who have any acquaintance with the Indians? It may be guessed how far it is proper to call them Indian representatives. All the citizens in the British Empire can freely come to India, but even prominent Indians are required to take passports to land in the Colonies. This is unjust and Sir Rabindranth refused to go to Canada in response to an invitation because of such restrictions imposed on his countrymen. It is stated in the report that the Indians are not allowed like the Japanese to take their families because they are always accused of prostitution. But the report does not give the grounds on which such a charge of inordinate immorality in the Hindu families is based. The report, of course, makes some recommendations, but it does not recommend that the Indians should have the same rights in the Colonies as the Colonials in India. The emigration question will be solved satisfactorily if the Colonials are not allowed to trade or enter public service in India. Our representatives have not discharged their duty satisfactorily. If India is placed in the empire on an equal footing with the Colonies, the Government of India will impose necessary restrictions on the Colonies. When that is done, the Colonials will certainly withdraw their restrictions. We think the grant of self-government is the only means of solving the question of Indians in the Colonies.

123. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st July, refers to the suggestions of papers like the Times of India, the Indiaman and the Pioneer as to how the Indian administrative problem is to be solved, and remarks:—An officer has written in the Indiaman that a committee of enquiry should be appointed at Delhi to suggest the ways and means by which the Executive Councils may be subordinated to the authority of Legislative Councils. The Pioneer suggests the constitution of a committe representing all shades of opinion to discuss the Indian problem. We think good will come out of this committee, for if men of different opinion calmly discuss matters a satisfactory scheme of self-government will be framed for India. The Madras Mail does not like this suggestion of the Pioneer and looks upon it as absurd. There are noble sentiments in the suggestions of the Times and the Pioneer. But the suggestions of the Mail are insipid. Indians, on the one hand, and the Anglo-Indians on the other are making suggestions regarding self-government. We pray that the Government will examine these with a liberal spirit and follow a satisfactory policy.

Suggestions of papers.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

124. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st July, contains a Telugu version of the letter of Rao Bahadur K. S. Venkataramayyar regarding what transpired between him and certain Coolies.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

coolies in the train and the intercession of Khan Bahadur A. T. Marakkayar, which is to be found in New India of the 20th July.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Gosha Hospital at Tuni.

125. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, reports that almost every case treated in the hospital is proving unsuccessful, and requests the Board either to close the hospital immediately or to transfer the lady doctor in charge of it.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Revival of Russia.

126. In publishing the proceedings of a meeting held in Bombay on behalf of the Home Rule League, the Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, publishes a Telugu version of the speech of Mr. Syed Hussain on Russian revival which contains the following:—

. . . The authorities appear to be labouring under the misapprehension that by their order (prohibiting students from attending political meetings) there would not be many attending such meetings. But seeing that this meeting hall is so overcrowded it must be said that their expectations proved fruitless. We are all sorry for the internment orders issued by the Government against Mrs. Besant. (Political) changes did not come about in Russia suddenly. The educated classes and the masses worked together for years with mutual confidence for attaining their cherished end suffering many hardships and at last realise their wishes.

. . . I shall read the words spoken by Nevension in this connection. . . Women and children were driven out to live in the cold country of Siberia and perish there. Nevension personally saw Cossacs on horseback driving patriots before them lashing them with steel whips with leather thongs. . . Within three years 2,100 were hanged. . . These great men and women who were thus presented sowed the seeds of liberty with floods of tears and with afflicted hearts and the present Russians enjoy the fruits thereof. . . Are there in India such societies (as the Jemptovose societies of Russia)? We talk of political aspirations, but unless action follows nothing can be gained.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The condition of the times.

127. The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, referring to the democratic tendencies prevailing in Europe, observes:—The desire for liberty is spreading in leaps and bounds. The present war itself is carried on by the English for fulfilling the vow of protecting the freedom of small States. It is these ideas of liberty that made Russia free and are leading to the grant of Home Rule to Ireland. Under such circumstances can the aspirations of India alone fail to attract the notice of the liberty-loving English people. . . The Indiaman is a paper which has been started for frustrating the aspirations of the Indians in England and to give expression to Anglo-Indian opinions. Even in such a paper has, an Anglo-Indian who served in India as a Collector and who is now receiving pension, written about the political reforms that are necessary for India. Though the Indians do not accept the reforms suggested by him as their goal, there is no doubt that the reforms pointed out by him are quite necessary. He writes: "Our goal is an institution of political administration which is responsible to the Legislative Council." This is the very reform that the Indians particularly wish for but as this is the foundation of self-government, he says that it should be made only after the war. He says that in order to reach this goal the Legislative Councils should be given greater powers and that their powers should be equal to those of self-government. The rights and the responsibilities also of those that elect members for the Legislative Councils should simultaneously grow. The powers of the members of the Executive Councils should gradually change and the Governor should at last be made to have nothing to do with the discussions about administrative matters. He writes that all interference of the Governor in administration should be removed, and the Executive Councils placed under the control of the Legislative Councils, Indians being appointed as the members of the former councils. The Governor will then have to attend to foreign affairs as in the colonies. But all responsibility of administration and all powers will be in the hands of the people. To carry into effect such reforms, either three or five persons should sit in Council at Delhi to receive evidence from such as have experience of the methods of administration, and to find out the truth. A representative of the Indian Government and a representative of the people should undertake to give them advice. This Council should investigate matters and decide upon reforms. Both England and India should be bound by their decision. And this decision should come into force as soon as possible. No danger comes out of such a course of action, says this (retired) officer. Though the constitution of a Parliamentary Committee as suggested by a correspondent to the Times of India is preferable to the Council proposed above, when we notice what kind of changes are wished for even in the Indiaman, it becomes manifest how the present times are swayed by a desire for freedom.

Lord Hardinge and the Mesopotamia affairs.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

128. The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, publishes a Telugu version of the resolution passed in a meeting held at Allahabad recognising the great services Lord Hardinge had rendered to the Indian Empire and to the prosecution of the war in Mesopotamia, and declaring that the opinion of the people of this country should be taken into consideration before any conclusion is arrived at regarding his administration in India.

The Mesopotamian Commission Report.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, July 22nd, 1917.

129. In an article referring to the discussions in parliament regarding the Mesopotamian Commission report, the Mysore Star, of the 22nd July, observes:—Mr. Chamberlain, not thinking it right to answer the allegations made in the report while continuing in office, resigned his appointment as Secretary of State. Although he was not sympathetic towards India when he accepted this his office, he was latterly, since the holding of the War Conference, showing excellent regard for India in his speeches as well as in practice. He was likely to prove sympathetic also in regard to the political privileges that are shortly to be granted to India. The loss of the services of one so favourably inclined to Indian problems would have produced much regret, if it were not for the news that his successor is Mr. Montagu, who was already Under Secretary and has visited this country personally. In addition to his close acquaintance with Indian affairs, as a Liberal he has many a time avowed his sympathy towards India. His appointment is, therefore, most welcome at the present juncture.

The Mesopotamia Commission Report.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mysore, July 20th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 20th July, observes:—Whatever the other results of the report, to India it must be said to have done some unexpected good. India was feeling much depressed on account of the indifference of the Secretary of State to Indian public opinion. Lord Hardinge's remarks at this juncture, in his criticism of the report, expressing his esteem and regard for India has considerably assuaged this pain. Further, the fact that the situation caused Mr. Chamberlain to resign his office is another source of satisfaction to the Indians. The English papers spoke in praise of him and said that he need not have resigned. But we had nothing to praise him for; as he seldom respected our views. It augurs well for the future of India that Mr. Chamberlain will not be in office when the question of reforms in the Indian administration is being considered. Prior to resigning however Mr. Chamberlain has left a word regarding the question of reforms. He did not agree with Mr. Montagu's recent utterance in connection with the Commission's Report that the Indian people should be granted a responsible share in the administration of their country. Mr. Chamberlain remarked that as the reforms would be announced shortly, it was not proper to speak on the subject at present. We fail to understand what he meant thereby. Are the reforms decided upon already? That is our only doubt. We now learn that Mr. Montagu has been appointed Secretary of State. He is the person we referred to above. He is a Liberal. He was at one time Under Secretary for India. He has visited this country personally. He is now our Minister in England. He has one more qualification, namely, he is not much liked by the Anglo-Indian party.

Indian self-government.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

130. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, writes:—The English and some of our own people emphatically assert that, as the people here are not capable of governing this country properly if the right of self-government is granted to them, it should not be given to them. My opinion is that a consideration of capacity or incapacity is unnecessary and irrelevent. From the beginning of the world up to this day change of political conditions has never depended upon the capacity or incapacity of a people. The changes took place owing to the incapacity of kings or governments. There were no kings for a long time after men had become alive to notions of property. It was the representatives of the people that settled affairs. As soon as the people began to show indifference to their affairs, kings came in, pushing out the representatives of people. When kings also began to grow indifferent to their duties, the Government of peoples' representatives was restored. In some countries government, by representatives was again thrown out and kings came in. Thus one change followed another but never was self-government granted as a gift. I cannot understand in exchange for what it should be a gift. . . When there is a defect in an administration there must come about a change in its nature and it will come about. Not only we but also the English say that the present government has given room for popular dissatisfaction. What the Rajas of Bobbili, Pittapur. . . and their Company say I am not able to understand. The change of the nature of a Government takes place not merely for the sake of a few individuals but for the well-being of the public. If the nature of the Government is thoroughly changed and if the key of the exchequer is handed over to our people, I like that the English should hold their offices for some time more. Are not the Europeans satisfactorily serving as official subordinates of our Indians in large towns. The gentleman who received thousands of rupees as pay and who go round six shops to buy a thing worth six pies, will be standing in attendance on us. What is there in men. Everything lies in the nature of things.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

P. Varadarajulu Nayudu.

131. The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, says in a note:—P. Varadarajulu Nayudu writes that he is shadowed by the Police and warns his friends that are Government servants against writing any letters to him since such letters do not duly reach him.

UTTARA TARAKA, Parur, July 14th, 1917.

Foreign goods.

132. While pointing out the impossibility of avoiding foreign articles altogether, the Uttara Taraka, of the 14th July,* calls upon the people to use swadeshi articles as far as possible in a patriotic spirit, and not in that of antagonism to England, or with evil motives, and to remember that there is no connection between the recent internment and swadeshism.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 24th, 1917.

Self-government and Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.

133. The Manorama, of the 24th July, refers to the conjectures of the Mahratta of Poona regarding the results of the interview between His Excellency the Viceroy and the Hon'ble Mr. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, and to his interviews with the several leaders of the people in India, and hopes that his circuit will result in clearing the misunderstanding between the leaders and the Government on the subject of self-government, and in strengthening the foundation of the fabric of self-government.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, July 23rd, 1917.

Lords Pentland and Willingdon.

134. In a note the Lokaprakasam, of the 23rd July, takes exception to the extension of the terms of Lords Pentland and Willingdon, which is opposed to the interests and wishes of the people in general, and hopes that at least the prayer of the Indians that one who has the welfare of India at heart should be appointed to succeed Mr. Chamberlain as Secretary of State will not fall on deaf ears.

III.—LEGISLATION.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Madras Village Courts Act amendment.

135. The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, making a review of the Bill to amend the Madras Village Courts Act, observes:—We are glad that the Government desire to establish panchayat courts. But we do not believe that the present legislation will afford any further advantages. For, it does not appear that the Government entertained any confidence in the people in proposing this legislation. The chief defects of the old Act appear in the present Bill also. The right of election of the panchayat members by the people is not granted.

* Received this week.

The appointment of the members is in the hands of Government. There is no room therefore to expect the people to place confidence in the members. . . The people may not therefore avail themselves of the panchayat courts as they did not make use of the Bench Courts. . . If it is enacted that the civil and criminal cases that may be tried in the village courts shall not be filed in the courts of the District Munsifs or the Magistrates, expenditure of the people will be reduced and petty quarrels will be settled in the village itself. This defect appearing in the original Act is retained in the present enactment. A want of confidence in the panchayat members is the cause for such a retention. Though we do not believe that the people will derive much benefit from an Act which is full of such defects, we advise the people living in villages to make use of the new panchayat tribunals and avoid waste of money by settling petty differences amicably.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, July 20th, 1917.

The Village Courts Act Amendment Bill.

In commenting upon the Village Courts Act Amendment Bill, the Yogakshemam, of the 20th July, refers to the apathy of the Madras Government in this matter, and to their decision to introduce a Government Bill after they had given their assent to the introduction of a Panchayat Bill by the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao, which at first was however refused by them and says:—Lo! the Government also have drafted a Panchayat Bill and published it with a view to ascertaining public opinion thereon. We think that it is not a good sign that the Government also should prepare a Bill, when it had been known to them that a non-official member had prepared one. Besides, clinging tenaciously to the Village Courts Act of 1088 (?1888), the Government have now put their feet in the two boats—the Village Courts and the Panchayat Courts. At any rate, we hope that these two Bills will be considered together and settled, and for the present we refrain from further comments on the subject.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July, 20th 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao's Educational Bill.

136. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 20th July, writes:—Following the lines of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's Bill on Compulsory Primary education in Bombay, the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao has submitted a Bill for adopting the same principles in municipal areas in this Presidency. Although it is based on Mr. Gokhale's Bill on the subject, it contains many defects which were not to be found in his Bill. Mr. Gokhale had urged compulsion through District Boards as well and made adequate suggestions in regard to the financial side of the scheme. Mr. Gokhale stated what portion of the expenditure in this connection is borne by the Government in the United Kingdom and Ireland and urged that in this country the Government should bear two-thirds of this expenditure. The present Bill contains no suggestions on this point. All municipalities are not rich enough to bear this expenditure exclusively. There are more important sanitary matters demanding their attention. The first step in this direction would therefore be to consult the Government of India and ensure their steady support. Since the outbreak of the war, the British Government has been spending no end of money on education. If the authorities keep the policy of the British Government in mind it will be clear that the matter is not one in which progress can be made to depend upon future contingencies of revenue. While popular leaders in British India are busy with these small attempts towards the system of compulsory education let us see what progress has been made in the Native States. We can know this from the latest report on public instruction in Mysore. The growing demand on the part of the people in regard to education is fully evident from the state of things in Mysore. In 1914–15 the element of compulsion was introduced in 15 areas. Last year it was extended to 27 areas. It is proposed in the Legislative Council to apply the same to 168 areas next year. The system is already introduced in all district and taluk headquarters. It has only to be extended to rural areas. Twenty thousand students had to be refused admission for want of schools and teachers. Those who contend that the people are wanting in eagerness in this connection will find an answer in the progress of Mysore. There are many other points in this Mysore Report which the Indian Government will do well to copy.

IV.—Native States.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 25th, 1917.

137. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 25th July, in a eulogistic sketch of the services of Rao Bahadur M. Shama Rao as Inspector-General of Education in Mysore, observes:—He has been strengthening the foundations of education, while the superstructure of it in the shape of University education has commenced. In an experimental stage like this, it is highly necessary that he who has been working at the foundation should be allowed to work at the superstructure and guard against defects likely to weaken the structure . . . If stock is taken of the work that he has turned out, it will furnish an index of the efficient work that he is capable of. The educational destinies of the State in its present condition cannot be entrusted to a better hand for a few years to come. . . . We are glad to find that the Government have reposed their entire confidence in him, and we can confidently say that he will rise to the occasion and make the Education Department of Mysore worthy of the model ruler of this model, enlightened and progressive State.

Educational progress in Mysore.

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 17th, 1917.

138. Adverting to the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew on the celebration of the Agricultural College day, Coimbatore, on the 15th July 1917, the Swadesamitran, of the 17th idem, observes:—He stated that the outturn per acre in England was thrice that in India and that there were several obstacles in the way of securing a similar outturn here. The first of these obstacles is that the agriculturists are illiterate. If a new agricultural method is found out and knowledge thereof imparted to the people in writing, they are not able to read and understand it. For these to be taught to read and write, funds are wanting. Six to seven millions of children are of the school-going age. What is to be done? He regretted that there was no one to offer suggestions on this subject. It is indeed our good time that he at least admitted education to be a necessity. Do the Government pay heed to the suggestions offered? Let him study the proceedings of the Imperial and Madras Legislative Councils for the last few years. Then he would see that whenever suggestions had been made for curtailing the expenditure under several heads, the Government invariably rejected them on some plea or other. Is the expenditure incurred for the Revenue Department so great in any other country as in this country? Is there any other country where the Government is carried on six months on the plains and six months on the hills? How much expenditure can be saved by reducing the number of European officers and increasing the number of Indian officers? Do the people object to the levy of a small tax for education if the Government desire it? It cannot, therefore, be accepted that for want of funds, the people should be kept steeped in utter ignorance. He began by saying that it was our first duty to educate the agriculturists, but concluded his speech with the statement that funds were lacking and that there were none to offer suggestions on the subject. He has, however, consoled us with the words that education is spreading without any slackness. Sir Alexander Cardew does not appear to have realised how many generations it would take for the agriculturists to reap the benefits of education if it were to spread at the rate at which it does now. If only compulsory education is introduced, funds will be found, and many items of expenditure will be avoided. If, instead of this, compulsory education is to be introduced only after a large capital has been secured, it will not be possible for many centuries to come. It is easy for the Government on reading all this, to discard it as being the usual plea. What, indeed, is their object? It is fortunate that Sir Alexander Cardew is at present the Financial Member. Let him make the necessary suggestion. Lack of funds is a very old excuse. He has also referred to another great obstacle in the way. He says that, in course of time, fields are being subdivided into small plots, that this sub-division is authorised by the Indian Law of Property, and that the people are not prepared to amend the law. How did Sir Cardew learn that the people were not prepared for an amendment of the law? Was the opinion of the ryots of this presidency consulted? Do not the Government legislate measures which are not desired by the people? Were the people prepared for such legislations as the Press Act and the Defence of India Act? Sir Cardew admits that our agriculturists are shrewd people. Will they not understand the evils of subdividing the fields, if these are explained to them? It is, therefore, the duty of the Government to ascertain the opinion of the people before they throw the blame on them. As the Hon'ble Mr. Cardew observes, the agriculturists have no education. Without education they are incapable of learning new methods. Unless these methods are learnt, agriculture cannot improve. What then is the use of spending profusely the people's money in maintaining an Agricultural College at Coimbatore without improving the agriculturists? That college would show by experiment the practical application of the scientific principles of agriculture in such a way as to suit the condition of this country. But who is going to understand that? So, according to the words of the Hon'ble Sir Cardew, the amount spent in the maintenance of that college becomes a waste. He has spoken on the gradual growth of education and co-operative societies, and said in the end a few words of encouragement to us. As already observed by us, it will take many centuries for the country to prosper by their advancement.

Obstacles to agricultural advancement.

Errata.

Report No. 28.

Page 1940, paragraph 29, line 9, insert "—" between "not and being".
" 1940 " 29 " 21, substitute "an" for "and".
" 1949 " 29 " 3, substitute "God" for "god".
" 1949 " 29 " 33, omit "—" between "wine-bibbers".
" 1949 " 29 " 44, insert "the" before "energy".
" 1950 " 29 " 24, substitute "a" for "the".
" 1950 " 29 " 24, omit the lines of poetry above paragraph 42.
" 1970 " 113 " 5, omit "," between "Muslim, Madras".
" 1971 " 113 " 21, insert "," after "even so".
" 1972 " 113 " 23, substitute "Mahmudabad" for "Muhammudabad".
" 1972 " 113 " 30, substitute "Shaukat" for "Shankat".
" 1972 " 113 " 39, omit ";" after "Mrs. Besant".

Report No. 29.

Page 2019, paragraph 124, line 7, insert "," after "understand".
" 2019 " 125, lines 16 and 19, insert "," after "independence; free; and student".
" 2020 " 126, line 8, omit '"—"'.
" 2020 " 126 " 12, insert "it" after "injuring".
" 2020 " 126 " 19, insert "the" after "lamenting".
" 2020 " 126 " 24, insert ";" after "but".
" 2020 " 126 " 30, substitute "guest" for "quest".
" 2021 " 127, lines 18 and 20, insert "," after "fashion and imitation".
" 2021 " 127, line 23, insert "the" after "with".
" 2021 " 127 " 26, substitute "import" for "comfort".

Issued, 31st July 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 31 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 4th August 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

	PAGE
(e) Local and Municipal—
The Corporation of Madras	2081
(f) Land Revenue and Settlement—
Land revenue policy	ib.
(k) General—
The Madras Provincial Congress Committee ..	2082
The Indian Defence Force	ib.
An order under the Defence of India Act ..	ib.
The duty of the patriotic	2083

II.—Home Administration—cont.

	PAGE
(k) General—cont.
The prohibited Calcutta meeting	2083
A word to Government officials and pensioners.	2084
New India	ib.
The Madras Mail and Mrs. Besant	2085
His Excellency Lord Pentland's extension of office	ib.
The Indian Civil Service and Home Rule ..	ib.
The Secretary of State for India	ib.
Active agitation and passive resistance ..	ib.
The Congress Presidentship	2086
Mrs. Besant's health	ib.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

The war 2088
Russia 2089
The cunning Germans .. .. ib.
Signs of victory .. .. ib.
Belgium 2090

(b) Courts—

How to check ruinous litigation .. .. ib.
A vacancy on the High Court Bench .. .. ib.
A Privy Council decision 2091

(c) Jails—

Jails in this Presidency .. .. ib.

(d) Education—

The Rajkumar College, Madras .. .. ib.
Students and politics 2092
Elementary schools .. .. ib.
Mr. Krishnaswami Jatavallabar of the Educational Department 2093
St. Joseph's College, Trichinopoly .. .. ib.
Free and compulsory primary education .. ib.
National education 2094
Education and industries .. .. .. ib.
Education after the war .. .. ib.
Settlement of the question of the Usmania College .. .. ib.
Muslim College and Islam 2095

(e) Local and Municipal—

Water-supply in Madras .. .. ib.
Water-supply in Trichinopoly .. .. .. ib.
Corporation of Madras .. .. ib.
Municipal administration and the vernacular .. 2097
The Tenali Municipality .. .. ib.

(h) Railways—

The Tenali-Repalle Railway .. .. .. ib.

(j) Salt and Abkāri—

Salt .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration.

(k) General—

The Vazhkudai-Mukkūr tank 2098
Our new Secretary of State for India 2099
Congress-Muslim League Reform Scheme .. ib.
Paper industry in India 2100
Internments under the Defence of India Act. ib.
The internment of Mrs. Besant .. .. .. ib.
The internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues 2101
The Bombay Legislative Council .. .. ib.
Unrest among workmen in England .. .. ib.
Brahmans and Non-Brahmans 2102
Brahmans and Home Rule 2103
German intrigues in India .. .. .. ib.
Home Rule .. .. ib.
The Lord Bishop of Bombay on Home Rule .. 2104
The Lord Bishops of Madras and Bombay on Home Rule 2106
Result of adopting repressive measures .. ib.
The plight of a woman that sent all her sons to the front 2107
The Johannesburg tram-car tragedy .. .. ib.
The Government debt 2108
An act to enforce beggers to work .. .. ib.
German hopes about India .. .. .. ib.
The Governor of Bengal on repressive measures 2109

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.

The Home Rule flag 2109
Rowdyism in a drama-shed .. .. .. ib.
The authorities and the people .. .. .. ib.
Passive resistance 2110
Army Signaller Company .. .. .. ib.
A Tuberculosis hospital at Madras .. .. ib.
Chendalore, Ongole taluk .. .. .. ib.
The English Empire administrative policy .. ib.
The views of Mr. C. Vijayaraghava Achariyar. 2111
India's help in the war .. .. ib.
The Congress scheme—A lecture .. .. ib.
Nationalism 2112
India and liberty .. .. ib.
The educated classes and the masses .. .. ib.
The Andhra movement 2113
The Parsis and self-government .. .. ib.
Indians in South Africa .. .. ib.
The banner of Home Rule .. .. .. ib.
Convention 2115
Monigars and assistant karnams .. .. ib.
Political conditions in India and Ireland .. ib.
Bifurcation of Kistna district .. .. .. ib.
P. Varadarajulu Nayudu Garu .. .. .. ib.
Condolence 2116
Social reform .. .. ib.
Protest against internments .. .. .. ib.
Madras Internments .. .. ib.
The representation of the Indians .. .. ib.
The Behar Conference .. .. ib.
The Mangolia 2117
Mr. Tilak .. .. ib.
Swadeshi vow .. .. ib.
The Calcutta protest meeting .. .. .. ib.
Order against Mr. Karandikar 2118
Our duty .. .. ib.
Russia's message 2119
The Lahore declaration .. .. ib.
Sir N. Chandravarkar's second letter .. .. ib.
Mr. Harvey and the Home Rule League .. ib.
Mrs. Besant .. .. ib.
The present atmosphere .. .. ib.
Zamindar's manifesto 2120
What is wanted? .. .. ib.
The Congress Presidentship 2121
Andhraprakasika .. .. ib.
The duty of the Indians .. .. ib.
The Indian Defence Force 2122
Indian Christians and politics .. .. .. ib.
Public meetings in connection with the Madras internments 2123
Indians and the Defence of India Force .. ib.
Enlistment of Indians in the Colonies .. .. ib.
Agitation for the distribution of appointments according to caste .. .. ib.
Mrs. Besant and Islam .. .. ib.

III.—Legislation.

The Village Courts Act Amendment Bill .. .. ib.
The Madras Estates Land Act 2124

IV.—Native States.

The Travancore Budget for 1093 M.E. .. .. ib.

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.

Agricultural improvement .. .. ib.
Resettlement of the North Arcot district .. .. ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(e) Local and Municipal.

1. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 29th July, writes:—"We do not know whether the Government of His Excellency Lord Pentland has realised the deep indignation among self-respecting Municipal Commissioners, that a Deputy Collector should be appointed to preside over their deliberations, and that that Deputy Collector should be Rao Bahadur Vijayaraghava Achariyar, whose mismanagement of the budget, unless explained, must mean his official ruin. . . There is no question of his capacity to be the President; our own opinion is that he would do better than any Civilian at the present day. But the fact remains that he is responsible for this mystery budget which is fast developing to a striking scandal in the Madras city, especially as it is unexplained. And the Commissioners have no desire to sit under a Deputy Collector, however able, and be dictated to by him as President. We think that the Government of Madras must respect this feeling, however willing and anxious to provide for a very able officer. . . We hope the Rao Bahadur will have a Collectorship instead of the Presidentship of a body, the majority of whom do not like him and are opposed to him, not on personal grounds at all, but on the grounds of prestige."

Non-Brahman, Madras, July 29th, 1917.

The Corporation of Madras.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 31st July, says:—"We do not know whether the affairs of the Madras Corporation are receiving adequate attention at the hands of the Government. Nothing is calculated to give a clearer glimpse into the situation than the relations between the President and the Commissioners. The incidents connected with the location of the Chief Engineer's Office are particularly sickening, with the grand display of the President's discretion. . . A series of mistakes and miscalculations have landed the body on the verge of the precipice, and for want of anything better to do, the commissioners, headed by a humorous Irishman, are engaged in making angry grimaces at one another to the intense amusement of those outside Madras, and the deep anxiety of the poor rate-payers of the city. . . No citizen can recall the money spent upon the water-works and drainage without being overtaken by a feeling of helplessness at the complete break-down of efficiency in the Corporation. After an expenditure of several lakhs, we find that the filter beds do not filter; and we do not even get the alleged filtered water, for unfiltered water has to be added to it in a particular proportion. As it is, the entire situation can be described only as a sorry waste."

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

The Hindu, of the 1st August, remarks:—"We invite the attention of our readers to a communication which is published elsewhere, in which 'a Commissioner' refers to another feature of the President's action convening a special meeting of the Corporation of Madras for the 30th October next. . . The President has not improved his position by assigning a reason which cannot satisfy any reasonable person. The time has apparently come when the Commissioners and the Government have seriously to consider whether it is desirable in the interests of the rate-payers and of the efficient management of the civic affairs of the city that Mr. Molony, who appears to treat the Commissioners as if they were of no account, and flout their authority, should continue as President of the Corporation."

Hindu, Madras, August 1st, 1917.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

2. In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 2nd August, observes:—"The only reform which can improve the position of the agriculturist is a moderate tax, to be fixed not at the sweet will and pleasure of the executive, but to be regulated by Land revenue policy.

Hindu, Madras, August 2nd, 1917.

the legislature. But the Government have been unreasonably obstinate and unjust in their treatment of the question which they have conveniently professed to consider from what they conceive to be the ancient Indian point of view and not from that of western countries. Nothing less than a radical and generously conceived change of policy can extricate the problem from the complicated, bewildering maze of effete theories, illogical rules and illiberal regulations which the Government have surrounded it with. The shifts and devices which have to be resorted to in order to meet the case put forward on behalf of the ryots would be a plentiful source of mirth and enjoyment to an observer, were they not so galling and irritating to the public."

(k) General.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 26th, 1917.

The Madras Provincial Congress Committee.

3. The West Coast Spectator, of the 26th July, states:—"Probably as a concession to Non-Brahman sentiment, the Madras Brahman Congress Committee, we beg pardon the Provincial Congress Committee, have admitted three Non-Brahmans into their Executive Council, as usual the rest, seventeen, being twice-born celestials. There are many Non-Brahmans competent and entitled to sit in the Council, in the city of Madras itself, but common decency is not a virtue with the aggressive.

"We shall not in the least be surprised if the Congress Committee sing hosanna at the Adyar shrine and play second fiddle to the Home Rule League. As the first step they have elected Mrs. Besant for the Congress Presidentship and her two lieutenants as honorary office-bearers. We think that there is no use of running the Provincial Congress Committee as a separate organisation, and it is better that body is merged into the Home Rule League."

Non-Brahman, Madras, July 29th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the Non-Brahman, for the week ending 29th July, remarks:—"A meeting which must make well-wishers of India blush with disgrace is the meeting of the Madras Provincial Congress Committtee. Mr. Selvaraju has exposed the whole show in the daily press, and it at once demolishes the claim of our Home Rulers to be sober and temperate. The spirit that would defy the Government is displayed in the Mahajana Sabah, and we see the petulence of a peevish woman or child in the proposal of electing the interned as the Vice-President of the Congress Committee. If after this mad display the Government should refuse to take Indian politics seriously, no one can blame the Government. We are glad that at this Congress farce not one of our leaders were present. That is one reason why the counsel of the Non-Brahmans should prevail. We have not taken leave of our senses; our brains do not float with the Red and the Green at Ootacamund."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 26th, 1917.

The Indian Defence Force.

4. The West Coast Spectator, of the 26th July, remarks:—"The number of Indians who applied for enlistment in the Indian Defence Force up to the 16th July last was 1,766 for the whole of India. The Government wanted 6,000 men, but not even a third of this small number has been secured. Let those Home Rulers who wax eloquent over imperial obligations, imperial patriotism and such shibboleths ponder over this figure. The alleged official blunders said to stand in the way of enlistment were long ago rectified, but still the number is disappointing. The fact is we are a nation of dreamers and windbags, yet to learn the value of practical politics."

Hindu, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

An order under the Defence of India Act.

5. The Hindu, of the 30th July, states:—"An order was served on Mr. V. R. Karandikar of the office of New India, today, asking him to quit the Madras Presidency within forty-eight hours. . . The public will be pained and surprised at this further act of repression on the part of the Government of Madras. What the reasons for this order are we are not at all in a position to know or conjecture. The stereotyped and familiar recital that Mr. Karindikar had acted or was about to act in a manner prejudicial to public safety does not explain or elucidate; and the convenient weapon provided by the Defence of India Act has been used once more to restrict the freedom of movement of a gentleman whose only offence is, so far as the public know, that he had devoted himself to the cause of the country and had placed his services at the disposal of Mrs. A. Besant. Mr. Karandikar has not been known to be making any speeches; neither has he, to the knowledge of the public, been writing to the press. What are the activities, then, of Mr. Karandikar which have offended the Government and for which he has to pay the penalty so arbitrarily fixed by the authorities? . . The Government have not improved their case by their silence regarding the reasons for their strange act. One blunder leads to another, and we cannot commend the attitude of the Government who would not appear to have realised that repression would not pay in the end."

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 31st July, says:—"As our readers know, yesterday, an order of 'Externment' was served on Mr. V. R. Karandikar, sub-editor of New India. . . What a sophistry it is to call this work 'prejudicial to public safety'? The Congress League Scheme is definitely for constitutional changes in the system of administration here and the carrying out of that scheme of reforms is certainly detrimental to the interests of the bureaucracy. The bureaucracy in India has been long thinking that their interests are the interests of India; and in this scheme of reforms they see the beginning of responsible Government and the ending of autocracy. That is the reason why every effort of constitutional agitators has become unbearable to them and they hit hard and hit mindless of justice and fairness at any one they choose to look upon as 'dangerous'. It is a sin or a crime in their eyes for an Indian to rouse his countrymen to the appreciation of the miserable condition in which they stand today. It is a sin or a crime to work earnestly and restlessly for the uplift of this country and its freedom political and economic in proceeding against Mr. Karandikar. . . In any case we must show to the Government that these things cannot cow us down. At every step of repression the national cause must gather more and more strength, until at length the whole people demand their rights in a voice that is irresistible and are prepared to make sacrifices for the nation's freedom."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 31t, 1917.

6. New India, of the 28th July, writes:—"Until the repressive measures of the various Governments are repealed, and Mrs. Annie Besant, Messrs. Wadia, Arundale, Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali are released, no patriotic or self-respecting Indian should work with the Government on any committee, or Board, or Advisory Council, or in any way. They should sternly stand aloof. England will then see that only lower grade men will accept Government offers. For instance, on the Temperance Committee, Dr. T. M. Nayar, a non-temperance man, is the only Indian. That is all right. In an Indian Man-Power Committee we find three Rajas—Ramnad, Bobbili and Kollengode, why not the poor Raja of Kurupam?—that is all right. We see with regret that one eminent Indian is on it, but we trust that he is not to be judged by the company he keeps. Let it be remembered that a swadeshi meeting has been prohibited; that a meeting for the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's Education Bill has been prohibited; that religious liberty is being crushed—Lieutenant-Colonel Nicholson has been ordered not to attend a theosophical meeting; that Messrs. Wrenn, Bennet & Co. (Limited) in Ootacamund have had pressure put upon them to send away Mr. Harvey, and have done so. Reaction is becoming more and more rapid, and repression is increasing. Lord Pentland has already sent Madras along the first stages of 'Bengal unrest,' as Mrs. Besant warned him he was doing. What a splendid thing it would be if the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nayar and the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar indignantly flung away their offices, and refused to be branded in history as supporters of the repression of liberty. They ought both to be interned instead of in the Council Chamber of coercion. They ought to make their names immortal. Will they?

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The duty of the patriotic.

7. New India, of the 28th July, has the following:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The prohibited Calcutta meeting.

"Another blow at liberty of speech.

"The telegrams tell us that the proposed Town Hall meeting in Calcutta to protest against the internments has been prohibited by Government. The reason given was that the Government could not allow a Town Hall meeting 'for the sole purpose of criticising the action taken under law by the authorities of another Government'. We always expect this sort of fellow-feeling between sister administrations and brother satraps, especially on the present occasion, when the policy of repression has been taken up in concert by all the Governments. . . We are sure our Calcutta friends will hold a great meeting and express with all their noted emphasis and ability their abhorrence of the policy of Government. But, in the meanwhile, we make a note of the narrowness of vision and the littleness of heart manifested by the Bengal Government. The Bengal Government say that they have 'no objection to a meeting held to promote constitutional changes, so long as the speakers preserved sobriety of language'. We know that meetings even for this purpose have been stopped in various parts of the country. And is not protest against high-handed repression and against the misuse of legislative enactments, a measure 'to promote constitutional changes'? How can we think of any other changes till this policy which has silenced the leaders of the whole movement for constitutional changes is changed? Under the circumstances 'sobriety of language' becomes impossible."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

A word to Government officials and pensioners.

8. New India, of the 30th July, observes:—"The political situation in the country is becoming increasingly grave day after day. The policy of repression is in the ascendant. The Indian public and the leaders have, on the whole, discharged their duty in speaking out their minds on this critical occasion. . . When the non-official Indian attitude has been thus made clear to the Government, what ought to be the position of the Indian officials in this country? We are aware that Indian officials, as such, cannot publicly express any opinion of their own on our national aspirations, but there is no doubt that the vast majority of them share the views and sentiments of their non-official brethren. Of course, the plainest way of indicating their attitude would be for Indian officials, in high positions, to give up their connection with the Government, if they feel that the Government have embarked on an unjust policy of down-right repression. . . To our friends, who have retired from Government service after a long and unsullied career, we have only to commend the example of a patriot like the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar. . . The Government cannot, with any sense of fairness to its own quandom loyal officers—officers on whom it has sometimes conferred honours and titles for approved service, loyalty, ability, character and what not—charge them with 'disloyalty' or call them all 'irresponsible' people using 'unconstitutional' or 'dangerous' methods of agitation. . . It is, therefore, essential that retired officials of all grades should now throw in their lot with the Indian constitutional reformers, Home Rulers or Self-Governmenters, for all parties now merge in one national whole. May we, therefore, appeal to them all to join the Home Rule Leagues in their respective places—we are glad that several have already joined—and help their country in the great work to the best of their abilities. We know there is enough mettle in them, and are sure that they would rise to the occasion in this grave crisis."

NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, July 29th, 1917.

New India.

9. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 29th July, remarks:—"We are rather surprised at the ways of the Madras Government. Why did they intern Mrs. Annie Besant? If it is to end in a kind of violent and often dangerous agitation it has not been successful. New India is almost the same as it was; and if Mr. Krishnama Achariyar does not write of Hiranyakasipu, there is Dr. Pattabi Sitarammayya to write wonderful articles. If a thing is taken up, we look to the Government to see the matter through. We must have no dallyings at all with politicians. As it is the Government have only served to create great men. Mr. Wadia who was an unknown man in the country has become a martyr and Mr. Telang is on the high way to martyrdom. 'Look how courageously he writes' is on many lips. And thus we live in queer days when name and fame come to man if he should always attack Government and its officers. . . This dallying with popular emotions and feelings ought to be strongly deprecated. It is here that Liberal statesmen fail in India; they have not the courage to do as they would in England, for they find the people backward. They are anxious to sympathise, but those who speak in the name of the people are thoughtless and rash sometimes. And it is only truth when we say that we have yet to get men of strong character."

The Madras Mail and Mrs. Besant.

10. In commenting on the remarks of the Madras Mail on Mrs. Besant's contribution to the Christian Commonwealth in 1911 on "Indian Unrest," the Non-Brahman, for the week ending 29th July, says:—"The Madras Mail does not know India and Indians well, although it pretends to know even better than us; but we thought that it can judge at least a British woman well but it has failed. . . It is crass ignorance of Mrs. Besant's character to criticise her as the Madras Mail does. She is nothing if not a time-serving character, and at the time she wrote, why she was being pursued by the Hindu and the Leader and the Hindu Prakash. This is just like Mrs. Besant. And now she praises everything Indian, even the Hindu which was sedition to her, is now nectar. Why, again, that is just like Mrs. Besant. And those who want self-government for India draw inspiration from this character. We wish Mr. Montagu does not hear of the fellowship of the interned and of the Home Rule flag and of the various proposals to mark Indian indignation over the internments, lest he should take us for a population of lunatics. That is our greatest concern." NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, July 29th, 1917.

His Excellency Lord Pentland's extension of office.

11. Referring to the obstruction at a meeting held at Coimbatore to thank the Secretary of State for India for having extended His Excellency the Governor's term of office, the Non-Brahman, for the week ending 29th July, states:—"When the Home Rule flag is hoisted and the 16th July celebrations are observed, we proclaim our madness, lose the little respect of responsible men, and the whole show ends in miserable mockery. We are sorry for the martyrs who seek martyrdom by keeping back progress in India." NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, July 29th, 1917.

The Indian Civil Service and Home Rule.

12. The following appears in the Non-Brahman for the week ending 29th July:—"We are glad that Civilians are coming forward to speak more and more plainly. Sir James Meston's utterance, although it has been studiously slurred over by the extremist press, has created the best of feeling in the Indian mind. It has taken out much of the wind from the sails of the Home Rulers, who were pretending dismay at the outbreak of Prussianism in India. To sober minded men, of course, this is ridiculous, and hence we find men like Sir Rash Behari Ghosh and Mr. Surendranath Bannerjee outside this mad ring. When we are told that a new medal had been invented called the fellowship of the interned and that it would be as great as the Victoria Cross and that one reason why Britain is not successful in this war yet is because Mrs. Annie Besant is interned, we think who are responsible for this are fit not for self-government but for the lunatic asylum." NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, July 29th, 1917.

The Secretary of State for India.

13. The West Coast Spectator, of the 31st July, has the following:—"In connection with Mr. Montagu's elevation to the Secretaryship of State, the usual thing, we may well say the inevitable, is happening. Telegrams congratulating the new Secretary are going up to him from all parts of India and the optimists of our now strenuous political world are anticipating every thing even the sun, which according to Lord Morely not even a decade ago, should be considered absolutely outside the range of the possible. Later on, it is to be feared, reaction will set in, and of Mr. Montagu, as of so many other British statesmen who have had to do with India, we shall be told that he was tried and found a miserable failure. It is time we got into the sensible habit of writing the epitaphs of public men at the end of their careers, instead of at the beginning." WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 31st, 1917.

Active agitation and passive resistance.

14. Justice, of the 1st August, writes:—"The Besantine caucus met in Bombay and have passed telegrams, resolutions, speeches, memoranda and various other things. These we are familiar with. These are the paraphernalia of active agitation, and when the number of people agitating is JUSTICE, Madras, August 1, 1917.

small the intensity of the agitation has to be made up by a large volume of sound. The Congressmen in this country are familiar with the spectacle of a dozen men sitting in a room calling themselves a public meeting and electing hundred delegates to the National Congress. The thirteen Brahmans from Madras, elected by a small clique sitting in an office in Mount Road calling themselves the representatives of the people of the Madras Presidency, perhaps foreshadow the electoral system under the future Home Rule Government in India. . . Among the thirteen Brahmans who claim to represent the Madras Presidency and who have been parties to recommending passive resistance there are several vakils. A vakil passive resister cannot go and plead in a court of law, because no passive resister recognises the existence of a court of law and none of them will obey any law So the first step in the carrying out of passive resistance in the Madras Presidency ought to be that the members of the All-India Congress Committee who are vakils should abstain from pleading in courts of law. The next step for them to take will be that such of them as are members of Legislative or Local bodies should sever their connection with such bodies, for passive resisters do not co-operate with the Government in any way, and lastly these gentlemen should decline to pay all legally imposed taxes. When these thirteen gentlemen have done these and taken the consequences like heroes and martyrs that they want to be taken for, then it will be time enough for the humble clerk or the innocent student or the petty trader to follow the lead of the gallant thirteen."

United India and Native States, Madras, August 2nd, 1917.

15. United India and Native States, for the week ending 2nd August, writes:—

The Congress Presidentship.

"Although we do not approve of the action of the Madras Government in interning Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues, we must deprecate the suggestion that she should be elected President of the ensuing session of the Congress. It will be an ill-advised and futile step to elect Mrs. Besant merely for the purpose of flouting Government. . . . The more ardent admirers of Mrs. Besant have proposed that her portrait should take her place in the presidential chair and that Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar or any one else should act as her deputy. The proposal will be an excellent one if the Congress is an annual tamasha and not a business body engaged in considering important questions affecting the welfare of 300 millions."

Hindu, Madras, August 3rd, 1917.

16. The Hindu, of the 3rd August, states:—"For some days past we have been receiving information from Ootacamund that Mrs. Besant is suffering from a serious nervous break-down, and that her health and strength have become greatly impaired since her internment. . . The public aspect of the internments of Mrs. Besant, and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia has been brought home to them in quite an unmistakable manner. The chartered libertines of the Anglo-Indian press may indulge to their hearts' content in gibes about the 'ninety-ninth repetition of Mrs. Besant's case.' The Government, however, which has incurred the responsibility of having caused the internments, would do well to consider the consequences of their action, both in its public and personal aspects. . . The Indian Government has a conspicuous and most convincing instance of the wisdom of exercising clemency at this moment in the step which the British Government has taken in ordering the release of all the Irish prisoners who were implicated in the rebellion of last year, and in providing for Irishmen of all classes, the Sinn Feiners as well as the Ulster Unionists, co-operating at the Irish Convention for devising a workable self-government scheme for Ireland. There is neither justice nor statesmanship in a policy as regards India, the reverse of what the good sense of the British public dictates in the case of Ireland. . . The people of India have not deserved at the hands of Government any dose of coercive or repressive measures at the present time. They have been engaged in peaceful, lawful, constitutional agitation. No disorders of any kind have followed in any part of the country as the result of the political agitation led by Mrs. Besant. . . It is our earnest hope that the people of India would not be driven to the necessity of resorting to any form, however mild, of passive resistance and that the Government would take wise counsel in time and entirely reverse their reactionary policy."

Mrs. Besant's health.

The following appears in New India of the 3rd August :—

NEW INDIA,
Madras,
August 3rd, 1917.

"Mrs. Besant at Ooty.

"Her numerous friends all over the world will be shocked to learn that Mrs. Besant's health is rapidly declining in the surroundings and under the circumstances in which she is being detained at Ootacamund. Mr. C. Jinarajadasa, who returned from Ootacamund today after a stay of about a week, during which time he met Mrs. Besant every day, says in a letter, which we publish elsewhere, that he has never before seen her in such a bad condition of mental suffering and bodily weakness. The editor of this paper, who saw her last week, was simply shocked at the utter lack of vitality which he noted in her, the very emblem of health and vitality. The moral indignity of being ranked as a traitor and peace-breaker, the utter cessation of activity, the feeling of restraint all round, the petty persecutions constantly levelled at her and her two friends, the misrepresentations made about her motives and actions by persons in authority after preventing all opportunity of a reply by her—all these things prey upon her mind, while her body suffers through the damp atmosphere to which she has not been accustomed for a number of years. The result of all this is a serious nervous break-down. She will not bend, of course, nor does she herself complain, but she suffers and her condition is causing grave anxiety to all who have seen her. Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar referred to this in his letter published in our columns on Wednesday and so in this morning's Madras Times appears the ill-natured remark that 'there is no room for any fear about the physical comfort of Mrs. Besant and her associates'. Really meanness and malice could not have gone further. The Government has taken a very grave responsibility upon itself and will surely be held answerable for all consequences."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

17. Referring to the telegrams received about the present state of affairs in the Russian front where some sections of the army are reported to be unwilling to fight, but are said to be prepared to retreat even before the advance of the enemy, and to the determination of M. Kerensky to save Russia from this situation with the shedding of blood, if necessary, the Swadesamitran, of the 6th July, expects that his rare qualities and wide influence will be found useful at this time of pressure, and observes that unless Russia soon comes forward to take an active part in the war with union among her people, it appears to be very hard to expect the termination of war this year.

The war.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th July, observes thus upon this subject:—

War.

. . . . As a result of the new changes in Russia, victory in the war which was well-nigh won was lost. It is regrettable that the Russians in their zeal for liberty should forget the message of war. They objected to the dethronement of King Constantine of Greece and spoiled the Balkan question. . . In the conference to be held in August next by the Allies to decide each other's policy properly, the Russians must be informed rightly. It does not look well that the Americans should say that they will not take part in this conference. There is no doubt that the counsel of the people of America, which is the foremost democracy, will be acceptable to the Russians. In the eastern theatre, war proved unfavourable to them. The victory won by Brusilaff after losing many soldiers has become useless. . . From the present condition of Russia there may be some disappointment, but M. Kerensky is using all his skill to improve the condition. He also set out for the front. He never hesitates to punish the anarchists. Many of them are in prison . . The food problem is in a critical condition and attempts are being made to improve the situation. We hope that these attempts will bear fruit, and that the Russians will rise again and crush the enemy. In the western theatre the German prowess is declining day by day. . . The enemy's airships are being destroyed unable to cope with the British airships. . . The submarine raid is going down. . . The Scientific American writes that a ship called "Submersible," which can dive into the water and destroy the submarines, is under construction. When it is completed the German submarine raid will come to a stop. If this is stopped, Germany's defeat is certain. . . It is certain that the Allies will fulfil their vow to protect the rights of small kingdoms and dispel the world's fear.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, July 28th, 1917.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 28th July writes:—The instability of the new Government in Russia, the anarchical preaching of the German agents and such other things interfered with the war preparations of Russia. Owing to the prevalence of some mistaken notions among them, some soldiers were opposed to war, and some leaders rebelled. Whatever the reasons may be the enthusiasm for war slackened in Russia and afforded an opportunity for the Germans. . . But it is believed that matters will be set right by the ability of Kerensky whom the Russian statesmen take to be the man who, according to Count Tolstoi's prophecy, has incarnated in Europe for establishing democracy. The present dash of the Germans into Tarnapol and Stanislad need not be a matter for any alarm. The British pressure on the Germans in France is not without its fruits. . . It may be said that Germany has sustained an irretrievable loss in the matter of her men. . . The ammunitions spent by the British are beyond measure. Two hundred miles of German trenches have been reduced to dust and the German armies in them have been drawn out from their strongholds like hares from their holes and reduced to ashes by the British fire. . . But we should not rejoice that German resistance is at an end yet. . . To drive the Germans is not the object of the Allies. The German battalions must either be destroyed or overthrown. . . The premiership of Mr. Venezuloes was a source of encouragement, but Russia's fanaticism introduced a fresh trouble, to consider which the representatives of the Allies have met this week at Paris. Germany is now in a great crisis. She has been isolated from the world like a besieged fort. . . The whole civilised world has declared itself against her. That Siam has also done so is a good thing. . . For the many German refugees in Siam were imprisoned and the German ships, captured. Germany has thus lost all her influence, shipping and trade. . . Whether the victory is far or near, England will not sheath her sword until she reaches her goal, whatever may be the measure of strength or success of Russia, Italy and France.

The war.

18. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th July, says:—The situation in Russia is day by day becoming insupportable. . . The Russian soldiers are behaving treacherously in Galicia. . . At this crisis all hopes are centered in Kerensky who deserves to be called the Russian Napoleon.

Russia.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

19. The Andhraprakasika, of the 27th July, says in its leader:—It is stated that some Indian traitors fell into the trap of the cunning Germans and entered Germany through France. . . The "Gathar" movement in California laid bare the conspiracies of the Germans. . . From certain papers it has become plain that the Germans spent 7 crores and 50 lakhs of rupees in order to encourage sedition in India. See how great is the mischief of the Germans and how outrageous the conduct of the country's traitors who were born to tarnish the fair name of our country! Our countrymen want that the Government should sit with their eyes shut and try the country's traitors in the regular way. This is improper and may lead to great troubles. The Government should enquire carefully into German intrigues in India and do the needful at once. Reventlo has said plainly that the Germans will encourage sedition in India and support anarchists. The Germans in America spent 7½ crores of rupees on this account. Since the commencement of the war, certain Indians have been stubbornly clamouring for dangerous political privileges and are creating unnecessary confusion. We submit that if the Government do not, at least now, take steps to put down these German intrigues entirely, they will be doing great injustice to the country.

The cunning Germans.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

20. The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, writes under this heading:— . . . "The progress of the Allies is becoming difficult as the Germans are opposing them stubbornly in the western front. Though the British armies have laid siege to Lens on three sides for the last three months it is proving difficult to take it. The Germans by their great exertions succeeded in taking possession of the sand-hills near the sea. . . In the western theatre the Allies are finding it very hard to push on as the Germans are presenting a bold front. If progress and opposition continue in this way, it is clear that it will not be possible to drive the Germans from the western theatre of war before the end of this year. . .

Signs of victory.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

The English believed that victory would be possible because of their naval strength.

The English war-experts believed that it would be possible to compel the Germans to yield by their naval blockade. Though the blockade put the Germans to difficulties, it has not been possible to defeat them thereby. The Germans are able to get articles of food. The Germans in their turn adopted the policy of destroying the ships. The German hope of victory depended upon the success of this policy. This German policy of destroying ships created a troublous situation for the British people. But later on it came to be known from the reduced number of ships destroyed that the English are employing counteracting agencies. . . But the Germans do not seem to be rid of the mistaken notion of starving the people of England. . . Though this scheme of the Germans is giving trouble to the English people, it is clear that the Germans cannot possibly secure a success thereby. . . The Russian revolution is to some extent prejudicial to the attainment of victory by the Allies. The socialists are opposed to war. The soldiers are disobeying the orders of their commanders and are turning away from the battlefields. The German machinations are spreading wide in Russia. . . Time must determine the service that may be rendered to the Allies and to universal peace by the Russian revolution. Though the condition of war on land and sea and in the sky is favourable to the Allies, it is clear that it is full of difficulties.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 3rd, 1917.

Belgium.

21. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 3rd August, writes:—Germany has not only annexed Belgium, but from there she is preparing to invade England. Zeebruge and Ostend have been converted into impregnable bases. There are sand cliffs between these towns and the sea. These are a great protection to this territory. The British are trying their best to destroy these fortifications. But their efforts have so far proved futile. The British have manufactured aeroplanes and destroyers to destroy the enemy's aeroplanes and submarines. They are trying their utmost to ward off the German menace. But the enemy still stands unsubdued. If it becomes possible to destroy these two fortresses, it is believed it would be easy to oust the enemy from the whole of Belgium. We hope that these efforts will be successful.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

(b) Courts.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

How to check ruinous litigation.

22. The Dravidan, of the 26th July, writes on this subject as follows:—How are we to check ruinous litigation? What are the means to prevent people from unnecessarily rushing to the courts of law? What are the reasons for this increase of litigation? These are the questions worthy of being considered by the Government in the interest of the litigant public and with a view to curtail the heavy expenditure incurred by the Government. In this connection, the functions of the courts of law have to be considered first. Any defects in them should be found out and rectified, and this reform must begin with the village courts. If the village headman knows the law and the procedure to be adopted in trials, he may be given the power to try cases up to a limit of Rs. 100 with the aid of a panchayat. If the judgment conjointly given by the village munsif and the panchayat is final and not appelable to a higher court of law, there will not be an accumulation of suits in the court of the District Munsif. The expenditure incurred by the parties to suits will also be reduced. If only suits for over Rs. 100 are entertained in the courts of District Munsifs, the number of suits that come before those courts will go down. The Munsifs will thereby have sufficient leisure to consider well the cases that come before them, and their judgments would be sound and would not be set aside by higher courts. Similarly, there will be a smaller number of suits before the Sub-Courts and District Courts. Consequently, the number of cases that come up for retrial before higher tribunals will also go down. With the decrease in the number of suits, the necessity for an increase in the number of Judges would cease to exist, and the trouble of appointing temporary Judges would be saved once for all. We are glad to see that the Madras Village Courts Act Amendment Bill supports our views in certain respects. If effect is to be given to the measures therein proposed, the pay and status of the village munsifs should be improved. It is suggested in the Bill that the power of appointing these munsifs should be conferred on Deputy Collectors. But it is our opinion, for many obvious reasons that this power should not be conferred on them for some time to come.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

A vacancy on the High Court Bench.

23. Referring to the vacancy on the High Court Bench caused by the resignation of Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar, the Andhraprakasika, of the 19th July, recommends the names of eight Non-Brahman gentlemen to the vacancy. It believes that if one of them be selected for the post the Brahman advocates of immediate Swaraj will not grudge, for they regard all the Indians as the children of the same mother. It prays that if the Government wish the welfare of the Non-Brahmans they will appoint a Non-Brahman at least this time.

A Privy Council decision.

24. Referring to the recent decision of the Privy Council in a case between the Government and a zamindar in the Ganjām district reversing the judgment of the Madras High Court, the Yogakshemam, of the 27th July, points out that, if it be wrong on the part of the Government to treat the canals within the lands, granted by them to the zamindars, as poramboke and to levy a special water-cess, as well as to try to establish their rights over the rivers on which the zamindars depended for their water-supply from time immemorial, what they do in Malabar must be regarded as far more unjust, and observes:—There is a canal which has been dug for the benefit of the cultivable lands on either side, and there is no doubt as to its having been dug by the owner of the lands thereof. If the Government say that such a canal is theirs, there does not seem to be much difference between this and robbery. In Kerala it is escheat lands, naturally formed islets, etc., that make the Government real owners of lands, and the practice of seizing the lands of the janmis and of treating them as poramboke can never be justified.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, July 27th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Manorama, of the 31st July, also draws attention to the difference between the zamindars on the east coast and the janmis of Malabar, points out that there are several cases like the one under reference, arising in its opinion from the new settlement, which are not, however, brought before the Privy Council, because the small landowners cannot afford to do so, and observes that the effect of this decision will be to increase the rights of the Malabar janmis, and that it is to be hoped that, in view of this decision, the Government will cease to oppress the landowners unjustly.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 31st, 1917.

(c) Jails.

Jails in the Presidency.

25. In commenting upon the report on the administration of jails in this Presidency, the Manorama, of the 27th July, draws attention to the insufficiency of accommodation for civil prisoners, to the undesirability of detaining in jails under-trial prisoners, of whom only 37 per cent were convicted, and to the regrettable detention in jail of fifteen girls of 15 years of age and less, points out that, instead of sending boys and girls to jails where they will come in contact with habitual criminals, which is likely to make hardened criminals of themselves, they ought to be sent to Reformatory Schools, and observes that arrangements should be made for delivery of lectures in jails with a view to improve the character of the prisoners, and that, if the Government does not make a move in the matter, it is the duty of the public-spirited men in this country to arrange for it.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 27th, 1917.

The jails in the Presidency.

In commenting upon the report on the administration of jails in this Presidency, the Kerala Patrika, of the 28th July, also deplores the detention in jail of a large number of under-trial prisoners, a large majority of whom were afterwards found to be innocent, thinks that the law which allows such detentions should be modified, and observes that it is doubtful whether the Magistrates pay any heed to the order of the Government that those cases in which the accused are remanded, should be disposed of as quick as possible.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 28th, 1917.

The jails in the Presidency.

In commenting upon the administration of Jails in the Presidency, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 1st August, writes in a strain more or less similar to that of the Manorama of the 27th July, asks whether young girls too cannot be sent to the Reformatory School at Chingleput, and hopes that the Government will make arrangements for admitting refractory and disobedient children into that institution, if their parents are willing to send them there.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, August 1st, 1917.

(d) Education.

The Rajkumar College, Madras.

26. Referring to the statement reported to have been made by the Governor of Madras that he had no objection to utilise the public funds with the Government for the maintenance of this college, the Hindu Nesan, of the 25th July, observes that there is no need to spend the public money to educate the sons of the rich people and that, as they are themselves in a position to make suitable arrangements for the education of their sons, the aid of the Government is unnecessary.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

Adverting to the statement referred to above and to the plea of want of funds which, in the opinion of this paper, is usually advanced by Government for carrying out certain important reforms like the spread of elementary education, the Swadesamitran, of the 25th July, observes:—If there is truth in the statement that the Government have promised to sanction for this college a grant of a sum equal to that collected from the zamindars, certain important objections have to be considered in this connection. Is a separate college necessary for the sons of the zamindars? If they read in ordinary colleges, in spite of their enormous wealth, they will have the opportunity of developing the tendency to live with others with brotherly feeling and sympathy. If, on the other hand, a separate college is established for them, it is for consideration whether it will be conducive to the development of such a noble tendency. Further, it is a question whether it is advisable to propose to help to such a college with Government funds. The zamindars are rich persons, and it will give no satisfaction to the people that they should go in for aid from Government or that the latter should give them the necessary funds. None will object to financial aid being given to measures which actually deserve such an aid.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

27. Anent the orders of the Provincial Governments that students should not attend political meetings and the consequent impossibility for the students to serve as volunteers as usual in the Congress, the Swadesamitran, of the 25th July, writes:—Is this to be called advancement or retrogression? Perhaps the Government think that political discussion of any kind will prejudicially affect the education of the students. If so, the solicitude, which the Government show in the welfare of these students more than even their parents, is not approved by the very teachers that impart education to these students.

Students and politics.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 27th, 1917.

The Swadeshabhimani, of the 27th July, says:—Lord Pentland in his famous speech in May regarding students and politics said in defence of the circular that it was supported by public opinion as well as by members of the Educational department. The incorrectness of the view regarding public opinion was already being proved abundently, by the protests at the Provincial Conference at Cuddalore and various district conferences and the Indian press. The belief of the Government in this regard reminds one of the cat which believes the whole world to be enveloped by darkness when it shuts its own eyes. Our progressive Government was not content with merely passing the disgraceful order; it wanted to justify it. What is the result? It became clearer than ever what measure of support it really had. Although the result of the recent conference of heads of colleges has not been officially announced, it is sufficiently evident from the reports which have already appeared in the newspapers. It would not be wrong to suppose that the result of the hot discussion that took place will have a wholesome effect on the mind of Lord Pentland, as it was established by the criticisms of the various college authorities and professors present at the conference that the order was impracticable. In short, all the authorities of the Government, missionary and private colleges alike condemned the order. It is to be hoped that Lord Pentland will now at least consider the inappropriateness of saying that the order is supported by public opinion and educational authorities. It would perhaps be more appropriate to say that the order has the support of other Provincial governments; for, there is no denying that these have followed the same line of policy.

Students and political meetings.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 25th, 1917.

Referring under this heading to the details as gathered from hearsay of the meeting of the principals, and the discussion of the G.O. No. 559, the Desamata, of the 25th July, remarks:—"It remains to be seen what the Government is going to do regarding this Government order."

Elementary schools.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

28. Adverting to the classification of these schools into three grades, and the pay recently fixed for the teachers of these schools, a correspondent writes a letter to the Swadesamitran of the 26th July, in which the following observations occur:—Even with this increase of pay which does not differentiate the different grades of teachers, it seems that their income would be less than what it was. That is to say all the teachers would, without any difference, get a pay of Rs. 12 each. The teachers in the second-grade elementary schools are more or less men who have passed the Lower Secondary examination. Besides the higher standard of education possessed by them, they have undergone training for a period of two years and have to teach the fourth standard. We, therefore, humbly request that the Government would be pleased to issue orders to differentiate the primary and lower secondary grade teachers, and to enhance the pay of the latter.

Elementary education.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th July, learns that the committee appointed to draft the Madras Municipal Bill (sic) have resolved to afford facilities to municipal councils to impart free and compulsory education, if they please, and to enable them to impose taxes necessary for that purpose. The paper prays that the Government will be pleased to grant such powers to local bodies at least and introduce free elementary education in the country.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

Mr. Krishnaswami Jatavallabar of the Educational Department.

29. Adverting to the order of the Government stated to have been issued on the 5th July 1917 that the chief officer under the head of a department should not hold the same office for a long time, the Dravidan, of the 27th idem, thinks that this order was indeed passed with reference to Mr. Krishnaswami Jatavallabar who has been in his present appointment in the Educational Department for more than ten years, and hopes that he will not give room for such a complaint.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

St. Joseph's College, Trichinopoly.

30. Adverting to the opening of an L.T. class in the St. Joseph's College, Trichinopoly, the Pandya Nesan, of the 21st July, writes:—Although the Government have sanctioned the opening of this class, it appears that they have restricted the number of students to be admitted therein to twenty. Would only 20 graduates apply for admission in that class? It is unnecessary for us to say that five times the number would rush in for admission. On seeing the opening of the L.T. class in this college, there is a strong current of opinion that the B.L. classes also should be opened there. But it is not an easy thing for the Government to accord sanction for the opening of those classes in that college.

PANDYA NESAN, Madura, July 21st, 1917.

Free and compulsory primary education.

31. Referring to the statement made by the Governor of Bombay at the time of the introduction, in the Bombay Legislative Council, of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's Bill on Free and Compulsory Primary Education in certain municipal areas of that Presidency, that after the war this question will be comprehensively considered all over India that, only if the children are educated, public opinion would be formed, and that the absence of such an opinion seriously affects the general administration of the country, the Swadesamitran, of the 27th July, says:—The public have, indeed, for many years, been paying adequate attention to the question of elementary education. It is only the authorities that have not bestowed such an attention upon this subject. We have often stated that, for the proper administration of the country, suitable education is essential for the people. So what the Governor of Bombay has now said is nothing new. It will not, however, suffice, if the bureaucracy merely admit that public opinion is essential for the proper administration of the country and that progress of education alone is the basis for such an opinion, but they should also pay heed to that opinion and act upon it.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 28th July, highly commends the above statement of the Governor of Bombay with reference to Mr. Patel's Bill recently introduced in the Legislative Council of that province.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

Adverting to the statement reported to have been made at the time of discussion in the Council about the provision in the Bill that no municipality, which resolves to introduce compulsory elementary education, could claim financial help from the Government as a matter of right, and to the warning said to have been given by Sir M. Chaubal to the select committee to whom the Bill has been referred for report not to amend this rule, the Swadesamitran, of the 30th July, writes:—It is indeed strange that the Government should have come forward to guard by means of legislation a matter of minor importance to such an extent. Yet there is a lesson which the non-official members have to learn from this. At the time when the Press Act was introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council, they hesitated to include in the Bill certain safeguards indispensably necessary for the press and the newspapers, relying on the assurance given by the Government. Our readers could not have forgotten the difficulties that have cropped up as a result of this. We trust that, hereafter at least, the elected members will be on their guard.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

National education.

32. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th July, contains in Telugu the letter of Mr. Earnest Wood on this subject which contains:—The object of the present day education is to train them to enter the service of the Government. The students also prosecute their studies with that object. They are unfit for any other profession. . . All the people in the world sneer at the Indians saying that they have no practical worldly knowledge at all. . . Those who have understood the conditions of the country unanimously state that this evil is due to the present educational methods.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

National education.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th July, reports Mr. Earnest Wood to have said on this subject:—Kant said that educational reform is of no use and that revolution is the only means of salvation. Unless education in India is thoroughly revolutionised, India cannot occupy an equal rank with modern countries like France, Germany and England. The old ideal of training men for Government service is still swaying the present-day educational methods. There is no connection at all between the education given in schools and the daily life of the Indians. Talented young men in educational institutions think that Government service is their only goal.

Education and industries.

33. An article contributed by a correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 21st July, contains the following remarks:—India which was industrially great when the western people were uncivilized has been totally neglected after coming under the British rule. The Indians, having lost their eminence in arts, philosophy and civilization, and having become slaves to the westerners, are doing mean acts. The Indian hand which constructed very wonderful temples . . fought the battles of the Ramayana and the Mahabharata and was used to the building of Setu bridge and such other monuments of architecture has now come to hold the shepherd's staff and tend sheep! . . We are alone responsible for this. The Government, not knowing the consequences, have introduced their system of education by which every man during these fifty years has become versed in law, taken to courts and led to the establishment of so many courts and judges. The system of education is not a good one . . . The Government are giving as much help as possible in Coimbatore and such other places for our industries. . . . This state of affairs must go. True education must be acquired both by mind and hand. Good will then result. Then our boys will not poke their nose into swaraj societies and protest meetings and will be useful to the country . . . . Even those who have passed the collegiate course become in the end Government servants, lawyers, judges or teachers. They only make a living by getting money without discharging their duties conscientiously, but they do not seem to be doing any good to the country. The money that has been spent for the acquisition of such education may be said to have been wasted.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, [illegible], July 21st, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

Education after the war.

34. The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, gives a Telugu version of an article, under this heading, appearing in the Indian Chronicle which contains the remark:—Educational methods in India will not be satisfactory unless they are in the hands of the Indians. One of the reforms, therefore, to be conferred after the war, must be that Indian opinion should prevail in educational matters.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

Settlement of the question of the Usmania College.

35. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 25th July, in a lengthy leader on the subject of the settlement of the question of the Usmania College arrived at by His Excellency the Governor, says:—"Muhammadans ought to be thankful to Lord Pentland for the wise and sympathetic manner in which His Excellency has settled the disagreeable controversy over the Vāniyambādi College".

36. The Qaumi Report, of the 25th July, publishes a letter from a correspondent who thinks that it is an easy matter to establish a Muslim College in Madras and that its progress might be assured by monetary aid and expert advice from the Government, but that such a college could hardly be called a national institution. Qaumi Report, Madras July 25th, 1917.

Muslim College and Islam.

If the college course is intended to be complementary to existing courses of study, it is not required.

The writer further considers that the urgent need is scholarships. Students could obtain admission into the existing non-Muslim colleges if they could get substantial pecuniary assistance.

The new college might, with much difficulty, succeed in producing a few graduates every year. If, on the other hand, we were to put this money into a fund we might give scholarships which would enable students to proceed to England to study and these might return as Barristers, Doctors or Civil Servants.

Editor's note—

The Qaumi Report does not agree with you that only scholarships are needed and that a college is unnecessary.

(e) Local and Municipal.

37. Adverting to this subject, the Dravida Patrika, of the 25th July, writes:— Why should not arrangements be made for the supply of filtered water completely? The people are advised to filter and boil the water before use. Is this possible for all? How can the labourers, who work in the streets and have to drink water from the street taps to quench their thirst, filter or boil the water? Will it be possible for us to provide filtered and boiled water for bullocks and horses which now drink water from the street-troughs? It may be that the authorities have considered the question without taking into account the poor classes who form the majority of the people in this city. It is wrong on the part of the authorities to concert measures taking for their standard the case of Europeans and wealthy men who can command all conveniences. They should consider chiefly the conveniences of the poor and the middle class men in any measures they propose to adopt What a pitiable thing it is that, in these days of high civilization, there should be such mismanagement in this city, the head-quarters of the Presidency! It is imperative, therefore, that, hereafter at least, the Corporation and the Government should bestow greater attention on this matter. Dravida Patrika, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

Water-supply in Madras.

The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 26th July, reproduces some of the chief comments of the Swadesamitran of the 18th idem on this subject which are abstracted in paragraph 51 of Report No. 30 of 1917. Liva-ul-Islam, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

Water-supply in Madras.

38. A correspondent writes to the Dravidan, of the 27th July, dwelling at length upon the hardship caused to the people of Trichinopoly by the intermittent supply of pipe water provided for the city by the municipal authorities, and attributing this hardship to the metres which have recently been fixed to house pipes in that municipality and which preclude many people from resorting to private taps, requests the Government to bestow their attention on this matter and see that the inconvenience caused by the inadequate supply of water is removed. Dravidan, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

Water-supply in Trichinopoly.

39. Referring to the conduct of Mr. Molony, the President of the Corporation of Madras, in giving his casting vote in favour of those who opposed the recommendation of the committee appointed to consider the removal of the office of the Corporation Special Engineer to the Ripon Buildings, and to the requisition made to the President by certain Commissioners for the convening of a special meeting to reconsider the question, the Swadesamitran, of the 27th July, writes:—It is usual for those, who are not interested in our progress, to remark that though it is many years since the local self-government has been entrusted to the Indians, they have not yet learnt to carry on the administration well. Though this administration Swadesamitran, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

Corporation of Madras.

has been nominally entrusted to us, yet an officer of the Government is thrust upon the local self-governing institutions. The administration of these institutions is carried on by this officer and by the Government, the former acting from within and the latter from without. That officer is almost always a member of the Civil Service. These get wild unless the local self-governing institutions are conducted according to their views. A strange procedure of Mr. Molony, the President of the Madras Corporation, may be cited as an instance here. The Madras City Municipal Act provides for the holding of a special meeting by the President, when certain Commissioners send a requisition to him for the same. But the Act does not specify the number of days within which the meeting should be convened. The object of the Act, however, appears to be that the President should convene the special meeting before the next ordinary meeting of the Commissioners. But Mr. Molony kept quiet when certain Commissioners sent a requisition to him for convening a special meeting to reconsider the resolution passed with reference to the location of the office of the Corporation Special Engineer. When the Commissioners questioned him about it, he replied that, though he was bound to convene the meeting, he had the discretion to fix the date for it. He has now sent a notification to the press that the special meeting would be held on the 30th October, i.e., four months and a quarter after the date on which the Commissioners sent their requisition. There is another strange incident in this connection which is worthy of being noticed. Though the requisition was indeed made on the 20th June 1917, yet on the very date he renewed the rental agreement for the building in which the Special Engineer's office is now located. When a building has been constructed at a heavy cost, it seems but proper to protest against additional expenditure being incurred in the shape of rent. Even if the President should think it desirable to rent a building, he should have immediately convened the meeting and waited to know the result of the reconsideration of the question. If, instead of doing this, he should say, "I have the power and I will convene the meeting four months hence", he does not appear to have realised his responsibility. Thinking that he can act as he likes, merely because the law is not clear on the pcint, he has notified his intention to hold the meeting on the 30th October as if ridiculing the Commissioners. He can as well exercise his powers and convene the meeting next year. We trust that the Commissioners will consider whether the Act would allow such an absurd interpretation and, if so, take steps to amend the same. While the Indians are indeed in this condition, they are said to have acquired the right of local self-government. Can the Bishop of Bombay or any others who hold the same views, say that the action of Mr. Molony is proper?

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

Referring to the same subject. the Hindu Nesan, of the 28th July, observes:—Mr. Molony does not seem to think that the Commissioners are his colleagues in the matter of the administration of the corporation. Nor does he seem to pay any heed to their words or representations. When the Commissioners have requisitioned him to convene a special meeting for considering an important question, he has, after the matter has in a way been disposed of, notified that the meeting will be convened four months hence. Mr. Molony, it has to be inferred, has, by this act of his, ridiculed the Commissioners of the corporation. It is not possible to offer any other explanation for his conduct. We are not aware whether or not the Government of Madras are taking notice of his actions. It is indeed our duty to say that they are bound to take notice of the same. From the action of Mr. Molony on the present occasion, it appears certain that the Commissioners will strongly object to the provisions in the new City Municipal Bill conferring discretionary powers on the President. We regret that he has sown the seed for strong objections being raised in connection with the new Bill.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 27th, 1917.

The Madras Corporation.

Referring to the discussion at a meeting of the Madras Corporation regarding the removal of the Chief Engineer's office to the municipal buildings and the renewal of the lease for the existing premises by the President, despite the proposal to call a special meeting for reconsidering the subject, a correspondent of the Swadeshabhimani, of the 27th July, says:—If there be such flagrant disregard of the wishes of the Commissioners in such a premier municipality as the Madras Corporation which ought to serve as a model in the art of local self-government, what wonder that the same state of things is to be found in remote places like South Kanara? Although the President is perfectly within his rights to give his casting vote, is it not meaningless to speak of popular representation if the casting vote is to be used against the views of the representatives? When the financial responsibilities incurred by the municipal bodies are increasing by leaps and bounds, what prestige can the representatives command if the officers at the head of these municipalities should think nothing of overriding their wishes?

Municipal administration and the vernaculars.

40. In reviewing the report of the Mysore municipal councils for 1915-16, the Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, says:—It is said that the Mysore Government have established municipal councils temporarily on occasions of pilgrimage, etc. It will be well if the British Government also follow this policy. It appears that the official members do not attend the municipal councils regularly. The same is the case in the British territory also in many a place. The remark of the Deputy Commissioner of Chitaldrug, that the people do not evince an interest in municipal matters, because they are not published in vernaculars, applies to British India also. If municipal and other local administration is carried on in the vernaculars so that all may understand it, local self-government will be a success. The Mysore Government ordered the publication in Kanarese of the details of all municipal administration and we pray that the British Government will follow their example and publish all matters relating to municipal administration in the vernaculars.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

The Tenali Municipality.

41. In reviewing the reports of the Tenali and Proddatur municipalities, the Andhrapatrika, of the 30th July, says:—In a progressing town like Tenali, the number of elected members should be increased and the privilege of electing the president should be granted. . . Not only in Tenali, but in towns generally, there is not a proper system of drainage. Municipalities have no funds and funds are not soon forthcoming from the Government. So local self-government is not worth that name.

The paper then refers to an instance in which the Tenali Municipal Council obtained from the Collector sanction to appoint a peon on Rs. 7, after a delay of twelve months. The Government have stated that they approved of the order of the Collector. If, says the paper, it is necessary to obtain sanction from the Government to appoint a peon on Rs. 7, then the freedom of local self-government is an illusion.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

(h) Railways.

The Tenali-Repalle Railway.

42. The Desabhimani, of the 29th July, says:—It was said that one of the objects of Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew's visit to Guntur was to consult the members of the District Board about the removal of the Repalli-Guntur Railway. It is said that the District Board approved of the proposal. It will be well if the President of the Board or any other member publish what he knows about this matter. It is for railway materials that the railway is to be removed. If this proposal is carried out, the railway embankment will go into disrepair and it will take some more lakhs to restore it. If the portion between Tenali and Guntur only, which belongs to the company, be removed, the loss to the District Board will not be great and the conveniences of the people will not much suffer.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 29th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, reproduces the above article from the Desabhimani, and remarks that if the Railway between Tenali and Repalle under the management of the District Board be removed, great will be the loss to the people, and prays that the authorities will do well to consult the people before doing anything in this matter.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

(j) Salt and Abkāri.

Salt.

43. The Andhraprakasika, of the 26th July, says:—Food, water and salt are the three necessaries of life. There is tax imposed on food. The authorities have not taxed rain water excepting that which is supplied for drinking purposes by means of pipes in towns and cities. The Government have made a monopoly of the sea water. The Lord of the Sea gives us salt, without which we cannot relish our food. Our British Government wanted money for carrying on the administration and taxed salt. At present salt is selling at a high price. The people are sorry that the Government have taxed salt also. It is not right that the impression should be created in the people that the rulers are taxing even food-stuffs. The price of salt has increased three fold, for which the reasons are not known. It is not known what the Government are doing in this matter. . . We can say that the poor fear that they may be obliged to drink their gruel without salt. We suggest that the Government should free the people from this salt tax and earn their love.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

The rise in the price of salt.

Adverting to the rise in the price of salt in the Madras city to 3 annas per measure, the Swadesamitran, of the 26th July, writes:—It is unnecessary for us to say that this high price has caused great excitement among the poor people. The Government are well aware that salt is the most essential of all the foodstuffs, and that by a little rise in its price millions of people will be subject to indescribable hardship. It is impossible therefore not to be struck at the sudden enhancement of its price. As the Government have exclusive right to the manufacture and sale of salt, people have indeed to look to them alone for redress, whenever there is a rise in its price. The Madras Times says that for some time past there had been no sale in the Government Salt Depot, Madras, that the authorities, therefore, auctioned 500 bags of salt, that, on account of the competition among the merchants the price rose from 6 annas to Rs 3-5-6 per bag, that consequently the price per bag of salt inclusive of the tax came to Rs. 5-14-6 and that this accounts for the sudden rise in the price. If this is true, we will point out to the authorities that they ought not to have sold the salt in auction. If the authorities are to sell this commodity, which is most essential for the people and is not available through any other source, to a merchant who offers the highest price, is there any to question him if he sells it at any rate he pleases? It is not strange that the Government should have derived more income than usual by this procedure. But the hardship thereby caused to the people would become intolerable. We trust that the Madras Government will immediately bestow their attention on this subject, set right the present state of affairs and relieve the suffering of the people.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

Salt.

Referring to the recent increase in the price of salt, the Lokopakari, of the 30th July, writes as follows:—It is possible for the Government to make salt available to the people at a very small price without levying a tax thereon. Though they may not abolish the salt-tax, yet they can issue orders that it should not be sold at a high price. Poor people are put to great hardship on account of the recent increase in its price. As the Government have the exclusive right of the manufacture and sale of salt, they can see that the price does not rise. We hope that they would, in the interest of the people, fix a low price for it without expecting to realise much revenue therefrom. Salt is not an article of luxury to the people like milk, curd, ghee, etc., but is an essential for life as air and water.

(k) General.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

The Vazhkudai Mukkur tank.

44. Referring to the appeal pending in the Board about the raising of this tank from a second-class irrigation source to one of the first-class, a correspondent of the Swadesamitran, of the 23rd July, who professes to be the biggest landholder under the tank, observes:—Our complaint is that the history of the tank was not ascertained properly by the Settlement officers in the very beginning. We sent telegrams on 25th May 1916 to the Government, the Revenue Board and the District Collector that our statements would be clearly verified, if the tank were inspected when there was no water in it. There was no sympathetic response to it. Under the impression that a personal representation to responsible officials would evoke better sympathy, we petitioned His Excellency the Governor on 15th May 1916 to grant an interview, but the reply came that His Excellency regretted his inability to grant it. If, when I sought for permission to wait upon His Excellency at my own expense, not even caring for my advanced age of 90 years, I am told that the permission cannot be granted, how can it be a consolation to me? A resolution moved in the Legislative Council by an Honourable Member that the whole settlement of North Arcot should be reconsidered by a committee, was thrown out by the Council. There is nothing unusual in this. A question about the tank elicited the reply from the Government that it it was filled up to a slight extent. The filling up of the tank to the height of the chest of a man was characterised as being a slight one. Considering these things, we have submitted a petition to the Board on 11th July 1917 that at least the subordinate officials who have to send up an appeal report, would do well to inspect the tank now, when there is no water in it and then submit their report. In an appeal report, the usual course is to support the arguments adduced by the previous set of officers, and we cannot expect that the correctness or otherwise of such arguments will be considered and mistakes pointed out. In consideration of these facts and in view of the necessity, for a careful enquiry in this matter, we have submitted a petition to His Excellency on 14th July 1917 that all our grievances would be redressed by the appeal report being submitted by a proper committee after inspecting the tank. All the rules connected with the settlement operations resemble one's efforts to get to a great height without a flight of steps. We jump up as best we can. We see neither a step nor a handle. As the Mitran (Swadesamitran) is our only guide, we remind His Excellency the Governor and the Revenue Board through this paper again. As we are expecting water in the tank every day, we pray that this matter may be attended to with the utmost expedition.

45. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 24th July, quotes the opinions of the Anglo-Indian press regarding the appointment of Mr. Montagu and observes:—"Taking everything into consideration Mr. Montagu is just the man for India. He will have the good of the people of the country at heart."

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

Our new Secretary of State for India.

The Dravida Patrika, of the 25th July, writes:—We are filled with joy as we hear that Mr. Montagu has been nominated to the office of the Secretary of State for India. His nomination will be conducive to the fulfilment of the high aspirations of the people of this country. The present moment at which he has accepted his office is not an ordinary one. This is a good occasion for him to make use of the experience he has already gained of this country. The noble task of uplifting India has now devolved upon him. The efforts put forth by the British Government in respect of the administration of this country have now to bear fruit. The pledges given by Queen Victoria and many great men in succession are indeed to be fulfilled only hereafter. Time has come for this great country to advance and acquire self-government like the other colonies of the British Empire. Perhaps, it is the will of the Providence that Mr. Montagu should help towards the attainment of this progress. The people of this country, therefore, eagerly expect that he will avail himself of the opportunity.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

The new Secretary of State for India.

Referring to the appointment of Mr. Montagu as Secretary of State for India, the Andhraprakasika, of the 24th July, says:—The Anglo-Indian papers, which are extremely conservative, fear that Mr. Montagu may spoil the administration by giving the Indians new privileges just as he pleases. Advocates of immediate swaraj hope that Mr. Montagu, who is known as the greatest of liberals, will set right the administration by granting them all privileges that they ask for. We can state that it cannot be true that he will grant us all privileges at once. He may wish to do so, but he is not a Russian Emperor to do as he pleases. He cannot reject the suggestions of his advisors in the India Council. . . We submit that the privileges that he with his Councillors and the Government of India decide to give to the Indians, may be published in this country and the opinions of the Indian public noted, before the assent of the Parliament is obtained for them.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu.

The Andhrapgakasika, of the 19th July, says:—The people are satisfied with the appointment of Mr. Montagu. He cannot but undertake to grant us certain political privileges in a short time. He is Lord Morley's disciple and has undergone training under him. We hope he will administer the country having regard to public opinion.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 27th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu.

The Swadeshabhimani, of the 27th July, writes:—If we compare Mr. Montagu with Mr. Chamberlain, we must welcome his new appointment as Secretary of State on the principle that "a brick is softer than a stone". As Under Secretary he has shown much sympathy in regard to India. Even subsequently, he has now and then espoused the cause of India. During the recent Mesopotamian debate too he has shown his great love of truth. As he is a liberal, it is expected that the administration during his term of office will be liberal also. Further the first-hand information he has gained in the course of his visit to India ought to prove a great asset to him now. The presence of one like Mr. Montagu at the head of the administration is all the more necessary at a critical time like this, when the responsible authorities in India are bent on repressing the legitimate aspirations of the people. Although Mr. Montagu is liberal-minded and sympathetic, the Anglo-Indian journals are tempering these qualities in him with the hits of their crooked pen. Besides, the saying that power is always apt to change one's views is not without some truth. It therefore remains to be seen how far Mr. Montagu will justify the confidence reposed in him by the Indians at present.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, June 25th, 1917.

The Secretary of State.

In commenting favourably on the appointment of Mr. Montagu as Secreiary of State for India in succession to Mr. Chamberlain, who, in its opinion, had little acquaintance with Indian affairs and had not much sympathy towards the Indians, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 25th July, points out that, as he has made a statement in Parliament that the Government of India should be made more responsible to the people than at present, India will derive considerable advantage, if she has a sympathetic Viceroy, and observes that from his various utterances on Indian affairs and his answers from time to time to the questions in Parliament, it may be inferred that he is one who has the welfare of India at heart.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

Congress-Muslim League Reform Scheme.

46. The Swadesamitran, of the 25th July, reproduces in Tamil the substance of a speech delivered on this subject by its editor, on the 24th idem, at Gokhale Hall, Madras, under the presidency of Mr. P. K. Telang. The speech is published in New India and the Hindu of the same date.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

Paper industry in India.

47. Adverting to the present paper famine and the consequent rise in the price of paper, and to the observations made by the Swadesa Paripalini of Rangoon in its issue of the 17th July 1917, regarding the facilities for the manufacture of paper in Burma, the Hindu Nesan, of the 26th July, writes:—It is rare to find a good number of paper mills in India where the raw products required for making paper-pulp are available in large quantities. It has already been found out that paper-pulp can be made out of bamboo and certain kinds of grass, and now it is said that paper can also be manufactured from the stems of cotton trees. It is, therefore, a thing which may be expected of the Government that they should at the present time encourage the manufacture of paper in India by affording the necessary facilities for the purpose, so that many may take to it.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

Internments under the Defence of India Act.

48. Adverting to the interpellation made by the Hon'ble Mr. Bhurgri in the Legislative Council of Bombay whether it was the intention of that Government to intern Messrs. Horniman, B. G. Tilak, Jamnadas Dwarakadas and some others of that Presidency and the reply of the Bombay Government thereto, the Hindu Nesan, of the 25th July, observes that it is not desirable, in any province whatever, for the Government to adopt repressive measures like internments of popular leaders under the Defence of India Act, and that such an action will only widen the gulf between the Government and the people.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant.

49. Referring to the reply given to the interpellation of Mr. Phillip Snowden in the Parliament, that the action taken by the Government against Mrs. Besant was due to her activities such as misrepresenting the intentions and acts of the Government and not to the ideas professed in their justification, the Swadesamitran, of the 26th

July, observes:—The meaning of this statement is not clear. Does it mean that, while the Government approve of the views of Mrs. Besant, they do not approve of her activities in the matter? If so, the pleas adduced by the Government cannot find support, unless they specify the particular acts of Mrs. Besant which may be considered to be wrong. From the general trend of the reply received, it appears that the Government themselves have some secret doubts about the matter.

Internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues.

50. The Swadesamitran, of the 30th July, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Bengalee, the Amrita Bazaar Patrika and the Bombay Chronicle regarding the prohibition of the meeting proposed to be held in the Calcutta Town Hall to protest against these internment orders. The comments of the Bombay Chronicle appear in the Hindu of the 28th idem, and those of the other two papers in that of the 30th idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues.

The Swadesamitran, of the 31st July, reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of the public meeting held in Bombay, under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah, to protest against these internment orders, which appear in the Hindu of the 21st idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

The Bombay Legislative Council.

51. In publishing in Tamil some of the important questions asked, on the 24th July, in the Bombay Legislative Council and the replies of the Bombay Government thereto, the Swadesamitran, of the 26th July, writes:—If the nature of the replies of that Government be looked into, it will be understood that that Government does not lag behind the Madras Government in such matters. We are at a loss to know how the people can be satisfied with replies such as "information is not available," to questions asked about the conduct of the authorities.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

Unrest among workmen in England.

52. Adverting to the appointment of a committee to inquire into and report the causes of unrest among workmen in England and to the chief recommendation of that committee to the effect that bread should not be sold at a higher price than that already fixed, and that the loss, if any, thereby caused to the merchants should be borne by the Government, and to the approval of this recommendation by the Government, the Swadesamitran, of the 26th July, writes:—While we observe the daily expenditure of the Government, it is not known how they would manage to meet it by accepting responsibilities such as the one referred to above. From the beginning of last April the daily expenditure for war comes to £67,95,000 while the income per day is only £20,00,000. Many consider that the rise in prices is not due to any confederacy among merchants, but to the enormous expenditure incurred by the Government. As there is great expenditure at present, they think that money has become cheaper and its value has become reduced so that £1½ has now to be paid for articles which were available for £1 before. If money has really become cheaper, it is not reasonable for workmen to complain of rise in the price of articles. But the Act relating to the manufacture of shells has prevented the workmen from demanding higher wages. As the price of bread has, however, been reduced, the excitement among workmen might subdue a little. It is not in England alone that the price of foodstuffs has gone up on account of the war; it is so in every country. But there the Government have given immediate attention to the matter and redressed the grievance of the people. But that is not the case here. Five thousand people struck work in the Great Indian Peninsula Railway workshops. Insufficiency of pay, on account of the rise in prices, is indeed their chief grievance. The Railway authorities say that nothing can be done without the approval of the Government. These 5,000 are not men employed on ordinary work, but are persons engaged in the manufacture of the materials required in Mesopotamia, and their work cannot therefore stop even for a day. Hence the Government of India should follow the example of the British Government and redress the grievance of these men promptly.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

Brahmans and non-Brahmans.

53. The Dravidan, of the 26th July, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the substance of certain lectures delivered on the 22nd idem in the Adikesavaperumal temple at Chintadripet, wherein one of the lecturers, in speaking of the present degenerate condition of the non-Brahmans, is reported to have made the following observations:—Indeed the Brahmans are primarily responsible for our present degenerate condition. We do not know whether it is on account of the influence of Kali or some other cause, that they have completely given up the performance of the religious duties which were always discharged by their ancestors without fail, and wholly renounced the study of their mother tongue which they are bound to study, and that they deem the language of the State to be the proper means for eking out a livelihood with authority, secure high posts in the public service, encourage their own men and disregard others. Even the Brahmans in the temples are now following their example, and it is on account of such conduct on their part, no good results to us from these temples.

How many Brahmans are there here now to listen to the lecture? None. But when they hear the ring of the bell, they will rush in to partake of the offerings to the deity. Ask them why they went away without hearing the lecture, and they would say "Can we, who are worthy of being praised, deign to hear lectures given by Sudras? If we should do so, it will only affect the Sudras prejudicially". Alas! What an injustice is this? How can our lecture savour sweet to these false Brahmans who have learnt only certain devices, and that defectively, to eke out a living, and neglect the language of the country?

Are the Englishmen inferior to Sudras, or superior to the Brahmans? What is the opinion of the Brahmans in this matter? Why should these, who make obeisance only to Englishmen who are foreigners, not hear the words describing the great qualities of God uttered by others whose knowledge and conduct are both excellent?

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

Brahmans and non-Brahmans.

In the course of a long article headed Vidyadarapuranam appearing in the Dravidan, of the 30th July, in which the writer speaks disparagingly of the presiding deities in some of the sacred shrines in Southern India and the mysteries associated therewith, and also of some of the rituals observed in the performance of certain religious ceremonies, the following observations occur:—We have fallen into the abyss of the Aryan tricks. Whatever is seen is God. Whatever is said is a mantra. All buildings that are constructed are temples. To roam about idly is wisdom. It is said that the Aryans alone have a soul. Whatever they say is Veda. There are countless varieties of gods. Differences in castes are larger in number. Alas! Aryan schemers! why not stop there and begin to take steps for the advancement of the country? Why not disclose your deceit? Whom would you deceive after the country is ruined and crumbles to dust? Where would you then live? Would you not also be ruined then as the bamboo that catches fire by friction? . . . Still how many deceits! how many tricks! which can we escape? They (Aryans) are to be found all over the courts. Throughout the country is the snare laid by them. They are found to hold all offices of authority. Alas! how are the poor people to be saved?

The same paper has the following observations in the course of an article contributed to it by a correspondent on caste differences:—If you begin to make enquiries regarding the birth of Rishis, who are the ancestors of the Brahmans, it will be quite evident that they are in no way superior to the men of other castes; for their ancestors are Sownaka born of the dog, Garghya born of an ass, Mandavya born of a frog, Vasishta born of a prostitute, and other Rishis born of mothers who belong to the class of the boatmen, fishermen, cobblers, etc. Further, these Brahmans are not the ancient inhabitants of India. It is understood that they migrated into this country from Persia.

* * * * * *

The Parsis are killing horses, bullocks, sheep, etc., and eating them. Similarly, the Brahmans too were eating these under the pretext of performing sacrifices.

54. The Dravidan, of the 27th July, has the following:—The loud cry of Home Rule is being sounded here and there in certain places like the roar of a thunder-bolt in summer. But fear not that there will be rain. The thunder would only threaten us (some who are of a timid nature), but there would indeed be no rain to drench us. Be not afraid of it, and retire not for safety. We can effectively check the showers. Do not hesitate to do so. We must completely prevent it from raining, as otherwise we can never do so afterwards, whatever may be our cry. If the west wind of the Dravidians blows, even the few ineffective clouds that have gathered here and there will be scattered. Just as a two-wheeled vehicle cannot be made to run with only one of its wheels, the Brahman wheel alone cannot do more than revolve by itself and stop. All this impatience and aversion are indeed for this. What for do they hate us? Is it because we constructed choultries and brought them up giving them food therein. Is it because we gave them a hearty welcome in our home? Or is it because we spent crores of rupees on the construction of temples to allow the Brahman priests to live thereon? What then is this contempt for? What for is this disgust?

Brahmans and Home Rule.

Dravidan, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

55. The Dravidan, of the 27th July, writes:—It seems that Germany is shedding crocodile's tears for the acquisition of liberty by India. It is now well known that it has been the intention of Germany for a long time to create a rebellion in India. It appears that a few Indians with a desire to cause such a rebellion were going round the world, that these were given presents in Germany and that 7½ crores of rupees were spent by the Germans with this object in view. Nothing is known and nothing is clear as to the persons to whom this large amount has been given in India! The Government should be very careful in this matter!

German intrigues in India.

Dravidan, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

56. In the course of a communication from a correspondent published in the Mahavikatadutan, of the 28th July, dwelling at length on the hardship suffered by the Panchamas in consequence of the treatment given to them by the higher classes, the following observations occur:—This country is unfit for Home Rule unless the differences in caste and religion completely disappear by the spread of education, and equality and brotherhood among the people are secured thereby. Even if Home Rule is granted now, it would be but the sowing of the seed for the growth of fresh castes. The caste evil is the greatest of all evils in this country and, so long as the evils such as those due to caste and religious prejudices continue to exist therein, it is not desirable to aspire for Home Rule. There is, therefore, no use in the vain cry for it. We must first reform ourselves before we acquire Home Rule, and our attempt to reform the Government without reforming ourselves is like trying to fell the tree at its stem.

Home Rule.

Mahavikatadutan, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The Desamata, of the 25th July, gives in Telugu what Rai Jadunath Mujumdar Bahadur wrote on the subject to the Amrita Bazaar Patrika, which contains:—Gods (in Hindu mythology) allowed scope for men attaining to Indhrahood after performing a hundred sacrifices . . If gods threw any blocks in the way of men gaining privilcges, they did so only to test the zeal of men. . . Even so do the British statesmen who have declared the legitimacy of the ideal of Home Rule for the Indians. . . But they have to make a public declaration of nature and number of the sacrifices which the Indians have to perform for the attainment of Home Rule. . . The time factor is misleading. Japan could achieve in half a century what western countries could not, in a century and a half. British statesmen should tell us definitely what insures our fitness for self-government.

Home Rule for India.

Desamata, Rajahmundry, July 25th, 1917.

In a leading article under this heading, the Vrittanta Patrike, of the 2nd August, writes:—There has been very much talk on this subject of late. But it is difficult to make out what they understand by the term Home Rule or Swaraj. If, so far as we are able to conjecture, it means only a gradual increase of the popular share in the administration by increasing the elective element in the various Legislative Councils, we heartily endorse the justice of the claim. It must be Home Rule or Swaraj.

Vrittanta Patrike, Mysore, Augt. 2nd, 1917.

observed, however, that those who enjoy the privilege of choosing their representatives ought to be in a position to realise the responsibilities of representative bodies and we have yet to see proofs of an intelligent interest on the part of the voters so as to preclude all extraneous influences in the process of election. There can be no doubt that the aim of the British Government is to allow the Indian people a free hand in the administration of the country. This aim has been strengthened by the recent efforts of His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir and Sir Sinha. But the British public should first be convinced as to how far the people of India are able to express their views on the subject; for it is necessary that the British public should know that the entire nation is articulate and not merely a select few. Our fear is that the people in their present condition have not the necessary amount of enlightenment and breadth of mind. They have no interest beyond what concern their own village or taluk. We therefore think it too premature to introduce self-government. To our mind the essential pre-conditions of successful self-government are that the changes in the administration should be gradual and there should be a wider spread of education, so that every person should know the rights and responsibilities of citizenship. Elementary education cannot serve any useful purpose, unless the rudiments of knowledge gained at school can be improved in after life, so that the children receiving that education may come to have an intelligent grasp of their civic duties. These results are scarcely visible in the present state of things. Our first care therefore should be to educate and enlighten the people. When they gain the requisite administrative capacity, self-government is bound to come.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

The Lord Bishop of Bombay on Home Rule.

57. The Swadesamitran, of the 25th July, summarises the substance of an article contributed to the Bombay Social Reformer by the Lord Bishop of Bombay on the subject of the reforms to be introduced in the administration of India and the comments of that paper thereon, and observes:—There is nothing new in the observations made by the Lord Bishop of Bombay; for similar suggestions have often been made by the bureaucrats and Anglo-Indians and they have also been replied to properly by the Indian press and our popular leaders. Nevertheless we find it necessary to reply to his observations now. The Bishop says that the aim of the British Government is that India should have Home Rule ultimately. We do not see what is meant by "ultimately". There is no use of still repeating the statement that India will have Home Rule ultimately. Representative Assemblies here have urged that there should not only be a Royal Proclamation that Home Rule would be granted within a prescribed time but that liberal reforms should be introduced immediately as a first step in that direction. Of course, the statement of the Bishop of Bombay that the British Government is carried on here only with the object of preparing India to have Home Rule is worthy of being noted; but such a statement should be made openly by the British statesmen. Every one will admit that the Bishop is entirely wrong in saying that the Indians are agitating now with the belief that this period of war is the best time for it. The agitation for Home Rule has been carried on for the last 30 years Political agitation in India is not a movement of today, nor is it the outcome of an impression that the present period of war is the best time for it. No one should forget this. It is not fair again on the part of the Bishop to say that the blame for every grievance is thrust upon the system of Indian administration, that every action of the authorities is being condemned and that an agitation is being carried on for speedily altering the system of administration completely. We cannot see who are those that are agitating for such an alteration. The plea of the Indian politicians has only been that the representative element should preponderate in the Legislative Councils and that a system of administration should be introduced soon which will be responsible to the people. As for the question of the Bishop whether the Indians can proudly say that they have properly conducted the municipal administration, which they now have, all people would only think that he is quite ignorant of the constitution of the local self-governing institutions here, of the influence of the Indians therein and of the unwillingness of the Indians to be nominal members thereof without any influence or power. If it is said that the Indians have not shown their capacity and merit in these institutions, who is responsible for it? As long as the Indians have not sufficient influence and power in local self-governing institutions, it will never do to find fault with them for the existing defects therein.

The Bishop of Bombay.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, publishes in Telugu the article contributed by the Bishop of Bombay to the Indian Social Reformer.

The advice of the Lord Bishop of Bombay.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

Criticising the advice of the Lord Bishop of Bombay to the Indians on self-government, the Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, writes:—The Lord Bishop says that it is the Parliament and not the Government of India, that has to grant self-government to India. Indians are already aware of this; but why should Indian Governments express their opinions about reforms which it is not in their power to grant and cause disappointment to the Indians? The Viceroy speaks of the aspirations of the Indians as revolutionary. . . It is on account of this, viz., the expression of adverse opinion, and repression that agitation among the people is daily on the increase.

The Lord Bishop speaks of his experience of the British character, but it has to be noted that Christian priests in India look upon the Hindus, Muhammadans, Parsis, etc., of India with some indifference. As their countenances become sunburnt after staying for some time in India, their liberal ideas gradually languish for want of a free atmosphere, and they soon forget their old traditions and become bureaucratic. . . So the Lord Bishop is wrong in thinking that his views now represent those of the freedom-loving British public. . .

Is the counsel not to carry on agitation in war times meant only for the Indians? or does it also apply to the English people, the colonials and the Irish? . . While the colonies seek to exercise sway over India along with the mother country, it is very strange that the Bishop should be of opinion that the Indians alone would do well to bow to fate and keep quiet. Do not the British Government that has convened an Imperial Conference to satisfy the colonies know that these are war times? Are only the Indians that follow in their footsteps to be blamed?. . . So much for the colonies. Let us turn to Ireland. The Irish revolution began in the middle of the war, and the people rebelled against the Government. What was the result? The Irish anarchists have all been released? . . The suffragettes that took to violent methods have obtained suffrage during the war. Whatever agitation the Indians may have carried on they have never transgressed constitutional limits They never descended to methods of violence. They do not make any objectionable demands. They do not worry the Government to grant them any concessions during the war. They do not commit any seditious acts. They loyally ask the Government to promise them that they would lay the foundations for the grant of self-government after the war. We cannot see what, in this, causes pain to the Lord Bishop's heart.

It would have been well if the Lord Bishop had briefly indicated what, of the Indian aspirations, were calculated to obstruct the administrative machine. It is not just to pass a general remark that the aspirations are revolutionary without specifying them. No one demands that self-government should be granted this very day and none of the reforms demanded is such as will interfere with the efficiency of administration. The scheme has been drawn up not by ordinary men but by leaders who know the responsibilities of Government. No change will be wrought in the existing form of Government. The Viceroy and his Council. . . . remain the same as before. . . There will be some changes in the circle of officials. People may gain some more power. Is India unfit for this measure of reform after the war?

The Lord Bishop gives a counsel that we must first acquire the fitness for self-government. We are not able to make out its meaning. What state of things confers such a fitness? Can the Lord Bishop say if it is possible to acquire fitness without undertaking responsibilities? In what state was England when the Magna Charta was granted? Why go so far? What was England's condition when the the Reform Bill was passed? Mr. Curtis has rightly observed in his "Problem of commonwealth", fitness is fostered by undertaking responsibility. . . ". What fitness did the Phillippines show when they were granted self-government? . . . The following extract from a minute of the Parliament shows that local self-government in England in 1835 was worse than what it is in India. . . . The following words of Lord Durham show what fitness the colonies had when they received self-government. . .

(The article, after giving similar criticisms on a few other minor issues raised by the Lord Bishop's article, concludes with the remark that the Lord Bishop will if he reconsiders the question, find that the aspirations of the Indians are not only desirable but also necessary.)

Dravidan, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

The Lord Bishops of Madras and Bombay on Home Rule.

58. Referring to the views expressed by the Lord Bishops of Madras and Bombay about the fitness of Indians for Home Rule, the Dravidan, of the 27th July, observes:— The knowledge and experience of the Lord Bishop of Madras of Indian matters is like those of the tourists from England who, going to this country in the winter, visit hastily certain cities herein and return after interviewing some of the self-advertising vakils here and there. His views show that he has neither understood the condition of the people in this country, nor ascertained the opinion they have about the Indian Civil Servants who carry on the administration. Alas! He has not thought of the commotion that will be caused here by the grant of Home Rule, which is demanded by that community among the Indians, who raise a loud cry for it. He has not also thought of the evil that would result from his recommendations for the grant of Home Rule. The views expressed by him on the strength of the opinions of a few educated Indians, and the publication by him of these views in a paper which has a wide circulation in Great Britain, would, instead of resulting in good, result only in great harm to the people of this country. His views are being reprinted and circulated everywhere. On reading these, the young and the old alike in this country blindly believe that they are fit for Home Rule, and, when told of their unfitness for it, blame the Anglo-Indians as standing in the way of their acquiring such a rule. The result is that the ordinary thoughtless people grow excited and raise a cry against the authorities. Had the Lord Bishop confined his attention to his ecclesiastical duties or ascertained well the true condition of the people of this country before he ventured to publish his views, these consequences could have been avoided.

On the other hand, the views of the Lord Bishop of Bombay on this subject are not palatable to the nationalists, who regard them as devoid of sense. Those that indeed build castles in the air criticise his views. These try to reach the grapes which are at a great height by a single jump. In their vain attempts to reach them, we are sure, they will cry that the grapes are sour.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

Result of adopting repressive measures.

59. The Swadesamitran, of the 28th July, writes:—"History repeats itself." The present political situation in India illustrates this statement As a result of the adoption by the Government of certain repressive measures to suppress political propaganda which in their opinion is faulty, political ideals are obtaining wider publicity throughout the country. The same was the case in Italy and other countries. As a result of the acts of the authorities, the agitation which has till now been made openly will hereafter be made in secret and will gain a fresh vigour and the strong support of even those who have been indifferent to it before. This is but an ordinary occurrence, and this is what is now happening in India. From the time the several Provincial Governments began to adopt repressive measures, even the people in the rural parts are learning well the ideals of the Home Rule propaganda. Meetings are held in villages and lectures delivered. Throughout the country the people are taking the vow to use only swadeshi goods, and this results in the necessity to avoid foreign goods. Many are beginning to realise that they should act according to the dictates of their conscience and take the consequence. It appears that the adoption of the policy of passive resistance is being considered. The members of the Congress Committee have, from several parts of the country, gone to Bombay to consider the present situation. Thus the Government are themselves strengthening this movement. They cannot say hereafter at least that, excepting the educated few, many millions of the people are not concerned in political discussion. The Government must, indeed, be aware of the spread of the movement, and, in spite of this knowledge, their continuing to adopt such repressive measures will only further the cause of this movement. From a telegram received today, it is understood that the authorities have prohibited the meeting proposed to be convened in Calcutta to protest against the internment orders of the Madras Government. It seems that the Bengal Government have no objection to meetings being held for promoting constitutional changes so long as the speakers preserve sobriety of language. This is what Mrs. Besant was doing, but the Government have interned her. Had proceedings been instituted against her in a court of law, we could learn thereby the limits within which we can speak and beyond which we cannot. So long as this is not done, how are we to know which is moderate language and which is immoderate? Without this being made clear, what benefit can we gain by being allowed to speak on administrative reforms?

The Government are also bound by laws as the people are. This is the glory of the British Government. If the Government realise that the people have rights as well, and act accordingly, the respect which the people have towards them, will increase. It is because Lord Hardinge realised this truth and acted upon it, that people loved him and gave up agitation altogether during his time. If we think of this, it appears that a greater statesman could not have come to India then. But now, from the time the Government of India warned us not to expect great reforms, the Provincial Governments have taken to adopting repressive measures. As all these Provincial Governments are acting on the same lines, it seems that they are acting according to the orders or the views of the Government of India. If only Lord Chelmsford would realise that the result expected by the Government from the adoption of these measures cannot be achieved, it would be good both for him and for us. If he would follow, as did Lord Hardinge, the advice of our King-Emperor, to govern us with sympathy, it would be productive of good to all.

It may be observed in this connection that a good sign is noticed, which indicates the possibility of our aspirations being fulfilled. It is a relief that Mr. Montagu, one with liberal views, has succeeded, as Secretary of State for India, Mr. Chamberlain who blindly supported the authorities in India in everything without considering the merits of the case. It is understood from the telegrams received recently that a statement was made in the Parliament on behalf of the Secretary of State that the question of appointing Indians to higher posts in the army was being considered by the Government of India and by the British Government. There is no Act prohibiting the appointment of Indians to higher ranks in the army. Only administrative orders stand in the way. It appears that the time has indeed come for the repeal of these orders which are prejudicial to our rights. Before Mr. Montagu decides what reforms should be introduced in the administration of India, we trust that he would consult the opinion of the Indian public on the subject. The whole of this country relies on him for the removal of the present discontent among the people, and hopes that he would thereby maintain the prestige of the British Government.

60. Referring to the miserable plight of an old woman in the city of Rohri near Karachi, who has sent all her three sons to the front and has none at present to care for her, and to the fact that the District Magistrate of Sukkir, to whom she represented her pitiable case, has declined to render any assistance to her, as reported in the New Times of Karachi, the Swadesamitran, of the 28th July, observes:—If these details about her are true, apart from the fact that she is not aware of the whereabouts of her sons, what are we to say of her position in having to look to others for her maintenance and of her inability to secure any help even from the authorities? What for are relief funds intended? Whose duty is it to help the families of those who have gone to the front?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The plight of a woman that sent all her sons to the front.

61. Adverting to the observations said to have been made by the presiding Judge in this case, that, though he had no doubt that, at the time the accused threw the deceased out of the tram-car, he did not intend to cause the death of the Indian, yet the accused must have realised that the man would be seriously injured by the fall, seeing that the car was in motion at the time, and that, taking into consideration the youth of the accused, he would impose a fine of £50 or 9 months' imprisonment in default, the Swadesamitran, of the 28th July, writes:—

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The Johannesburg tram-car tragedy.

So, after all a penalty of £50 is the punishment for causing the death of an Indian! The above decision is, perhaps, an illustration of the statement made by the British statesmen at the beginning of the war that hereafter the views about India would change and that the change would be favourable to the Indians.

Liva-ul-Islam, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

62. Referring to a telegram recently received stating that the Government would be in need of a further loan of £500,000,000, and that the debt already incurred by them since the beginning of the war comes to £514,200,000, the Liva-ul-Islam, of the 26th July, observes :—Prior to the war, the Government debt was only £706,154,110. That, indeed, was then considered to be a big amount. But a sum equal to seven times this figure has now been spent in this war. If we think of the interest that will have to be paid on this great sum, we have to consider whether the Government would be in a position to repay the amount for a long time to come.

The Government debt.

Vaisyamitran, Devakottai, July 16th, 1917.

63. The Vaisyamtiran, of the 16th July, writes on this subject as follows:—It is usual for many beggars in our country to take their residence in dilapidated mutts, temples and choultries, use intoxicants, beg for alms in towns and villages and, in the guise of beg ging, steal things, wherever they find it convenient to do so. The children that are born of these indeed follow the profession of their father. They are utterly devoid of education, their brains get spoiled by frequent use of intoxicants, and their nerves becoming shattered they begin to do improper acts. Leaving out of consideration the lame and the blind, there are many among them who are physically strong and can earn at the rate of 8 annas per day. It is not known why the Government have not taken notice of these men. The number of these men is gradually increasing, and the trouble caused by them is also increasing in every village and every town. Apart from the local beggars, there are many families of Hindustani-speaking people who, coming from other countries, travel with loads on bullocks and asses and constructing small huts in several places, beg for alms from house to house and cause disturbances. The police are watching these men. Instead of watching their movements, it is desirable that settlements should be established for them in certain places, or they should, by means of legislation, be compelled to labour hard and eke out a living. We trust that the members of the local Legislative Council will bring this matter to the notice of the Government and secure an enactment being made for the purpose.

An act to enforce beggars to work.

Dravidan, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

64. Adverting to a work written by Count Reventlow, a German, on India, the Dravidan, of the 28th July, observes :—Count Reventlow is of opinion that it is highly necessary for the Indians that India should acquire full liberty and political independence. If he had stopped there, we could very well appreciate his charitable dispostion. But instead of doing so, he says further that the commercial needs of India and Germany are identical and that the two countries are united together by commercial ties. His motive is clearly evident from this. Like all other Germans, he is aware that England rules over India and several other countries by the strength of her navy. Germany has for a long time been anxious to destroy the supremacy of the English navy. However, it has not in the least been possible for her to do so. She knows well that she cannot establish an unparalleled sway all over the world unless she destroys the strength of the English navy and gains supremacy over the seas. The efforts put forth by Germany to secure a place in Morrocco, her attempts to gain control over the Suez-Canal by stirring up Turkey, her endeavours to obtain possession of places in the North Africa with a view to hamper steamer-traffic round the Cape of Good Hope—all these, it is understood, have been made with the object of separating India. Not satisfied with these, Germany has begun her activities in another direction also. She has for a long time been of opinion that her object will soon be gained if rebellion and disturbance could be caused in India. She thinks that Britain would be weakened thereby. Count Reventlow openly says that it is the duty of Germany to encourage the Indians and support them. This can undoubtedly be said to be a fraudulent intention. The deceitful method of stirring up the Indians and supporting them has already begun. When certain German agents were arrested on suspicion by the American Police at Washington, as propagandists of seditious movements in India, it was understood that some books and papers were recovered from them, and that about 7½ crores of rupees were spent by those agents for the spread of the above movements in India. When all these facts are considered together, the great necessity to examine the matter with much care and without any loss of time becomes quite clear. As duly confirming our suspicions which arise from these facts, strange views and mischievous counsels have been set on foot in India. It becomes the imperative duty of the Government to endeavour to find out the secrets and see that the great crime of sedition does not show its head in this country.

German hopes about India.

65. Adverting to the observations made by the Governor of Bengal at the Darbar held by him in Dacca on the 25th July with reference to the adoption of représsive measures by the Government, the Lokopakari, of the 30th July, writes :—The Government are bound to adopt stringent repressive measures to put down conspirators and their activities which cause anxiety to the Government and unrest among the people. No one will come forward to find fault with the Government in this matter. If the Government will only enforce these measures with some sympathy, it will be productive of much good. It is said that a few of Indians have turned to be seditionists on account of the German intrigues. The Germans have, in their own interest, employed spies throughout the world and are creating a feeling of hatred towards the Government in the minds of the people. Some senseless men have come forward to commit seditious acts, and the Government should no doubt adopt stringent measures to put down such treacherous persons. It is at this time of pressure that our leaders should act with moderation. The war has indeed been the cause for all this. Considering the pressure caused by this war, we must all work in harmony with the Government for a victorious termination of it. This indeed should be our chief duty.

The Governor of Bengal on repressive measures.

Lokopakari, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th July, reports the Bombay Chronicle to have written regarding the prohibition of the Calcutta protest meeting :—From this it is clear that the local authorities have taken a vow to stop all lawful endeavours. . . In throwing such obstacles, the authorities are exercising their powers unjustly and arbitrarily. This is most un-British. . . The leaders of the country should betake themselves to proper work with a firm mind.

The Bengal Government.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

66. Adverting to the letter written by the Government to remove the Home Rule flag hoisted over the residence of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues, who are interned at Ootacamund, the Lokopakari, of the 30th July, observes :—The hoisting of a Home Rule flag is indeed an act of childishness and nothing can be gained thereby. Such trifling acts might appear to the authorities to be acts done in defiance of their authority. This is but natural. It is indeed strange that some should say that the measures adopted in Ireland and England might be adopted here as well.

The Home Rule flag.

Lokopakari, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

67. Adverting to the rowdyism recently displayed by certain sepoys in a drama-shed in Trichinopoly, the Dravidan, of the 30th July, observes that this shows that even the Indian sepoys conduct themselves in an unsatisfactory manner, and trusts that the authorities will bestow proper attention on such matters, protect the people by preventing crimes and cause satisfaction to all.

Rowdyism in a drama-shed.

Dravidan, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

Referring to the riot at Trichinopoly, the Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, says :—The people are very much enraged at the mischief that the sepoys have been doing of late. Mr. Ramanuja Ayyangar and other police officers deserve the gratitude of the people for suppressing the riot in time.

The Trichinopoly riot.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

68. Adverting to the opposition by the Government of the United Provinces of a resolution moved in the Legislative Council there by the Hon'ble Mr. Lala Madhusudhan Dyal, to the effect that that Government should convey to Mr. Stubbs, the Collector of Bijnor, their disapproval of the objectionable language used by him in his letter to some Vaisya gentlemen of that place in connection with the war loan, and to the reply of the Government that the Lieutenant-Governor was not prepared to condemn the action of the Collector inasmuch as several persons had already spoken harshly of it, the Swadesamitran, of the 31st July, writes:—Instead of attempting to dispel the bad feeling caused in the minds of the people by the letter of Mr. Stubbs, the Government oppose the resolution. If the bureaucracy always speak in support of an officer who has committed a blunder, we are indeed at a loss to know how the confidence which the people have in the authorities and the regard they have for them will increase.

The authorities and the people.

Swdesamitran, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

Passive resistance.

69. The Hindu Nesan, of the 31st July, writes:—It appears that time has come for the adoption by the Indians even in India of the policy of passive resistance, which was the means adopted by the Indians in South Africa for the redress of their grievances. But it may be questioned whether the condition of the Indians in India is indeed such as to have recourse to that policy for the attainment of their object. There is indeed much difference between the condition of the Indians in South Africa and that of the Indians in India. There is no doubt that the Indians here are highly educated and are conscious of the rights they should have, besides being capable of making a constitutional agitation for anything. There is, therefore, nothing wrong if such persons should raise their heads and ask the Government to grant them the particular things they require. But, instead of going against the current of the present policy of Government, it is desirable that we should, with a submissive attitude, go with the current and firmly catching hold of a twig that comes to our hand safely reach the shore. That is to say, it is but desirable that we should adopt the policy of passive resistance and gain our object. Though from the standpoint of the condition of the Indians the adoption of this policy may not be desirable, yet when we deeply consider the present situation, the attitude of the authorities that now conduct the administration, and the repressive measures adopted, this policy seems to be a wise one for adoption.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 25th 1917.

Army Signaller Company.

70. Referring to the constitution of an Army Corps Signaller Company, the Andhraprakasika, of the 25th July, says:—We hear that many do not join this army; because the remuneration is small and the educated do not get good appointments. The Government have published an order in which they say that it is under contemplation to confer the office of jamadar on those who show skill while being trained in the Army Corps Signaller Company. We remember there is a rule that the office of jamadar may be conferred at the very beginning on the sons of native commissioned officers who have passed the Middle School and Matriculation Examination, if such men join the army. If that rule is not in force, it must be revived. If educated men are not given at least the office of jamadar to start with, it is difficult that competent men will join the army.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 23rd, 1917.

A Tuberculosis hospital at Madras.

71. The Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd July, contains a Telugu version of the letter of Mr. Nanjunda Rao criticising the establishment of a Tuberculosis hospital at Madras.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

Chendalore, Ongole taluk.

72. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 19th July, describes the damage done to crops and property in the village of Chendalore, Ongole taluk, Guntur district, by a hill stream and prays that the Government may prevent the recurrence of this evil. He says that the evil can be remedied at an outlay of Rs. 500.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

The English Empire administrative policy.

73. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th July, publishes in Telugu what Mr. H. G. Welsh has written in the Daily Chronicle on this subject which contains:—The time is forthcoming when the two countries Egypt and India will ask:—"Will our fortune be like this for ever? Will we ever get the freedom that countries like Canada and Australia are enjoying?" It will be well to raise the Indians and the Egyptians to eminence before they are enraged. Look at our situation in Egypt. We must either be thieves like the Germans in Belgium or be honourable trustees. We have been calling ourselves honourable trustees. It will be well to act as we say. The English have long delayed to publish their administrative policy. . . Statesmen have been publishing their liberal ideas now and then. But the English have to publish a liberal administrative policy which can take its place along with Mr. Wilson's publication.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

74. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th July, reports Mr. C. Vijayaraghava Achariyar to have said in an interview:—I approve of agitation being carried on in accordance with the scheme laid down by the Congress and Moslem League. But their scheme does not appear to be so very advantageous. I have carefully noted the helplessness of the non-official members of the Legislative Councils. All the members of the Legislative Councils should be elected members. The Legislative Councils should be vested with complete authority over finances. Their resolutions should be followed by the Executive Councils. . . The privileges which the authorities are going to grant after the war should be published now. The Indian leaders should be enabled to discuss them. Without doing so, there is no use saying "we have sympathy". The repressive laws should first be repealed. . . If at the present juncture the British do not recognise our rights, the people will take to passive resistance.

The views of Mr. C. Vijayaraghava Achariyar.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

75. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th July, says in its leader:—The Colonies stated at the very commencement of the war that they were rendering help in the war in order that they may obtain equal rights with the mother country in deciding imperial questions. But no Indian leader has ever connected the help rendered by India in the war with the attainment of any privileges after the war. . . There is nothing surprising in that the people in England are enthusiastic about their war loan, for they are sure that the amount of the loan will be spent in their own country. There is some self-interest in this. As for India's war loan, every Indian knows that the amount of the loan will not be spent in India, but will go to the English exchequer and be used for the war. Thus this disinterestedness is unequalled. . . It may be estimated that the amount that India paid for the war is Rs. 300 crores. It is impossible to guess what troubles, on account of this, India, which, in all the world, is the abode of poverty, has to undergo. In Great Britain, the average annual income of a man is £45, while in India, according to the admission of the British officers themselves, it is only £2. At this rate the annual income of Great Britain is £210 crores while that of India is £60 crores. The war gift of Rs. 300 crores which India is going to pay to England under such circumstance may be deemed to be as valuable as if England should contribute 1,125 crores.

India's help in the war.

Mr. Bonar Law has said that the Colonies have up to now paid 14 crores and 60 lakhs of pounds to the mother country. Our object is not to treat lightly of the help rendered by the Colonies, but by way of reply to those who write lightly of the help that India rendered in the war. As for the man power supplied by India to the war Sir Francis Younghusband said in May 1915:—"When the Germans were marching at full speed against Calais, and the British line became thin and was about to be broken, Indian soldiers 70,000 strong, wrenched Newchapalle out of the bands of Germans. If we had failed to take Indian soldiers, our army could not have arrested the progress of the Germans and would have been destroyed. The Indians are naturally proud of having arrested the German advance and thus helped the French, the Belgians and ourselves. We have to be grateful to the Indians for this for ever."

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

76. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th July, has in Telugu the second lecture of Mr. A. Rangaswami Ayyangar on the Congress scheme, which contains:—The aims of Lord Morley and Lord Minto have not been carried out. . . When the Legislative Council Reforms were introduced, Lord Morley and Sir Edward Baker directed the members of the Indian Civil Service to adjust themselves to the times and make the work of reform easy. But now Lord Pentland is going the opposite way. He is of opinion that the time has not come when the members of the Indian Civil Service may give up some of their authority. His utterances in the Legislative Council bear testimony to this. The control of the Legislative Councils over the executive which was deemed possible eight years ago by the Minto-Morley reforms is now an impossibility in the opinion of Lord Pentland. The root cause therefore of the troubles of the bureaucracy at present is their perverse attitude and not its criticism of the reforms desired by the people. . . While the Executive Councils are under the control of the Legislative Councils in England, is it unjust that such a thing should be arranged for in India?

The Congress scheme—A lecture.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

The Congress and Reforms.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th July, publishes in Telugu the first of a series of four lectures proposed to be delivered by the Hon'ble Mr. A. Rangaswami Ayyangar on the scheme of the National Congress and the completing of Minto-Morley reforms, which contains:—The number of elected members should be increased. In financial administration, control over the Executive Councils should be given to the Legislative Councils.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

Nationalism.

77. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 27th July, writes in an article on nationalism:—The westerners deprive foreigners of freedom and follow the Greek policy that the foreigners are incompetent men and deserve to be ruled as slaves. It is this principle that has led to the evil result, namely, the present political revolutions of the world. . . Just in the same way as a slave in the ancient Rome and in Colonies like South Africa, had no rights of citizenship to vote on political matters, so also in international parlance, countries which have no freedom cannot have representation, however civilised they may be, because they have no separate individuality. The only way to attain political brotherhood is to obtain a status among nations, through national liberty. It is, therefore, that Mill stated that he could not understand what the Government of one nation by another means.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

India and liberty.

78. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th July, says in its leader:—It is impossible that when every nation in the British Empire is attaining political salvation, the Indian nation alone should be in their present condition. In an atmosphere of liberty, arbitrariness will not grow but will die for want of nourishment. Women are naturally tender-hearted. They will sympathise with the helpless state of the Indians. . . The advocates of the freedom of women, on the one hand, and the Irish people who are going to taste liberty, on the other, will doubtless use their influence, experience and rights in securing self-government for India. . . The words of the authorities that confidential correspondence is going on between the Government of India and the Secretary of State regarding post-war reforms, testify to the fact that Indian public opinion is disregarded. Why should not the Government publish their scheme of reform, call for the opinion of the public, and adopt a policy that is acceptable to all? What is the necessity for secret correspondence? Public opinion is neglected in such important matters, and yet in the matter of women's liberty, which has nothing to do with Indian opinion, it is said that a great man feared that the Indians may grow angry. . . Sir Frederic Branbury asked his co-members in Parliament whether they understood how indignant the 30 crores of Indians in India would grow if women were given the power to vote. . . 385 members voted for and 55 against the Women's Suffrage Bill. The contention of Sir Frederic Branbury proved to be a farce. From this it is plain that there are none who will give credit to the words of those who make use of India for their own purposes and say that India does not love liberty but loves only arbitrariness.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

The educated classes and the masses.

79. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th July, says under this heading:—It has become a custom with the Anglo-Indians to say that the interests of these two sections differ. The Madras Mail has begun such work again. It is plain that the object of this paper is to create differences among the people by any means. It says:—Our chief duty is to ameliorate the condition of the masses. . . The Government should not make them look up to the educated classes for help in getting their grievances redressed. . . We ask if the Mail can show in the present political agitation, one resolution which is advantageous to the educated classes and disadvantageous to the masses. Can education quench the love for the masses? Though it may be admitted that the present-day education does not foster national spirit, and that the fascination of the English language has introduced foreign ideas into the educated, yet there is nothing more absurd than to say that the British, who are foreigners, are better qualified to know the grievances of the masses than the Indians. It is the educated that are props to loyalty, and it is through them that people are conciliated. The agitation of the educated will always be impregnated with loyalty. They always want a reform of the methods of administration and never wish the ruin of the Government. They are able to prevent the prevalence of anarchy on the one hand and that of arbitrariness on the other. The Anglo-Indian papers that decry the educated do not foresee the evil that may flow from lowering their influence. . . The people should not allow themselves to be imposed upon by this attempt to create differences between the masses and the educated classes, but should in union work constitutionally for the fulfilment of their desires.

80. The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, says:—Within five years of the starting of the Andhra movement, the Andhra country has some colleges already opened. The Government are contemplating to establish some more to impart education in Medicine, Engineering, etc. When these were possible in five years, the establishment of a University also will become a fact. When all these secondary items of the Andhra movement are becoming established facts, the principal item, namely, an Andhra province will, we believe, become a possibility.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

The Andhra movement.

81. The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, represents to the Leader to have said:—The disorderly acts of the Madras Government have given a new impetus to the Home Rule movement. This movement which had hitherto the support of a few Indians here and there is attracting, to its ranks, volunteers from all races and all provinces. When we consider the number of Parsis that have joined the movement during the last few days, it will be plain that the members of this race have given up their ideas and have fallen under the influence of the movement.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

The Parsis and self-government.

82. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th July, reports Mr. Polak to have said:—The settlement come to in 1914 in the matter of the South African Indians gave them only temporary relief, and did not altogether remove their disabilities. . . Having old grudges in their minds, the Europeans show an attitude of hostility towards the Indians. As in Transvaal, so also in Natal and Cape Colony, the situation of the Indians is not satisfactory. Endeavours are everywhere made to suppress the trade of the Indians. . . There appears to be no difference between the conduct of the Germans, acting in violation of the treaty that they entered into with Belgium, and the conduct of the South African whitemen in this matter. From the incident in which an Indian youngman was shoved out from the tramcar and left to die, it was made plain that the whitemen try to treat the Indians as uncivilised. The people should represent these things to the Government, or the settlement come to in 1914 is sure to be violated.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

Indians in South Africa.

83. A correspondent contributes to the Andhrapatrika of the 27th July a flowery and eloquent article to the following effect:—The 16th is an auspicious date. The Home Rule Leagues celebrated Home Rule festivals with great enthusiasm. That day on which the patriotic, loyal, just, divinely, wise and innocent persons, Mrs. Besant and her co-workers, were restrained by the mandate of authority and subjected to internment; that day marks the commencement of the triumph of Home Rule. The dark cloud that appeared on the summit of the Nilgiris in the shape of Lord Pentland's concluding speech in the Legislative Council, menaced to be the bad weather day of India, but it is natural that even dark clouds shower nice life-giving nectar, and are lighted up by the dazzling forked lightning fed by electric power. After the rain stops, clouds disperse (?), and thunderbolts are discharged, the sky is illumined with the hues of the rain-bow formed by the beams of the sun emerging afresh. Even so does the Indian firmament now glow with the dazzling splendour of the divine and fresh Home Rule. . . May the atmosphere of the

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

The banner of Home Rule.

Nilgiris be sanctified, purified and illumined with the splendour of the Home Rule banner. . . The results of the internments prove only to be the reverse of what the rulers have aimed at. Doubts have cleared up. Truth stands revealed. Home Rule and self-government have been recognised to be one and the same in principle. The cloud of fear that enveloped the hearts has been dispelled. All classes have discarded their fears, merged their differences, and sally forth cheerfully and heroically to muster under the shade of the Home Rule banner. Leaders of the people, instead of quaking with fear, equip themselves in mutual love and stand in an array ready for uplifting their country. Popular opinion has declared itself in an irresistible manner. Do not think of the class of landlords to whom the mercy of the hereditary estates of mother India is a refuge and sustenance. Why feel sorry for lack of sympathy on the part of those who are naturally hostile to popular liberty? Zamindars think that their duty is only to follow their rulers even as the shadow, its object. The prosperity of tributary Chiefs cannot show itself to advantage except in the gloom of popular ignorance. Instances of this abound in Rome and Europe. If it should prove to be otherwise history would be belied. But the peculiar flight of some liberal-hearted landlords is a matter for sorrow and surprise. The class of zamindars with their brain-palaces devoid of treasure-rooms publish their names following the lead of those who go before them. It is a matter for regret that some of those who pride themselves on their education should take to crooked ways. While the newspapers proclaim public opinion in a loud and unfaltering voice from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas, it cannot but appear ridiculous that the Justice which advances unjust arguments under the name of Justice, and the Andhrapatrika which is a reflection of papers of its shade should indulge in self-praise. The Justice is to be shunned. The national unity of India may dazzle their eyes and be unendurable for them. . . The enemies of Home Rule accept self-government as an ideal to be kept in view, but say that some of the means adopted for the attainment of it are to be condemned; this point is not, however, made clear either by the shadows or by their reflections. The Viceroy maintains silence. Provincial Governments adopt the principle of espousing the cause of the opponents. The Secretary of State for India who accepts and endorses the principle has left his office for another reason. Lord Hardinge who has accepted, welcomed and nourished the ideals of India is caught in the Mesopotamian whirlwind, and his fault is only his love for us and nothing else. . . May this whirlwind have no power to raise the dust of his feet! . . . Indian hearts have been inspired with high hopes, in recollection of the Imperial pledges, at the bright prospect of a victory in the war, and by the restoration to freedom of all civilised races. Can the pilots of the British Empire, who are constant lovers of liberty and who have raised the banner of war for the establishment of freedom, fail to fulfil our desires? Should not free institutions follow in the wake of British triumphal flag? It is the Sovereign's duty to rule so that the country may be full of peace and prosperity. . . How happy would it be if Government is carried on in accordance with the proclamation of the kind-hearted Queen Victoria who said, "In their contentment, etc."? The time has come when the most liberal and sympathetic statements made by Emperors, Ministers, Lords and Commons have to be given effect to. Unless at this important juncture, British statesmanship rises to the occasion in pursuance of its excellent traditions, and regulates its administrative policy, India, which is in the nature of a sacred trust committed to its care, cannot shine in her own splendour. Her name of "the brightest jewel in the imperial diadem" cannot be realised. By the erroneous acts done by the bureaucracy in the height of their power, a country, in which peace and loyalty had prevailed, came to be agitated by the waves of unrest, and proves the truth of the English proverb "Sow the wind and reap the whirlwind." Popular power is not such as can be bound down by repressive acts. Nor is it policy to think of so binding it down. . . Dadabhai Naoroji, the grand old man of India, saw with a divine insight into the future prosperity of India, taught us the mantra "she will obtain Home Rule" of the Taittiriyopanishad, and departed to heaven. Mrs. Besant who repeatedly revolved that mantra . . . and taught that by methods characterised by self-control and other virtues the fruition of that mantra can be easily attained, was sent into internment. But what is the result of this internment on the national soul which is "above all danger" and "is incapable of being cut, or burnt, or wetted or dried"? The Bija (seed) of that mantra is the evolution of the Indian nation; freedom of the British Empire, its kilaka (support) and Home Rule, its fruition. It will shine all the more by the dispelling of adverse causes.

84. The Andhraprakasika, of the 21st July, writing in its leader, under this heading, remarks that the Indians before attempting to be on a level with the Europeans should try to merge all their differences and says:—Indians will do well to accept the proposal of the Poineer to create a convention of a representative character which it recommends, for considering the political reforms to be granted to India after the war.

Convention.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

85. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 21st July, writes under this heading that he has learnt that the Tahsildars have been required to submit proposals with regard to the abolition of the monigars and assistant karnams, and says that these two officers serve no useful purpose in the village, except for throwing obstacles in the way of the village head and karnam.

Monigars and assistant karnams.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

86. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21th July, gives in Telugu what a correspondent writes to the Times of India on this subject, which contains:—Lord Pentland's short-sighted policy has been the cause of unrest all over the country. . . . Even Lord Curzon, who is an advocate of bureaucracy has said in the House of Lords that they must grant Home Rule to Ireland and see that she helps in the war. India though loyal, peaceful and undergoing unbearable hardship by sacrificing her sons and money for the British success, is passing through innumerable difficulties, having fallen a prey to the cruel Defence of India Act which is a war measure. . . Mr Bonar Law said, in the House of Commons, that as England felt Ireland to be in a state of anarchy and to be a thorn in her side, her political prisoners were set free. In India, on the other hand, which is loyal and peaceful, Lord Pentland threatened those who were carrying on constitutional agitation for political reforms and interned Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues under the Defence of India Act. If the conditions of these two countries are compared, will not dangerous thoughts be engendered in the Indian mind? The rulers of other provinces also have approved of the speech of Lord Pentland; but no one has given a thought about the safety of the Government. . When war is waged for high ideals, is it a gross sin to ask for a change in the Indian administration consistent with the ideals of the Allies? If it is not, why should the rulers put into force repressive laws? . . Whatever may be her (Mrs. Besant's) disabilities, whatever may Lord Pentland and the Anglo-Indian papers accuse her of, it cannot but be admitted by one and all, that Mrs. Besant is ever opposed to unconstitutional agitation.

Political conditions in India and Ireland.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

87. A correspondent writing to the Andhrapatrika, of the 24th July, upon this subject, says that if the new district is called Gōdāvari it will become larger than the other districts and the administration of it will not be what it should be, and that therefore it will be good to name the new district Gōdāvari West.

Bifurcation of Kistna district.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

The Hitakarini, of the 22nd July, observes as follows upon this subject:—In the matter of selecting the head-quarters of the new district, the District Collector will do well to consult the Tahsildars, Revenue Inspectors and others who have ripe experience of the conditions of districts, as also the big ryots of each firka, and to decide the question with an impartial eye.

Bifurcation of the Kistna district.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 22nd, 1917.

88. The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th July, writes in its "News" columns:—He has delivered lectures in Tamil in Walajahnagar on swaraj and swadeshi, in the course of which he said:—We must boycott woollen goods, white sugar, chinaware and glassware and use the indigenous jaggery and brass and earthenware. According to the statistics that were prepared prior to the war, 150 crores of rupees worth of foreign goods were imported into our country. If we boycott them, our poverty will,

P. Varadarajulu Nayudu Garu.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

to a great extent, be mitigated. By this the profits of the great English merchants will be affected, and they will, in consequence, bring pressure to bear upon the members of the Parliament, who will then grant us political privileges.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

Condolence.

89. The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th July, reproduces from the Kistnapatrika, of the 21st July, the article abstracted under this heading on page 2068 of the weekly report.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

Social reform.

90. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, says:—The cause of the backward condition of female education in India is that we have not much to do with the administration of our country. If unlike at present, we impose our own taxes and expend them ourselves under the British suzerainty, female education will not be in this miserable condition. If we have to put an end to the practice of varasulka, we have to make education an easy thing to be obtained. Technical schools and colleges should be opened. For all this to be possible, we have to get financial independence. . . The uplift of the depressed classes also hangs upon the attainment of swaraj. . . Our inability to effect social reforms is due to the absence of much association on our part with the Government. Those who contended that social reform should precede political reform have now given up such a contention. Mr. Paul who is a friend of the country has declared that political reform will be followed by economical and social reform, and is devoting all his energy to political reform. It is mad to contend that one should not work for political reform before social reform is effected. This contention was rejected as useless, and there can be no justification for its revival.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

Protest against internments.

91. The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, publishes in English and Telugu the resolution passed at the joint conference of the All-India Congress Committee and the Council of the Moslem League, containing the representation to be submitted to the Secretary of State and to His Excellency the Viceroy.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1917.

The Madras internments.

92. The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th July, publishes its London letter which has the following upon this subject:— . . . The editors of papers in England will not deal with such questions. What can they do? If you see side by side that Irish prisoners should be pardoned and Indian Governments should be passing repressive laws, the distinction will be made manifest.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, publishes in English and in Telugu the proceedings of the meeting held at China Bag, Bombay, containing gists of speeches delivered by Mr. Jinnah and others.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

The representation of the Indians.

93. The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, says in its leader:—In the representation prepared by the joint conference held at Bombay, the conference explained the wishes of the people firmly and unequivocally. For this, it deserves the gratitude of the Indians. . . It is believed that Mr. Montagu who is always prepared to change his old opinions, will readily do so even now. . . It is requested that the Government will grant the necessary reforms after the war, which will lay the foundation to Home Rule. But His Excellency the Viceroy pronounced these reforms to be revolutionary and Lord Sydenham pronounced them to be dangerous to the country. The Provincial Governments also expressed the same views. . . From the representation it will be plain that there is nothing improper in the present agitation.

Mr. Montagu should know that it is necessary to comply with the representation submitted by a conference of all the Indian leaders. Otherwise, it is difficult that the unrest will be allayed. . . We pray that Mr. Montagu will note the strong views prevailing in the country and adopt a new policy.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

The Behar Conference.

94. In commenting on the proceedings of the Behar Provincial Conference, the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, says:—The desire for Home Rule is agitating not only India but the whole world. With the defeat of Russia by Japan, the blind belief about the incapacity of the East has seen its end. The old doctrine that self-government is the privilege only of some nations and some climes has been disproved. Mr. Kipling's expression, the "Whiteman's Burden", has become meaningless. In Turkey and in Russia, arbitrary Government has come to an end. Mr. Bernard Shaw said:—"Though the virtues attributed to a foreign bureaucracy may be true, they are as useless as glass eyes, wooden legs and false teeth." Herein lies the reason of the decline of the Manchu rule and the authority of the Romanoffs. The President said that if we followed the dictates of our conscience, our righteous desires would be fulfilled as surely as the night follows the day. He strongly criticised the members of the Legislative Councils. This is no doubt a new departure and a necessary one. If it is the duty of a representative to keep silent without proposing resolutions and wasting the time of the rulers, none, the President remarks, are more dutiful than the members of the Behar Legislative Council, as stated by Mr. Bailey. It is said that none are more fortunate than these members in gaining titles. Almost every member has a title. If there be any who have yet no titles conferred on them, the President says they will soon get them. For this, the only means, he says, is not to give up the traditions of the Behar Legislative Council but to serve the country by preserving silence. The opinion of the President is that the authorities should give up the practice of giving these meaningless titles. He said that the service rendered by three representatives in the Imperial Legislative Council also is of this nature. From the speech of Mr. Hussain Khan, the tenor of the people's aims is plain. We request the Government to note this natural course and satisfy their aims.

95. Referring to the sinking of the mail steamer Mangolia by striking a mine off Bombay, the Hitavadi, for July, remarks that the Germans must have bribed some one and had the mine placed in the sea.

HITAVADI, Masulipatam, July 1917.

The Mangolia.

96. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th July, gives in Telugu the proceedings of Mr. Tilak's birthday anniversary meeting at Bombay, and the speeches delivered thereat in which the speakers praised Mr. Tilak and declared him to be an all-India leader.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

Mr. Tilak.

97. Writing on this subject, a correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 30th July, asks if it is sedition to be patriotic, to encourge indigenous industries, and preach such things to others. He says:— . . . The time has come when thirty-one crores of Indians should recite in their minds the mantra of Home Rule. The Government have decided that this is not seditious. . . The first step to swadeshi is to use swadeshi articles and to avoid foreign methods in dress and food. Above all one's own country must be loved. The mind must be absorbed in the swadeshi. Then only can man become really patriotic. Certain selfish traitors to the mother country deceive their brethren, violate their holy practice, and incur sin by passing foreign cloths as swadeshi goods.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

The swadeshi vow.

98. Referring to the order prohibiting the protest meeting at Calcutta, the Andhrapatrika, of the 30th July, says:—What is the result of this order? The Bengal leaders, who were patient till now, have been greatly incensed. The Bengalee which was earning the thanks of the Anglo-Indian papers by retracing its steps in politics, and creating a difference between Home Rule and self-government, has changed its opinion on account of this. It remarked that the decision is not only unwise, but is also unfortunate, that the prohibition is an undeserved insult offered to the organisers of the meeting, and that it should not be put up with. As a result of this order, the same reconciliation that took place in other provinces between the advocates of Home Rule and the advocates of self-government, will surely take place in Bengal also. The freedom of the press and of speech are the primary rights of civilised men. The violation of these rights means that constitutional agitation has come to an end. It is discouraging to constitutional agitators to treat them and the revolutionists in the same way. There is less room for constitutional agitation when a war measure like the Defence of India Act is used to suppress lawful unrest. . . Lord Ronaldshay is not to blame for the application of the Defence of India Act. There must be others whose lead all provincial rulers follow. These seem to be

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

The Calcutta protest meeting.

all bound by a certain policy. Will Mr. Montagu bring about a change in this policy and afford scope for constitutional agitation, or will he drive the people into despair? We cannot say what the future result of this may be, but at present the scope for constitutional agitation has been narrowed. . . . It is said that passive resistance is the only resort to the people. The history of Mr. Gandhi is being remembered. It is the duty of Mr. Montagu not to constrain the people to adopt such methods but to change the present policy of the Government, and establish contentment in the people. All hopes are centred in Mr. Montagu, who will not care for prestige. He once wished that the time-honoured word prestige were removed from the dictionary. . . In the Bombay meeting, the provincial congress committees and the council of the Moslem League have been requested to communicate to the Congress Secretaries their opinion as to whether it is proper to resort to passive resistance. The meeting expressed its strong disapproval of the prohibition of the Calcutta meeting. It will now be well for Mr. Montagu to show his ability in allaying the present unrest.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

Order against Mr. Karandikar.

99 The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th July, refers to the order directing Mr. Karandikar to leave the Madras Presidency, and remarks:—Such orders do not take us by surprise because they have now become common. We do not know what more is to come.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 31st, 1917.

The Madras Government and Mr. Karandikar.

100. Referring to the order of the Madras Government which was recently served on Mr. R. V. Karandikar, the Manorama, of the 31st July, says:—This news will cause immense pain or surprise to the people. It would have given some satisfaction to the public, if the Government had stated how Mr. Karandikar had acted prejudicially to the public safety. We are not aware that he has delivered any speeches or that he has written and published anything. All that we know is that he is one who works with Mrs. Besant for the advancement of his own country. We are at a loss to understand why the Government entertain so bad an opinion about such a person. We are surprised that the Madras Government who have had ample opportunities of gauging public opinion on administrative affairs, should have issued such an order.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 28th, 1917.

Our duty.

101. Under this heading, the Kistnapatrika, of the 28th July, gives in Telugu what the Hon'ble Mr. B. Narasimha Ayyar said in his speech on the 16th instant at Salem which contains—Lord Pentland said that repressive measures would have to be resorted to, to suppress the agitation. The whole country has been in a commotion and expressed its disapproval of this policy that indicated repression. The Government were alarmed to see the great work done by Mrs. Besant. They could not bear and keep aloof when they beheld her attracting the people to herself, and training them for the task of carrying on a democratic government. . . She exposed to criticism a system of administration which has deprived us of rights and powers which, in all civilised countries, are enjoyed and exercised by the people and made them over to foreigners. She agitated both here and England that such a rule is unlawful and unjust. It is but natural that the bureaucracy should resent this. . . Should we not do our duty? Is it proper on our part to retrace our steps, in fear of strong repressive acts? Such evil acts, far from discouraging us, are only giving us fresh vigour, awakening the masses, and strengthening our cause. Our first duty is to carry on this agitation, and establish Home Rule Leagues all over the country. . . Take the swadeshi vow. When the trade of those at home declines, they turn their attention to the cause of such a change. The acts of the rulers will then be revealed and our desires fulfilled. This is the only way. Give no room to rioting or anarchical acts. . . We must be prepared to defend our liberty. . . Even if we must adopt a passive resistance, such as was carried on in South Africa. . . If we draw back at this juncture, we cannot escape a reversion to slavery. Our posterity will blame us and we shall be traitors to our country, and cowards that have sold their children into slavery.

102. The Kistnapatrika, of the 28th July, gives a gist of lecture delivered by Sayyid Hussain in a meeting of the Home Rule League held at Bombay already abstracted from the Andhrapatrika of the 19th July, on page 2072 of the weekly report.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 28th, 1917.

Russia's message.

103. The Desamata, of the 25th July, contains under this heading :—The act of the Madras Government, directing the internment of Mrs. Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia, in pursuance of a predetermined policy calculated to suppress the Home Rule movement, has roused a deep discontent and indignation. Like those in the other parts of the country we also share in that feeling. . . We show them (the interned) our heartfelt sympathy in their distress. It is our firm belief that their political discussions are perfectly within the limits of the birth-right of an Indian and are not such as are calculated to incite to mischief or lawless riots. . . This exercise of arbitrary power under the Defence of India Act to suppress lawful political endeavour, may create a situation fraught with much evil both to the rulers and the ruled. We, therefore, believe it is our duty to warn the rulers against acting indiscreetly in such a matter. . .

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 25th, 1917.

The Lahore declaration.

104. The Desamata, of the 25th July, reproduces the Telugu version of the second letter of Sir N. Chandravarkar to the Times of India, relating to the Madras internments.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 25th, 1917.

Sir N. Chandravarkar's second letter.

105. The Desamata, of the 25th July, writes, under this heading :—Sometime after this meeting, it is said the European Traders' Association at Ootacamund wrote to Messrs. Wrenn, Bennet & Co. at Madras, asking them to forthwith call Mr. Harvey to Madras, or to remove him from his office if he does not consent to go to Madras. We do not know whether the Company wrote to that effect or not, but there are strong rumours that they did so. To confirm this, Mr. Harvey was superseded by another. . . That, as soon as he set to work for our liberty in a way that would add to the honour of the British Empire, not abandoning the traditions of his race, nor forgetting his love of liberty, some of his own race should intend evil to him, is very regrettable. If this report can be credited, we have to hold that it is highly disgraceful on the part of Europeans, who have been from the beginning accustomed to work with freedom in social and political matters, to obstruct freedom of thought on the part of a person of their own race and contemplate evil to him. It is not known what Mr. Harvey is going to do now; but if he had met with an adverse fate solely for having worked for us, we must count him as one among ourselves and show him every sympathy.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 25th, 1917.

Mr. Harvey and the Home Rule League.

106. The Desamata, of the 25th July, publishes Telugu versions of the telegrams sent by the Madras Home Rule League to Mr. P. Snowdon and to Commander Wedgewood, regarding the work of Mrs. Besant.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 25th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant.

107. The Hitakarini, of the 22nd July, writes in a leader under this heading :—In the columns of the last issue we referred to some of the attempts of the hostile camp to obstruct the swaraj agitation. The Non-Brahman movement which was started to improve the condition of the Non-Brahmans has taken the opposite side in the field of politics which is making a stir in the country, and begun to fight unceasingly. It is audacious to say that some points in their argument are not reasonable. Forty of the zamindars in the Madras Presidency have, we cannot say whether at the instigation of the Non-Brahman movement, or with a view to please the bureaucracy or thinking that under Home Rule they cannot as usual exercise their authority over their tenants, or for some other reason, issued a manifesto to the effect that the activities of the Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar, their representative in the Imperial Legislative Council, in connection with the agitation for Home Rule, should not be construed as representing their views and that, under the present circumstances, there is not much desire among the people for

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 22nd, 1917.

The present atmosphere.

Home Rule. . . The skill of the bureaucracy as well as of the Anglo-Indian papers has become manifest by linking the Theosophical Society with politics.

* * * * * *

We do not understand the meaning of the order that gold and silver coins should not be melted for the purpose of jewellery. Considering the present circumstances, the Empire may think it necessary, but it is certain that there will be discontent among the people. Very soon the sixteenth day, the day of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers' internment has come. This has become a sacred day. There is not a village which does not observe this day. This sixteenth day is reckoned as a memorable day for announcing the national glory, to proclaim the arbitrariness of the bureaucracy and to show our loyalty to the Crown. At some places, meetings and processions arranged to be held on this harmless day, which gave an impetus to our nationalism, were prevented by the police. The friends of the country are complaining that even under the British Empire, which is fighting for establishing freedom, the arbitrary power of the bureaucracy is on the increase.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 22nd, 1917.

The present condition.

The Hitakarini, of the 22nd July, gives under this heading a Telugu version of an open letter published in the columns of the Swadesamitran by an aged Indian, which contains:— . . . I do not agree with some of the educated people who say that the villagers do not know anything of Home Rule. I am a villager. However, I can stand as the first witness to speak to the fact that the Indians have been fit for Home Rule for some time past and that Home Rule is needed for the development of their nature. I wish that my opinion based upon experience and farsightedness may be acceptable for all men's consideration. The intense agitation for Home Rule conducted at present is satisfactory and there are indications that Home Rule will be granted soon. To this some unavoidable obstacles have been created. But let us not mind them much. These obstacles are nothing before that mighty force. It is on account of the Brahman predominence that we have come to ask for swaraj. This agitation has been set afoot by the jealousy of some zamindars.

* * * * * *

The Home Rulers are treating, like garlands of flowers, severe inflictions.

* * * * * *

The interned are not ordinary people like us. . . It is not right to punish the leaders who ask the rulers in a constitutional way to grant more privileges and rights to the country. . .

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 22nd, 1917.

Zamindar's manifesto.

108. A certain zamindari tenant writes as follows to the Hitakarini, of the 22nd, on this subject:—The Non-Brahman movement is like a canker worm to the Home Rule sapling, which is growing day by day. Like the ordinary canker worms, this does not go away by mere shaking. Gradually, some zamindars also have joined this. It is rumoured that one or two zamindars are at the bottom of this. This movement at first starting with a view to condemn castes has ultimately set itself to attack Home Rule which is the all important aim of India. The aim of the zamindars is different from that of the people. The aims of the people and those of the zamindars cannot coincide. This is true not only in this country and at this time but also in any other country and at any other time. . . Our zamindars may be actuated by the same motive as that which prompts the bureaucracy to disapprove of the agitation for swaraj. How can this agitation be acceptable to some of the zamindars who even in this twentieth century torture their poor tenants who cannot pay rents by reason of the failure of crops.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 22nd, 1917.

What is wanted?

109. A correspondent writes as follows to the Hitakarini of the 22nd July:—The inner forces must develope if nationalism should be strengthened. Only when these forces are brought to a focus, nationalism can have a new soul-force. . . A force that cannot be commanded by a passive disposition, the world does not possess. I am of opinion that, at this time of national conflict, the attitude of Maharishi Gandhi is quite commendable. His voice is not to be heard. His figure is not to be seen on the platforms. He is one who has taken to the service of mankind which is cherished by his soul, his country and God. . . It is no exaggeration to say that Mr. Gandhi can be an ideal person for man to follow now. Why does not any one come forward to serve mankind by starting branches of Mr. Gandhi's Satyagriha Ashramam? Has not the country yet realized its importance?

110. The Hitakarini, of the 22nd July, publishes in Telugu the article from the Mahratta proposing Mrs. Besant for the presidentship of the coming National Congress.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 22nd, 1917.

The Congress Presidentship.

111. The Anhraprakasika and the Hitakarini have been for some time past indulging in vituperative articles against each other. The Hitakarini, of the 22nd July, publishes an article of this character from the pen of a correspondent which contains:—A husband must forsake a wife who is quarrelsome . . . who is inclined in favour of others . . . In spite of this, your husband, desirous of somehow eking out his livelihood in his old age, or with the object of adapting you to those who have newly won you, is not able to forsake you. This puts one in mind of the fact that poverty makes one descend (or stoop) to arbitrariness (or despotism). . .

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 22nd, 1917.

Andhraprakasika.

112. The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, writes:—"The National Congress, the Moslem League and the Home Rule Leagues all preach the dharma of liberty. During the current year these societies have made great attempts to spread the dharma of liberty in the country. These attempts have terrified the authorities. As the Home Rule Movement continued to spread, the opposition of the Government also began to increase. The rulers began to create obstacles in the way of the natural rights of man. The authorities are imposing restraints on liberty of speech, liberty of convening meetings and liberty of publication. The rulers are employing the weapons of repression and suppression. The Indians are afraid that the authorities will use these weapons to destroy the constitutional agitation that has been carried on by the National Congress for the last thirty years. And this fear has grown stronger by the internment of Mrs. Annie Besant. It is incumbent upon the Indians to find a remedy for this. It is only when the Indians have discharged this duty properly, that it will be known to the world that they are fit to obtain self-government. The Home Rule agitation is now spreading through the agency of meetings and publications. But practical men see that these agencies are not capable of creating a change in the angle of vision of the authorities and the British people.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1917.

The duty of the Indians.

In the present complicated condition of affairs unless the people adopt a measure which will attract the attention of the rulers, the Goddess of liberty which is now bound in chains cannot obtain freedom. It is necessary that the measure so adopted must be constitutional. The past political history has made it clear that nothing can be achieved by mere words. The results obtained by political agitation carried on by the National Congress for the last thirty years are insignificant. Some benefit has been derived from the swaraj agitation of last year. But even that agitation has not the strength necessary to change the attitude of the authorities. . . The treatment accorded by the Europeans to Mr. Harvey, who is the Secretary of the Home Rule League at Ootacamund, can be taken as an example to be followed by the Hindus. . . It is but natural that it should strike patriots that they should follow the same path that the European society has followed. It is but natural that wise people should think that the wrong done to Mr. Harvey, by the English people, who have gained the fame of being the pioneers of liberty of thought, is blameable. But there is none to find fault with what the Europeans, who have the support of the authorities, do. Unless the Hindus, like the Europeans, employ sharp but lawful weapons, it is not possible for the attitude of the rulers to change. There would be some possibility for the aspirations of the people to attract the attention of the rulers, if the people take the vow of Swadeshi and the vow of passive resistance, which are calculated to show to the world the practical ability of the Indians, and fulfil their desires.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 28th, 1917.

The Indian Defence Force.

113. In an article under this heading, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 28th July, writes:—There are tens of millions of able-bodied men in India who, if they are given military training, can enable the British to vanquish the enemy in a single week. Whether in strength or heroism or in sincere loyalty, the Indian stands unsurpassed. "Be true to your salt" is a proverb among the Indians, including the Muhammadans who regard it as a great motto. If the British would only trust these loyal races and treat them on terms of equality with the white races, the glory of the British can never wane. But the British owing to some inexplicable distrust have failed to give the Indians the requisite opportunities to come to the fore and are thereby suffering untold distress. The Government of India as well as the Home Government should bestow due thought on this subject. Even thieves prove honourable when they are trusted. It is deplorable that the British public should seem to ignore this fact. It is very wrong on the part of the British to make any distinction between those who wear hat and boots and those who do not. It is unfair to make any difference in pay, etc., between the white and the black races. It is to be hoped that the Government will realise the necessity of placing the Indians on a footing of perfect equality with the ruling race.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 28th, 1917.

The Indian Defence Force.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 28th July, exhorts the people to join the army before the expiry of the period for enlistment in the Defence of India Force, and observes that Indian youths would do well to remember that, if they fail to avail themselves of the opportunity now given them for military training, for which Indians have been clamouring for long, the bona fides of the prayers of Indians will certainly be questionable.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 27th, 1917.

Indian Christians and politics.

114. In the course of a lengthy leading article dwelling on the history of the National Congress, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 27th July, says:—Despite the vicissitudes which the Congress has gone through, owing to the disfavour with which it was regarded by the Government as a result of Anglo-Indian influence, and owing to the aloofness of the Moslems, who for a time posed themselves as more loyal than the Hindus, and owing to the factions within the Congress itself which gave the Anglo-Indians, who have always been hostile to it, cause for exultation, the Congress was beginning to think that it was now one solid national body at last, when the Brahman-non-Brahman controversy arose; and although granting that this controversy which is only a revival of an old one, will disappear in course of time, it behoves us to consider the aloofness of the Indian Christian community in regard to politics. Why are the Christians aloof? Does Christianity forbid service of the motherland? That cannot be; for, it is doubtful whether any other religion teaches patriotism so well as Christianity and the unswerving patriotism of the western people from whom we got our Christianity stands unsurpassed. Do our Indian Christian brethren forget that their alien faith cannot make them aliens by nationality too? Is it possible that this aloofness of the Christians is due to the influence of the European clergy? Does it not behove our Indian Christians to love their mother country just as their religious heads love their own? Although Indian politics, naturally enough, do not concern the white clergy—because they are aliens—can we say the same of the Indians who are their followers in religion? Are we to suppose from their present aloofness that they do not want a share in the administration, if our rulers should grant us Home Rule after a time? Our Christian brethren surely ought to consider these points although their religious heads have no need to do so.

The paper next observes that the Indian Christians are already beginning to realise that their political interests are not identical with those of their preceptors, and quotes extracts from the Christian Patriot to the effect that the authority of the clergy is confined to purely spiritual matters and that it behoves the Indian Christians to consider how far they shall obey their mandates in other matters. The paper finally exhorts the members of the Indian Christian community not to allow their religion to blind them to the duty of serving the motherland.

115. Referring to the various meetings on the 16th of July in connection with the recent internments, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 25th July, observes that the speeches delivered at some of the meetings cannot be said to be quite worthy of acceptance.

Public meetings in connection with the Madras internments.

Kerala Sancha ri Calicut, July 25th, 1917.

116. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 25th July, points out that the withdrawal, or proposed withdrawal, by some people, of their applications for enlistment in the Defence of India Force, in consequence of the present unrest, is undoubtedly a foolish one, and observes that it will be unfortunate, if the Indians will not understand yet that this arrangement has been made, not with the idea that the six thousand Indians who form the force, will be able to defend India, but because it was desired that they should be given some military training and that this privilege should be granted to them in due course.

Indians and the Defence of India Force.

Kerala Sanchari, Calicut, July 25th, 1917.

117. The Manorama, of the 27th July, deplores the refusal of the Colonies to enlist Indians in the army, points out that the Australian Government was, however, constrained to admit Mr. Guru Pujam Singh into it and send him to the front, because he contended that he had thrice fought for the British Government, and observes that it is very unwise of the Colonies not to respect the right of loyal Indians to join the army and fight for His Majesty the King-Emperor, simply because they are Indians.

Enlistment of Indians in the Colonies.

Manorama, Calicut, July 27th, 1917.

118. After dwelling upon the fact that a large majority of the fat appointments in India are held by Europeans and Eurasians, the Yogak·hemam, of the 27th July, asks:—"Inasmuch as even the British Government are not prepared to distribute appointments according to race and creed, what is the difference between the agitation now going on in countries like Travancore and Cochin and that of the Indian Home Rulers?"

Agitation for the distribution of appointments according to caste.

Yogakshemam, Trichur, July 27th, 1917.

119. The Qaumi Report, of the 19th July, writes:—Some people are now trying to prove that Mrs Besant is a true believer in Islam and a genuine sympathiser with the Muhammadans. In proof of these assertions certain historical facts are being put forward.

Mrs. Besant and Islam.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 19th, 1917.

The editor, referring to Mrs. Besant's writings and speeches on Islam, says that they are mere extracts from the writings of Godfrey, Higginson, Devonport, Washington Irving, Carlyle, and other eulogists of Islam. In referring to the Prophet she has been careful to avoid using language, which, from the point of view, of the historian, might be considered objectionable in order to appeal to the gallery.

From such speeches we cannot form any clear idea as to the extent of Mrs. Besant's knowledge of Islam. On a former occasion we showed that she was nothing more than a fanatical missionary (lit. padri) and an ordinary European. It is, however, evident from her writings, that she has not formed a correct conception of Islam and all that emerges is that it appears to have appealed to her as something of legendary interest.

The problem of her friendship with Muhammadans is at once intricate and forbidding and we have no desire to deal with it here. We will, however, go so far as to say that, in spite of all her mistakes and associations, we sympathise with her from the bottom of our heart. We express regret at her internment, sympathise with her in her simple-minded enthusiasm taking up such a laudable task in her old age and in a foreign land. We, Muhammadans, are by nature the lovers of freedom, supporters of independence, fellow-sufferers in grief and pain, and friends of the distressed and the destitute.

"Amir! when a dagger is drawn upon another, we tremble ourselves,"
"We feel for the whole world in its sorrow."

III.—Legislation.

120. In commenting favourably on the Village Courts Act Amendment Bill, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 25th July, dwells upon the various advantages that may accrue to the people from the establishment of Village Panchayat

The Village Courts Act Amendment Bill.

Kerala Sanchari, Calicut, July 25th, 1917.

Courts, especially to those in the interior, the decrease in police oppression in criminal cases being one among others, and observes that, as the efficiency of of these courts and the peoples' confidence therein depend wholly on the selection of the President and the members thereof, it is to be hoped that the authorities will pay particular attention to it.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, July 21st, 1917.

The Madras Estates Land Act.

121. The Andhraprakasika, of the 21st July, has the following in an article under this heading:—Since this Act was put into force civil suits and criminal cases have considerably increased. The rights which have been enjoyed for many years in the matter of every inam agraharam and estate have come to be disputed in the court. We think it is due to the dubious meaning conveyed by the sections of the Act and to the vague construction of the words. Neither the zamindars nor the ryots nor the lawyers are responsible for the daily increase of these suits. By this Act zamindars who have been leading peaceful lives have been subjected to unnecessary anxiety and confusion. The zamindars, while thanking the Government for having introduced an Amendment Bill into the Imperial Legislative Council, regret that though it is now three years since, nothing really useful has been done. They are complaining that as long as it is delayed their valuable property will pass into others' hands.

IV.—Native States.

Malayala Manorama, Kottayam, August 1st, 1917.

The Travancore budget for 1093 M.E.

122. In commenting upon the Travancore budget for the year 1093 M.E., the Malayala Manorama, of the 1st August, draws attention to the very sound condition of the finances of the State, for which it thinks the Diwan cannot be too highly praised, and observes that whatever disappointed people may say, all will admit that he has administered the country in these critical times with such foresight and devotion to duty that the people can never be too grateful to him.

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.

Dravidan, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

Agricultural improvement.

123. With reference to the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew on the occasion of the celebration of the Agricultural College day at Coimbatore, the following observations occur in the course of a letter from a correspondent published in the Dravidan of the 26th July:—All that Sir Alexander Cardew has said (except in one respect) is wholly true, and we heartily approve of it. But we cannot accept his statement that agricultural progress is impossible unless the Hindu Law is amended. It cannot be said that the income from land will decrease because the lands get subdivided, when each member of a family gets his share of the ancestral property. Let us suppose a man has 100 acres of land either in several plots or in one block at the same place and that, after his demise, the land is partitioned among his five sons, who get 20 acres each. No experienced agriculturist can gainsay that we actually see with our eyes that the present outturn from these lands is much more than what it was before. This increased outturn is indeed due to increased exertion and supervision. The division of lands cannot, therefore, be an obstacle to agricultural progress. Even this small difficulty of the lands being subdivided has now been realised by many, and these exchange their lands with those of the adjacent landholders so that they may conveniently have all their lands in the same locality. It is, therefore, clear that there is indeed no necessity for an amendment of the Hindu Law on this flimsy ground.

As it will take a long time to dispel the ignorance of the agriculturists by the introduction and spread of free and compulsory education, their ignorance should now be removed by improving their knowledge through magic lantern lectures given by agricultural experts. This, indeed, is the present need. Further, if reforms such as those required in the matter of the development of co-operative societies and banks are introduced, the name of the Hon'ble Mr. Cardew will last for ever with anundying fame in the agricultural world.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

Re-settlement of the North Arcot district.

124. Adverting to the re-classification of the irrigation sources, of which 70 have been placed in the higher class, in the North Arcot district, the Swadesamitran, of the 30th July, writes:—From the correspondence relating to the Vazhkudai-Mukkur tank published in this paper, it does not appear that the past and the present condition of the tanks have been properly examined. We are not able to find out the propriety of placing a tank in a higher class, which has grown shallow with silt-deposits. If the same attention is paid to the petitions of ryots as to the reports of officers, and the classification is settled, the ryots will not grow dissatisfied. As the class of the aforesaid 70 tanks has been raised, the assessment on those ayakat lands has increased by Rs. 10,478 besides the general enhancement of 25 per cent. Though on an average the assessment for the whole district has increased at the rate of 25 per cent, the assessment of the ayakat ryots appears to have been raised by 50 per cent. The Government should not think that the re-settlement is over. The petitions of the ryots on this subject have not yet been disposed of. It is necessary that the Government should pay attention to another matter as well. There are three rivers in this district—the Ponnaiyar, the Palar and the Cheyyar. Of these the first two were considered superior and the last a little inferior at the time of the last settlement. But as certain officers are of opinion that the Cheyyar is not in any way inferior to the other two, that river also has been raised to the class of the other rivers in this re-settlement. The assessment on that ayakat has consequently been enhanced by 33 per cent. The people in that ayakat have, therefore, to live on a lower scale than that on which they have till now been living. The reason for the classification in the old settlement, of the Cheyyar irrigation source, as inferior, it is said, is not known. Where, indeed, have those documents gone? What certainty is there that the officers, who come 30 years hence, would approve of the opinions of the present officers? While their Lordships of the Privy Council have held in the appeal of the Urlam Zamindar that, for the increase of produce and population and for the improvement of the economical condition of a place, the assessment on the land should not be frequently changed, how can the people live with strength of mind and strength of body, if this assessment is enhanced on uncertain grounds by 50 per cent? How can they educate their children? How can they improve their economical condition? The people have but to pay the land-tax as fixed by the Government. The assessment is beyond the jurisdiction of the Legislative Councils. The people can save something only if the Government would be pleased to help them. We, therefore, request the Government to consider all these circumstances and show some concession to that poor district, and to deal, with sympathy, with the districts which are yet to be resettled.

Errata.

Report No. 29:

Page 1991, paragraph 41, line 5, for "admit" read "admitted".
„ 1994 „ 49, „ 6, for "sent" read "spent".
„ 2004 „ 65, last line, insert "of" after "practice".
„ 2005 „ 69, first line in the marginal heading, for "Austin" read "Austen".
„ 2005 „ 69, line 6, insert a comma after "ineffective".

Report No. 30.

Page 2047, paragraph 59, line 13, for "wounded. When" read "wounded when."
„ 2053, line 25, for "trust" read trusts."

Issued, 7th August 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 32 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 11th August 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

	PAGE
(d) Education—
The Educational Services	2129
(k) General—
The Government and the non-Brahmans ..	2130
A Home Rule League resolution	ib.
Mrs. Besant	ib.
The Congress and passive resistance	2131

II.—Home Administration—cont.

	PAGE
(k) General—cont.
The Government and the political situation ..	2131
The expulsion order on V. R. Karandikar ..	2132
New India and the Government	ib.
The staff of New India	ib.
The Indian Defence Force	ib.
New India's call to passive resistance	2133
Respect for law	ib.

CONFIDENTIAL

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

The passport rule in Ceylon 2135
The prospect of peace .. .. ib.
The war .. .. ib.
The Irish Convention 2136
The Russians 2137
A breach of friendship 2138
The third anniversary of the war .. .. .. ib.
The condition of Russia after the Tsar .. .. ib.
"When will there be peace?" .. .. .. ib.
The new King of Arabia .. .. ib.

(a) Police—

The Trichinopoly riot 2139
Sub-inspectors' quarters .. .. ib.

(b) Courts—

The Madras High Court .. .. ib.
What it has come to (The fate of the Muhammadans of Madras) 2140

(d) Education—

The Rajkumar College, Madras .. .. ib.
Compulsory primary education .. .. .. ib.
Students and political meetings 2141
Teaching of English in secondary schools .. ib.
Educational reforms .. .. ib.
The national devotion of a Muhammadan lady. 2142

(e) Local and Municipal—

Corporation of Madras .. .. ib.
Reform in the system of local self-government. ib.
The President of the Corporation of Madras .. 2143
Plague at Bezwada .. .. ib.
Municipal councillorship .. .. ib.
Local self-government 2144

(j) Salt and Abkári—

The rise in the price of salt .. .. .. ib.
Supplies to inspecting officers 2145

II.—Home Administration.

(k) General—

Brahmans and non-Brahmans .. .. .. ib.
Mr. V. S. Kasandikar 2147
The interment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues 2148
Closure of the District Presses .. .. .. ib.
Reforms in India .. .. ib.
The elected members in the Legislative Councils. 2150
The Madras Government and the non-Brahmans 2151
Sir Dinshaw Wacha's resignation .. .. ib.
The bureaucracy and the people in India .. ib.
The health of Mrs. Besant 2152
No Home Rule necessary for India .. .. ib.
A lesson from the Mesopotamia Commission Report .. .. ib.
A method of improving the swadeshi industries. ib.
The method of passive resistance .. .. ib.
The judicial and executive functions 2153
Manufacture of buttons .. .. ib.
Workmen's strikes and the Government .. ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.

The exodus to the hills 2154
Lottery chits in Kumbakonam .. .. .. ib.
Some suggestions .. .. ib.
Home Rule 2155
The Home Rule propaganda, a separate association 2156
Home Rule and the Government of India .. ib.
Home Rule to Scotland .. .. ib.
Home Rule to Goa .. .. ib.
Mr. Stubbs .. .. ib.
The Indian Defence Force 2157
Internment and prayers .. .. ib.
Commotion .. .. ib.
The people and the zamindars .. .. .. ib.
Letter of Mr. Trilochan, Principal of the Madanapalle College 2158
A helpless woman and War Fund .. .. ib.
Bifurcation of the Kistna district .. .. ib.
India and the Kaiser 2159
The Kaiser's plot .. .. ib.
Ships .. .. ib.
The Theosophical Society .. .. .. ib.
Import of Indian goods into England .. .. ib.
Sir Rabindranath .. .. ib.
Tilak 2160
The joint conference .. .. ib.
The Home Rule agitation .. .. .. ib.
Self-government .. .. ib.
Mr. Basu's appointment .. .. ib.
Self-government and vakils .. .. .. ib.
The goal of British Rule in India 2161
A very cruel act .. .. ib.
The condition of the Indians in the Transvaal. ib.
A farewell meeting in Bombay .. .. .. ib.
The speech of Lord Bishop of Madras .. .. ib.
A public meeting prohibited .. .. .. ib.
Parliamentary Committee 2162
The present political situation .. .. .. ib.
Nationality 2163
Colour distinction .. .. ib.
An inadequate punishment .. .. .. ib.
Mr. Tilak's birthday anniversary .. .. ib.
A meeting of the leaders in Bombay .. .. ib.
Duties of the leaders 2164
4th August 2165
Zamindars .. .. ib.
Letter of the Congress Committee 2166
India and the Colonies .. .. ib.
Swaraj .. .. ib.
Silence of Madras .. .. ib.
The amalgation of the Congress and the Muslim League 2168

III.—Legislation.

A Bill to amend the Madras Village Courts Act .. ib.
Divorce among Christians 2169

IV.—Native States.

Mysore .. .. ib.
The Native States .. .. ib.
The Travancore budget .. .. ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(d) Education.

1. In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 7th August, says:—"The Royal Commission on the Public Services in India have surrounded their precious gem of a proposal to perpetuate the present number of Europeans in the Public Services by a bewildering maze of high reasoning, the ultimate object of which is to show that a preponderating number of officers should be Europeans, whatever the qualifications of Indians may be. An example of the remarkably narrow and grossly unjust views taken by the Commission of the problems placed before them is afforded by their proposals in regard to the Educational Services. . . . There has been no department in India in which the presence of an overwhelming number of Europeans has been objected to by observers in England or in India than that of education. There has been an undeniable consensus of opinion regarding the injustice done to the sons of the soil and a Member of the Commission, who appears to have changed his opinion afterwards, had poured ridicule on the present system of the Imperial and Provincial Services. Of the disastrous results of such a flagrantly selfish policy, there have been responsible pronouncements. . . . The previous Education Commission had definitely urged the fitness of Indians to hold Inspectorships of Schools, a recommendation which has violently been departed from by the Government. . . . The considerations which the Commissioners suggest as qualifying the principle are revolting in character. . . . A franker and fuller explanation of what policy and efficiency consist in was due from a responsible Commission, and in its absence, and from the trend of the proposals actually made, the Indian public will have no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that the policy is one dictated by a desire partly to see European domination predominant and partly to hold students in check, and that efficiency consists in keeping out all but a few, comparatively speaking, out of the gates of the Universities. It is monstrous that any such irresponsible and disastrous notions should be allowed to dictate State-craft; and it is to be hoped, as much in the interests of good Government as in those of justice and equality, that the authorities will, in any decision that may ultimately be taken, show that they have been guided by no such short-sighted considerations. The Commission have opined that the present number of Europeans in the service is not excessive. This is a staggering statement utterly opposed to the views to which we have already referred. Indian education has suffered and is suffering under the tyranny of the experts and the sooner the tension of the situation is relieved the better. That is why evidently the Commission have suggested, in flagrant defiance of principles of commonsense and equity, that where a European and an Indian of the same abilities are available, preference should be given to the former. After such a barefaced recommendation, the Commission proceed to state that the proportion they have fixed 'will suffice to secure for Indians a fair start in the department, and we would go further in the direction of stereotyping racial proportion. These are always best avoided and particularly in a body of officers entrusted with the work of education'. This is clearly adding insult to injury. Of the so-called fairness of their scheme, the authors are not the proper judges and it is mischievous to say that they would not go further in fixing racial proportions after doing it in a manner greatly prejudicial to Indian interests and in gross violation of Queen Victoria's Proclamation and well-known Statutes of Parliament. Again the professed reason that such laying down of proportions in the case of officers engaged in educational work should be avoided comes with bad grace from a body which has, without any ceremony, torn that wise rule to pieces in practice. We do not intend to refer to other features of the Commission's recommendations at present,

The Educational Services.

Hindu, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

but the principles on which they have proceeded to perform their task are vicious in their nature and utterly out of date, if they had validity at any time. The only proper solution to the menace which is threatening the future of Indian education is the manning of the Service by Indians, a few special appointments being reserved, as recommended by Mr. Abdur Rahim, for recruitment from among the best persons available, either in India or in England."

(k) General.

South Indian Mail, Madura, July 30th, 1917.

The Government and the non-Brahmans.

2. In commenting on the speech delivered by Sir Alexander Cardew at the stone-laying ceremony of the Sowrashtra High School, Madura, the South Indian Mail, for the week ending 30th July, * observes:—"Sir Alexander Cardew is reported to have said, 'It was in order to testify to all of them and to the world generally the sympathy with which the Government regarded that important section of the non-Brahman community that he was glad to be there.' If that is so, the statement contains an important pronouncement as to the line of policy which the Government are resolved to carry out with regard to a question whose introduction into the current day politics of this Presidency has been largely if not solely instrumental in bringing about a cleavage which, if allowed to continue, is sure to affect the healthy growth of the public life in this Presidency if not in India. The word 'non-Brahman' has now been officially used and that, too at a public function such as the laying of the foundation-stone of an important educational institution. . . It is not within our purview to know exactly what Sir Alexander Cardew wanted to convey by that expression, which is of late used with such frequency and which is the source of much irritation and bitterness among the people in this Presidency. . . It has now become the fashion with the Governors of Provinces and responsible officials of Government to make pronouncements on the burning topics of the hour. In a way they are welcome as they enable the people to understand the line which the official policy is taking with regard to questions which are viewed in a different light by a majority of the non-officials or for the matter of that, by even a minority. What should be strongly condemned in such pronouncements is the use of certain sentiments or certain expressions which tend to create ill-feeling between the several classes of His Majesty's subjects. The expressions 'Brahman' and 'non-Brahman' come under that category at any rate at present, and we press on the attention of the authorities the desirability of expunging such objectionable expressions from the political vocabulary of the country. And the person, whoever he may be, must be held responsible not only morally but legally for the use of such expressions. . . We feel the country has a right to ask the distinguished knight for an explanation as to why he found it necessary to use that expression the evil consequences of which he could not be unaware."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

A Home Rule League resolution.

3. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 2nd August:—"A certain branch of the Home Rule League has passed a resolution calling upon the Madras Government to direct 'the immediate release' of the three interned. The resolution, we may assure our readers, is peremptorily worded, and passed, we have no doubt, in all seriousness. We sympathise with the feeling of our friends, but cannot help recalling to our mind the famous ultimatum sent up to the Eagle by the Jays—

Now yield up thine eyrie
Unto the carrion Kite;
Or else come valiantly and face
The Jays in deadly fight."

Non-Brahman, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

Mrs Besant.

4. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 2nd August, writes:—"We get some idea of the madness that has taken possession of the country when serious articles are written on the prohibition of the waving of the Besant flag in Ootacamund. Mrs. Besant is irrepressible and even when she is interned, she wants to make some noise. She invents a flag and centres agitation round it. She writes a letter to the Government of Madras and wants to create an agitation round it. The theosophists gather round her alleged remarks about theosophy and politics and howl like jackals. This is public life and this is our preparation for Home Rule. One gets disgusted. Let it be plainly understood that the Government is not at all willing to give Mrs. Besant any free advertisement. She is interned, and interned she shall be unless, of course, public agitation in India has any effect and she is let free. The latest howl is that her health is giving way because of the climate. Well, she chose Ootacamund. She could have chosen another climate. We are manufacturing sensations on a larger scale than munitions."

* Received on the 6th August 1917.

5. In a leader on this subject, Justice, of the 4th August, says:—"These fire-eaters (i.e., 'The Besantine Home Rulers') themselves are apparently climbing down, for we see that the proposal to start passive resistance, both as regards its principle and the method of its working, has been referred by the All-India Congress Committee to the various Provincial Congress Committees for opinion before coming to a final decision. This is one method of climbing down, but the fire-eaters are using plenty of bluff to cover their retreat. . . The significance of the fact that passive resistance was discussed by the Congress and Moslem League Committees is that these bodies are trying to bluff the Government. Our contemporary the Hindu is becoming an unconscious humourist, for it seriously points out in its leading article yesterday that the proposal of passive resistance has been engaging the attention of some Indians and, in support of this, quotes from its London correspondent the statement that a resolution was to be moved and discussed in London by Mr. R. K. Mallik on behalf of the Oxford Society that 'in the opinion of this House passive resistance is the only proper and efficient weapon that should be used in the struggle for the liberation of India.' If resolutions discussed at the London Indian Society or other Indian societies in England such as that of Edinburgh, Oxford or Cambridge are to be taken as evidence of the trend of Indian opinion we are afraid that Indians will be committed to many unpleasant opinions. . . Passive resistance embraces a good many things. Any opposition to Government short of an armed rebellion will come under passive resistance. In its mildest form we have seen it already adopted by some gentlemen in this Presidency. The writer once met an advanced politician in Southern India who was growing a beard, and asked him why he had taken to growing a beard. He replied that he had taken a vow never to shave or to get himself shaved till his country had attained swaraj. That is a kind of passive resistance which nobody will object to except perhaps the barbers. . . The more intense varieties of passive resistance may not meet with such unanimous approval. But, as we observed the other day, if passive resistance is to be adopted as a weapon in the fight of the Home Rulers against Government, Natesan—Ramaswami & Co. ought to begin. We hope they will not say like the Spanish Duke—

I led my army from the rear
I found it less exciting."

Justice, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The Congress and passive resistance.

6. In concluding a leader on this subject, the Cochin Argus, for the week ending 4th August, observes:—"Already, as one result of the present agitation, the Government and its officials are being exposed to contempt and gross misunderstanding, and, with passive resistance, this very unsatisfactory state of affairs may become very much more unpleasant and dangerous. Altogether, the situation is one which demands the very serious attention of the Government. It is not at all good for the country that a really small political party, pledged to what is politically impossible, should be allowed to carry on in the manner it is doing. Possibly, the action of the Madras Government in interning Mrs. Besant and her colleagues under a war measure was not perfectly legal and possibly too, learned lawyers will be able to prove that the Home Rule agitation has nothing unlawful or unconstitutional in it, even when it suggests, as one of its exponents suggested the other day, that the prayers of England for victory in the world-war are not being heard because they go up from unclean hearts and hands—unclean because Home Rule is being denied to India. It is, however, not merely a question of Cochin Argus, British Cochin, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The Government and the political situation.

legality or illegality. The peace, prosperity and progress of hundreds of millions of people are in growing jeopardy, and the responsible Government is morally bound to deal with the situation firmly and wholesomely. We fear this is not now being done."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

Writing under the heading "The Hour of Grace", New India, of the 7th August, states:—"It may well be that in their general ignorance of popular feeling, the bureaucracy may not realise the state of resentment now existing in the country. We were lately told by a high Indian official that he was alarmed at the terrible and growing bitterness which he found in the muffasal. A little more violence on the part of the bureaucracy, and the breach may be too wide to close. England will be forced to recognise how grossly her servants have misused their trust, and have turned a gentle and loving people into an angry and mistrustful nation. . . Now is the bureaucracy's hour of Grace, and they would do well to remember the old advice: 'Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him.' May the High Gods grant to our Rulers 'a wise and understanding heart'."

MALABAR HERALD, British Cochin, Aug. 4th, 1917.

7. The Malabar Herald, for the week ending 4th August, writes:—"Another member of New India staff has come to grief. He is one Vishnu Ragunath Karandikar of Satara, who has been directed by the Government of Madras, under the provisions of the Defence of India Act, to leave the Madras Presidency within 48 hours. In pursuance of this order he has left for Bombay. The process of elimination is, of course, very desirable at a time when every precaution should be taken to check any aggressive propaganda."

The expulsion order on V. R. Karandikar.

NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1917.

8. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 5th August, has the following:—"Of course New India is conducted with courage—'Salaam to our new captain!' is pasted all over the walls of the office. The new captain is, of course, Mr. Telang. His assistant has gone—Mr. Karandikar who is described by New India as a peculiar youth, with the mother's milk still reeking in his lips, a charming good boy who—well, who went about convening meetings for agitation. What a bad Government? So New India is boldly attacking it! By the bye, what ignorant people we are that we do not realise that theosophy has nothing to do with politics. 'Mr. Chamberlain has told a falsehood'! That is very brave indeed. 'Salaam to our new captain.'"

New India and the Government.

JUSTICE, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

9. Justice, of the 7th August, remarks:—"On Friday last a meeting was held in Bombay in honour of the two gentlemen who are to be in Madras to serve on the staff of New India in the place of the gentleman who had to leave Madras. It is clear from the speeches made at the gathering that it was a meeting of passive resisters. The two gentlemen who are coming to Madras, Messrs. Deobhanker and Shivarao, have declared their intention that if they are dealt with by the Madras Government in the same way as Mr. Karandikar was treated, they would disobey the orders of the Madras Government and face the consequences. The editor of the Bombay Chronicle, who presided on the occasion, spoke in the same strain and wanted 'the reactionary Government in Madras to understand that for every man from Bombay that they sought to strike down in this way, they would send two more men, or a hundred if necessary from Bombay, to take his place.' . . We do not know whether there is to be any public meeting in Madras formally to welcome the dauntless three. But what about Madras Home Rulers? Could they not find two men from among themselves to take the place of the gentleman who was turned out of Madras?"

The staff of New India.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 7th, 1917.

10. The West Coast Spectator, of the 7th August, remarks:—"Speaking the other day at the local Town Hall meeting, Mr. Evans is reported to have said that if everyone assembled there brought him half a dozen recruits, a Malayalee regiment would soon be formed. How true! But the fact is that the Malayalee is a sort of 'surprise packet'. He is loyal, but inert, locquacious like the Bengalee, but incapable of action, he makes resolutions, but they lie over like new year resolutions and above all, he has the Scot's liking for money.

The Indian Defence Force.

"His, and for the matter of that the Indian's, besetting sin is the 'shameless mendicancy' with which he asks the Government for help without making any effort at self-help. He expects the State to supply everything and blames it for his own faults. Were we men of action, a Malayalee regiment would have been formed long ago. The worst sinner in this respect is the aristocrat. He flourishes his 'stake in the country' theory in season and out of season, but expects others to guard these stakes. We should like to know how many aristocrats have joined the Defence Force, although many of them are keen upon getting fat berths for their sons and relations in the Public Service."

11. The following appears in New India of the 9th August:— NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

New India's call to passive resistance.

"The Rakhi-Band Bhai.

"In the old heroic days, when Rajput and Muslim battled together to the death, like gentlemen; when the Rajput put on the saffron robe and died, fighting to the last; when the Rajputni flung herself on the flaming pyre, that she might meet her husband stainless on the other side of death; in those days, when a woman was in sore need, it was the chivalrous custom that she should send to some hero a rakkhi, and on the receipt he became her Rakkhi-band brother, her knight, as he was called in the west, her chivalrous defender, and rushed to her rescue.

"Now it is no one woman, however dear, who calls for help. It is India, our mother to whom we have so often sung, our mother, at whose sacred feet we have bowed, crying 'Vande Mataram,' our mother, whom we profess to love. It is she, groaning under repression, her mouth gagged, her lovers interned, her servants menaced, her Rulers threatening her, England either deceived or indifferent. . . And so our mother calls, as Kurnavati called to Humayun, calls to Hindu and to Muslim, to Parsi and to Christian, to Buddhist, Jain and Sikh: 'Come, children of my womb, and sacrifice yourselves for my freedom, not in the old way of bodily combat, but in the even more heroic way of sacrifice; put forth your soul-force, as my son Madan Mohan bade you, as my son Gandhi will guide you; use your spiritual weapons of steadfastness, of endurance, of passive resistance, and show the western world how an eastern nation can break her chains, freeing her oppressors as well as herself, and delivering the empire from the strain of autocracy.

"So speaks our mother, and from her prison house she stretches out her hand, and in it is her old symbol of her Rakkhi, the chivalrous symbol of her elder days, worn alike by Hindu and by Muslim, the pledge of perfect devotion and of sacrifice."

12. In a leader on this subject, New India, of the 9th August, observes:— NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

Respect for law.

"Many of us think that Mrs. Annie Besant is somewhat fanatical in her respect for law; yet we have heard her say with regard to the Defence of India Act that she believes it to be illegal—as being beyond the powers of a dependent legislature—and knows it to be immoral, so that she only obeys it as a matter of expediency and force majeure. . . Under the conditions which prevail in India, the respect for law felt by Mrs. Besant is impossible. Even in the ordinary criminal law, racial distinctions are made; a magistrate sentences an Indian to flogging for petty offences punished by brief imprisonment for a white man. Privileges of trial may be claimed by an Englishman which are not available for an Indian. But apart from these distinctions, the whole bulk of coercive legislation fails to fulfil the primary conditions of law in a civilised community, and has undermined that respect for law which is essential for the welfare of the State.

"Most of this legislation has been passed without the consent of even a fraction of the people. The Indian Press Act and the Defence of India Act were passed after a powerless minority of representatives was elected, in the face of protests and rejected amendments, and with the help of Government assurances and pledges, which have since proved to be absolutely worthless. Both are believed to be unconstitutional as beyond the power of a dependent legislature, and the latter has been wrested from its pretended nature as a war measure to a weapon of political repression, and applied to such innocent persons as Messrs. Marathi and Karandikar.

"This legislation is vague, indeterminate, and uncertain, leaving the executive to create the offences it punishes; and since the determination of the offence depends upon the whim of the various Governors in Council, no man can know that he has offended against the Statute, until he is punished under it. In Madras city, processions are forbidden, but pass unnoticed in the muffasal. In Madras Presidency people are interned, while much more violent speeches and attacks on Government are allowed in Bombay and the United Provinces than were made by them. In Madras Presidency meetings are prohibited, while in Bombay Presidency they are permitted. In Delhi a meeting is prohibited; in the Punjab a similar meeting is allowed, but any reference to it is prohibited in the press; in Bengal a meeting to be called by the Sheriff of Calcutta on the requisition of leading citizens, to be presided over by one of the most eminent lawyers, is prohibited. Mr. Karandikar is banished from Madras Presidency, but can carry on redoubled activity in Bombay. In Madras a swadeshi meeting is prohibited, in Bombay an educational. In this welter of contradictions, where is law? The discretion of the Executive replaces the fiat of law; the administration of law varies with local boundaries. All legal safeguards are swept away, and liberty and property are at the mercy of the Executive. Mrs. Besant is deprived of liberty and ruined financially without charge made, evidence produced, or defence allowed; a campaign of calumny and vilification is carried on against her, and a Minister of the Crown uses the platform of the House of Commons to misrepresent her, in the face of the world, without any investigation, while she is gagged by the 'man on the spot'. How can we respect law when the example of disregard of law and justice is set by those who should be its upholders? . . . Will not the English people and the English Parliament interfere, and sweep away all this unconstitutional, discretionary, coercive legislation, and restore to the Indian nation the possibility of rebuilding respect for law?"

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

13. In commenting in almost the same strain as the Swadesamitran of the 16th June—abstracted in paragraph 19 of Report No. 26 of 1917—on the hardships caused to the Indians travelling between India and Ceylon by the new passport rule, the Vaisyamitran, of the 16th July, details the inconveniences caused especially to the Nattukkottai Chetti community by this rule, and prays that the Government will take an interest in this matter and secure the necessary facilities for travelling between India and Ceylon, by cancelling certain undesirable features of this rule.

The passport rule in Ceylon.

Vaisyamitran, Devakota, July 16th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 8th August, expresses its thanks to the Ceylon Government for having abolished the passport rule which was causing great hardship to travellers between India and Ceylon and remarks:—The people are bound to feel grateful to the Government of Ceylon for the trouble which they took in this matter realising the feelings of the people. The abolition of the passport rule now shows that there was no necessity for it at all even before. Thus a hasty decision of the Government of India has been the cause of unnecessary annoyance and expenditure to a large number of people. If the authorities had understood the condition of the people, they would have never introduced such a rule. We appreciate the sympathy evinced by the Government of Ceylon in this matter, as soon as they heard of the hardships suffered by the people, and the efforts made by the Indians in Ceylon to secure the sympathy of that Government. Though the agitation of the people for getting their grievances redressed causes the displeasure of the authorities here, it is a fact to be noted that such agitation evokes sympathy in Ceylon.

The passport rule in Ceylon.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

14. The Swadesamitran, of the 2nd August, reproduces in Tamil a communication appearing in the Commonweal on the problems connected with the conclusion of peace.

The prospect of peace.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

15. The Andhraprakasika, of the 30th July, says in its leader:—We regret to say that the course of war last week was not favourable to the Allies. This is due to the faithlessness of the Russian forces in Galicia, who have turned their backs. If the present unfavourable situation in Galicia should continue for some days more, the prosecution of war by the Allies would to some extent suffer. The world never dreamed that the Russian revolution would be so very disastrous, and that the cunning Germans would be so very vigilant in their efforts to influence them. It must be said that Russia is now in a perilous condition. Every one wants to rule. No one appears to have come forward to bring all the Russians to adopt one course. The Russians think that if they make a separate peace with Germany they can happily enjoy self-government at home. It is this idea that has spoiled the situation in Galacia and is bringing dishonour. . . It is this idea that necessitates the Allies to change their war plans, and make them surrender the Galacian territory to the enemy. . . It is this idea that made the Russians flee into their boundaries, surrendering all the advantageous positions to the enemy. . . It is this that will keep up the war even to the end of 1919. But there is no need to fear. As the people have begun to approve of the new Russian Government's actions, military experts state that the Russians will give up their internal quarrels, their cowardice and their desire to enter into a separate treaty with the Germans, and will help the Allies as hitherto.

The war.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 31st July, reports Mr. Ashmead Bartlet to have written:—If the help of the American forces be secured in time, the enemy can be easily driven from France and Belgium. If that cannot be secured, the terrible war that has been going on for the past two years will without doubt continue for a year more. . . It does not appear that the Germans will quit their positions during this summer, but in the winter they may surely turn back. . . The enemy will do their best to retain Belgium and Antwerp by all means which may lead to another terrible war in France. . . It is to be doubted if peace will be concluded before 1918.

The war.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

The war.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, says:—Perhaps on account of the influence of the Russians, certain Russian troops and Associations in Russia are against the prosecution of the war Certain batallions kept idle, unwilling to fight with the enemy. It was at one time decided to vest all authority in Kerenski and maintain the discipine of the troops. But no good came out of this. The Russians having deliberately withdrawn from the Galician theatre, the enemy made some advance, and occupied some important positions. If the Russians had, at least at one place, steadily fought with the enemy, such reverses might have been averted. . . The strange situation in Galicia has been a source of anxiety to the Allies.

Turkey which is known as the invalid of Europe has lost much of its territory; and lies prostrate. . . Last week the loss from the submarines appears to have been somewhat great.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

The war.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th August, says:—The events in the Russian theatre are not encouraging. It is plain that the reason for this is the treacherous conduct of the troops. . . The future of Russia is in the hands of Kerenski. It is to be regretted that Brusiloff has resigned his commandership. Recently, he wrenched some portion of Galicia from the enemy. He is a distinguished Russian Commander. On account of the withdrawal of the Russian army, his victories have proved to be of no use. . . The enemy is every day losing in material and the Allies are gaining in it day by day. Though on account of the change in the Russian theatre, the war may prolong for some time more, there are plain indications that the Allies will gain the victory.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The war.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 8th August, writes:—The Austrian Emperor demanded that the culprits in the Serajevo murder should be tried and punished. Russia promised help to Servia and obviated the opportunity of punishing the offenders. Servia was laid waste. Russia, which forms nearly a half of Europe, is also approaching similar destruction. A writer asks whether this is not due to the hand of Fate. It is thought in some quarters that the Russian revolution is due to Russia's having proved false to the Allies and secretly gone over to the side of Germany, and that the whole country is about to be destroyed in consequence. Let that pass. No one can prevent his misdeeds from recoiling on his own head. The present condition of Europe makes this clearer than ever.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The Irish Convention.

16. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th July, in its leader on the Irish problem, observes:—. . . The Ulster leaders do not like that the powers of the Irish people should increase. Their selfishness is the only cause. They are afraid that they will lose their exalted position if Ireland gets Home Rule. They, therefore, frustrate all attempts for granting Home Rule to Ireland. Their position in Ireland may be compared to that of the Anglo-Indians in India. . . When the agitation in Ireland became intense the Government tried the nationalists on a charge of sedition. Mr. Parnel was sent to prison several times. In order to suppress agitation it became necessary to check liberty of speech and of the press. Restraints are usually imposed during the time of liberals. Even such a liberal Prime Minister as Mr. Gladstone was obliged to have recourse to repressive measures. . . Many persons grew despondent. They went to America and to the colonies and became wealthy there. But the Irish problem was ever agitating their minds. Some of the nationalists in Ireland became extremists, and taking a vow not to help the English Government, declined seats in the Parliament and took to educating the people. The rest joined Sin-feiners and, not satisfied with constitutional measures, resorted to anarchical methods, aspiring for complete autonomy for Ireland. . . Mr. Asquith undertook the work of solving the Irish problem.

And Mr. Bonar Law and Mr. Carson, the Ulster leaders, determined to frustrate the attempts of Mr. Asquith. They were ready to rebel, and, to openly attack the army of the Government, they trained the Ulster armies. And in opposition to them the nationalists trained their volunteers. While both parties were thus training their soldiers in open defiance of law, Mr. Asquith was calmly waiting for an opportune time. Observing these internal dissensions the Germans waged war with England believing that that was the opportune moment for them to bring about the dismemberment of the English Empire. The nationalists immediately manifested their loyalty by giving up agitation. The Ulster party also undertook to render help in the prosecution of the war. Factions then disappeared. The nationalists were waiting with great hopes that Home Rule will be granted to them soon. They were again disappointed. . . In Ireland the power of the Sin-feiners increased and an attempt was made for establishing a democratic form of Government. The movement was for the time being put down, but the influence of responsible leaders, like Redmond, was at an end. The indignation of the Irish people in America and in colonies increased. Ever since the Americans joined the Allies they have been sending messages to England stating that unless the Irish problem is satisfactorily solved it would not be possible to manage the affairs of the war conveniently. The English statesmen also recognised the importance of the Irish problem and established the Irish Convention. The Obrien party and the Sin-feiners refused to take part in this convention. To pacify them Irish rebels were released from the prisons, but they did not agree to an amicable settlement of the affairs. They declared that. . . the intention of the Government in convening the convention was only to show to the world that there were disputes prevailing amongst the Irish. Mr. Obrien says that the opinions of all must be obtained and a form of Government decided according to the opinion of the majority; while the Sin-feiners say that all the Irish electorate should be asked to meet and consider the question, and that, if a majority are agreed, the assembly should have power to grant complete autonomy. These are not satisfied with Home Rule; they want complete autonomy. . . Though the Government has made such convenient arrangements, why is it that the extremists amongst the Irish are not satisfied? The Government did not act in time. The popular despondency increased and the time when people can be satisfied with mere Home Rule passed away. It was only then that attempts were made to solve the Home Rule problem. Just as it is conducive to health to take medicine immediately after the disease has made its appearance, it is highly incumbent on the Government to apply the remedy before discontent spreads. Soon after the Boer War in South Africa the right of self-government was granted to the Boers who were bitter enemies. It was this far-sighted policy that induced the Boer Generals Botha and Smuts, who sided with the enemy and fought against the English, to help the British Government at this critical juncture. . . As attempts have not been made till now to manage the Irish problem with similar magnanimity it has become complicated. We, however, wish that English statesmanship will rise to the occasion, satisfy the Irish people, put down internal dissensions, and establish the banner of victory.

17. The Ravi, of the 2nd August, says.—The new Russian Republic is disgracing itself before the world. If it goes on doing so, the Russians will lose everything they gained by establishing the Republic. But that same Republic thinks that this is the time to flee before their enemy and allow him to enter the country unopposed. The Russian soldiers have deliberately disobeyed orders and decided not to oppose the enemy. . . Some traitors in the Russian army have thus turned a victory into a defeat.

The Russians.

Ravi, Cocanada, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

While giving a summary of war in connection with Russia, very much to the same effect as the article abstracted supra from the Andhrapatrika, weekly of the 1st August, the Desamata, of the 1st August, says:—In the Russian theatre, the enemy cannot at present be steadfastly withstood. Though the Russian rebellion has been a source of disadvantage to the Allies in some measure, the British and the French ministers do not regret it, because the Americans have joined them. They think that they can gain the victory without the help of the Russians.

The Russians.

Desamata, Rajahmundry, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, Aug. 3rd, 1917.

18. The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd August, has the following in a leader under this heading:— . . . The Tsarina of Russia is said to have somehow obtained from the War Minister's office the news of Lord Kitchener's voyage to Russia, and communicated it to the Germans, who waylaid and drowned his ship. As for the Tsar, he is said to have been secretly negotiating with the Germans for a peace. Had it not been for the murder of the false Saint Rasafuttin and the revolution, it is supposed that he would have unquestionably made a separate peace with the Kaiser and seriously compromised the safety of the Allies. . . . After the war, the Tsar and his queen, it is believed, will be tried for treason. If they are found guilty, they undoubtedly deserve any punishment.

A treach of friendship.

Vrittanta Patrike, Mysore, Aug. 9th, 1917.

19. The Vrittanta Patrike, of the 9th August, in an optimistic survey of the past three years of war, says that it is generally believed that the war will end in a revolution in Germany similar to the one which took place in Russia, leading to the triumph of the Allies. The paper concludes with an exhortation to the people to continue to help the Allies' cause by enlisting in larger numbers and providing funds for a more vigorous prosecution of the war.

The third anniversary of the war.

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore, Aug. 8th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 8th August, in a similar optimistic review says that despite the Kaiser's swaggering, there are abundant signs everywhere that the enemy finds himself totally exhausted in every quarter, that neither his air-raids nor his submarine campaign has had the results he expected, and that there can be no doubt that the recent prophecy of a Japanese astrologer predicting the close of the war by the end of this year and the triumph of the Allies will come true.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 26th, 1917.

20. The Qaumi Report, of the 26th July, writes:—It was generally hoped that after the exit of the Tsar the deplorable condition of Russia would all be changed, but, after the revolution rebellion broke out and put an end to all hope of security and tranquility. Unrest, recklessness and impotence have taken possession of Russia and she has deliberately severed the bonds of unity and concord.

The condition of Russia after the Tsar.

The condition of Russia is like that of a sickman whose case is not hopeless, but whose existence makes the living despair of him. In France the heroic British and French, inspired by mutual affection, are freely sacrificing their lives, while Russia is dancing at the behest of the wily war fiend!

This dance, however, is but the convulsive movements of a slaughtered beast, or the hopping and flopping of a fowl with its throat cut, and not something which it enjoys itself or affords pleasure to the spectators.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

21. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 2nd August, writes:—Up to the present many diviners and astrologers have foretold the duration of the war. but their prognostications have not come true. Many experts in the art of war have expressed opinions on the subject, but with similar unsatisfactory results. If the late Lord Kitchener, who said at the beginning of the war that it would last three years, had lived, he would have endeavoured to terminate the war. The result of this worldwide war is that thousands of women have been made widows, countless children made orphans, hundreds of thousands of people rendered homeless, and many have been reduced to a state of starvation. In a word, every one is complaining about the war, cursing the Kaiser and his heir. All eyes are gazing at the firmament of peace and watching for the appearance of the crescent moon of reconciliation. Our Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George, is ready today to conclude peace, if Germany evacuates most of her captured positions. We do not know, however, how much more innocent blood Germany wishes to shed.

"When will there be peace?"

At any rate, we can say this much that the war will soon end, because the condition of Germany and her Allies has already become serious.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

22. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 31st July, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—One of the greatest and most memorable events of the present war occurred a year ago, when the Sharif of Mecca declared war on the Ottoman Government, threw off the Turkish yoke and assumed the title of King of Arabia.

"The new king of Arabia."

The name of this new King is H.M. Hussain Ibn-i-Ali. When the Sharif assumed the title of King of Arabia or King of the Hijaz both Great Britain and France accorded their recognition thereto.

The area of the territory under his authority is about a million square miles parallel to the coast of the Red Sea.

The Al-Kibla (a newspaper published at Mecca) states that when the Grand Sharif was proclaimed King of Arabia there were present to celebrate the event thousands of Arabs among whom were Shaikhs from all the tribes and neighbouring provinces. The King on this occasion issued a proclamation. All listened to it with wrapt attention and hailed him with the greatest enthusiasm.

The same paper says that all the tribes are zealous and enthusiastic in their support of the King of Arabia, and it expresses the hope that every man will manifest his joy at the release of the Arab from the Turkish yoke and exert himself for the good of the people and the attainment of their aims.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

23. Referring to the Trichinopoly riot, the Andhraprakasika, of the 1st August, says that if the police had shown some dash and daring before the sepoys broke into the theatrical hall, they could not have had access to it. It regrets that the police had not shown sufficient firmness and courage.

The Trichinopoly riot.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Adverting to the transfer of the case against some sepoys, who created a disturbance in a theatre at Trichinopoly recently to the file of the Sub-Collector of Karūr from that of the Head-quarters Deputy Collector at Trichinopoly, the Hindu Nesan, of the 8th August, remarks:—It looks as if an Indian will not do to try even Indian sepoys. These sepoys do not seem to have calmed down yet. It appears three sepoys were handed over to the Military authorities for having gone to Srīrangam without passports on the 4th instant. If sepoys are let loose like this even after the recent disturbance, we do not know how the panic of the people can be allayed.

The riot in Trichinopoly.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The Desamata, of the 1st August, contains details about the Trichinopoly riot.

The Trichinopoly riot.

Desamata, Rajahmundry, Aug. 1st, 1917.

24. Referring to the decision of the Government to provide quarters to the sub-inspectors, the Manorama, of the 7th August, points out that the buildings proposed to be constructed in Malabar should be such as will suit the convenience of the Malayali sub-inspectors, most of whom belong to respectable families, but thinks that this scheme should be put off till the end of the war on account of the present financial difficulties and of the fact that it can be carried out at considerably less expenditure after peace is concluded, and observes that an amount, equal to half the interest on the proposed outlay, may be devoted to the granting of a "house allowance" to the sub-inspectors.

Sub-inspectors' quarters.

Manorama, Calicut, Aug. 7th, 1917.

(b) Courts.

25. The Kerala Patrika, of the 4th August, points out that, as there is none at present on the High Court Bench, who is well acquainted with Malabar affairs, the appointment of Mr. C. Krishnan as a temporary Judge of the High Court will be particularly pleasing to the Malayalis, and hopes that he will be given an extension at the end of the term of his present appointment.

The Madras High Court.

Kerala Patrika, Calicut, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The Manorama, of the 7th August, also expresses joy at the appointment of Diwan Bahadur C. Krishnan Avargal as a temporary Judge of the Madras High Court, in which, it hopes, he will soon be confirmed.

The Madras High Court.

Manorama, Calicut, Aug. 7th, 1917.

Qaumi Ikhwan, Madras, July 29th, 1917.

26. The Qaumi Report, of the 29th July, comparing the number of Muhammadan vakils and barristers at present enrolled with that of previous years, says that during the time of the late Justice Boddam there were only two or three Muhammadan vakils and no barrister at all, but that at present, in the time of Justice Abdur Rahim, there are many vakils and barristers. But the question is what advantage have the Muhammadans derived from their desire for legal knowledge during the period of nineteen years from 1898 to 1917.

What it has come to. (The fate of the Muhammadans of Madras.)

It appears there are at present two Muhammadan vakils and two barristers. One of these barristers is employed as an Assistant Professor in the Law College and the other holds the office of Assistant Registrar of the High Court.

In the city of Madras itself only one barrister and three vakils are practising; the others are obliged to remain in the districts. Perhaps, in consideration of the fact of one Muhammadan B.L. (Khan Bahadur Muhammad Osman) recently becoming the Collector of a district, the success of Muhammadan vakils is praiseworthy or, at any rate, interesting. But several Hindu vakils have been appointed Judges of the High Court.

The fate of Muhammadan vakils, however, seems to limit their exaltation to the lowest heaven of a Collectorship. In fact, no Muhammadan vakil has found a place in the realm of Acting Judgeships. At present there is a vacancy of an Acting Judge for which Brahmans, non-Brahmans and Indian Christians are putting forward their claims. Perhaps it is out of place for us to have referred to the High Court, while there are four benches in the City Civil Court and Small Cause Court on which no Muhammadan has ever found a seat!

(d) Education.

Dravidan, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

27. Referring to the comments of the Madras Times that a "Rajkumar College" should be established in Madras but that the Government should not render any financial aid to it, the Dravidan. of the 30th July, writes:—

The Rajkumar College, Madras.

It is doubtful whether a college established exclusively for the sons and relations of the rich people can thrive. Again, the present system of education is productive of great evil, as its object is indeed to enable students to pass examinations and enter Government service. This system greatly tells upon the health of the students and many of them do not acquire sound education in the end. However, this system of education, in spite of all its defects, has necessarily to be followed by those who expect to find a livelihood thereby, and they are obliged to pass the school final, intermediate and B.A. examinations in order. But there is no such necessity in the case of zamindars and other rich men. These may study soley for the sake of education. It is, therefore, highly necessary that a few at least, who can afford to be exempted, may be exempted from the present unsatisfactory courses of study. There is no doubt that the proposed Rajkumar College will be highly useful if it is conducted on the right lines. We wish that this college should not blindly be worked on the lines of other Rajkumar colleges in India, and we trust that our benign Government will make the necessary arrangements for the zamindars and the rich people to avail themselves of the advantages of real education. Further, as these institutions are mostly intended for zamindars, they should themselves bear their cost. This indeed is the proper arrangement. But in the present condition of the country, the Government may desire to have control over every college. If the Government similarly desire to exercise control over the proposed Rajkumar College also, they would help it with grants. However, the large sum required for that college will have to be advanced by the zamindars alone.

Dravida Patrika, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

The Dravida Patrika, of the 1st August, echoes the sentiments of the Hindu of the 24th July on the question of the establishment of a college for the sons and relations of the zamindars of this Presidency.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

28. Adverting to the order of the Kolhapur State in the Bombay Presidency, directing the introduction of free and compulsory primary education in the State with effect from the Compulsory primary education.

28th September 1917, the Swadesamitran, of the 1st August, observes that even after leaving out of consideration States such as Baroda and Mysore wherein free and compulsory primary education has already been introduced, if such minor States as Kolhapur also leave British India behind in this matter, it cannot be a matter of pride for any one.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

Compulsory education.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 6th August, says :—Baroda takes the foremost place in the territories in India which have introduced the system of compulsory education. In Mysore also, the Maharaja is evincing keen interest in spreading elementary education. Such arrangements have not yet been made in the Madras and the Bombay Presidencies.

Lokopakari, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

Students and political meetings.

29. Referring to the punishment inflicted by the authorities on certain students in Amroati in the Central Provinces for having attended a public meeting held at that place on the 10th ultimo for celebrating the birthday of Mr. Bal Gangadar Tilak, the Lokopakari, of the 6th August, remarks :—The unruly conduct of the present-day students will not be conducive to the welfare of the country. No moral instruction is given in our colleges, and the education imparted therein is a lifeless one. That is why students disobey their parents and elders, and becoming spoilt in various ways come to be seditionists. It is the present-day education that is responsible for all this. If the condition of education improves in our country, the condition of the country will also improve.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug 1st, 1917.

Students and politics.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, reports the Indian Patriot to have written as follows on this subject :—It is impossible to remove the Indian students who are immersed in political literature, from the political affairs of their motherland. In the societies attached to colleges in England, students are trained to take part in the political life of their country. But when Anglo-Indians, especially those who form the bureaucracy, come to India, they brush aside the noble Anglo-Saxon traditions and become a separate Brahman caste. The difference between the Brahmans in India and these bureaucrat Brahmans lies only in colour. A former Secretary of State for India stated when he was a Rector that students should take an intelligent part in politics.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

Teaching of English in Secondary schools.

30. Referring to the members invited to attend a conference to be held at Simla at the end of this month for the purpose of determining the best method of teaching English in Secondary schools, the Hindu Nesan, of the 8th August, observes :—While the Directors of Public Instruction in Madras, Bombay, Bengal, United Provinces and the Punjab have been invited to this conference, there is no reason why the Directors of Public Instruction in Behar, Central Provinces and Assam should not attend the conference. Our opinion is that the Director of Public Instruction of Baluchistan also should have been invited to this conference. Instead of inviting the Director of Public Instruction of every Province to this conference, it should have been better if the Principals or Vice-Principals of the Training Colleges in each Province had been invited.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Educational reform.

31. Referring to the educational reform proposed by Mr. Fisher in England requiring that the type of education which should be given to a child should depend on the kind of atmosphere to which it belongs, and that the rural folk should have a kind of practical education which is different from that which urban residents would require, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 10th August, remarks that it behoves the authorities in India, too, to consider that the kind of education which is imparted in village schools should not have a tendency to create a love of luxury among the simple rustic children and that steps should be taken to ensure that the spread of education among rural folk does not mar their present rustic simplicity and that the education they get should only bring them practical knowledge without destroying their frugal habits.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

The national devotion of a Muhammadan lady.

32. The Qaumi Report, of the 1st August, writes :—The Muhammadan community has always had this grievance in connection with the Government Muhammadan Hobart School, viz, that the headmistress was not a Muhammadan. The Government have, however, raised the institution to the grade of a High School and sanctioned the appointment of a Muhammadan lady, as headmistress, on a salary of Rs. 200 a month.

Apparently it has been found impossible to secure the services of an educated Muhammadan lady in Southern India, and we expected that some one from Northern India would be selected. It is a matter of great pleasure to find that our respected and learned sister, Mrs. Mazharuddin, the wife of Mr. Mazharuddin, Personal Assistant to the Postmaster-General of Madras, has accepted the post and undertaken the task of educating and training our girls. This is the first example of national devotion in Southern India on the part of a respectable and a highly cultured Muhammadan lady.

The Hobart School has really now become a Muhammadan institution, and Mrs. Mazharuddin will, by virtue of her ability and spiritual influence, infuse the religious spirit into the school. On behalf of the community, we congratulate and felicitate our talented sister on her appointment. In rendering Muslim girls this service she has done what no man in Southern India could possibly do.

We shall return to this subject on some future occasion.

(e) Local and Municipal.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Corporation of Madras.

33. Anent the attitude of Mr. Molony, the President of the Madras Corporation, in the matter of convening a special meeting to reconsider the question of the removal of the office of the Corporation Special Engineer to the Ripon Buildings, the Dravida Patrika, of the 1st August, quotes the comments of the Madras Times criticising the action of the President, and observes that his conduct in slighting the Commissioners is a great blunder, and that the Commissioners should not hesitate to make him realise the blunders he has committed.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Corporation of Madras.

The Dravidan, of the 1st August, reproduces in Tamil the substance of the comments of Justice in its leader of the 31st ultimo on the observations made by the Madras Mail on the present state of affairs in the Corporation of Madras.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 30th, 1917.

The Madras Corporation.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 30th July, says :—In regard to the matter referred to Mr. Molony by the Commissioners on the 20th June, it is published in the papers that the meeting will be held on the 30th October. It is regrettable that the President not only failed up to now to convene the special meeting that the Commissioners requested him to convene to consider the question of the location of the Engineer's office, but, after a delay of one month, has passed an order directing the Engineer to enter into a rental agreement with the owner of his office building and has intimated that the meeting will be held on the 30th October.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Reform in the system of local self-government.

34. Adverting to the proceedings of the Local and Municipal Conference which was recently held at Bombay under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel, the Swadesamitran, of the 1st August, writes :—On a perusal of the resolutions passed at this conference, it is apparent that the defects in the local self-governing institutions in all the provinces in India are of the same nature. These institutions were originally established to train the people in the administration of the country. It was because of a doubt on the part of the Government that the people might perhaps not understand the proper procedure in conducting administration, they thought that some officials also should be present in these institutions and framed the law accordingly. But as these officials began to conduct all affairs according to their will, the opinion of the people could not prevail in these institutions. Lord Ripon realised that this was not fair, and suggested a curtailment of the influence of the officials. In pursuance of this opinion, a Municipal Act was framed in each Province in 1884. However, local and municipal administration has to this day been conducted only according to the opinion of the Government officials. Opinion has for some time been growing strong that this should no longer continue. The resolution of the Bombay Conference strongly urging that all the members in the local self-governing institutions should be elected, is indeed a sign of the times. Will it suffice, if all these institutions become entirely representative in their character? It is only when they have adequate funds that they can satisfactorily conduct all the duties entrusted to them. The conference, therefore, urged that these institutions should be allowed to share the income derived from a tax which yields an increasing revenue every year. The Government have realised that the income of these institutions is insufficient and are helping them with grants year after year. But the amount given by the Government is not always a fixed one. Therefore, these institutions can undertake any work only in proportion to the grant they receive every year, and cannot take any work of a long duration, relying on these grants. Some say that municipalities and local boards may levy new taxes sufficient to meet their expenditure. Though it is necessary that the representatives of the people should have power to levy small taxes, the existing taxes are by themselves more than what the people can bear and a new tax will be felt irksome indeed. As these institutions have to look after part of the duties of the Government such as education, improvement of sanitation, etc., the Government should either allow these institutions to have a share of the revenue derived from a tax or contribute towards a portion of their expenditure. In an order on the subject of local self-government, issued during the time of Lord Hardinge by the Government of India, it was stated that their object was to impove local self-government, that their ideal was indeed to keep aloof from interfering with the work of such institutions, relying greatly on the non-official nembers thereof and that there should be no fear of mistakes occurring. Now that the laws connected with the local self-government are about to be amended in every Province, no mistakes whatever could occur, if the Governments would only follow the above principles in making the amendments, so as to rely upon the popular representatives and entrust them boldly with powers. If the suggestions made by the Bombay Conference, that there should be a Central Board to supervise the work of the local self-governing institutions, that the Government member should be the President thereof and that representatives from these institutions should have seats on it, are incorporated by the Government in the draft Bill under contemplation, the objects of the Government of India noted above will be fulfilled.

35. The Swadesamitran, of the 8th August, expresses its satisfaction at the appointment of Mr. T. Vijayaragava Achariyar as the President of the Corporation, and adds:—Till now it is only Civilians, and that only European Civilians, that used to be appointed to this post. So it is a matter of gratification that the Government have appointed an Indian now, judging him on his merits alone without caring for the excessive cry raised by some and without deeming his being a Brahman and a Deputy Collector to be disqualifications for his occupying this position. We anxiously wait to see whether our Governor will act upon the same principle in making other executive appointments.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The President of the Corporation of Madras.

36. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, says with reference to plague breaking out at Bezwada:—If plague takes a firm root at Bezwada, the whole Presidency will be ruined. The Government should appoint some more Sanitary Inspectors and take due precaution. I hope the people also will co-operate with the Government.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Plague at Bezwada.

The same paper says in a leaderette:—The Government and the Municipality should take due precaution that the plague at Bezwada does not spread. If the rains set in, it will be difficult to stamp it out. Unless doctors examine those coming from Hyderabad, they should not be allowed to enter the town. We hope the disease will soon be stamped out.

37. A correspondent to the Kistnapatrika, of the 4th August, comically writing about the Masulipatam Municipality, answers the question "Why is it that all big-wigs so much long

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Municipal councillorship.

to secure municipal councillorship ?", as follows :—Because their names are published in the gazette, and if at any time the Governor visits the place they may shake hands with His Excellency. . . Generally most of the councillors own considerable property within the municipal limits and they have taxes, etc., to pay. Understand what I mean. . . Licenses for rice mills may be granted to our people. . . If appeals against the levy of professional tax is received we may have it cancelled. . . If a culvert is required we may get it sanctioned. . We may get lamp-posts fixed close to our houses. . . We may get our relatives appointed to posts. These are some of the numerous advantages one may gain by being appointed as a Municipal Councillor.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Local self-government.

38. In continuation of an article in a previous issue complaining of the action of the President of the Madras Corporation regarding the question of removing the office of the Corporation Engineer to the municipal buildings, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 4th August, dwelling on the subject at greater length, proceeds to observe that almost everywhere in the administration of the municipalities and local boards, the non-official members, both elected and nominated, are no better than either puppets or figure heads, and urges that the Municipal and Local Boards Acts should be revised so as to make the privilege of self-government more real than it is at present.

(j) Salt and Abkāri.

DESABHIMANI, Cuddalore, July 28th, 1917.

The rise in the price of salt.

39. The Desabhimani, of the 28th July, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran, of the 26th idem on the rise in the price of salt, abstracted on page 2098 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

The rise in the price of salt.

Adverting to the recent rise in the price of salt and the interview which the South Indian Chamber of Commerce had with the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter, the Swadesamitran, of the 31st July, writes:—It is the duty of the Government to see that salt is available at a low price. As it can be manufactured only by them or by others with their permission, they are in a position to make it sell at a fixed rate. It is, therefore, strange that the price should have risen to As. 4 per measure. As stated by the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter, this increase in price was due to a compact among the merchants. It is said that, as the outturn of salt was low during the last few years, it was not possible to sell the salt manufactured in the Government salt-pans at a fixed rate. The Government thought that the merchants would stock both the salt manufactured by them and that manufactured by the licensed manufacturers and raise its price, and began therefore to sell it in auction instead of selling it at a fixed rate. Excluding the tax, it will indeed suffice, if it were sold at 3 annas per maund. But on the first day of auction the price per maund rose to Re. 1-1-0 and on the second day to Rs. 2-8-0. On the third day a large quantity was therefore offered for sale, but there was a fall in the price. Those who had bought the salt on the first two days by raising its price had consequently to sell it in retail at a lower rate. When they found out that they could not realise even half the cost price paid by them, they submitted a petition to the Board of Revenue requesting to be exempted from the conditions of sale. The Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter says that he is not going to grant their prayer, as they have by a compact raised the price in auction with the intention of causing hardship to the people by enhancing the price. It is true that the merchants have caused hardship to the people. But as salt was not available for them for about two months prior to the date of auction, it might have been their intention to stock the quantity adequate to meet the demands of the retail dealers, who used to purchase from them. We expect that the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter would consider this and also the difficulty in securing the required number of railway waggons, and see that the merchants are not put to great loss.

It appears from what the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter has said that this condition has arisen merely because the Government had not sufficient stock of salt on hand. But why had they not a sufficient stock ? The Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter says that the outturn was low. This is wrong. Sufficient salt is manufactured here to meet the demands of this Presidency. But it was only when the Madras salt began to be sold in other provinces such as Bengal and Burma, the outturn became insufficient for the demands of this Presidency.

It is indeed wrong that the Board of Revenue made a contract to supply 12 lakhs of maunds to Mr. Somesundaram Chettiyar without considering as to what should be done, if the balance left was found to be insufficient to meet the demands of this Presidency. The Government are now considering about the means of increasing the yield of salt. It would have been wise, if they had entered into the contract after increasing the yield. Let bygones be bygones. But what is to be done hereafter? There should be no auctioning, as it will cause the price to rise by itself. It is understood that a larger number of persons have now taken to salt trade than before. Salt should, therefore, be sold to them at a fixed rate only. A compact will not be possible among many merchants as it will be among a few. If it is said that the merchants might raise the price by purchasing the salt of the licensees also, they should be made to realise that, on such a contingency, the Government would surely open retail shops themselves. Another point to be noted is that the price of salt is raised also by the delay caused in its transmission to other places on account of the inadequacy of the railway waggons for transport purposes. The Government have made a rule that the transport of food-stuffs should be treated by the railway authorities as being more urgent than that of other articles. They should be compelled to observe this rule and see that salt is transported then and there.

The price of salt.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 28th July, says that if the price of salt should go on increasing as it does, the whole country would clamour against it, and remarks that it is not proper on the part of the Government to be indifferent in this matter.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The rise in the price of salt.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 1st August, writes with reference to the present high price of salt:—Do the Government derive any great profit by the contract system in salt? Cannot they derive such profit by disposing of salt departmentally? When in the opinion of the people, even the imposition of tax on salt is unjust on the part of the Government, it is not right that that article of food should be placed in the hands of contractors and its price raised. We pray that the Government will see that the price of salt is not raised.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Supplies to inspecting officers.

40. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th August, says:—With the batta that inspecting officers are paid when going out on inspection, they meet all their expenses, and their salaries are saved by them. The Board has passed a confidential order that these officers should get what they want through the village munsifs or karnams and that they should not ask their subordinates to provide them with supplies. In spite of this order, the inspecting officer sends beforehand a peon to the Sub-Inspector of the range that is to be inspected, to keep ready the required supplies. God only knows what troubles the Sub-Inspector has to undergo in this connection. There are many ranges where milk cannot be had. In such cases, the inspecting officers bear a grudge against the Sub-Inspectors, make too much of small faults and punish the Sub-Inspectors. If the subordinate officers provide the inspecting officers with supplies, and send bills for the full value, the latter get angry, so much so that some avoid sending bills in order to avoid the trouble. What power have the inspecting officers to get supplies from their subordinate officers in violation of the Board's order referred to above? Should not the Government see how far their orders are being obeyed?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

(k) General.

Brahmans and non-Brahmans.

41. Dwelling at length on the possibility of a non-Brahman Conference being held in Coimbatore, and suggesting certain subjects for consideration at that Conference, the Dravidan, of the 28th July, writes:—The words of the non-Brahman merchants and mirasidars of Coimbatore are more worthy of the consideration of the Government than those of the Brahman vakils who are available in any corner of the street for a very small price. These non-Brahmans command considerable influence in the country. If these gentlemen begin to take an active part in the matter and check the vain boast of the Brahmans, the petty tricks of the latter would then be ineffective like a bubble on the water.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

In an article contributed to the same paper by a correspondent on "avocation as the basis of caste distinction," the following observations occur:—If we just read the vedas, we will find it stated therein that those who study and recite the vedas are Brahmans, that those who perform military duties are Kshatriyas, that those who take to agriculture are Vaisyas and that those who perform other services are Sudras. Vyasa, the compiler of the vedas, who was born of a woman belonging to the fisherman class; Sage Vasishta who married Arundathi, a prostitute; Visvamitra born of a woman of low and degraded caste, and several other rishis became Brahmans only by their avocation. Should not then, the Brahmans who now serve as cooks for Sudras and the Brahmans, who sell toddy, become Sudras?

Dravidan, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

Brahmans and non-Brahmans.

The Dravidan, of the 31st July, has the following observations on the subject:—Why should words such as "the public strongly protest against," "they are very much dissatisfied" and "they condemn" be published in the newspapers in bold type and the ordinary people terrified thereby? The internment orders have not caused any dissatisfaction among the people. But it is only after hearing the loud cry raised by these Brahman vakils and on reading the matter printed in bold type in newspapers under the headings "protest meeting", "internment order", "Home Rule celebration", that the other people have begun to enquire what the matter is. Thus the expression "the public" as used by the Home Rulers represents only Brahman vakils and Brahman pensioners. Of the total population of the Madras Presidency, "the public" as spoken of by the Home Rulers may consist of 100 persons at the rate of four persons for each district. To the Home Rulers only do these appear to be "the public" of this Presidency.

The following observations occur again on the same subject in the course of a communication from a correspondent published in the same paper:—Many go out for wool and come home shorn. Similarly some persons build choultries and appoint as managers thereof many Brahmans, who have blooming faces like the lotus and cruel hearts like a pair of scissors. They do not give even a morsel of food to others who are not of their community. Is this indeed charity! Is this indeed virtue! . . . .

Would you go to heaven soon after you die, by offering food daily to these Brahmans considering them to be very great men? Or, have you been allured by the wretched words of the Brahmans to the effect, "If you give us food so that our stomachs may be full and we roll like the mountain snake unable to move, the celestial car will come to take you after your death"?

Dravidan, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

Brahmans and non-Brahmans.

The Dravidan, of the 28th July, has the following couplets, from the pen of a correspondent, under the heading "the word of Ammai is full of peril while the word of Avvai is full of wisdom", and these couplets are stated to refer only to the Brahmans who throw obstacles in the way of the progress of the Dravidans and whose habits are questionable:—

The word of Ammai is perilous—O! Brahmans!

* * * * * *

Ambition has no limit—O! Brahmans!
Let the English alone rule over us—O! Brahmans!

You, who speak low of the English—O! Brahmans!
Your profession is only begging—O! Brahmans!

You, who obstruct the giving of alms—O! Brahmans!
You, who honour not your parents—O! Brahmans!

You, who never speak the truth—O! Brahmans!
Even the little you have will be lost—O! Brahmans!

You, who wander from town to town—O! Brahmans!
Disgrace unto you—O! Brahmans!

You, who take all that we have—O! Brahmans!
You, who would not give even a little to us—O! Brahmans!

* * * * * *

You, who eat without giving alms—O! Brahmans!
Indeed suspicion is on you—O! Brahmans!

Why not you conduct yourselves consistently—O! Brahmans!
We will not join the enemy—O! Brahmans!

You, who speak with partiality—O Brahmans!
Why have you given up reciting the Vedas?—O! Brahmans!

You, who speak enviously—O! Brahmans!
The word of Avvai is full of wisdom—O! Brahmans!

To explain the words Ammai and Avvai used in these verses, the correspondent gives certain foot-notes which contain the following:—

Ammai.—Not Māri Ammai (small-pox) or plague Ammai (plague), but Malai Ammai, the woman on the mount (Mrs. Besant). Let our readers understand this.

Avvai.—Avvai, though a woman, has clearly said, "Hear not the words of a woman". Ponder over this and understand that Home Rule is a downright lie and that it is a matter of self-interest. The greater the ambition the heavier the loss! The British Government that has granted us peace to live in freedom is indeed powerful. Will not the waving of a Home Rule flag on the mountain, without being content with what we have, result in endless affliction?

Mr. V. R. Karandikar.

42. Adverting to the order of the Government of Madras directing Mr. V. R. Karandikar to quit the Madras Presidency within 48 hours from the date of its receipt, the Dravida Patrika, of the 1st August, observes that it is strange that the authorities should say that he has acted and is likely to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety, when it is not known that he has committed any offence, and adds that God alone knows what offence he has committed.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Mr. V. R. Karandikar.

Adverting to a public meeting held in Bombay last Friday to give a send-off to Messrs. Deobhunker and Shiva Rao who are coming over to Madras to accept service as sub-editors of New India, and to Miss Sivakamu Ammal who is coming here to work in the cause of Home Rule, the Swadesamitran, of the 6th August, observes:—We do not know what for Mr. Karindikar was sent away from this Province. However this may be, we will not be wrong in saying that the work he was doing here will not stop on account of his having gone. If one goes, there are three coming. Will the Government note the lesson that follows from this?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

Mr. Karandikar.

The Hitakarini, of the 29th July, regrets the action of the Government of Madras in ordering that Mr. Karandikar should leave the Madras Presidency in 48 hours.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 29th, 1917.

Mr. Karandikar.

The Desamata, of the 1st August, refers to the order passed by the Madras Government against Mr. Karandikar and remarks:—The Government enforced the Defence of India Act against him too. This Act is a great weapon in the hands of the rulers and does not miss its mark. . . As the Government have not specified the reasons for their order, the people are not in a position to say how far he endangered public safety. So far as the knowledge of the people goes, he was only serving the country, and so they will doubt if he has deserved such punishment. Without taking the people into their confidence, the Rulers are still passing severe orders. We think it is not right on the part of the Government to believe in the efficacy of such a policy, and discourage the people during these war times.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 1st, 1917.

The orders against Mr. Karandikar.

Referring to the notice of externment served on Mr. Karandikar, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 4th August, says:—The Madras Government does not seem to have abandoned its policy of needlessly stifling public opinion. The reason assigned in the notice on Mr. Karandikar is that his conduct is prejudicial to public safety. This is indeed surprising. Nobody has ever known Mr. Karandikar to have been engaged in such activities. It is a wonder how the

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Government alone could know about it. The Defence of India Act is an excellent weapon in the hands of the Government. They can issue almost any order in its name. No body has power to ask why it is so. Even if the people should ask, the Government are under no obligation to answer them, as their action is in accordance with the law. This is indeed most deplorable.

The same paper in another article says that the provincial heads have carried repression to such a pitch of late that the popular leaders had to organise a joint conference of the All-India Congress Committee and the Moslem League. The paper then gives a summary of the proceedings of this Conference and alludes to the acceptance at the conference, of what it calls Mr. Gandhi's doctrine of passive resistance, and concludes as follows:—It has been arranged to submit a memorial to Parliament on the lines of the scheme of reform approved at the last session of the Congress. Pandit Malaviya, Sir Chandavarkar and Mr. Samarth have been asked to draft the memorial. As these persons are not only great political leaders but are also looked upon with great regard by the Government, there can be no doubt that the memorial submitted by them will produce excellent results. The address which is proposed to be presente l to the Viceroy makes responsible public opinion on the present methods of the authorities abundantly clear.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues.

43. The Hindu Nesan, of the 1st August, also publishes in Tamil the proceedings of the public meeting held in Bombay on the 30th July, under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah, to protest against these internment orders.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues.

The Swadesamitran, of the 7th August, reproduces in Tamil the substance of a letter written by Mr. D. N. Bannerjea to the Christian Commonwealth condemning the action of the Madras Government in interning Mrs. Besant and her colleagues, which he is reported to have characterised as being both illegal and inexpedient, with the remark that an attempt to suppress lawful efforts will be an insult to the heroes, who have sacrificed their lives in view of the liberation of the world.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Closure of the District Presses.

44. Anent the order of the Government to amalgamate the District Presses with the Government Press, Madras, and, in particular, to the hardship caused by this order to the compositors of the District Presses, who have been directed to join the Government Press here, a correspondent to the Hindu Nesan, of the 1st August, suggests that before enforcing the order, it would be desirable for the Government to find out the number of compositors coming from the districts to take up work in the Madras Press, and ascertain the cause for the other compositors not going over to Madras as directed, and also adds that the Members of the Legislative Council will do well to take interest in this matter.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Reforms in India.

45. Adverting to the terms of the memorandum decided to be presented to the Secretary of State for India by the All-India Congress Committee and the Muslim League condemning the attempt made to belittle the reform proposals submitted by them and the adoption of repressive measures, the Hindu Nesan, of the 1st August, observes:—We need not say that there is anything novel about the desire for Home Rule on the part of the Indians and the reforms which they demand. Those who criticise these proposals of reform seem to think that the Indians are suddenly making a demand for the introduction of certain reforms at a juncture when the whole attention of the British Government is engrossed on the war, and that they have never made any demand like this till now. It is highly regrettable that those, who deny the prayer of the Indians, should hold this wrong view. It only shows that they do not in the least sympathise with the aspirations of the Indians. The demand for reforms in the Indian administration has been made by the Indians for nearly nine years before the present war began. So it will be futile to regard the new spirit that has arisen among the Indians as having originated after the war and to try to prevent its taking root in the minds of the Indians. A scheme of reforms was drafted by the congress at its session last year. The memorandum proposing reforms in the Indian administration presented by the elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council was based only on this scheme. Even this memorandum does not demand complete Home Rule for India after the end of the war. It prays only for the introduction of certain reforms in the present system of administration, which will serve to be a stepping stone for the acquisition of Home Rule for India. Statesmen like Lord Sydenham were terrified by even this demand and found fault with the suggestions made in the memorandum. The Secretary of State allowed the matter to lie over pending the receipt of the proposals from the Government of India, and the Government of India again failed to submit their own proposals to the Secretary of State, when forwarding the memorandum of the Members of the Imperial Council. If, instead of having remained silent over the matter, the Government of India and the Secretary of State had published the aims and policy of the Government regarding Indian reforms, the very discussion of these reforms would have taken a different turn. Apart from the Government of India having kept quiet over the matter, the Provincial Governments began to discourage the aspirations of the Indians for reforms, saying that it would take a long time for them to have Home Rule, that there was no use in their indulging in unnecessary agitation in the interim and that the activities of such agitators will be put an end to by repressive measures, and had recourse to such measures in the case of certain persons. This has given rise to a great deal of agitation in the country. The more the Government try persistently to suppress this agitation, the greater will be the determination of the Indian public to persist in this agitation subject to laws and regulations. We, therefore, wish sincerely that, before the present political condition becomes more complicated, the suggestions, made in the memorandum drafted at the joint session of the Muslim League and the Congress Committee, are given effect to. It may take some time for carrying out these suggestions. But as a declaration that India will be granted Home Rule soon can well be made at any time, it will be very necessary to make such a declaration immediately in the present political condition of this country. If such a declaration is made, the present agitation will cease of its own accord.

Administrative reforms after the war.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 10th August, writes:—At present the administration of India is under the control of the India Office of which the Secretary of State is the President. It is under his guidance that the British Government is governing this country. But if Home Rule is granted, the administration will be wholly in the hands of the prospective Indian Parliament. This country, which has a population of thirty crores of people, will have to be divided into at least thirty divisions, each with a local parliament, subordinate to a central Imperial Parliament consisting of representatives from each of those smaller parliaments. The Viceroy will have to represent the Imperial Parliament The rulers of the Native States will constitute the House of Lords. All civil matters will be subject to the control of this parliament. All military matters will be controlled by the Viceroy. Some years ago some British statesmen, such as Lethbridge, had written that this kind of arrangement would be equally advantageous to England and India. This view had been supported by a large section of the British. It seems to us that this reform will have to be introduced immediately on the close of the war.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Administrative reform.

Referring to a recent speech by Sir Ponnambalam of Ceylon, urging the employment of Indians in larger numbers in the public services, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 4th August, says:—Sir Ponnambalam rightly urged that Mr. Montagu must begin where Lord Morley left. The latter's reforms are the a, b, c, as it were, of democratic rule and all that Sir Ponnambalam urges is that Mr. Montagu must proceed with that alphabet and teach the Indians the whole of it. But the authorities here seem to be inclined differently. All their actiona go to show that, in their opinion, the Indians have already too many privileges The recent prohibition of the meeting of the Calcutta Town Hall to protest against the famous internments at Madras is an instance in point. The well-known leader of the moderates Dr. Rash Behari Ghose was to be the president of the meeting. But the authorities in Bengal did not think it necessary to permit this meeting, though protest meetings have been held elsewhere in every part of India, and in Bengal itself various bodies have met some time ago and protested against the very internments. In the present case, however, the Bengal Government thought the meeting unconstitutional, and won the glory of prohibiting it. The tone of the notice of prohibition and the reasons adduced therefor leaves us to wonder what one can possibly mean by saying that our Government is progressive or that our administrators are progressive. What a Government does cannot, in a sense, be anything but lawful or constitutional. If its acts are not to be criticised, how can there possibly be any freedom of speech or freedom of the press? Again, the same notice states that the Government have no objection to the holding of meetings for suggesting constitutional changes in sober language. It is difficult to see how these words can be consistent with what has been said above. Not a single officer has stated expressly what movement of the Indians it is that is considered unconstitutional. God knows what they mean by the term "constitutional methods".

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, Aug. 4th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

The elected Members in the Legislative Councils.

46. The Swadesamitran, of the 2nd August, writes:—Lord Morley reconstituted the Legislative Councils to enable the Government to "take the people with them in the daily duties of administration." The reformed councils have been in existence now for eight years, and we have had sufficient experience to judge whether Lord Morley's object is being fulfilled. The right of putting questions to Government was not enjoyed by the members of the Legislative Councils before the time of Lord Morley, and it was given by him with a purpose. If, in exercise of this right, a member seeks information from the Government on any subject, very often the reply of the Government is that they have no information upon the point. Cannot they get the information and place it before the council, or, if there is no time for it, cannot they say that they would get the information and present it at the next meeting? If such replies are given, what is the use then of the privilege of interpellation? So this privilege does not help the Government to "take the people with them in the daily duties of administration." That the right of moving resolutions in these councils has become an equally useless one has been proved by the fate of the resolutions brought forward in the United Provinces Legislative Council last month. A doubt arises in our mind, at this juncture, as to whether, in the face of the statement of Lord Ronaldshay that an order of the Madras Government should not be discussed in Bengal, we can write about an action of the Government of the United Provinces. But precedent and right are on our side, and so we shall write about it. In replying to a resolution about the lecture delivered by Mr. Wood, the Principal of the Engineering College at Roorki, in which he was reported to have made certain disparaging remarks about the Indians, Sir James Meston observed that Mr. Wood was a very respectable man. But the question was not about his respectability, but whether he acted in a particular manner on a particular occasion. As the member who was to move this resolution was absent from that meeting, Mr. Chintamani began to speak on it. But Sir James Meston objected to his doing so, on the ground that he had not given notice of this resolution. Would not the Government have called for an explanation from Mr. Wood on the resolution of which notice was given by another member? What if they communicated to the Council the explanation of Mr. Wood? With regard to another resolution condemning the action of Mr. Stubbs, the Collector of Bijnor, in having written a letter to some Vaisya gentlemen, which tended to wound their feelings, the Government member replied that his feelings would have been sufficiently wounded by the criticism of the press and that therefore the Government need not condemn his action. This is a novel opinion. This seems to be a period of novel opinions. If the Government go on giving such replies, how can the object of Lord Morley, which was that the Government should "take the people with them in the daily duties of administration," be fulfilled? His object has not been fulfilled. The experience of eight years is sufficient to prove this. Therefore the time has come for the power of the people being increased in such a manner as to subject the officials, in the exercise of their authority, to the control of the people, so as to fulfil the object of Lord Morley.

The Madras Government and the non-Brahmans.

47. Referring to the statement made by Sir Alexander Cardew when he laid the foundation stone of the Sourashtra High School at Madura, that in going to Madura he was endeavouring to show to the Sourashtras the sympathy of the Government of Madras for that community, the Dravidan, of the 2nd August, observes:—The one thing that every non-Brahman community now requires is education. Some of these communities have slightly progressed in it, while others are still very backward. None of those have yet received the full support of the Government. No one can improve without the help of the Government. It is a known fact that it is only the non-Brahmans that have been producing everything in this Presidency till now. It has now attained its present position only as a result of their agriculture and other industries. It is a little hard indeed for these, who have for many centuries been following particular avocations, to compete successfully with communities, which have always been devoting their attention to education. The time has, therefore, come for us to believe that the Government will realise their responsibility and the benefit of the public, and enable our country to advance by giving sufficient help to the non-Brahmans in this Presidency. It would not do for the Government any longer to have only a step-motherly affection for the non-Brahmans. If the Government want to improve the condition of lakhs of truly loyal Dravidans, it is necessary that they should slightly change their existing system of administration. So, we hope that Lord Pentland and his colleagues will evince their sympathy for non-Brahmans impartially and boldly.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

Sir Dinshaw Wacha's resignation.

48. Adverting to Sir Dinshaw Wacha's resignation of the offices held by him in the All-India Congress Committee, the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee and the Bombay Presidency Association, the Hindu Nesan, of the 2nd August, writes:—We said yesterday that Mr. D. Wacha might have dissociated himself from the Congress Committees on account of his disapproval of the resolution brought forward suggesting the adoption of the method of passive resistance. We now learn that he left the meeting of the joint session of the Congress Committee and the Muslim League as soon as this resolution was moved. As already observed by us, the method of passive resistance was the means adopted by the Indians in South Africa for the redress of their grievances. It is now clear, without any doubt, that the above method is, in the opinion of Mr. D. Wacha, not a constitutional method of agitation. The movement for boycotting foreign goods was adopted in Bengal in view to get the partition of that Province annulled, and yet the annulment of the partition was not brought about by this movement. It only widened the gulf between the people and the Government. Sir D. Wacha, who has always been a moderate in his views, seems to have left the Congress Committee now with the conviction that the adoption of the method of passive resistance would be productive of more harm than that of boycotting foreign goods. Those interested in the Congress should, without ignoring his resignation, bestow some thought on his objections to the method of passive resistance and do the needful. The separation of Sir D. Wacha cannot in the least be ignored.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

The bureaucracy and the people in India.

49. The Swadesamitran, of the 4th August, echoes the opinions said to have been expressed by Commander Wedgwood in the separate minute appended by him to the Mesopotamia Commission Report, that the Indians should no longer be denied the full liberties enjoyed by the British subjects and that they should be allowed to have a good share in the work of administering their own country and controlling the bureaucracy, and observes:—This is what we ask for. We want that the number of popular representatives in the Legislative Councils should be increased, and that the executive Government should be subject to the control of these Legislative Councils. It is this that Lord Pentland declared to be impossible in May last. But we believe that this is possible and we will continue our efforts in this direction.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The health of Mrs. Besant.

50. Adverting to a letter written by Mr. Jinarajadasa to the editor of the Hindu that the internment has told much upon the health of Mrs. Besant, the Swadesamitran, of the 4th August, observes:—Our readers would be pained to hear this news. We need not say what amount of responsibility the Government have undertaken in continuing the internment of Mrs. Besant for a long time, in her present condition of health. The whole of India is proclaiming that the action taken by them in this matter cannot in the least be upheld. We expect that, on hearing this news at least, they would cancel the order issued by them against her.

Dravidan, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

No Home Rule necessary for India.

51. A correspondent of the Dravidan, of the 2nd August, adduces arguments to prove that, considering the numerous benefits the people of India have derived after the advent of the British rule, there is no necessity whatever for the grant of Home Rule and adds:—Our British Government should keep quiet so that those who demand Home Rule may continue their vain cry and give it up. If, on the other hand, Home Rule is granted woe unto the country.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

A lesson from the Mesopotamia Commission Report.

52. Referring to a statement said to have been made in the Mesopotamia Commission Report that a refusal on the part of officials in high position to accept defects in their administration, when such are pointed out, is a grave mistake which may have a mischievous effect, the Swadesamitran, of the 6th August, says:—This statement shows that the Commissioners are well aware of the nature of the officials in India. They will never tolerate their action being found fault with. They have secured their position by means of several laws such as the Press Act and the Seditious Meetings Act. If their administration is criticised, he who criticises may be accused of attempting to create hatred against the legally constituted Government. The public are not able to control the action of the officials in India. In England, if the Secretary of State for India happens to be one of Mr. Chamberlain's type, he supports the action of these officials saying that he has full confidence in their discretion. At times, he makes it impossible even for the Parliament to go into the matter. The Parliament too does not always evince an interest in Indian affairs. So this report of the Mesopotamia Commission has proved the necessity of the Government of India being responsible to the local people.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

A method of improving the swadeshi industries.

53. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th August, refers to the report of the swadeshi industries committee in Bombay that there are great facilities for starting the manufacture of card-board in India, and suggests the desirability of the officials of the Department of Industries in this province, capitalists and others interested in the matter bestowing some attention on this subject, especially at this juncture when there is a loud cry for the industrial improvement of India, and coming forward to start this industry.

Lokopakari, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

The method of passive resistance.

54. The Lokopakari, of the 6th August, writes:—The adoption of the method of passive resistance means transgressing the controlling authority of the officials, which can never be a wise principle. It will lead to agitation in the country and cause anxiety to the Government. When there is already a good deal of anxiety on account of the war, it is not wise on our part to increase it. It is also a wrong notion on the part of the popular leaders that, if this opportunity is lost, they cannot have another to press their claims. Our idea is that India should become a self-governing country subject to the British Government. There is an everlasting link between us and our Government. So we can carry out our object after the war comes to an end. If we make the necessary efforts then our Government will listen calmly to our representations and do what we want. Meanwhile, we can stick to the swadeshi principle and, if this develops, it will by itself be the means for accomplishing our object. So we should keep quiet till the war comes to an end. We have earned a name for our loyalty and obedience to law. If we adopt the principle of passive resistance, it will lead to a change in the good opinion the British have of us. That means only harm and not good to us.

Method of passive resistance.

In condemning the method of passive resistance advocated now by all the Home Rulers, the Dravidan, of the 6th August, remarks:—"Passive resistance" indicates every other thing than actually waging war with the Government. The meaning of this expression is nothing less than that Indians should render no help whatever in administrative matters. It will be clear to all thoughtful people how far this principle can be worked effectively. Swadeshism, swaraj, "Home Rule," "passive resistance"—all these expressions indicate only movements which cannot succeed in practice.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

The judicial and executive functions.

55. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th August, writes:—Every one knows that in India executive and judicial functions are in the hands of the same individual. There is also the complaint that some officials interfere with the administration of justice. Our readers are aware also of some executive officials going beyond bounds in criticising the action of Judges. But in England, it was plainly stated during a recent discussion in the Parliament that the Government had no right to exercise any authority over Judges. This is a special feature of the British constitution. How is it in India?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

Manufacture of buttons.

56. A correspondent to the Swadesamitran, of the 7th August, writes as follows:—It would have surprised all the readers of our Mitran to know that a conservancy maistri of the Karachi Municipality was compelled by his superior officer to resign his appointment for unwittingly wearing a button with a likeness of Mr. Tilak embossed on it. It appears, therefore, to be necessary that, hereafter, the button manufacturers in this country should, as far as possible, produce and offer for sale only buttons stamped with the likeness of Indian patriots and that our brethren should buy and use only such buttons.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

Workmen's strikes and the Government.

57. Adverting to the strike of the workmen on the G.I.P. Railway and their obstinate refusal to resume work, unless their pay is increased by 10 per cent and certain other minor grievances are redressed, the Swadesamitran, of the 7th August, observes:—Neither the Railway authorities nor the Government seem to have made any proper effort to put an end to this strike. Information was received yesterday that a railway official promised to make an enquiry and give increase of pay to those who deserved it, if all the workmen would return to duty. Neither this official nor the Agent of the company seems to have realised the real situation. It is a general complaint on the part of all workmen that the old rates of pay are insufficient now. If it is reasonable that the pay should be in proportion to the scale of price in the market, no one, including the Railway Company, can deny that, considering the present rise in prices, the salaries of all workmen should be increased. Under these circumstances, they should either increase the salaries of all or say that the existing scale is an adequate one. It is pitiable that the Railway authorities have not realised that there is no connection whatever between the strike and the increase of pay of some employees on account of their special qualifications or peculiar grievances. The object of the strike was the redress of the general grievances of all workmen, and the remedy applied should be beneficial to all. If special treatment is given to some workmen, the union among them will disappear and faction will be created. The refusal of the workmen, with or without realising this, to resume work shows the union among them. Under the circumstances, it will be wise on the part of the authorities to act with forethought. They need not be perplexed as to what should be done. The British Government have set an example in the matter of what should be done on such occasions. Strikes often occurred even in England on account of the grievances caused by the disparity between the salary and the scale of prices. Immediately, Lloyd George appointed several committees to make an enquiry at different places. These not only reported that the salaries were insufficient but also recommended that steps should be taken even now, if industries are to thrive well after the war, to make the employers and the workmen co-operate. The latter statement applies as much to India as to England. After the war the British Empire will arrange for manufacturing all the articles required by it. Then many industries will have to be carried on in India. These industries cannot thrive well, unless there is co-operation between the workmen and the employers. Thus it is the duty of the Government to keep up the cheerful spirits of the workmen, in the interests of both the present and the prospective needs, and yet we do not know why the Government have been keeping quiet all these days. In England, the workmen's leagues are strong enough to seek the means of getting their grievances redressed. But there are no such associations in India. Here the workmen have to rely only on the Government. So it was indeed a right step on the part of the workmen to have asked the Governor of Bombay to intercede on their behalf. But information is received today that he has declined to do so. We do not know if the conduct of petty workmen in having unanimously struck work has provoked the authorities. The Private Secretary to His Excellency has informed the workmen that "the Governor cannot interfere in this matter." Why can he not do so? Why can he not, instead of keeping aloof, bring the railway officials and the employees together and make them come to a settlement by each yielding a bit? Is the sanction of the Government of India necessary for such an action? If necessary, why can they not obtain it? Who can say now in what manner and at what time the stoppage of work for so many days will tell? It is only a few days since the Mesopotamia Commisson report was published, and it does not indicate a realisation by the officials of the responsibility that rests on them to allow the manufacture of the articles required in Mesopotamia to be delayed. We expect that the Government of Bombay, the Railway Board or the Government of India would take such steps as would be taken in England at a similar juncture.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The exodus to the hills.

58. The Swadesamitran, of the 8th August, writes:—A resolution moved by a member of the Legislative Council in Bengal that the exodus to the hills should be stopped, as, while on the hills, the authorities are not able to ascertain public opinion, elicited the curious reply that, as there were the post and the telegraph, there could be no trouble in the matter and that public opinion could be ascertained by means of newspapers and public meetings. There is no doubt that the post and the telegraph help people even in London or America to ascertain the opinion of the people here. It is really strange that the authorities here should deem the same facility to be sufficient for them too. What for do the local officials exist in this country? Is it not for their having a personal knowledge of what is taking place in their stations? Is not personal knowledge better than heresay information? The authorities in Bengal say that the expenditure on the exodus to the hills is becoming reduced every year. It should be noted that, apart from the expenditure directly incurred for the exodus, many items of expenditure have to be incurred indirectly by the Government and the people. According to the opinion of the officials going to the hills, the exodus is necessary! But how stands the opinion of the people?

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

Lottery chits in Kumbakōnam.

59. A correspondent to the Swadesamitran, of the 8th August, invites the attention of the Government to the starting of a number of lottery chit offices in Kumbakōnam, each chit consisting of 500 members, running for 50 months and each member having a prize each month, and referring to the danger of the chitholder not being able to distribute tens of thousands of rupees to 450 members on the 51st month and the fact that the members may not find it possible to collect the amount in a court of law after the 36th month on account of the bar of limitation, suggests that the Government should insist, in the interests of the poor people that subscribe for these chits, upon their being registered and security being paid by the chitholders for the due performance of their duty.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Some suggestions.

60. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, reports the editor of the Bharata Sevak of Nasik to have written:—When the speeches and acts of Local Governments are examined, it will appear that the Government of India have made up their minds to suppress the agitation of the Home Rule Leagues and the Muslim League regarding post-war reforms. The Government kept silent till the Congress and the Muslim League laid down some definite plan to follow, and have begun to act according to their own opinion about the agitation. . . . From the words of Mr. Chamberlain, it is plain that the Government will effect some small reforms in the administration of the country after the war, and that they intend to persuade the people to accept them. The leaders of the people should betake themselves to work with courage and farsightedness, and should not look helplessly on the actions of the bureaucracy. They should realise that the future of the teeming millions of India is in their hands. If they fail to do so, India will meet with disaster. While the rights of the people are asserted all over the world and liberal ideas are sown broadcast by the war, it is audacious that might should be opposed to world's forces. . . We cannot be satisfied till our aspirations are granted. . . We cannot accept the reforms conceded to us by the Government, so long as the power of administration is in the hands of the executive. The executive should gradually become responsible to the Legislative Councils. In the refashioning of the Empire after the war, India should be placed on the same footing as the Colonies. The following are the means by which we can gain our aspirations :—(1) The representatives of the Congress and the Moslem League should at once go to England ; (2) the India in England should work for post-war reforms with more zeal or a new paper should be started for this purpose ; (3) all should unanimously disapprove of the action of the Government in interning Mrs. Besant and others ; (4) they should not mind the enforcement of repressive laws by the Government, but should spread their propaganda according to the methods accepted by the Provincial Committees of the Congress, and spread knowledge among the people ; (5) the congress should decide whether the matter of reforms should be decided by the Parliamentary Committee or by the Government and the people's representatives unitedly ; (6) if the Government do not grant us the reforms contained in the scheme drawn up by the congress and the Moslem League, the people should let the Government know that they would grow discontended and start a constitutional agitation.

61. The Calcutta correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, says:— Andhrapatrika, Madras, August 1st, 1917.

Home Rule.

Mr. Surendranath Banerji said to the Secretary, Gaya Home Rule League, that the aims of the Home Rule Leagues are the same as those of the Congress. This news fell on the Pioneer like a thunderbolt. . . It is an untruth that the Bengal leaders are opposed to the Home Rule movement. I dare say that the heart of Bengal is with the Home Rule movement.

The Hitakarini, of the 29th July, says:—All Congress leaders should join the Home Rule Leagues by way of protest against the actions of the executive. That will testify to the aims of the Congress and the Home Rule Leagues being identical. . . We regret that Mr. Surendranath Banerji does not take part in the work that the Congress leaders in the other provinces are courageously engaged in. We do not blame him. Our friends Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Mr. Srinivasa Sastri have not joined the Home Rule movement. Though some of the Bombay leaders have not joined the movement, they are not silent and indifferent. The Bombay Presidency Association has stated that the Madras internments are an attack not only on the Home Rule movement but also on the Congress which has asked for responsible self-government. Hitakarini, Ellore, July 29th, 1917.

Home Rule.

In continuation of an article in a previous issue remarking that the aloofness of Indian Christians from politics is due to the pressure exerted on them by the clergy, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 4th August, proceeds to criticise a recent article by the Bishop of Bombay on the present situation in India, and thereupon remarks:— Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Home Rule for India.

To meet the arguments which harp on fitness and capacity as the pre-requisites to self-government is to reiterate the remarks that we have often made in these columns already. We wonder why the Bishop of Bombay should feel anxious that the present political demands of India might embarrass the statesmen at home. The Bishop's criticisms are nothing but indiscreet meddlesomeness. It is ludicrous to speak of the inefficient condition of local self-government and caste differences as circumstances disproving the fitness of Indians for self-government. For, following the same line of argument, we might ask whether, in the face of the present Titanic struggle in Europe, the European States can be said to have real administrative capacity. Let that pass. The scheme of reforms which the Congress and the Muslim League jointly drew up last year has already been published. The nineteen members of the Imperial Legislative Council have already given their views on the subject. Various other responsible leaders also have given their individual views. But not one has been known to have demanded complete self-government immediately after the war. This fact is rendered clearer still at the joint conference of the All-India Congress Committee and Muslim League which took place at Bombay the other day. They are all agreed in demanding the privilege of self-government, but they have asked for it only in instalments. There is no gainsaying this. The Bishop, however, thinks that the Indians say they should have self-government tomorrow. Even if they do so, it would not be wrong; for, when the Government urge one extreme, the people would naturally urge the other.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 22nd, 1917.

The Home Rule propaganda, a separate association.

62. The Desabhimani, of the 22nd July, contains in Telugu the New India's article on this subject, already abstracted from the Desamata, of the 11th July, on page 2017 of the weekly report.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

Home Rule and the Government of India.

63. The Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd August, says:—To a question in the Legislative Council of the United Provinces, whether any instructions regarding Home Rule had been received by the Local Government, the Government replied saying that such a question should not be put. If no instructions had been received, would it not have been easier to say so? Why should the Government loathe any mention of Home Rule? Do they think that it is not desirable or do they consider it an impossibility? The chief reason why the Indians ask for Home Rule is that the people should have authority in their hands if India should take its rank with civilised countries. Under the rule of the bureaucracy, India cannot soon make any progress. Ten years ago while Japan expended £50 lakhs on education, India, which is six times as large as Japan, spent only half that sum five years ago. The average expenditure per head of population in 1910–11 in Europe, the Philippine Islands and India is 1·235, ·475 and ·02 dollars, respectively. From this it is clear what a small amount is expended on education in India. The people require that the right to expend the taxes which they pay should be vested in their hands so that the country may soon advance. This is the chief factor of Home Rule, and we do not see anything absurd in the request.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Home Rule to Scotland.

64. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th August, refers to the fact that Scotland wants separate Home Rule and a separate Parliament, and remarks:—Scotland which has no grievances, and which has been united for many centuries with England clamours for Home Rule. The desire on the part of India, which is backward in education and modern civilisation and which lies thousands of miles away from the country of the rulers, appears absurd to some. What could be the reason for it?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Home Rule to Goa.

65. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th August, says:—When the Indians are yearning for Home Rule, it appears that the Portuguese Government have given Home Rule to Goa and other Portuguese territories. It is said that the people of Goa are now freed from many hardships, and that the Christians and the Hindus enjoy equal privileges.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

Home Rule for Indians in the Portuguese India.

Referring to the information received that the Indians in the Portuguese India have been granted complete powers of self-government, the Swadesamitran, of the 8th August, observes:—Can the Indians in Portuguese India be said by any one to be suprior to the Indians in British India either in progress or in education? We do not know what our bureaucrats will say when they see that the Indians in Portuguese India have been granted Home Rule.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, August 1st, 1917.

Mr. Stubbe.

66. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, says:—The Vyasa leaders of Vajranore wrote to papers condemning the action of Mr. Stubbe in indulging in vituperative language against them. He did not make an apology for fear that official prestige might suffer, and he thus maintained official traditions. A resolution was moved in the Legislative Council of the United Provinces requesting the Government to let Mr. Stubbs know the impropriety of his language. The resolution was thrown out, and the Vysias of Vajranore have learnt that they should not gainsay the words of the authorities. The criticism in the columns of newspapers of the insulting language of Mr. Stubbs pained his mind, and now he has attained mental peace and maintained his prestige. Mr. Stubbs has gained the victory and we congratulate him.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, August 1st, 1917.

67. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, says with reference to the Indian Defence Force:—The Andhras should follow the example of the Bengalees and join the force. We submit that the Government should put a stop to repression and encourage the people to join the force, without suspecting them. They should allay unrest in the country and promote friendly relations between the rulers and the ruled. We exhort the educated classes to serve the country by readily joining the force, no matter what the restrictions may be.

The Indian Defence Force.

SANPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 9th, 1917.

In an article under this heading, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 9th August, writes:—The Indians are enlisting themselves in the Defence Force and are trying their utmost to ensure the success of the Empie. Though the Indians are thus showing their great love and loyalty towards the British, some of the British merchant class and others have failed to reciprocate these feelings. They do not seem inclined to the grant of Home Rule to India even under the British suzerainty. Many of them hold that the students ought not even to attend political meetings. This is scarcely fair. India cannot be expected to be loving and loyal to her rulers unless the latter reciprocate the love and show an equal measure of confidence in her. It is scarcely consistent with British traditions to say that India should love England but remain in her servitude for all time; nor is it ever possible. An Indian Commissioned officer was talking to a British official, when, the latter said that the British do not like to work under Indians, to which the Indian replied that those who do not like to do so need not, in that case, come to India. There should be no room for notions of this kind either among Indians or Englishmen. Englishmen should remain true to their traditions. If any of them should see to be democratic in their own country and autocratic in India, they no longer deserve to be called Englishmen. To ensure the stability of the Empire, it is imperative that Indians and Englishmen should be on most cordial terms towards each other. Lords Ripon, Hardinge and Carmichael had done much to promote this mutual cordiality. It is desirable that those who have the reins of the administration in their hands in the present criticial times ought to follow their example. Happily, we have now Mr. Montagu as our Secretary of State. He is a staunch advocate of democratic methods. We trust that his influence will serve to promote cordiality between Indians and Englishmen.

The Indian Defence Force.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, August 1st, 1917.

68. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, reports a correspondent to New India to have stated that prayers have been made at several temples for the release of Mrs. Besant and others and to have exhorted men of all creeds to pray to God for the same end.

Internment and prayers.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

69. The Andhraprakasika, of the 28th July, says:—New India is exhorting the people to start a commotion in the matter of swadeshi, boycott and politics. As German conspiracies exist, the Government are looking upon this commotion with suspicion. This is not the time for such commotion, and it does not tend to the welfare of the country to excite the people unnecessarily. We suggest that the advocates of Home Rule will consider these things and not spoil matters.

Commotion.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

70. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th July, writes under this heading:—The world is undergoing a change, and so must India. While in Europe, the change of ideas keeps pace with times, and the rulers are favourably inclined to it, here in India, they are hostile to it, and employ repressive measures to stop it. This has created an abnormal situation. The co-operation of zamindars with the authority-loving rulers has helped on this work. . . There is now a change of ideas going on both among the Indians who are devoted to enlightening the people and are the well-wishers of the world, and the bureaucracy who are reluctant to surrender their power. . . . The attempts made to shut out the dawn of new ideas from one section of the people have failed. The Hindus and Muhammadans have been knit together. India is now engaged in deeply contemplating about the well-being of her countless children. Who can disturb her calm? . . .

The people and the zamindars.

The Hindu and the Muhammadan problem and other kindred problems do not exist in India which is solely engaged with the Indian problems. This is the underlying principle of last year's message. By God's ordinance the time has come when this principle can shine in its true glory.

The advocates of authority cannot bear to see the manifestation of that truth. The Brahman and the non-Brahman problem which should make its appearance only in social matters appeared also in the field of politics. . . The disinterested exertions of patriots were unwelcome to those who disliked the prosperity of India. . . All possible attempts were made to turn away some people from their work for the progress of the country. The suspicion of the people will be confirmed more and more instead of being removed on account of this.

Things have come to such a pass that the zamindars of the south, who have ever kept themselves aloof from politics, have now entered the field of politics, to condemn the movement for self-government. It has turned out to be a crime to discuss the subject of swaraj with enthusiasm and to ask the people to join the swaraj leagues. . . No loss will be incurred by the zamindars abandoning the people since they have never been known to take the side of the people. But this only serves to shake the trust which the people reposed in the zamindars. . . The fault will be theirs and not of the people. . . Though the zamindars have forsaken the people, God's plans will not suffer thereby. The opposition of the zamindars to the people only enables the repressive policy of the Government to gather strength. Sympathetic feelings amongst the people may decline and discontent may grow. . .

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

Letter of Mr. Trilokaker, Principal of the Madanapalle College.

71. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th July, gives under this heading a Telugu version of the letter of Mr. Trilokaker, which contains the following:—". . . I am sorry to hear that several petty inconveniences are caused to the interned. It is more regrettable that obstacles should be wilfully thrown in the way of their refuting the charges brought against them. It is surprising that Mrs. Besant should be prevented from communicating the irregularities of the subordinate officers to the Prime Minister. A friend of mine who has been living in Ootacamund for sometime past told me about this. . . Mrs. Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia are in a helpless condition. Their condition is becoming unbearable day by day.'

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

A helpless woman and War Fund.

72. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th July, refers a note in the Chronicle about the helpless condition of a woman whose three sons went to the war. The paper says:—"A year ago she applied to the District Collector for help, but he wrote back to say that he cannot help her. The Chronicle asks if the Government cannot help her with money from the Government treasury, why should she not be helped with money from the War Funds?"

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

Bifurcation of the Kistna district.

73. A letter from a correspondent to the Andhrapatrika of the 28th July on the bifurcation of the Kistna district, contains the following remark:—We hear that the Government are prepared to divide the district into two. . . Was the partition of Bengal given up, however much the people cried against it? When the constitution of Behar into a separate Province was desired, what huge attempts were made by the people! When the people wanted the Madras Presidency to be divided into two. did the Government consent to the proposal? No. If the rulers acted in accordance with the opinion of the ruled they would lose their prestige. Their statesmanship would be stained thereby. The qualities of the Civil Service would lose their eternal character and become earthly. Therefore O! Andhras! These indications show that the Madras Presidency cannot but be divided. There existed only eleven districts in the Andhra country. Hereafter there will be twelve. This is how the Government realises the responsibility of administration.

74. In an imaginary dialogue between the Kaiser and India continued in the Andhraprakasika, of the 1st August, from the past issues of the same paper, in which the Kaiser is represented to dissuade India from sending her sons to the war front, occurs the following:—The Kaiser. India! How were you duped by the English? Knowing that you possess a soft heart, they conquered your kingdom and left you in this position. Do not you know that they came to your country as traders and gradually occupied towns? Have you forgotten that in order to ruin your unsurpassed trade, they broke the fingers of weavers and subjected them to great cruelties? Do not you know that when some Rajas in your country had no issue, their territories were unjustly annexed? Are these people the followers of righteousness and truth, and they deserving of help? Take my advice and stop sending the army you have determined to send. Maintain your country's fame.

India and Kaiser.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

India.—(In anger). I had enough of your lecture. What more can you, who, as the enemy of the English, came to deceive me, say? . .

* * * * * * *

The Kaiser.—The historians wrote that Aurangazeb destroyed your country. That is false. But see what disgrace you are going to meet with at the hands of Turkey ere long!

India.—(Smiling) Fool! I am not afraid of your threats. Do not I know the power of Turkey which is weak and sick. Have you not heard of your own decline?

75. The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd August, writes that the Kaiser despatched a message, through some Indian anarchists, to the Amir of Kabul, asking him to participate in the German plot set up in India, to upset the British rule, but that the farsighted Amir stoutly refused to comply with his message.

The Kaiser's plot.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 3rd, 1917.

76. The Desabhimani, of the 22nd July, refers to the present dullness in trade on account of a scarcity of ships at ports, especially now when train service has been reduced and remarks:—Agitation cannot but be set on foot unless this grievance is redressed by the Government. The Government are indifferent and disregard their duty. It is the people that should wake them up from this lethargy. The Naval Insurance Companies do not insure ordinary vessels. Under such circumstances, there should be National Insurance Companies or some company started by the Government.

Ships.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 22nd, 1917.

77. The Andhraprakasika, of the 2nd August, says in its leader:—Many Government officials are members of the Theosophical Societies in our country. It has now been decided that this Society concerns itself with politics. It remains to be seen whether the Government will direct those officials who are members of the society to sever their connection with it or whether those officials themselves will do so.

The Theosophical Society.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

78. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd August, says:—When, in 1700, Indian piecegoods were imported into England to the detriment of their trade in woollen goods, a law was passed in England prohibiting the import of Indian cotton goods and providing for the imposition of a fine of £5 on anyone wearing Indian cloth and a fine of £20 on anyone selling such cloth. . . In spite of such a law in England, the English people continued the use of Indian cloth, and the authorities then imposed a tax of 10 per cent on cotton goods and twenty per cent on silk goods imported from India.

Import of Indian goods in England.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

79. The Dharmasadhani, of the 1st August, says:—Sir Rabindranath has seen in person what shape nationalism has taken in the western countries. Everyone in these countries exclusively loves his own nation ordinarily and wishes to raise his nation by all means. That love for one's own nation leads to a desire to devour weak nations

Sir Rabindranath.

DHARMASADHANI, Cocanada, Aug. 1st, 1917.

like a demon. Each nation tries always to control another nation. The present European war is the result of this incessant antagonism. The circumscribed love referred to above accentuates differences and foments mutual antagonism and quarrels. Sir Rabindranath says that nationalism should be based upon love for the whole mankind, should promote affection between nation and nation and help to uplift all mankind. We hope that those who advocate true nationalism which conduces to the well-being of the world, will not fail to respect the message of Sir Rabindranath.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 29th, 1917.

80. The Hitakarini, of the 29th July, reports the Amrita Bazaar Patrika to have stated thus:—If Mr. Naoroji and Mr. Gokhale accepted the titles that were offered to them, it would have lowered them in the estimation of the people. . . Gratitude to those who gave the titles to you will trouble you. You will have to give up your independence to some extent. There are a few exceptions no doubt. In India Sir S. Subramanya Ayyar is the only exception. The plain "Rabi babu" (Rabindranath) was more independent than Sir Rabindranath. Though in his heart of hearts he is an advocate of Home Rule, he has not yet joined any Home Rule League.

Titles.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Aug. 8th, 1917.

81. The Desabhimani, of the 5th August, reproduces from the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, the proceedings of the Joint Conference of the All-India Congress Committee and the Council of the Moslem League already noticed in article 91 on page 2116 of the weekly report.

The Joint conference.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 1st, 1917.

The Desamata, of the 1st August, contains in Telugu a gist of the resolutions passed at the Joint Conference of the All-India Congress Committee and the Council of the Moslem League.

The Joint Conference.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

82. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 31st July, makes the following remarks in the course of an article on the reforms asked for by the advocates of swaraj:—We cannot place confidence in the words of the present-day Brahmans who want to promote the sanatana creed which made the lower classes slaves under the self-seeking and corpse-like Brahmans, who cut the tongues of those who do not say "The Brahman is my God" and "The Brahman is the god of the earth." Why should they crowd, like crows upon the refuse of food, to receive quarter anna doles? . . . How can the reforms which the Home Rulers ask for be acceptable to all? They are advantageous to Brahmans only and not to non-Brahmans. The number of non-Brahmans in the country is a hundred times that of Brahmans and the Government will not unjustly place the former under the control of the latter and allow the Brahmans to cut the throats of the non-Brahmans. This is thrice certain.

The Home Rule agitation.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

83. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th August, says in its leader:—The very reason for which England plunged herself in the war, instigated the Indians to wish for self-government. India is asking England if it is not just on the part of England, which is sacrificing life and wealth in the fight for the freedom of the other States, to grant self-government to India. We hope England will soon give a satisfactory answer to this question.

Self-government.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

84. Writing on this subject, the Andhrapatrika, of the 4th August, says:—It is an illusion to suppose that, at a time when the very existence of the Indian Council has been decided to be harmful, the mere fact that an Indian has been appointed a member of that Council will give any solace to Indians. The time is gone when the people could rest satisfied with petty reforms. Nothing short of real authority in the hands of the people will satisfy India.

Mr. Basu's appointment.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

85. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 6th August, says:—When the Government wish to suppress the agitation made by the vakils, they confer on them the posts Sub-Judge or District Judge or High Court Judge. The vakils then consider that their object in life has been fulfilled and give up the Congress. . . The Self-government and vakils.

so-called leaders of the people accumulate wealth as lawyers, and deliver lectures on the Congress platform and at other meetings. It does not appear that they have done any good to the public. The village people know nothing about the Home Rule agitation. There is none to free the villagers from the troubles they suffer at the hands of the Police, the Revenue and the Forest officers. When the educated get Government appointments, they trouble the people in various ways. It is more the Indian than the European officials in the Police, the Revenue and the Forest Departments that trouble the people.

86. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th August, reports the Times of India to have said:—It should be our first duty to make an authoritative declaration to the Indians that the grant of self-government to India within the Empire is our goal. To draw up a graduated scheme for the attainment of that goal, a committee should be formed containing some talented men in India and some members of the Parliament. If the present Indian problem is left to itself, the authorities will be exasperating the extremists and soon make the problem a difficult one, although it may not become impossible of solution.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The goal of British Rule in India.

87. The Andhraprakasika, of the 6th August, refers to an incident in which a European in the Transvaal made two Indian labourers work continuously for twenty-four hours in the mines without letting them to go and eat their food, and was fined for it by the Magistrate, and remarks:—We have of course been hearing that this disease of authority affects the Europeans in that country whenever they see an Asiatic . . . To treat labourers worse than slaves is very much to be deprecated.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

A very cruel act.

88. The Andhraprakasika, of the 6th August, says:—The relation between the Indians and the merciless Boers is very regrettable. The pains taken by Mr. Gandhi have been all in vain. The troubles to whichthe Boers put our countrymen are not a few. The Boers treat the Indians with utter contempt, as if they are unfit for anything, but servitude. It is said that they cannot possess lands unless they are servants and that the Asiatics are liable to be driven away. . . It is a matter for regret that the Boers shoul manifest such cruelty during these war times. We pray that the authorities will kindly put an end to such treatment and give the Indians equal treatment with the others.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

The condition of the Indians in the Transvaal.

89. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th August, contains in English and Telugu a telegram containing the gist of the proceedings of the Home Rule meeting in Bombay in which the Bombay public bade farewell to certain persons who were leaving Bombay to join the staff of the New India in Madras.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

A farewell meeting in Bombay.

90. Referring to the lecture of the Lord Bishop of Madras delivered at Coonoor, regarding the future of the Empire, the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th August, remarks:—The speech of the Lord Bishop is pregnant with meaning and manifests his broadmindedness. May all follow the line indicated by him!

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

The speech of Lord Bishop of Madras.

91. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 6th August, referring to the prohibition of a public meeting proposed to be held in Calcutta for condemning the internments of Mrs. Annie Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia, observes:— . . . This order, which was unnecessarily issued, has provoked all our readers. Mr. Pridhvis Chandra Roy has also written strongly in the Bengali on the subject insisting upon the meeting being held at all risks resorting to passive resistance. . . I was surprised at hearing the news of the prohibition order and asked myself "What are the Government doing? Do they know the consequences of their acts?" Having eyes the Government officers are not able to see the strength of the swaraj movement and having ears they are not able to hear.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

A public meeting prohibited.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

Parliamentary Committee.

92. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th August, gives in Telugu a summary of the speech delivered by Mr. B. Pattabhiramayya, on the 4th instant, which contains:—It is said that a committee will be formed consisting of some of the members of the Parliament, for considering the questions of Indian administrative reforms. Such committees often prove to be useless and their suggestions disappointing while only their powers are unlimited. . . Whether intentionally or otherwise this administration has sown the seeds of nationality in our country. If, then, Indians cannot be considered as a nation, no other people can be regarded as such.

If Provincial Government is to be efficiently conducted, provinces have to be constituted on the linguistic basis.

The same paper, reviewing the above speech, writes:—The speaker has pointed out that Indian nationality is possible only in the form of a federation of races and not of a homogeneous race. He also observed that, unless provinces are constituted on the language basis, provincial autonomy, which is demanded as the foundation of self-government, will not appeal to the hearts of the people. This truth the Justice has also recognised recently.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

The present political situation.

93. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th August, gives a Telugu version of the speech recently delivered by Mr. Sayyed Vazir Hussain, the honorary Secretary of the All India Moslem League, which contains:—Mrs. Besant may be regarded as the foremost among the martyrs that have devoted themselves to the uplifting of our nation.

It is this high-souled lady that has, in her work in the political field, proclaimed that freedom is the birthright of every man and placed a new ideal before our eyes.

The methods also, by which we seek to realise our ideals, must therefore undergo a change. We must cease to beg and behave in a way befitting our self-respect. . . There is no use in the Government showing sympathy with our aspirations. It is necessary that they should first grant the reforms demanded by the National Congress and the Moslem League. . . The greater the repression employed to suppress these aspirations of the soul, the stronger will be the force with which they will manifest themselves; and the nation will be disappointed. . . It is impossible to put down a force which has filled the hearts of a nation and is growing day by day. In no country have such repressive measures been fruitful. . . Mrs. Besant is our life-ideal incarnate.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The present situation.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th August, says:—When the Colonies have made up their minds to have a share in the government of the Empire and the mother country is nodding assent, can India, which is the crest jewel of the Empire, be silent without wishing for self-government? When such just aspirations are publicly voiced forth, repressive laws are being enforced. The Government do not say anything about the post-war reforms. They of course speak words of discouragement. It appears that the Government of India have suggested certain reforms to the Secretary of State, but that is confidential. Times of India stated that to keep the proposed reforms undisclosed is disastrous. If the Government do not declare their policy, it will be difficult, says that paper, to solve the Indian political problem in the future. The Indians are seeking means to remove the present critical situation. From the fact that in the Joint Conference at Bombay, responsible leaders referred to the Provincial Committees the question whether it is advisable to resort to passive resistance, and the fact that Indians in England met to consider that same question, it is plain that the Indians are growing more and more despondent. We hope the Government will satisfy the people so that they may not be driven to adopt passive resistance, and trust that in solving the Indian problem, they will manifest the same statesmanship and farsightedness as they did in solving the Irish question.

SAMUDRA THEERAM, Trivandrum, Aug. 1st, 1917.

The present condition in India.

In a leader under the heading "The present condition in India", the Samudra Theeram, of the 1st August, dwells upon the impropriety of annoying the British Government at this juncture with an agitation for self-government, which will, however, be granted to India as soon as she is found fit for it, and observes that the subjects of a Native State like Travancore have no business to carry on unnecessary and meaningless discussions on the subject.

94. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th August, in its leader under this heading observes:—The first means, by which universal brotherhood can be attained, is to avail ourself of our national feeling. . . Every nation contributes to the prosperity of the world by its individual intellectual powers. . . Thus does every nation develop its individual traits of character, a blending of which adds lustre to universal brotherhood. The combination of different nations, like the combination of difierent colours in a rainbow, produces a beautiful effect. . . Every nation has its peculiar genius. We sum up the genius of the Americans in the expression "Uncle Sam" and that of the English in the expression "John Bull."

Nationality.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

The war has arisen to develop such national characteristics and not to destroy them. It has made it clear that it is desirable that a nation should work out its own salvation. For, otherwise, the extinction of small States would be a matter for gratification. . . Thus does it become also manifest that nations bound by linguistic ties should be constituted separate States It has become an object of the war to bring together under one State the Poles distributed among three different States. England has accepted the principle that national independence is the very root of the brotherhood of man. The English cannot act against it. The salvation of the Indians is a sequel to this favourable disposition of things. It was because the English accepted the principle of the freedom of nations that it became necessary to grant freedom to the Irish nation immediately. And it was for that very reason that India has directed all her attention to the grant of self-government and is asking the rulers to vouchsafe freedom to the Indian Nation also; there is no room now for the dogmas of such Imperialists as Messrs. Joseph Chamberlain, Balfour and Lord Curzon, which are opposed to the development of national feeling. . . The words of Emile Botru, occurring in her "The war and truth", are pregnant with meaning:—"All nations, that have a separate individuality, have a right to freedom. . ."

95. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th August, writes under this heading: There are no signs of colour distinction decreasing in South Africa. No practical change in the angle of vision appears to have taken place. It was reported in the Indian Opinion how an Indian died when he was pushed out of a tram-car on attempting to get into it.

Colour distinction.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

The issue of the Natal Mercury of the 2nd July contains the following: . . . "A tram-car stopped to take in two lame seapoys of the Indian Army. . . . But they were refused admittance. . . These seapoys were considered competent to fight for the cause of liberty. When they lost their limbs in so fighting, it is but right that we should allow them such privileges as lie in our power to give them. In such matters the corporation must exercise some care but should not act in such a way as to bring disgrace on us." No comment of ours is necessary on this.

96. The Andhraprakasika, of the 7th August, says that the European passenger in a tramcar in South Africa, who thrust down an Indian passenger and caused his death was fined £50. It remarks—If instead of a fine, the offender were sentenced to a short term of rigorous imprisonment, that would have a deterrent effect on others, and allay the indignation of the Indians.

An inadequate punishment.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

97. The Desamata, of the 1st August, publishes the proceedings of a meeting held to celebrate the 62nd birthday anniversary of Mr Tilak, containing summaries of the speeches delivered by Mrs. Sarojini Nayudu, Mr. Sayyad Hussain and others.

Mr. Tilak's birthday anniversary.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 1st, 1917.

98. The Desamata, of the 1st August, says in its leader: Ever since the authorities began to enforce repressive laws against those engaged in the service of the country, the people have been pained in mind and exasperated.

A meeting of the leaders in Bombay.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 1st, 1917.

Again, the internments and the prohibition of meetings of protest against the internments, in violation of freedom of speech, have been an additional source of mental agitation. The Congress Committees met in Bombay on the 28th and the 29th to determine the line of duty to be adopted. The meeting was attended by 70 Indian leaders who have not only gained the confidence of the people but also won the appreciation of the Government. It is no exaggeration to say that their resolutions will be approved of all over India. They prepared a representation to the Secretary of State and His Excellency the Viceroy on the present political situation and despatched it by wire. . . We pray that the Secretary of State and His Excellency the Viceroy will enquire into the matters mentioned in the representation, allay the agitation, and enable the people to devote their whole heart to a victorious prosecution of the present war.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Duties of the leaders.

99. The Kistnapatrika, of the 4th August, writes under the heading:—"The conference held in Bombay on the 28th of July does undoubtedly hold an important place in the modern political history of India. . . A gulf of difference exists between the aspirations of the Indian leaders and the opinions of the bureaucracy. The discontent of the people and the intolerance of the rulers are becoming more and more intense. The security demanded of papers, punishments without trial, prohibition of meetings, threats of the authorities and other repressive acts are agitating the minds of the leaders. . . But they have been acting only constitutionally. They sent in a memorial to the Ministers in England also representing their grievances. But the authorities have not given a reply calculated to pacify the leaders, to strengthen the confidence of the people, and to remove the differences growing lamentably between the people of India and the bureaucracy. They are not adopting mild methods. On the other hand, they are only resorting to repressive measures that cause dishonour to such enlightened gentlemen as Sir Rash Behari Ghose. The people are questioning if this is all the return for the implicit obedience, self-sacrifice and courage shown by India in relation to the British Empire.

The British Empire is now passing through a great crisis. At such an unfortunate time the Indians have manifested their loyalty to the empire. . . This loyalty has its foundations in the confidence of the Indians in the love of liberty of the British people, in the promises made by the British statesmen and in the proclamations and messages of the British Sovereigns. It was this confidence that encouraged the declaration of the ideal of swaraj by such popular leaders as Messrs. Gokhale and Dadabhai Naoroji. It was this confidence that inspired the ideals of the Congress and the Moslem League. . . Though many events happened to shake this confidence, such Viceroys as Ripon and Hardinge and such friends of India as Sir Henry Cotton and Mr. Wedderburn fostered this confidence by their liberal-heartedness. . . Mrs. Besant and Mr. Arundale have been strengthening this very confidence. Blessed are they who nourish this confidence. If this confidence is shaken it will lead to endless misfortune, not only to India but also to the whole British Empire wherein the sun never sets. It is this fear that has overtaken the minds of all popular leaders. While, on one side, the speeches of British Ministers are encouraging this confidence the repressive acts of the bureaucracy here are creating disappointment on the other. . . The famous letter of the members of the conference that met recently in Bombay explains briefly, but boldly and clearly, the critical situation thus created in this country. . . They expressed in unmistakable terms the problem that is facing the rulers and the ruled today. The condition is critical. Remedy must be applied immediately. Otherwise unending misfortune will be the result. . . They emphatically assert that there are four things to be done. . . Unless they are done it is impossible to allay the unrest prevailing in the country. Anything done to the contrary will only fan the flame of popular discontent. Despondence will gather strength. The rulers are not unaware of the results of such despondence. It is dangerous that the rulers should place their faith in a policy of repression and oppose the wishes of the leaders. A policy of repression that has not the approval of the people has never been successful. . . Any one who has knowledge of history can understand how dangerous it is to suppose that such a policy is most expedient, when the people are all united in their action. Sir Krishna Gupta who spent his whole life in Government service has declared that the Government is responsible if the youngmen of the country lose their faith in the policy of the existing Government. Even Sir Chandavarkar, who has been known to be a friend of the Government, pointed out that it is desirable that the Government should admit the popular leaders into their confidence and sympathise with their endeavours and that it is not safe to adopt repressive measures which create fear and discouragement in them. Even Anglo-Indian papers such as the Times of Bombay, the Pioneer of Allahabad and the Madras Mail have observed that the country is in a critical condition and that the rulers must change their ways.

The disease must be correctly diagnosed and the remedy applied. It is not merely useless to suppress the symptoms or apply superficial palliatives, but also dangerous as the disease will turn out serious and prove fatal. . . Repression cannot remove discontent. History tells us that it will get beneath the surface and prove dangerous. When the Rulers ignore this truth and infringe the birthrights of men by denying them freedom of speech, freedom of writing and freedom to live where they choose, what are the people to do? . . . If, in spite of the cry of the people against these repressive measures raised in hundreds of meetings and papers, Rulers do not change their policy, are the leaders to sit quietly drafting their resolutions? Is it not necessary that they should have recourse to passive resistance carried on constitutionally, to show that their disapproval of the policy of Government does issue from their hearts and not merely from their lips. . . Passive [resistance is not an ordinary weapon. It is a weapon that can be used only on rare occasions. As it is based on soul-power it cannot be easily carried on by all. . . The question of passive resistance will be taken up for consideration in the first week of October. Meanwhile it is necessary to create a concensus of opinion about it amongst the people. . . The comparative strength of the Rulers and the ruled can be determined only after the form is settled which such resistance is to assume in future. . .

100. The Kistnapatrika, of the 4th August, writes under this heading:— When the English Ambassador communicated to the German Prime Minister that the English were determined to enter on a war with Germany the feelings of surprise, indignation, disappointment and grief which the latter expressed were indescribable. The moment England offered her hand of protection to Belgium, Germany gave up all hopes of her militarism. But the destruction of German military greatness is not an ordinary affair. . . It was hoped that this fearful war will come to an end within six months, but we are forced to think that even Lord Kitchener's estimate of three years is not correct. . . The conflagration of war is enveloping all countries. The wider its extent the greater is the difficulty of bringing about peace. How are the conflicting interests of so many countries to be reconciled?

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 4th, 1917.

4th August.

The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 4th August, writes:—Today is the 4th August 1917. The reason for the importance of this date is that it marks the anniversary of Great Britain's declaration of war on savage, barbaric, tyrannical, cruel and bloodthirsty Germany, which had already begun this worldwide sanguinary conflict.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The 4th of August 1917.

The editor, in mentioning the dates on which the several belligerent kingdoms declared war on one another and on neutrals, observes:—"Today is the third anniversary of the war. We ardently hope that our gallant forces engaged against the enemy on different battlefields will achieve full and complete victory for our arms and that our King will be victorious over his enemies."

101. A correspondent to the Kistnapatrika, of the 4th August, proposes certain questions relating to the status, rights and duties of zamindars, which include:—". . . When we get swaraj we can spend the taxes that we pay to Government, according to the wishes of the people. Is there any possibility of the people gaining such rights at any time in regard to the taxes paid by them to the zamindars? How long

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Zamindars.

are the people to continue to be in this unfortunate condition of collecting millions of their money and paying it all into the hands of these zamindars who give themselves up to indolence and self-indulgence, and waiting for months together at their gate, when they seek an interview? . . . When it is possible to confiscate the present zamindari estates, how much subsistence allowance have they to be paid, at what rates, and how long? . . . Is there any necessity for the people to be slavishly paying homage to these zamindars not in return for any benefit derived from them, not in consideration of any personal worth but of some traditionary rights possessed by them? What are the acts done by the zamindars for the good of the country, as a matter of duty?

Which are the zamins in our Andhra country? What are the amounts of the revenue received and spent by them? Are they published at any time? Have the people any right to interfere in these matters? Are there no great men who can prevent lacs and crores of people's money being drained into the stream of arbitrary expenditure in the name of zamindars?

When such an absolute autocrat as the Tsar of Russia who has been exercising his sway ever since the beginning of this world had to yield to the will of the people and lose his crown, why is it not easy that these zamins (estates) which came into being only yesterday should be wiped out of existence?"

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Letter of the Congress Committee.

102. The Kistnapatrika, of the 4th August, gives a Telugu version of the letter addressed by the Congress Committee, which met in Bombay on the 28th and 29th of July, to the Viceroy and the Secretary of State.

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, Aug. 4th, 1917.

India and the Colonies.

103. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 4th August, writes:—It is now universally recognised that the different nations which are held together by the ties of British citizenship should cultivate the most cordial feelings towards one another. General Smuts of South Africa has dwelt on this subject most eloquently at the recent Imperial Conference. But however broad General Smuts' views may be, our readers are not unaware of the fact that the attitude of the people of South Africa is neither liberal nor sympathetic, but is, on the other hand, one which is most provoking to the Indians. We have already stated the news that an Indian in Johannesburg met with his death because a European fellow passenger in a tram car pushed him out while the car was moving. Our readers will be eager to know what happened next. We therefore proudly announce that it led to a prosecution in which the European accused was found guilty. The judge did not know what to do. Still, he sentenced the offender to pay a fine of £50 or to suffer imprisonment for nine months in default. What supreme love of justice in the Judge! General Smuts would do well to carry his message of mutual cordiality to his own countrymen, particularly to authorities of the type of this judge instead of giving it at the Imperial Conference.

Samyad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 4th, 1917.

Swaraj.

104. In a leading article under this heading, the Samyad Abhyudaya, of the 4th August, after quoting a passage from the late Dadabhai's speech at the Calcutta session of the Congress in 1906, to the effect that the one remedy for the removal of the economic distress in the country and the political disabilities of the people is the attainment of swaraj, and proceeds as follows:—The British people have suffered enormously in order to obtain this great boon. Hundreds of thousands sacrificed their lives and all for establishing their constitutional rights. Thanks to the same British, we have now an opportunity of obtaining swaraj without any of those trials which they had to face on this account. We should not fail to seize this opportunity. We should put our faith in God and in our rulers, be swadeshis and work fearlessly for our advancement; and there is little doubt that God as well as our rulers will promote our cause.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

Silence in Madras.

105. The Qaumi Report, of the 28th July, writes:—At present silence reigns supreme over Islamic Madras. Disappointment, despair, and faint-heartedness have taken possession of the workers. It is time to awake but people do not open their eyes. There is a journey ahead, but the caravan is not ready.

The college question has absolutely resolved itself into apathy, indifference, and callousness.

We were under the impression that the change would create great enthusiasm among Muhammadans and inspire the workers with renewed zeal, but alas! this expectation is being disappointed and the notion is spreading that there is no need of a college at all, and that primary and secondary education should take precedence. The recent results of the School Final Examination have converted many aspiring Muhammadans to this view; for, after the expenditure of much material and mental energy for a whole year, only twenty-one boys have been declared eligible for admission to a college! This has considerably cooled educational enthusiasm.

No one tells us who is responsible for this material and moral damage, or how long Muhammadans are likely to remain in this desolate, hopeless and difficult position. The failure of the Muhammadans at the Entrance Examination has inflicted a wound that will take long to heal. This means a stigma which our educational leaders cannot readily remove.

Students are getting discouraged and the dread of failure prevents them attempting to re-enter the arena of endeavour, but still neither guide nor sympathiser comes forward to condole with them. No politician interrogates the Government in the matter, nor does any community appear to desire to enquire why this defeat should be the fate of Mussalman students. The position of the Muhammadans, with reference to Government employ, is becoming increasingly precarious. No one understands what we should get or what we are getting.

People are celebrating the appointment of a Muhammadan as Collector and the elevation of another to the Board of Revenue.

They are elated and think that the demands of the community have now been met. But do such sops and casual measures merit our thanks?

Only the other day a report was spread that Khan Bahadur Muhammad Buzlullah Sahib Bahadur had been appointed Revenue officer to the Corporation.

At this people are expressing their grateful appreciation of the magnificent success the Muhammadans are achieving. Possibly many friends have congratulated him on his appointment, but we understand exactly the meaning of this office and the extent of its suitability.

It was not the demand of our community that some one should be appointed a permanent Revenue officer or made an acting Member. We did not clamour for any special consideration or favour. We consider it a disgrace to demand office notwithstanding our unfitness and then, in grateful acknowledgment, recite praise-poems.

We demand our dues. We ask for the rights pertaining to our great national and historic importance. We request the Government to appreciate the merits and recognise the claims of those against whose fitness and ability the community have nothing to say.

Even our local contemporary the Madras Mail felt impelled to write half a dozen appreciative lines regarding the appointment of Khan Bahadur Muhammad Bazlullah Sahib, and the journal Justice, which was founded for the sole purpose of advocating the cause of its party, eulogises him.

In the light of such clear evidence we may suppose that the Government conferred these appointments out of consideration of, and regard for, the Muhammadans. If it is so, it is a manifest error. His ability and capability were the means of his getting the post for which, perhaps, the Government considered him fit and suitable.

Although it is certainly a good thing for the Corporation, but in the opinion of the community it is not worth rejoicing over! for the community consider it disappointing as his nobility of character, ability and capacity qualify him for a far more exalted position. The community is somewhat disappointed to find that for the present, the Government is unable to go any further to meet our demands.

It is certain that it could not help itself, and for this reason we do not wish to further discuss the suitability or otherwise of this appointment. Possibly the Government may soon be able to grant the requests of the community. Sometimes the Government, in making new appointments, is confronted with untold difficulties. What we wish to say is that people should not think that the community is really pleased with these appointments simply because a few people say so. We have before our eyes the striking examples of our brother community. How is it possible that we should refrain from making requests like theirs and be content to rely on chance happenings?

Qaumi Report, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

The amalgamation of the Congress and the Muslim League.

106. The Qaumi Report, of the 2nd August, writes:—The day before yesterday the Bombay Congress and League held a united conference and drafted a lengthy letter which will be submitted to Government for consideration. In that interesting but delicate document the question of self-government has been very seriously taken up, and the Government is advised to announce its policy at a very early date.

The question of local internments is also legally and constitutionally discussed and light thrown on the defence of Mrs. Besant and others.

Before expressing our views on this momentous document, we desire to ascertain how far the Muslim League represented the cause of the Muhammadans of India, whether this union and co-ordination had been approved by the community and whether or no the branches had been previously consulted. As far as our Presidency is concerned, acquaintance with the community apart, they know nothing about the Muslim papers of Madras! Presumably they know as much about the views of the Muslim League of this Presidency as Mr. Chamberlain, in their belief, knew about India!

We do not know how they can represent the All-India Muslim League when, in the matter of information they are on a par with Mr. Chamberlain or how they happened to know that in addition to the Muhammadans whose voices are united with theirs, all the others concur in their views.

The proof of the comprehensiveness of their information and the state of their real feelings is evidenced by the fact that in discussing the internment of Muhammadans they have only mentioned the names of Mr. Muhammad Ali and Mr. Shoukat Ali. No doubt these two brethren are the real sympathisers with the community and, consequently, the community is most anxious for their release. Can any one say that the condition of Hasrat Mohani is not deplorable? Does the Muslim League or the National Congress consider their internment and the difficulties experienced by them as usual and lawful? If not, and surely not, then why has the name of poor Hasrat Mohani been forgotten, and why was no reference made to Moulavi Abul Kalam and Mr. Zafat Ali and others? We are of opinion that such an indifference outrages the feelings of the community. Those who have forgotten the names of those two helpless and innocent men either erroneously or expediently while discussing the question of internment of Muhammadans, hurt the feelings of the community and take away from the importance of such feelings.

When our compatriots do not fail to remember the names of Mrs. Besant and her two associates, there is no reason why we should not recall the names of Mr. Muhammad Ali and Mr. Shoukat Ali who think and believe as we do. The Government has neither mentioned nor proved any offence against either of them and, unless a court holds that they are legally guilty of the offence, the community has the right to sympathise with them and to devise means to secure their lawful release.

III.—Legislation.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 31st, 1917.

A Bill to amend the Madras Village Courts Act.

107. The Swadesamitran, of the 31st July, reproduces in Tamil the substance of a communication from Rao Bahadur K. S. Venkataramа Ayyar offering certain suggestions in regard to the provisions of this Bill for the consideration of the Government and of the Members of the Legislative Council, which appears in New India of the 23rd and 24th idem.

Kerala Patrika, Calicut, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The Village Courts Act Amendment Bill.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 4th August, also comments favourably on the Village Courts Act Amendment Bill, and hopes that it will be passed into law without any material alterations.

108. The United Church Herald for July 1917 reports Mr. W. T. Scudder to have written:—Though among the Christian converts from the low classes, the husband or wife lives a life of open prostitution, I have not come across any wishing to obtain a divorce. The reasons are that they are ashamed to make the matter public, are unable to go to court, and are not able to bear the expenses. Until the law relating to divorce among them is modified, the right to obtain it will remain a dead letter and greater evil may follow. . . If the Government amend the law making it easier to obtain divorce, I am sure open life of sin will disappear and Christian purity will be established.

Divorce among Christians.

United Church Herald, Madras, July 1917.

IV.—Native States.

109. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, refers to an order of the Mysore Government in which they expressed the opinion that the best means to spread a knowledge of natural sciences among the people in the State of Mysore is for those who are experts in them to give lectures to the people in Canarese so as as to be easily understood by them. It then remarks that Mysore is developing in every way by leaps and bounds.

Mysore.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, August 1st, 1917.

110. The Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd August, writes under this heading:—It is the native states that have heroically protected and developed the literature of the Hindus. Had it not been for the greatness and expansion of the Kingdom of Vijianagram, it is doubtful if Telugu literature could have been adorned by such classical works as Manucharitra and Vasucharitra. . . Even to-day, the native states are a prop to Indian civilisation. If one wishes to see ancient institutions, he has to go to native states. The troops of native states have saved the Suez Canal, protected traffic between England and India, and arrested German advance in the French theatre. . . In many States the Arms Act, which is a canker of valours and enterprise, does not exist. Again, native states afford scope for the exercise of the talents of the Indians, for in filling up high appointments they encourage Indians only. Sir T. Madhava Rao and such other personages, who could only have been Deputy Collectors under the British Government, were ministers in native states and administered the country with success and distinction The native chiefs who maintained the traditions of the Indians and saved the ancient civilisation of India from decay, undoubtedly deserve the everlasting gratitude of the Indians.

The native chiefs are introducing modern reforms into their territories. Free elementary education has been introduced into many States. The Maharaja of Mysore and the Nizam have undertaken to encourage the vernaculars. In certain States the executive and judicial functions have been separated. Only the native chiefs are working for social advancement. . . It may be guessed that when the time comes for the grant of self-government to India, the native chiefs also will change their administration accordingly and help to advance mankind.

The Native States.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

111. In commenting favourably on the Travancore Budget for the year 1093 M.E., the Malayali, of the 4th August, also congratulates the Diwan on the sound condition of the finances of the State, and draws attention to the necessity of reorganising the Forest Department, the policy in respect of the sale of timber being taken special exception to.

The Travancore Budget.

Malayali, Quilon, Aug. 4th, 1917.

The Dharma Poshini, of the 5th August, also comments favourably on the Travancore Budget for 1093 M.E.

Dharma Poshini, Quilon, Aug. 5th, 1917.

Errata.

Report No. 30.

Page 2046, paragraph 56, line 3, read "traffic" for "traffice."
" 2049 " 63 (2), line 5, read "know nothing" for "no nothing."
" 2039 " 26, line 4, insert "the" before "credulous."
" 2044 " 50, " 6, substitute "Shia" for "Shiah."

Issued, 14th August 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 33 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 18th August 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(a) Police—
The Tanjore police and Home Rule processions.	2173
(c) Local and Municipal—
The Acting President, Madras Corporation ..	ib.
(k) General—
An Indian Commonwealth	2174

II.—Home Administration —cont.	PAGE
(k) General—cont.
Government servants and the Madras internments	2174
Passive resistance	2175
Mrs. Besant's health	2177
Lord Islington on Indian reforms	ib.
New India security forfeited	2178
Indians in South Africa	ib.
The Ceylon passport and quarantine system ..	ib.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

The war 2179
The submarine outrage 2181
Bread famine at an end .. .. ib.
Christianity and the war .. .. ib.
The condition of Russia .. .. ib.
The fourth anniversary of the war .. .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police—
A Police Sergeant punished .. .. .. ib.

(b) Courts—
Power of appointment of temporary Judges .. ib.
The Trichinopoly riot 2182
The Additional Sub-Court of Calicut .. .. ib.

(d) Education—
Free and compulsory primary education .. ib.
The Rajkumar College, Madras .. .. .. ib.
A special meeting of the Senate .. .. .. ib.
The study of history .. .. ib.
The Educational Conference at Simla .. .. ib.
Students and politics 2183
English in secondary schools .. .. .. ib.
The Calcutta University .. .. ib.

(e) Local and Municipal—
The Corporation of Madras .. .. .. ib.
Elected presidents of district boards 2184
Rao Bahadur P. Thiagaraya Chetti .. .. ib.
Presidents of local boards .. .. .. ib.
A Muhammadan Revenue officer, Khan Bahadur Muhammad Bazlulla Sahib Bahadur, B.A. ib.
Public health in Madras 2185

(j) Salt and Abkāri—
Rise in the price of salt .. .. ib.

(k) General—
The Johannesburg tram-car tragedy .. .. ib.
The Home Rule flag .. .. ib.
The new Secretary of State for India 2186
Reforms in Indian constitution .. .. .. ib.
The internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues .. .. ib.
Indian aspirations .. .. ib.
The Brahmans and non-Brahmans 2187
A meeting of the Home Rule League in Madras. 2188
Swadeshism .. .. ib.
"The Bombay Trio" 2189
Grant of titles 2190
Traffic at the Madras Harbour .. .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.
The present political situation 2190
Indians and the promises made by British statesmen 2192
The Lord Bishop of Calcutta on Home Rule .. 2193
The Registration department .. .. .. ib.
The German trade after the war .. .. ib.
The Indian trade 2194
Mr. K. R. Karandikar .. .. ib.
Sir Rabindranath Tagore on Home Rule .. ib.
Mrs. Besant's reply .. .. ib.
Brahmans and Home Rule 2195
An appeal to the Muhammadans .. .. ib.
Mrs. Besant's health 2196
Lord Islington on Indian reforms .. .. ib.
Laws and Regulations in India and England .. 2198
American women .. .. ib.
Prof. K. Ramamurti .. .. ib.
The Calcutta protest meeting 2199
The Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Acharyulu .. ib.
Vizianagram estate—the Brahman rule .. ib.
Passive resistance .. .. ib.
Death from vaccination 2200
The High Court of public opinion .. .. ib.
Meeting of the United Provinces Conference .. ib.
Zamindars .. .. ib.
The Joint Conference .. .. ib.
The India Council .. .. ib.
Captain Wedgewood's opinion .. .. .. ib.
The letter of the Congress Committee 2201
Non-Brahman Conference .. .. .. ib.
The future of agriculture .. .. .. ib.
Political reforms .. .. ib.
Nationality 2202
Home Rule 2203
Indians in South Africa .. .. ib.
Lord Willingdon and Home Rule .. .. ib.
Grazing on porambоke lands 2204
Rupee and two and-a-half rupee currency-notes. ib.
Administrative reforms in India .. .. ib.
The Indian Finance department 2205
Want of funds .. .. ib.
The Queen's sympathy .. .. ib.
Mr. Zafar Ali Khan's desire .. .. .. ib.
Interned Muhammadans and Home Rule .. 2206

III.—Legislation.

Compulsory Elementary Education Bill .. .. ib.

IV.—Native States.

The Travancore budget for 1093 M.E. 2207

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

1. New India, of the 15th August, writes:—"We publish elsewhere the important and illuminating communication which the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar has addressed to the press and the public and which speaks for itself as to the relentless policy of repression which the agents of the administration are determined to pursue against all those who are identified with the perfectly peaceful propaganda of Home Rule. . . . We cannot believe that the District Magistrate of Tanjore, whose approval has been obtained or the District Superintendent of Police, Tanjore, who has illegally refused a license, can ever believe that their friend and fellow-citizen, the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar, could ever head a procession which is likely to cause or lead to a breach of the peace and the circumstances leave the public no possible alternative but to conclude that the authorities are determined to sweep out of sight anything that savours of Home Rule, Mrs. Besant, swadeshi and mirabile dicta of the Theosophical Society. Government have thus left Kumbakōnam Home Rulers no other alternative but to treat the order as absolutely illegal and to adopt all constitutional means they possess to render it absolutely nugatory."

The Tanjore police and Home Rule processions.

New India, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Writing on this subject [in a leader on Passive Resistance, published under (k) General], the Hindu, of the 15th August, observes: "The communication from the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar, which we publish elsewhere, is a clear instance of Police high-handedness and obstruction. The Police Superintendent has exceeded, it seems to us, the limits of his duty and authority, and has by his arbitrary action furnished a case in which passive resistance would be perfectly justifiable. . . . It appears to us a wanton official misdemeanor that in the case of a person of the position and antecedents of the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar, who is a retired Government servant after holding high office, is a Member of the Legislative Council, and is Chairman of the Municipality of Kumbakonam, one of the largest towns in Southern India, a police officer should forbid him to conduct a procession in respect of the varied purposes mentioned in his notice all of which are of an entirely innocuous character."

Hindu, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

(e) Local and Municipal.

2. In a leader under the heading, "Poverty of Thought or Force of Habit," Justice, of the 13th August, observes:—"Rao Bahadur T. Vijayaraghava Achariyar, ex-Revenue Officer of the Madras Corporation, has been appointed to act as President of that body during the time that the permanent President Mr. J. C. Molony is on leave. Before the acting appointment was made, we pointed out in these columns the extreme inadvisability of appointing a Deputy Collector to act as President of the Corporation. . . . In spite of the objection we raised, the Madras Government have thought fit to appoint Mr. Vijayaraghava Achariyar as acting President. Governments in India think that they would lose prestige if they listen to outside criticism however just and modify their action in deference to such criticism. On the present occasion the prestige of the Madras Government has been maintained. That supreme object having been attained, we now want to appeal to their sweet reasonableness and point out to them that the step they have now taken is detrimental to the best interests of the Madras Corporation and the rate-payers of the city; and, in doing so, we will not take them very far back but will only take them as far as May last. . . . The Government Order No. 767 M., referred to above is dated 2nd May 1917, that is full one month after the close of the official year and the

The Acting President, Madras Corporation.

Justice, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

Executive of the Corporation was not able even with a month at their disposal to correct the wrong figures supplied to Government. . . We can understand a difference of 40 or 50 thousand rupees between the Revised Estimate and the actuals, but a difference of six lakhs and odd shows either unpardonable carelessness or hopeless ignorance in the officer who prepared the revised estimate. And the officer who prepared this revised estimate was Mr. Vijayaraghava Achariyar, the present acting President. The Madras Government have made themselves ridiculous by acting on that revised estimate, and after that experience to place that very same officer as President of the Corporation is extremely thoughtless. . . In the present case can the Government conscientiously say that the author of the revised estimates for 1916-17 is really the best fitted man to occupy the position of President of the Madras Corporation? If they cannot conscientiously say that he is the best man that they can supply, then we venture to think that the Government are not discharging their duties to the Madras Corporation to the best of their powers. The municipal administration of the Madras Government has been consistently bad. We did not expect much from the civilian administrators as, generally speaking, they are out of sympathy with the development of local self-government. The Indian members of the Executive Council to whose immediate charge local self-government in the Madras Presidency is entrusted have one and all been men without practical experience of local self-government, and so nothing very much was to be expected from them either. We must confess that we did expect a good deal from Lord Pentland who as Secretary of State for Scotland—the most progressive of the four countries constituting the United Kingdom—was expected to be conversant with all that is progressive and good in local self-government. We are very much disappointed with Lord Pentland's direction of local and municipal bodies in this Presidency. The present appointment of an acting President of the Madras Corporation is the last straw that breaks the camel's back. If Lord Pentland considers that the author of the revised estimate for 1916-17 which sent the Madras Government on a wild goose chase is fit to be President of the Corporation of Madras, it is quite evident that either he has forgotten all that he has learned in Great Britain about municipal bodies, or that he does not take sufficient interest in the welfare of the Madras Corporation. . . We thoroughly disapprove of the appointment of a financial bungler as President of the Madras Corporation and must hold His Excellency Lord Pentland responsible for a good deal of the financial muddles of the Madras Corporation."

(k) General.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 9th, 1917.

An Indian Commonwealth.

3. In concluding a leader on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 9th August, says:—"There is nothing wrong, indeed it is patriotic, in looking forward to the day when an Indian Commonwealth would stand with England four-square against the world, proof against traitor within and foe without. In fact, it is to this end we must work, but without the will to do this work obviously it is foolish to hug the ideal. It is for this reason we have no sympathy for the Home Rule clique who while creating the loudest noise do absolutely nothing to prepare the ground, perhaps leaving it to the Government. Our friends would put the cart before the horse; they would first get Home Rule and then work up. There is no wonder then the propaganda has not made any material progress, though its protagonists might say to the contrary. We are fearfully tired of the gibberish and vapid nonsense constantly ejected, and unless the task of national uplift is commenced in right earnest, giving berth to all wild, or empty talk, we are afraid the goal before us would recede further the greater we pursue it. This simple truth seems not yet to have been realised and unless it is realised the outlook must for ever remain gloomy. If the conditions are fulfilled, self-government will come to us of its own accord without anybody making themselves martyrs of the cause."

Non-Brahman, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1917.

Government servants and the Madras internments.

4. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 12th August, has the following:—"One fails to understand a Judge of the High Court presiding and a District Munsif welcoming the delegates to the Theosophical Federation held at Chingleput last week, and lustily cheering references made to Mrs. Besant when she is under internment as per orders of His Excellency the Governor in Council. Is not this conduct belittling the doings of the Government, if not defying it, though the conduct of those was as mad as the conduct of the Madras Provincial Congress Committee that elected the interned trio as Vice-Presidents of the Committee, Madras, or for the matter of that India is being converted into a Bedlam, but the consolation is that a microscopic section cannot succeed in making India or any portion a mad house and their efforts will only melt like salt in the ocean."

5 New India, of the 13th August, remarks:—"It is essential that we should begin to clarify and define our ideas on the subject of passive resistance. We have tried for more than half a century to turn the attention of our rulers to the deplorable conditions in our country and to make them understand the necessity for certain radical changes in our political constitution as offering the sole remedies for their removal. Our appeals and petitions have been contemptuously ignored. After the beginning of the present great war, our demands became more pressing and incessant, first through the awakening of our national consciousness and, secondly, because the seriousness of our situation necessitated an immediate choice between freedom and bondage. This seriousness has apparently been recognised by the authorities in that they have felt called upon to deliberately and consciously embark upon a campaign of repression intended to stifle our cries and thus keep secure for themselves the comfortable position of masters of our land. We then felt it necessary to protest against this policy and show them its utter incompatibility with the principles for which Great Britain has been professedly and reputedly-standing. . . Anything which tends to shake the belief of the people in the superhuman wisdom of our rulers is a dangerous and improper method of carrying on the agitation and can be described, in the words of our late Secretary of State, as a persistent attempt at bringing the Government into discredit. . . The time has become more than ripe in our opinion for resort to a more tangible and concrete form of resistance to unwarranted encroachments on our liberty. After mature deliberation, the foremost leaders of our country have arrived at the decision that the hour has struck when the country should enter into this phase of the struggle. We consider it, therefore, the duty of every patriotic citizen to come forward to take his share in this fight for the liberty of our motherland. . . . We believe that in fighting against injustice, it is the God in us who really fights and nothing can stand against His might. Appealing to His justice and secure in His strength, let us wager our all for the sake of our country's Freedom, with undaunted confidence and undisturbed serenity; for, to the righteous, 'succour is at hand and victory is nigh'."

Passive resistance.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 14th August, writes:—"The Madras Home Rule League has decided to inaugurate the passive resistance movement, after a plethora of perfervid eloquence and 'braggart utterances'. Verily they are going forward with a vengeance. We hope the passive resisters will resign all honorary offices in a body. Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar, we hope, will set the example resigning his knighthood and pension. We will then say that the movement is not a pretentious sham. Mere tom-foolery will not bake the pie."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 15th August, says:—"Notwithstanding the gibes which the movement for passive resistance has elicited from Anglo-Indian quarters and from even some Indian sources which ought to know better, we have good grounds to believe that it is spreading far and wide in the country. We do not see any signs of the Government taking a calm and sober view of the situation, and withdrawing the sternly repressive policy which is afoot throughout the country, to repress constitutional political agitation. . . If the Government would turn a deaf ear to well-founded representations of the people, they must carry on the administration of the country without the willing co-operation of the bulk of the community. It is not good for either the Government or the people that the feeling of estrangement which has been created by the repressive policy should be allowed to grow and develop."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Indian Patriot, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The Indian Patriot, of the 15th August, states:—"It is thought that to prosecute passive resistance is an easy affair, because passive resistance has succeeded in South Africa; but passive resistance in India will be a far different matter from what it was in South Africa where the Indians were a comparatively small and cohesive body, united by a sense their common grievance which consisted in the denial of the elementary rights of citizenship. . . . Among the South African Indians there was no division and there was no conflict of interests in order to keep them disunited. But the position in India is quite different. . . . The first question that will put us to the test is how many of the Indian members of the Legislative Council will be prepared to resign today if passive resistance is adopted as a practical policy, and if some of them resign their seats, will there not be a large number of others to take their places? The same question may be asked in regard to other public bodies in which Indians are permitted to participate, and how many of our countrymen will be prepared to give up Government service with their emoluments and privileges? In our opinion, it is useless to talk of passive resistance as a practical measure unless we are perfectly united in our aims. . . . If the members of the Madras Legislative Council resolve in a body to resign, which we consider to be an impossibility, does anybody imagine that the Council will be left empty? . . . Viewed in that light, passive resistance has not much scope in India. The non-Brahman movement in Madras, which is emphasising a disagreeable division among our people, is the most convincing proof of the impossibility of passive resistance. Will all classes of Hindus and all classes of Muhammadans and Christians combine against Government with a common determination? What motive is there for them to so combine? If any section of Hindus as a body withdraw from all association with Government, will Muhammadans and Christians follow the same policy? If not, it is like the man who cuts his nose that will spite his face.

"Besides, passive resistance will tend to demonstrate the hopeless disunion among the people and the Congress, which has been striving for so many years to unite the people, ought to be the last to be responsible for a policy of demonstrating disunion. . . It is impossible for us to achieve union in India as Mr. Gandhi did in South Africa. He was able to lead a united body of men suffering from a common grievance, the most intolerable that any civilised community can be subjected to."

Justice, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Justice, of the 16th August, observes:—"It is some time since we heard of the impending advent of passive resistance in India. It has not yet arrived. But, according to our Home Rule friends, things are tending towards that All-India movement. Apparently the three stages of post internment procedure are protests, processions and passive resistance. We have had quite enough of the first two. The third stage is a 'pleasure deferred'. . . . One must know what passive resistance is before one decides to become a passive resister. But the Madras Committee has decided to adopt passive resistance of a certain form, and after arriving at this decision, have appointed a sub-committee to formulate and report on the practical steps by which effect may be given to the resolution. This reminds us of the story of what the comrade of a sentry who had challenged a passer by and who was explaining matters to him said 'shoot him first Jim and then talk to him'. . . Apparently the individual who is asked to obey an order is to be the authority to judge what is unconstitutional and what is not. The idea is distinctly good, that in a free State every individual should have absolute discretion to decide as to what orders passed by the executive authority in the State he or she will obey. If a citizen finds it rather inconvenient to obey an order he may forthwith declare that order unconstitutional and decline to obey the order. . . This discretionary power of the citizen we may say is more urgently called for with regard to the payment of taxes, and if Mr. Kasturiranga Ayyangar can manage to secure for the citizens of Madras this highest privilege of a free citizen he will undoubtedly deserve a statue on the Marina for which we shall gladly contribute our mite. . . We venture to predict that if passive resistance is ever carried out in Madras to the extent of bringing the passive resisters within the pale of the law, none with the possible exception of the solitary Bombay importation included in the committee of nine will be found within the ranks of the passive resisters. That is our main objection to the passive resistance propaganda in Madras. The so-called leaders will sit in a committee room and recommend the adoption of a policy of passive resistance, and some young fools, who have more enthusiasm than discretion, will carry out the recommendations of this grand committee and go to jail. The members of the committee will write leading articles in newspapers and make speeches at public meetings, but the people who will have to go to jail will be a few misguided young enthusiasts. . . When the leaders who advocate passive resistance in Madras have first taken the consequences of that policy before anybody else suffers from it, we shall begin to believe in the sincerity of the professions of the Home Rulers. We hope that the Government will not be bluffed by the brag and bounce of the Madras Home Rulers."

Mrs. Besant's health.

6. New India, of the 13th August, writes:—"We understand that having come to know of the serious breakdown of her health at Ootacamund, the Government have enquired of Mrs. Besant if she would choose another place of residence for herself. We also understand that Mrs. Besant has, in consequence, expressed her willingness to change her place to Coimbatore as soon as she was able to travel and she could get a house there. . . Those who have seen Mrs. Besant in Ootacamund and noted her condition, feel however, that a mere change of residence will not make any real difference to her health. What she is suffering from is the mental agony of injustice and the forcible prevention of her own personal participation in the work that to her is as dear as life. . . The physical surrounding may make a temporary difference, but that cannot be lasting. If the period of internment is protracted for any length of time we feel sure that there will be serious consequences. We call upon the Government seriously to give consideration to these facts and take steps immediately for the cancellation of the orders of internment."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

Lord Islington on Indian reforms

7. Justice, of the 14th August, states:—"Lord Islington's speech at Oxford on the Indian Reforms has, as was to be expected, been sharply criticised. . . Of course our Brahman friends will consider that the extension of the electoral franchise on a communal basis 'will spell disaster and should be stoutly resisted'. It certainly will spell disaster to their cherished hopes of re-establishing Brahmanical supremacy on the Varnashrama Dharma basis. We have no doubt that they will 'stoutly resist' these proposals. But the other people in India whom the British Government have emancipated from Brahmanical rule must be very big fools indeed if they again consent to put their necks under the yoke. We guess that they can offer a little bit of stout resistance too. We will have to wait and see as to which will be the stouter. . . The people of India have been under British Government, for a hundred and fifty years; but most of that time they were not learning any system of self-government but were trying to settle down into a peaceful condition from a chaotic mess in which the British found them. They have had local self-government only since 1884, and they have had the system of Legislative Councils worth the name only from 1893, and with this short experience when they make a bold proposal that the whole administration of India should be handed over to them it is only political wisdom to suggest that they should first take over a part of the vast machinery and try their hands at working that part. When details of this proposal are worked out, it will be quite possible to pick out certain services which may safely be entrusted to the management of the Legislative Councils, of course out of assigned revenues, otherwise our enthusiastic Home Rulers would swallow up all the available revenue for the services under their management and leave the others to starve. That is the only possible way in which the reforms can be conceded. So far as the Presidency of Madras is concerned, we should say that a good beginning can be made by handing over to popular control such departments as for instance, education, local self-government, sanitation, co-operative credit and so on. We do not for one moment say that these wise reforms will satisfy the howling Home Rulers; but then does any practical politician dream of satisfying the aspirations of Home Rulers? They want Home Rule immediately after the war is over, and if that demand is conceded it will only be inviting a fresh outbreak of hostilities, for we are sure that the men who have fought for the British Empire and shed their blood in the battlefields of three continents are not going tamely to submit themselves to be put under the heels of the armchair politicians in India who worship Mrs. Besant and dream of the re-establishment of the old post-Vedic days. We are glad to see the statement of the Amrita Bazaar Patrika that the reforms as outlined by Lord Islington will excite no enthusiasm in India. That is a blessing. For, if our contemporary the Amrita Bazaar Patrika gets enthusiastic over anything, we may be pretty sure that 'that way madness lies'."

JUSTICE, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Hindu, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

New India security forfeited.

8. The Hindu, of the 16th August, states:—"The Madras Government have added another to the list of repressive measures in the order of forfeiture of the security amount of Rs. 2,000 which has been served against Mr. P. K. Telang, the keeper of the New India Press, for having published the articles in New India which are specified in the order. . . As we remarked yesterday there is no sign whatever of the Madras Government endeavouring to take a calm and sober situation of the present political condition in India. On the other hand, coercive measures tending to curtail the liberties of the people and showing want of confidence in their accredited leaders are of frequent occurrence. The internments of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers have already caused deep resentment and indignation in the public mind, and it is two months today since the ill-advised and unjust measure was taken, and it is singularly inopportune that this day, when public meetings of protest in respect of it are held in all parts of this city and the presidency, the feelings of the people should be further inflamed by the announcement of the forfeiture of the security of New India. . . While we must greatly deplore the lack of wisdom which characterises the action of the authorities in such matters, we perceive gratifying signs that the leaders of the people are everywhere proving themselves equal to the situation, and the national cause will not be allowed to languish and suffer."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Indians in South Africa.

9. The Indian Patriot, of the 16th August, remarks:—"While Indian soldiers wounded in the war are not allowed the European portion of tram-cars in South Africa—a sad but sure sign that there is no change in the angle of vision yet—the same old hatred of the Indian trader continues. The talk of high ideals and disgust at Prussian aggrandisement evidently are no characteristics of the Boer who is going on merrily with his domestic campaign against the Indian trader. The story is a sickening demonstration of human selfishness."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

The Ceylon passport and quarantine system.

10. Writing under the heading "The Ceylon Scandal," the Indian Patriot, of the 16th August, observes:—"To ask poor people to fill up forms, to provide themselves with photographs and wait at the door of high officials before they can get a passport to cross the channel was certainly harsh; it was, we do not hesitate to describe it, meaningless oppression. We are glad that it has been abolished; we look forward with hope to hear that the quarantine restrictions are abolished too. Mr. Theagaraja has pointed out how the Government of Ceylon has been systematically ignoring serious complaints against its officers of corruption; and yet because a doctor in Madras granted a questionable certificate the Ceylon Government was overpowered with righteous moral indignation which resulted in a concession—medical certificate—being withdrawn. What about these exposures of the Ceylon Government? What about this doctor refusing to grant medical certificates to second-class passengers unless they purchased first-class tickets? What about the compulsion about servants being forced to travel second class? Does travelling first and second class act against contagious diseases? The revelations about corruption must make even a Turkish official blush. And yet the Government of Ceylon could pass for a sage, shocked because a doctor gave a worthless certificate and, therefore, insisting that the very systems of granting medical certificates shall cease. We wish the Government would do something to protect its prestige against such queer handling by the Government of Ceylon."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

11. In summarising the events of the war during the year 1916–17 and in briefly describing the present situation, the Dravida Patrika, of the 8th August, observes:—When we consider these events, none of our expectations at the beginning of the last year have been realised. There have of course been several successes and reverses in the course of the year, but the strength of the army, the financial condition and the storage of provisions, which are the essentials for a war, continue to be the same. Though we may not be justified in saying that we fought for a year in vain, yet there is not sufficient reason for us to state that the war has resulted in any appreciable gain either to the Allies or to the enemies last year.

The war.

Dravida Patrika, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The Mahavikatadutan, of the 11th August, writes:—It is now three years since the war began and yet there is no way to see its end. Even if Germany should come forward with proposals of peace, there is no use in concluding the peace hastily. She may, in consideration of her present difficulties and loss, now offer peace, but retrieving her position after some time begin the war again.

The war.

Mahavikatadutan, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 11th August, makes the following observations on this subject:—When we consider the course of events and the mighty efforts put forth by the countries concerned in the war and the peculiar troubles that occur at the several fronts, we are lead to think that this war will not come to an end unless one of the parties take a decisive action. The telegrams received every day give us only an idea of the situation at the various fronts, but give us no insight into the real course of the war.

Mr. Churchil has often said that the English Navy should not only be on the defensive, but also take the offensive, and that only then the war would come to a decisive end. There is considerable difference between taking the offensive by land and taking the offensive by sea. It is easy to transport huge guns by land and it is also possible to mount them on strong masonry platforms thereon, while it is difficult to take them to the ships and construct strong platforms therein for mounting these guns. And even if we should mount them with great difficulty and proceed against the enemies, it will not be possible for us to know the nature of the guns used by them in defence. Further, it will be necessary also to observe that the season is the proper one and is free from mist or rain. If the enemies are to be routed in the naval warfare, their battleships have to be dragged partly from their hiding places, and partly from the naval base where they are properly guarded, and it is not an easy thing to do so. It is, therefore, essential that the ministers should deeply consider this matter before they adopt the suggestion of Mr. Churchil. The British Admiralty estimate that the German navy will come out after she has met with defeat on the land. Therefore, if the army is strengthened and the enemies are routed, their navy will be forced to come out and it will not then be possible for it to be in concealment.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The Desabhimani, of the 12th August, says:—Austria is fighting for prestige. Without being involved in internal quarrels, if Russia should fight as hitherto, Austria would have been by this time reduced to a miserable condition. Our Allies are recovering their lost positions, but the German submarine outrage passes all bounds. The Allies are of course endeavouring to put an end to it, and they may soon succeed.

The war.

Desabhimani, Guntur, Aug. 12th, 1917.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 13th August, says:—We regret to say that the war situation still gives anxiety, which is due to Russian revolution. . . In the western theatre, the Allies, and in the eastern, the enemy, are gaining successes. The situation in Russia is a source of trouble to the Allies, while that in Germany is a source of trouble to the enemy. The Russian retreat in the eastern theatre is a source of fear, while the endeavours of the people of Germany to put an end to the rule of the Kaiser, at the instigation of the Crown Prince of Germany, are a source of encouragement. . . The new Russian Government are trying under the able guidance of Kerensky, to quell anarchy, dispel cowardice, rout the enemy and maintain the honour of the Allies.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th August, says in its leader on the subject of war:—It is the object of the enemy to march forth from Czarnowitz and separate the armies of Russia and Roumania. The Germans wish to appropriate for themselves the grain lying between the Sireth and Odyssa. . . Although the situation in the eastern theatre is not very encouraging, the force of the enemy's offensive has reduced, owing to the fact that the Russian armies are in a proper condition, and to the fact that the Germans are being killed in large numbers . . In the western theatre the English and the French armies are meeting with successes. . . In that (western) theatre, the prowess of the Germans has been curbed. In the eastern theatre the Russian armies can again show their power. From all this, the signs of the victory of the Allies are evident. . . . When the whole world has plunged into war against Germany, there is no doubt about the defeat of the enemy.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The war.

While giving a passing review of the course of the past three years' war, the Desamata, of the 8th August, observes:—The operations of the third year of the war have been so far favourable to the Allies only. But we have to turn our attention first to the great confusion in Russia. If the endeavours of the Russian minister prove successful, Russia will manifest her prowess ere long. If not, the treachery of the Russians will not only be a source of great anxiety to the Allies, but will also postpone victory for some time longer. If the Russians had behaved treacherously at a previous stage of the war, we must have doubted the victory of the Allies. As America, which is prosperous in every way, has now joined the Allies, there is no fear even if the Russians prove unfaithful. Victory may be slow but it will certainly come. At present, the prowess of the Germans has not yet been curbed. The new German minister says that if peace cannot be concluded on the terms he proposes, war must be continued. The Germans are still hanging about France. . . . They did some harm to the Allies by their submarines and were the cause of the rise in the prices of foodstuffs in England. When the Germans found that that was of little consequence, they began to raid England with their æroplanes with a view to threaten them and cause confusion. But these acts, instead of threatening England, have helped to move the English to greater indignation and created greater warmth about the war. . . On the whole, there are indications that if the Allies go on fighting with zeal, they will gain the victory in a year.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The war.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 11th August, writes:—The Russian revolution is more and more assuming the form of a tumult. . . Mr. Kerensky has now chosen ministers who are favourable to him. The unrest in the country may hereafter subside. But the advance of the enemy does not appear to stop. On account of the pressure of the Germans, the Russians are obliged to evacuate Bukovina and Galicia. It may be surmised that the Germans are trying to break the Russian line and proceed to Odessa which is an important port on the Black Sea. Unless new army is trained properly in Russia, she cannot be of help to the Allies. A Russian warrior declared that if the new Russian army had to be trained, officers should go to Russia from France and England for giving the recruits the necessary training.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The war.

Referring to the prayers in all parts of the empire for the success of the Allies in connection with the third anniversary of the war, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 11th August, gives a summary of the message of His Majesty the King-Emperor on this occasion and thereupon remarks that though the Kaiser's address to his subjects on this same occasion is full of swaggering, all military experts are agreed that the German socialists who are against the continuance of the war are becoming more and more powerful and that the Kaiser's hopes of success are, therefore, bound to be shattered.

12. The Andhraprakasika, of the 10th August, writes as follows:—Most people may not know that four German submarines had entered the Atlantic Ocean and one the Indian Ocean and caused disturbance. As it was the order of the Government that no one should speak about them, only news about their mischief was now and then heard of. Even this mischief was not known to have been caused by them. We may judge, from Dr. Macnamara's speech made in the House of Commons, that these submarines were completely destroyed. We are glad to announce that our shipping merchants who were anxious, day and night, on account of the enemy's submarines may in future carry on their trade without any anxiety.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

The submarine outrage.

13. The Andhraprakasika, of the 10th August, writes:—The Food Control Committee in England have ruled that in future bread should be sold at 9 d. a loaf. Merchants who infringe this order and sell bread at a higher rate are punished. . . The price of bread has doubled. People cannot but put up with some such disadvantages during war time.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Bread famine at an end.

14. In an article commenting on a book by Doctor Shrein (?) on Christianity, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 13th August, remarks:—We were all under the delusion hitherto that the civilization of Europe was an ideal type of civilization. The astounding iniquities which we see committed in the course of the present war have served to destroy the belief that the western nations were superior to us in point of morality.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 13th, 1917.

Christianity and the war.

15. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 13th August, writes:—Russia forms more than half of Europe. Its population is nearly a third of the population of Europe. It is sad to see that, despite these advantages, the Russians are retreating from the eastern theatre in panic. We are told that they have retreated to the extent of 60 miles in the course of ten days, that the Germans are forcing them back and that everywhere they dread the approach of the Germans. In point of strength and build the Russian soldiers are in no way inferior to the German. It is regrettable that they should nevertheless find themselves panic striken and weak. We trust that the efforts of the British and the French to instil fresh strength and energy into them will prove successful.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 13th, 1917.

The condition of Russia.

16. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 8th August, referring in a lengthy leader to the completion of the third year of the war writes:—"When we look back over the past three years, we see clearly that Britain has not failed in her object, but is gradually succeeding in those aims for the attainment of which she undertook to expend her blood and treasure. We hope before the end of this year she will compel Germany to make peace. Great Britain's persistence in the pursuit of her lofty aims and her fortitude and the countless losses and hardships, she has suffered during these three years, have added to her greatness and power."

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The fourth anniversary of the war.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Police.

17. The Andhraprakasika, of the 10th August, writes that Mr. Green, a Sergeant of the Calicut police, was fined Rs. 5 for assaulting a clerk of Messrs. Best & Co. of that place and remarks that, since a police officer should not behave so, a severe punishment would have been better to serve as a deterrant.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

A Police Sergeant punished.

(b) Courts.

18. Referring to question raised by a vakil of the Madras High Court on the 8th August, in connection with a case before their Lordships the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastriyar, about the power of the Governor-General to appoint a temporary Judge of the Madras High Court for a period exceeding two years and the discussion that then ensued, the Hindu Nesan, of the 10th idem, observes that it is clear from this that there are some defects even in the regulations relating to the appointment of temporary additional Judges.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Power of appointment of temporary Judges.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

The Trichinopoly riot.

19. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th August, has a Telugu version of the letter of a Trichinopoly correspondent, published in New India, of the 7th August, regarding the transfer of the sepoy riot case to the file of the Sub-Collector of Karur. The paper is at a loss to know the grounds on which the transfer was made from the court of an Indian Magistrate to that of a European Magistrate.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The Additional Sub-Court of Calicut.

20. Referring to the difference of opinion in Malabar as to the location of the Additional Sub-Court of Calicut, the Kerala Patrika, of the 11th August, points out that to suit the convenience of the litigant public it would be better, if the court in question be located at Tirur, and hopes that this matter will receive the attention of the authorities concerned.

(d) Education.

KALIYUGA-VARTAMANI, Madras, July 14th, 1917.

Free and compulsory primary education.

21. The Kaliyugavartamani, of the 14th July, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran, of the 30th idem on this subject which are abstracted in paragraph 31 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakotai, July 30th, 1917.

The Rajkumar College, Madras.

22. Referring to the proposal to establish a College for the sons and relations of the zamindars in this Presidency, the Vaisya-mitran, of the 30th July, makes almost the same observations as the Hindu Nesan and the Swadesamitran of Madras of the 25th idem on this subject abstracted in paragraph 26 of report No. 31 of 1917, and concludes with the remark that the Government and the zamindars will consider well before taking any further action in the matter.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

A special meeting of the Senate.

23. The Dravidan, of the 8th August, publishes in Tamil an abstract of the views expressed by the Justice in its leader of the 6th idem on "Indian Universities under Home Rule."

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The study of history.

24. The Dravida Patrika, of the 8th August, writes:—Indeed 99 per cent of our people do not know the history of our country. Even the few that have learnt English are reading the histories of this country written by foreigners, which contain many mistakes. This study too has now gone down. The authorities of the Educational Department consider that a knowledge of the history of our country is not very essential to our youngsters. Many of our students have studied well the histories of England, Greece and Rome, and they know much about Napolean, Wellington and Alexander but very little of the heroes of our country like Arjuna, Sivaji and Ranjit Singh. Many of our people are of opinion that our ancestors were far inferior to us in intellect and that they were timid persons. All this is due to their ignorance of the history of our country and the absence of interest in this matter on the part of the Government. We have several grievances in connection with this subject. Firstly, we have no proper history at present. Those written by foreigners contain several additions and omissions, and this is indeed natural when the history of the country is written by a foreigner. Therefore, professors amongst us who have attainments in history should, on the basis of the ancient histories, write anew the history of our country. Further, we must urge the Government to introduce the study of history as a compulsory subject in our colleges and schools. The patriots of our country should, in several ways, endeavour to create in our people a great desire for the study of history. The more our people take to this study, the more patriotic will they grow and the greater will be the progress of our country.

The same paper publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, an article on patriotism, in which the writer remarks in almost the same strain about the histories of this country, which are written by foreigners, and insists upon the necessity for a correct history being written anew by true Indians and for the introduction of the study of this history as a compulsory subject in schools.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

The Educational Conference at Simla.

25. Adverting to the nomination of four persons to represent this Presidency in the Educational Conference, to be held at Simla on the 20th and 21st August 1917, and referring to the statement said to have been made by Rao Bahadur K. Seshu Ayyar at a public meeting held two years ago in the Māyavaram High School, that great harm would result by making the study of vernaculars compulsory in this Presidency, the Dravidan, of the 9th idem, makes the following observations:—The four delegates that proceed from this Presidency to Simla represent all the courses of instruction that have been prescribed in the various schools here. Two of these are Brahmans. Perhaps, in the opinion of the Government it is not possible to find even one from among the non-Brahmans. . . . Such a lover of the vernaculars as Mr. K. Seshu Ayyar is proceeding to Simla as the representative of the Educational authorities! If the Brahmans can have relations and others who can plead in their behalf in different places, what is it that is not possible for them?

Considering the present position of the non-Brahmans, we have often, through the medium of this paper, requested the Madras Government to further their interests, whenever the opportunity occurred. as these are the only persons that can truly serve the Government. The action of the Government in still having confidence in the Brahmans, who are indeed working with the idea that the English rulers should quit India, and thus subjecting themselves to various troubles, is like setting the fox to keep the geese.

Could not the Government find out any persons possessing the required qualifications to go to Simla among the Christians, Muhammadans and others in this Presidency? Why not they select one from among the Brahmans, if necessary, and nominate the other from among the other classes? We are not in the least satisfied with the Brahman delegates who are to proceed to Simla to discuss matters relating to education. The action of the Government in selecting them is indeed a foolish one.

Students and politics.

26. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th August, reproduces in Tamil the gist of a lecture delivered by Lord Stafford Northcote, an ex-Secretary of State for India, before the students of the St. Andrew's University as its Rector, and referring to certain observations then made by him, that it was not his intention to abate the true interest that students have in political matters but that he should commend such a spirit in them, that this spirit, even though liable to errors, would maintain the true aspect of a free Government and that, if the youths of the country did not take an active part in political life, it was like the seasons of the year divested of the spring, writes as follows:—All are aware of the orders issued by the several Provincial Governments of this country that students should not breathe in the political atmosphere. It is but necessary to refer at this juncture to the above statement made by an ex-Secretary of State for India. In the light of this statement, we are at a loss to know what the reply would be of those who contend that students should not take part in politics.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

English in Secondary schools.

27. The Dravidan, of the 10th August, reproduces in Tamil an abstract of the leader on the same subject appearing in Justice of the 9th idem.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

The Calcutta University.

28. The Calcutta correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 10th August, hears that the B.Sc. students under the Calcutta University will be compelled to study English literature, which they had not to study hitherto. He compares this subject to a demon thrust upon the students and remarks that the Calcutta University appears to be taking a retrograde step.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

(e) Local and Municipal.

The Corporation of Madras.

29. A correspondent of the Dravidan, of the 4th August, dwells at length upon the hardships caused to the people, especially the poorer classes, on account of the removal of a number of public taps and the admixture of filtered and unfiltered water now supplied to the city and prays that the Corporation should take steps to supply only filtered water to the people as before and to re-open the public taps and allow a free flow of water in those that are now closed. He invites the special attention of the Corporation to the fact that there are no house-connections

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1917.

whatever in Nagamani Sarang street, Komaliswaranpet, and even the one public tap recently opened in that street has been closed for the last three or four months which has resulted in no little inconvenience to the people in that street and suggests that the Corporation should see that the public tap is kept open always.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

Elected Presidents of District Boards.

30. The Hindu Nesan, of the 9th August, writes:—The Presidents of all the District Boards in the Madras Presidency are indeed officials. It is the Collector of the district concerned that holds this office. It has throughout been the opinion of the Government that non-officials would not be fit for it. We are at a loss to know as to how the duties of the President of a District Board could not be managed by a non-official. No other special qualifications are necessary for this office than the physical capacity to tour round the district and the desire to learn things personally. The Government, however, are obstinate in thinking that these qualifications could be possessed by District Collectors alone and not by others. While this is the state of affairs in this Presidency, it is quite different in Bengal. We do not understand how a system that suits Bengal cannot suit this Presidency. Why not the experiment tried in Bengal of placing the District Boards under the management of elected Presidents, be tried here also? Have the non-officials who have been tried in this Presidency as Vice-Presidents of District Boards, proved themselves to be incomepetent to hold that office? No. They have, on the other hand, established beyond doubt their capacity to discharge the duties of that office creditably While this is the case, we do not see why the Government should be afraid to try non-officials as Presidents of District Boards. We cannot attribute the tardiness of the Government in this matter to any other reason than their fear that the influence of the District Collectors, who are Civilians, would thereby be affected to a small extent. It is, indeed, strange to think that when persons, who have had no touch whatever with official matters, can hold the office of a Member of the Executive Council satisfactorily with the Civilian members thereof, they cannot conduct themselves successfully as Presidents of District Boards.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Rao Bahadur P. Thiaygaraya Chetti.

31. Referring to the election of Rao Bahadur P. Thiyagaraya Chetti as Municipal Commissioner after a long interval, the Andhraprakasika, of the 11th August, says:—The very mention of the name of Mr. Chetti is annoying to some people. There is room to suspect that this may be the reason for the delay in the publication of his election. We pray that the Hon'ble the Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achariyar will not give room for any such misapprehension.

Manorama, Calicut, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Presidents of local boards.

32. The Manorama, of the 10th August, rejoices at the decision of the Bengal Government to permit the appointment by election of a non-official as President of a District Board, as an experimental measure, which the Madras Government will do well to follow, though, according to a previous statement of the Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur Rajagopala Achariyar's, it would seem that the Madras Government considered it derogatory to copy the Acts of other Provincial Governments, points out that there can be no loss of prestige in doing so, when the Acts to be followed are good in themselves, and that, if they cannot intimate the Bengal Government in this respect, there can be no objection to their taking action under the Local Boards Act of 1881, which all local governments should have done long ago, and observes that it is to be hoped that the Government will even now realise the necessity of introducing this small reform, which is the first step in self-government in all parts of the country.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

A Muhammadan Revenue officer, Khan Bahadur Muhammad Bazlulla Sahib Bahadur, B.A.

33. Qaumi Report, of the 9th August, writes:—The appointment of Khan Bahadur Muhammad Bazlulla Sahib Bahadur, B.A., as Revenue officer to the Corporation was published in yesterday's Gazette. This is really a very happy choice.

We have often drawn attention to his ability, efficiency, and influence. The community thinks so much of his position among his co-religionists that only recently there was a demonstration which had for its object the obtaining of a permanent place for him in view of the great advantage the community and the Government would derive from his retention in Madras. It affords us much pleasure to find that the desire expressed by public demonstration and through the medium of these columns has been fulfilled.

We consider the appointment an absolutely ordinary one in view of his ability and fitness and at the same time we deplore the fact that revenue figures will compel him to reject the learned writing and forensic logic of which he is so skilful an exponent. Nevertheless it is regarded as a stepping stone to future advancement and we are sure he will soon be placed where he can find a suitable scope for his great intellectual gifts.

In conclusion the Editor hopes that after Mr. Bazlullah has rendered the services immediately required of him by the Corporation or when the first opportunity occurs, the Government will give him an appointment consistent with his claims and the demands of the community.

34. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 10th August, writes :—At present the health of the city of Madras seems to be anything but good. It, therefore, behoves the public to exercise the utmost care and caution in order to safeguard their health. Cholera is prevalent in certain quarters of the city, and from the Corporation report it appears that fifteen persons died of this disease last week.

Public health in Madras

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

On referring to the mortality report we find the death-rate for the last two months exceeded that for the corresponding period for the last twelve years! The only reason, that can be assigned for this, is that the public do not pay the slightest attention to the laws of health; while their indifference to the need for domestic cleanliness is phenomental! The amazing part of it is, if a case of cholera occur, no one is informed of the fact with the inevitable result that the whole family gets it. There is, however, something still more amazing. Should the officers of the Health Department obtain information on the subject and proceed to the house to destroy the cholera germs and to disinfect the place they are hoodwinked and told that death was due to other causes.

We consider that this rise in death-rate is due to the very injurious effect of filtered mixed with unfiltered water. It is true that warning was given by the Health Department that water should be boiled before being used, but what can be expected from a public that care little about their health ?

Now that certain new appointments and transfers have been made in the Corporation, it is hoped that new measures, having for their object the improvement of public health, will be taken up, and that steps will be taken to ameliorate the distressing condition of the people.

(j) Salt and Abkāri.

35. The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 2nd August, echoes the sentiments of the Swadesamitran, of the 26th ultimo on this subject, which are abstracted in paragraph 43 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

Rise in the price of salt.

Liva-ul-Islam, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1917.

The Vannikulamitran, for August, reproduces the comments of the Lokopakari, of the 30th ultimo, on the same subject abstracted in the same paragraph of the above report.

Vannikulamitran, Madras, August, 1917.

(k) General.

36. The Vannikulamitran, for August, reproduces an article on this subject published by the Swadesamitran of the 28th ultimo and abstracted in paragraph 61 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

The Johannesburg tram-car tragedy.

Vannikulamitran, Madras, August 1917.

37. The Dravidabhimani, of the 3rd August, reproduces an article on this subject from the Lokopakari of Madras, of the 30th ultimo, which is abstracted in paragraph 66 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

The Home Rule flag.

Dravidabhimani, Salem, Aug. 3rd, 1917.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, July 23rd, 1917.

The new Secretary of State for India.

38. In reproducing some of the comments of the Swadesamitran and the Hindu Nesan, of the 19th July, abstracted in paragraph 65 of Report No. 30 of 1917, the Vaisyamitran, of the 23rd July, welcomes the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India, observing that he has indeed accepted this office in the best interests of this country.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, July 23rd, 1917.

Reforms in the Indian constitution.

39. The Vaisyamitran, of the 23rd July, writes:—The Government of India are saying that they are going to introduce certain reforms. When we consider the manner in which the bureaucracy act at present and their want of confidence in the people, it cannot be said that the object of the people would be realised. At the present juncture when the whole world is striving hard for liberty, it does not appear why the authorities have not changed their views in the case of India alone. The bureaucracy are fully aware of the help rendered by our brethren and sisters, in co-operation with the westerns, in this great war, and yet they do not show even the least sympathy towards them, but are finding fault with them. It is stated that the Indians should not grow excited. The Indian leaders are indeed conducting themselves with great patience. When we consider the statement made in the House of Commons by Mr. Montagu from his experience of the Indians which he has gained during his short tour round this country, that the Government of India should conduct themselves in such a way that they will be responsible to the Indians, his liberal views about Indian reforms and other matters relating to India become clear. It is also stated that certain schemes of reforms are being prepared in the office of the Secretary of State for India and that they would be published shortly. We should with perseverance endeavour, by peaceful means, to obtain the necessary privileges from the Government themselves.

UNITED CHURCH HERALD, Nagercoil, August, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues.

40. The United Church Herald, for August, writes on this subject as follows:—Mrs. Besant was causing an agitation in this country, especially among the students for the acquisition of Home Rule and was advocating the adoption of any policy whatever in this matter. There is no doubt that the Indians will be granted Home Rule when they become fit for it. Mrs. Besant has by the eloquence of her speeches drawn the college students to her side and made them even neglect their studies. So, her internment, which precludes her from continuing her mischievous acts, has given satisfaction to all disinterested patriots who have always the interest of India at heart.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

Indian aspirations.

41. The Dravida Patrika, of the 8th August, writes:—This great Indian country is gaining novel features and there are many reasons for the same. The Minto-Morley reforms of 1909 were the first to give the Indians some responsibility in the administration of the country, and this was considered by them as the first step for the attainment of self-government. The war having then broken out, the loyalty and the administrative responsibility of the Indians and their co-operation with the Government became apparent, and these manifested the progress and patriotism of the Indians and their enthusiasm in matters of public interest. They are grateful to the Government for the grant of several rights intended for their advancement under the British rule, and a deep feeling has now gained ground in their hearts that they should acquire Home Rule under the benign British Government. This feeling is indeed the outcome of the English administration. This good feeling has now manifested itself in various ways. The ideals urged by the Congress, the administrative rights sought by the members of the Imperial Legislative Council, the organizations that are formed and the public meetings that are held in this country with the object of acquiring Home Rule—all these are signs indicative of this feeling. It is indeed an indiscreet act to try to suppress this feeling, and it betokens sound administration to see that the aspirations of the people are fulfilled. Some may forget this and consider that they can, by the adoption of repressive measures, suppress this popular feeling. We have not as yet heard of anything being achieved in the history of the world, as the result of repressive measures. Hence the people of this country grew excited, and the excitement caused in the Presidencies of Bengal and Bombay and in the Punjab illustrates the truth of this statement. It is indeed necessary that the authorities should realise this truth. The prestige of the English in this country is greatly valued and the people here will not see to its being affected in the least. Those who, by their acts or by persuasion attempt to do anything to the contrary, be they Indians or Englishmen, should indeed be deemed to be seditionists.

It will not be in keeping with the facts recorded in the history of the world to say that Indians should be given administrative rights only after all of them have been reformed. Have countries which are now in an eminent position advanced only after the people therein were reformed? What was the condition of the Russians some time back? Have they become fit for freedom only after all of them were reformed? Has not Japan, which was in a very low condition 40 years ago, become within a short time one of the great powers of the world? One important lesson has to be learnt from this. That is, the grant of self-government subject to the British supremacy as, in Canada, Australia, etc., is the best means for training countries like India in the methods of Home Rule. Such a grant would increase the administrative responsibility of the Indians and make them more united and energetic than before.

42. The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 9th August, reproduces an article on caste differences contributed by a correspondent to the Dravidan, of the 30th ultimo, which is abstracted in the fifth paragraph on page 2102 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

LIVA-UL-ISLAM, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

The Brahmans and Non-Brahmans.

The Dravidan, of the 9th August, says:—Even now the officials say that nothing can be done without the help of Brahmans. They appoint only Brahmans to responsible offices. The administrators of this country have thus failed to maintain impartiality in distributing offices among Brahmans and non-Brahmans in proportion to their respective population. The condition of our people in offices continue without any improvement. The Government, subject to the influence of Brahmans, treat our people with a stepmotherly affection. We must invite their attention to this. When the English came here and established their rule in this country, it was indeed our people that joined them and rendered them the necessary help. Even now it will be clear that it is our people that rally to the support of the Government and oppose the Home Rule propagandists who are reviling the Government and are trying to shake its foundation and wrest it from the rulers. If the Government would only consider these things well and come forward to treat our people with kindness, some of the differences between the Brahmans and ourselves will cease to be in the course of a few days.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

The Brahmans and Non-Brahmans.

A correspondent of the Tamilian, of the 8th August dwells at length upon the way in which the Tamilian has been week after week taking the cudgels against the Aryans (Brahmans) for their having trodden down and teased, in very many ways, the Dravidians (Non-Brahmans) and hailing the starting of the Dravidan as another advocate of the Non-Brahman cause, describes it as searching for the Brahmans wherever they are and delivering severe attacks on them in the following strain: Where are the Aryans who cheated the Dravidians and made them their slaves? Where are the lazy people who claimed everything for themselves and quietly consumed it? Where are the Mléchás who fraudulently deceived the Dravidians into believing that they (the Brahmans) were of a higher caste having emanated from the face of Brahma? Where are the low caste people who, under the guise of sacrifices, roasted and ate cattle, horses and snakes? Where are those people who declared that the sin of cohabiting with the wife of a preceptor could be expiated by presenting cows to the Brahmans? Where are the different classes of people who have written many unnatural stories called Puranas? Where are the Brahmans who have deceived the Dravidians and, converting temples into choultries, have been quietly eating of them? Where are the base ones who presented hot bricks, covering them by a wet cloth, as oblations to the diety? Where are the traitors who have fraudulently sold a very small quantity of saffron and sacred ashes for a rupee?

TAMILIAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN AND HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

A meeting of the Home Rule League in Madras.

43. The Swadesamitran and the Hindu Nesan, of the 10th August, publish in Tamil the proceedings of a public meeting held in the Gokhale Hall under the auspices of the Madras Home Rule League on the 9th idem to welcome Mrs. Sivakamu Ammal and Messrs. Deobhanker and Shiva Rao who have come to Madras to work for Home Rule. The proceedings appear in extenso in the Hindu of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

A meeting of the Madras Home Rule League.

Adverting to the proceedings of the public meeting held on the 9th August under the auspices of the Home Rule League, Madras, to welcome Mrs. Sivakamu Ammal and Messrs. Deobhanker and Shiva Rao, who have come from Bombay to work for Home Rule, the Swadesamitran, of the 10th idem, writes as follows:—All should ponder over the views given out by Dr. S. Subrahmanya Ayyar in his introductory speech. The time has come nigh for the authorities to realise how the feelings of the people change with the times, to consider their responsibility deeply and to act with great foresight. As the two great organisations, viz., the Congress and the Muslim League, are going to meet at Allahabad in October next to decide the expediency of adopting the method of passive resistance, the authorities will do well to realise the trend of the times and rectify in the meanwhile the blunder they have committed. If really they have a mind to do so, Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar has suggested the procedure to be adopted by them. It is not possible to describe the excitement caused in the minds of those present at the meeting when they heard Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar read the letter written to him by the mother of Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali who have been under internment for the last 27 months. That letter is indeed a sufficient proof of the new feeling that has arisen in India. We firmly believe that the bureaucracy too will be profited by a perusal of the letter. The British were at no time of pressure found wanting in statesmanship. Will it therefore be wrong on the part of those who have known the excellence of the British rule to expect that such policy as is compatible with the present condition of India will be adopted at this juncture?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

A meeting of the Madras Home Rule League.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th August, while reporting the proceedings of the meeting, reports Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar to have said as follows:—We must adopt passive resistance to show that the people will not be terrified merely because the authorities resort to greater and greater repressive measures. What is the use of such unwise orders as the one prohibiting students attending political meetings, when there was no objection to publish in this country papers like the judgment of Lord Shaw? There is no other means of allaying the present indignation of the people than to cancel the annulments. If Mrs. Besant is not released, it is doubtful if she will regain her health. So if we are negligent in any the slightest degree in getting her released, we will be committing a great sin. . . The paper reports Khan Bahadur Safdar Hussain Sahib to have said that if the actions of Mrs. Besant were unlawful, the internments were non-religious.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakota, July 30th, 1917.

Swadeshism.

44. The Vaisyamitran, of the 30th July, writes:—The word swadeshism had its origin from the Indian National Congress. This elegant word first impressed itself on the minds of the true sons of mother Bharata and began to spread throughout the country at the time of the partition of Bengal during the Viceroyalty of Lord Curzon. This doctrine of swadeshism was approved even by the Indian National Congress during its session of 1906 under the presidency of the late Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji. From that day it is clear that the swadeshi spirit has found favour with the people of India. The agitation was indeed somewhat strong in the beginning. An Indian Industrial Exhibition was also held in conjunction with the Indian National Congress. The bureaucrats, who wanted to suppress this feeling, obstructed its growth by stating that sedition was to be found in swadeshism. Eminent Judges were of opinion that the propagation of swadeshi feeling could not be considered to be seditious. Yet, as there are neither industrial colleges nor facilities for the improvement of mechanical industries, the Indian industries have not progressed. Though the bureaucrats are fully aware that the spread of the swadeshi feeling is no sedition, yet, on account of the love of their country, they make themselves bold to characterise it as seditious. Since the internment of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues, the swadeshi spirit has grown somewhat strong in Southern India; and in the protest meetings held in different places in connection with these internments lectures are delivered on swadeshism, and swadeshi stores are opened. The bureaucrats are prohibiting lectures on swadeshism at certain places considering them to be seditious. This is not in the least desirable. How can it be seditious to say, or to take a vow, that the articles produced by Indian industries should be purchased? In olden days all the necessaries of life could be had without going in for foreign articles, while at present machine-made yarns, dyes and lace required for weaving fine cloths should be had only from foreign countries. It cannot be said that there is no admixture of foreign articles in those that are now said to be swadeshi ones. Pure swadeshism will be possible only when we attain swaraj. It is indeed a noble thing to expect that even the Indians, who are under the same ruler, should advance and acquire equal rights like the colonists without thinking that there is an admixture of sedition in the words Vande Mataram— which means I bow to mother Bharata—swadeshism and Home Rule Leagues, in the demand for Home Rule and in the lectures which are delivered to the people in connection with these.

"The Bombay Trio."

45. Adverting to the assurance said to have been given by Messrs. Deobhanker and Shiva Rao at the meeting held in Bombay before they left for Madras to serve on the staff of New India, that they would conduct that paper more vigorously and adopt the method of passive resistance and thereby resist the orders of the Madras Government in case the latter should come forward to punish them for their fortitude in the conduct of that paper, and to the statement made by Mr. Horniman on the same occasion that, if the Madras Government should punish the Indians from Bombay working in Madras, two men or even a hundred, if necessary, for every such individual would be sent to Madras and made to adopt the method of passive resistance, the Dravidan, of the 8th August, writes:—The method of passive resistance is least suited to this country. It has just now raised its head. It may be compared to a dire contagious disease and, unless rooted out in the very beginning, it will spread rapidly and is certain to create great trouble. The adoption of this policy was found to be indispensable in the days of Mr. Gandhi in South Africa. We are not indentured coolies like the Indians therein Who has prevented us from travelling freely in tram-cars, railway carriages and steamers? Has any poll-tax been levied on the Indians under the British rule? Are we living outside the city with our wives and children? The Home Rulers first spoke of Home Rule. A few days hence they raised a cry for swadeshism and gathered together in different places and spoke of it. Some of them then hid themselves in a corner, some were turned out of this Presidency and the others are now trying to introduce the adoption of passive resistance in this province and threatening us and the Government thereby. The vain boast of those Home Rulers should therefore be immediately checked by the Government. We do not know what action Lord Pentland proposes to take in this matter from Ootacamund. We consider that it would be highly desirable to prevent the "Bombay Trio" and others of their stamp from entering this Presidency.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

"The Bombay Trio."

Adverting to the proceedings of the public meeting held in Madras to welcome Mrs. Sivakamu Ammal and Messrs. Deobanker and Shiva Rao who have come from Bombay to work for Home Rule, and describing the same as a new scene of the Home Rule Drama, the Dravidan, of the 11th August, makes the following observations:—These three were accorded welcome, and many made eloquent speeches on the occasion. The cymbal was sounded so that the Drama might begin! The Madras Brahmans will be behind the scenes and push only others to risk the danger! If these lose, they will run! If these succeed, the profit is only theirs! "Be first at the feast and last at the fight" is indeed true of these Brahmans.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

Grant of titles.

46. Referring to the statement made by Lord Selborne in the House of Lords to the effect that titles are sometimes unjustifiably conferred and that the reasons for the grant of these titles should be made known, the Swadesamitran, of the 9th August, observes :—We trust that the authorities and the people here would ponder over the suggestion made by Lord Selborne that the Prime Minister should assure the King-Emperor that the recommendations for the grant of titles are not made in consideration of any financial help rendered by or expected from any person. No one will take exception to the grant of titles to the persons who deserve them. But it is only when something transpires contrary to expectations, that the people begin to entertain suspicions.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1917.

Traffic at the Madras Harbour.

47. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th August, observes :—A new source of income has been introduced by the Harbour authorities in Madras, and this has gained the approval of the Government in April last. That source will indeed cause hardship and disgust to the ordinary people. The friends or others who desire to receive or send off third-class passengers alighting from or embarking on the steamers in the port have to pay a fee of 4 annas per head to secure admission into the harbour. Some aspects of this new tax have to be noticed. Though this tax has been levied on the score of inadequacy of revenue, why should it be imposed only in the case of those who desire to receive or send off third-class passengers ? Why has it not been imposed in the case of the first- and second- class passengers also ? Proper reasons should be adduced for this. Many are aware that the third-class passengers are treated differently whether in the railway or steamer journey. It should be noted in this connection that mostly the third-class passengers are poor Indians and that the first- and second- class passengers are non-Indians. It is essential to see that, before introducing a new source of income, unnecessary complaints and troubles are not caused thereby.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The present political situation.

48. In the course of an article on this subject contributed by a correspondent to the Hindu Nesan of the 9th August, the following observations occur :—We cannot definitely understand with what intention and for what reasons the Government have interned Mrs. Besant. There are grounds for believing that the Secretary of State for India would have now at least realised whether it was possible to suppress the Home Rule agitation although it was possible to gag Mrs. Besant. I firmly believe that at least Mr. Montagu will carefully consider the present agitation in India, and the unanimous complaint of the great Indian leaders, and do the needful in the matter so as not to allow any further development of the present unrest. If the Government will only consider a little as to the reason why, when condemning the externment order issued against Mr. K. R. Karandikar, Mr. Horniman stated that, in case an internment order was unjustifiably issued against him, he was not prepared to obey the same, there is not the slightest doubt that they would cancel the orders issued and the proceedings taken by them. The absence in England of proper means to truly represent the events that take place here, is not in keeping with the present time. Therefore, if, as proposed by the Congress, several representatives are elected and sent to England as quickly as possible, they will be able to impress the real state of affairs on the minds of the English statesmen who are known for their democratic views. Such an action would induce them to have these orders cancelled at once. There is no use in vainly representing our grievances through the press and in holding protest meetings for the purpose in various places. We trust, therefore, that the Congress leaders will meet together and decide the course of action to be adopted at the present juncture.

Again as regards the selection of the President of the Congress for this year, Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar has, in every letter written by him, stated that no useful purpose would be gained by electing any other than Mrs. Besant. The more the Government dislike her acts, the greater is our duty to praise the same.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Political situation reviewed : Ideals must win.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 11th August, contains in English under this heading a telegraphic summary of a speech delivered in Bengali by Sir Rabindranath Tagore, in which occurs the following :—The people of this country must comprehend before they could be free that they were absolutely their own masters and as such they would attain the desired end The Government officials in India could never succeed in stifling a just cause by the weapon of internment and repression. It was absurd for them to say after 150 years' rule in this country that Bengal would not feel for Madras just when British people were laying down their lives for Belgium and France. There was no truth in the argument advanced on behalf of the Government that the people of this country must go through all stages of political education in order to be a self-governing nation. The Parliament of Britain at the present day was the revolution of a system which had run its course through numberless blunders. The procedure for preserving prestige at the cost of sense of justice inherent in British people would be fatal to the British administration in India.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The present political situation.

The Desamata, of the 8th August, says in its leader:—Ever since Lord Sydenham wrote his article under the heading "Danger in India," the rulers have been following a repressive policy. They obstructed all constitutional agitation of the Indians to obtain their birthright of self-government. Considering the struggle for independence going on in other countries, Mrs. Besant availed herself of the opportunity and started an agitation for Home Rule for India. Her speeches and her writings inspired in the minds of the Indians a profound desire for Home Rule. The Indians had already been aware of the way in which the Government regarded the desires of the people. They also knew that Lord Morley's administrative reforms were not of any advantage to India. The seed of the desire for self-government had thus already sprouted in the Indian heart, and an ivdividual was wanted who could help its growth, and make that desire known to the outside world. Such an individual was found in Mrs. Besant, who read the Indian heart and accordingly started the Home Rule movement. This movement is not for complete Home Rule. Even moderates have expressed their approval of, and sympathy with, the movement and have set about to work in connection with it. But the Government have not only expressed themselves against the movement, but also put repressive measures into force by interning Mrs. Besant, Mr. Wadia and Mr. Arundale. . . The Madras Government have driven Mr. Karandikar out of the Madras Presidency. . . The authorities have stopped the proposed Calcutta protest meeting. . . These are examples of the repressive policy pursued by the Government. We consider it unjust that the Government should violate the natural rights of man and show a hostile attitude to the Home Rule movement, and pray that they will reconsider the matter and do justice.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Political agitation.

A correspondent to the Kistnapatrika, of the 11th August, making observations on the past work of the Congress, writes:—. . . The congressmen, instead of attempting to do anything practical for the benefit of the people with self-help, have been satisfied with adopting resolutions containing prayers and returning to their own duties. For doing this work they sent lacks of rupees to England. They laboured under the misapprehension that merely with this, England would give up her own gain and give us rights and liberties.

For the reason that the Government did not grant their prayers in the matter annulling the partition of Bengal, the Bengalis led political agitation into new paths, and commenced the four movements: the swaraj movement, the swadeshi movement, the boycotting of foreign goods, and national education. Since 1905, they began to make earnest attempts for achieving their end. . . In order to damp the enthusiasm of our youths the Government then secured the co-operation of some of the Congress leaders and deported some others. The people of Bengal and their leaders were gratified with the annulment of the partition of Bengal and they grew indifferent to the said movements. From the year 1908 to 1915 the Congress was managed by those who were called moderates and prolonged a lifeless existence. . . The prospect of post-war reforms in the empire has awakened us also, and Mrs. Annie Besant employed her wonderful capacity for practical work and her unparallelled powers of speech and, in 1916, had the All-India National Congress convened at Lucknow, by bringing together all the Hindu and the Muhammadan leaders. In that meeting all our leaders proposed such reforms in the present system of political administration as are conducive to the securing of popular liberties. . . . Mrs. Besant strongly urged in her New India that the same reforms must be introduced soon into the system of political administration and for doing so the Government subjected her and her coworkers to the punishment of internment. But this agitation has spread throughout the country and is growing amongst the people by the agency of Home Rule Leagues and newspapers. And our Government not being able to stop this by means of trials in courts and punishments under the existing laws are interning our leaders one after another on the plea of the safety of the country. Though our agitation is constitutional, the bureaucracy in India condemn it for fear that it may succeed and convince the people of England, and that thereby the power of the Indian bureaucracy may go down. According to laws, there is nothing wrong in the agitation. The executive departments in all the provinces are making these efforts in order to induce us to receive whatever the Government gives after the war and keep quiet. . . From these facts it is clear that the resolutions made in the form of prayers all these thirty years were useless and that unless we employ a weapon which is not opposed to law, our complaints cannot be heard by the British democracy. This weapon is called passive resistance. There are many ways by which we may resist the Government. How it should begin and how it should be adapted to changing conditions will be considered by our leaders who will all meet in September. If we all unanimously act up to their advice, there is no doubt that we will get real rights in the administration of the country. Until then, we cannot help adopting passive resistance. Methods of passive resistance must change gradually. They must begin with preventing the buying of foreign goods, particularly articles manufactured in England, and refraining from going to English shops; then must follow the resigning of honorary offices, and boycotting persons who seek them, i.e., dissuading people from seeking membership in Legislative Councils, Municipal Councils and Local Boards, and places of Honorary Magistrates, Deputy Collectors and Bench Magistrates. Such means we may adopt only for expressing our disapproval of the action of Government.

If passive resistance is to work successfully, we must make a political institution, complete in itself, spread throughout the country. Our leaders must tour through the whole country, collect money and establish a permanent fund, appoint agents for each taluk on a salary of Rs. 50 per mensem, and send them to every village not only to form political leagues there but also to watch how they discharge their duties. Members of such leagues must explain to the villagers all the causes of their troubles. They must enlighten them on such matters as the large salaries paid to foreigners in offices, our industrial, financial, political, and social condition compared with that of the people in other countries, and the results of the movement carried on till now. By doing so we will be able to make it known to the Government, without breaking the law, that political affairs cannot be managed without the co-operation of the people. . . If the said leaders are able to collect a thousandth part of the amount contributed by people to the war in the shape of gifts or loans why would not the Parliament, which may be said to be the mother of all democratic institutions, treat us as her equals. So long as our leaders do not gird up their loins and go to work, our wishes cannot be realised.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Indians and the promises made by British statesmen.

49. Anent the statement made by the Amrita Bazar Patrika, while writing on the present political situation and the repressive measures adopted by the bureaucrats, that the assurances given by the British Government to the people of India in the Charter Act of 1833, the Queen's Proclamation of 1858 and the Minto-Morley reforms, have indeed all ended in a great disappointment, the Swadesamitran, of the 10th August, writes :—We have had any number of promises and declarations from responsible statesmen from the very beginning regarding the progress of India. The Indians, too, have given expression to their aspirations many a time. But when we consider whether these promises and declarations have been given effect to, or whether our aspirations have been fulfilled, we would only grow dispirited without having any cause for satisfaction. It will not suffice for the British people to merely proclaim that their object is indeed to grant Home Rule to India. It may take several centuries nay—even several yugas—to carry out that object. The British people should declare that they would grant Home Rule to the Indians within a specified time, that, as a first step in this direction, they would introduce extensive reforms in the administration of the country, and that they would thereby accept the responsibility of training the Indians in self-government, and act accordingly. As far as we see, this is the only course whereby satisfaction can be given to the Indians.

The Lord Bishop of Calcutta on Home Rule.

50. Adverting to the statement made by the Lord Bishop of Calcutta that the aim of the British rule in India should be such as to give the Indians opportunities of self-development according to their natural bent that with this object in view the aim of the rulers must be to train the Indians in self-government, and that to turn away from this and pray for the success of liberty would be hypocrisy before God, the Hindu Nesan, of the 10th August, writes.—While speaking recently on the subject of the acquisition of Home Rule by the Indians, the Lord Bishop of Bombay expressed his opinion that the Indians were making an unnecessary agitation in the matter. But the views given out by the Lord Bishop of Calcutta on the same subject are highly encouraging to those that desire to have Home Rule. Indeed there are a few here and there who speak in support of the Home Rule ideal of the Indians.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

The Lord Bishop of Calcutta.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th August, observes with disappointment in a leaderette that the Anglo-Indian papers are reproving the Lord Bishop of Calcutta for saying that it would be well to grant self-government to India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

The Registration department.

51. Adverting to the report on the working of the Registration department in this Presidency for the three years ending with 1916, the Swadesamitran, of the 10th August, writes:—Every one knows that the documents presented for registration, if registered, are mostly returned only a week after the date of presentation. We need not say, however, that several documents are returned even on the very day of registration. We have to notice here that the number of documents so returned are found to be on the increase during the period. It would give relief to the people to hear that proper attention is paid in the matter of prompt delivery of documents after registration.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Our readers are aware that there is a loud cry that the pay of the clerks in the Registration department is very low and that the Secretary of State for India has issued orders for increasing the scale of pay of these clerks Full effect has not, however, been given to the proposals for increasing this scale of pay. The minimum pay of the clerks was raised from Rs. 14 to Rs. 20, but much improvement has not been made in the scale of salaries over Rs. 20. This is due to the financial pressure caused by the war. Need we, therefore, say that there will be several clerks who will be grievously feeling the disappointment caused by the delay in introducing the revised scale of pay?

The report on the administration of the Registration department.

In commenting upon the recent triennial report on the administration of the Registration department, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 15th August, remarks:—As it is found from the report that there is a large saving for Government from this department, it would be inadvisable on their part to cause any delay in opening new Sub-Registry offices in such numbers as are necessary to meet the convenience of the people. It would also be a great relief to the hard-worked clerks of this department, if in these days when the prices of foodstuffs have gone up, their salary is enhanced as speedily as possible.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The German trade after the war.

52. The Hindu Nesan, of the 10th August, has the following:—It may be in the memory of our readers that the Allied Powers met together and passed certain resolutions to curtail the trade of Germany after the war. Perhaps these have failed to think that the enemies also will consider similar measures. It is understood that a big bank has been opened in Germany in order to afford additional facilities for her commerce. America has declined to be a party to the trade agreement entered into by the allies, as in her opinion all the countries have to depend upon Germany for certain important articles. Further, the Germans have even during the period of the war, manufactured and stored many articles of commercial value and are also constructing steamers to enable them to send their goods to foreign countries for sale. It is indeed a doubt whether England and other countries can carry on their trade similarly. England has, besides, many responsibilities to discharge. On the cessation of war, she has to see to the return of the armies to their respective countries. She cannot, therefore, be in a position to send her articles to India immediately after the war. But the condition of Germany is different. There is no necessity for her to send the troops to other countries.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

What arrangements have the Government made in India for the improvement of industries after the war? None. There is no doubt that, immediately after the close of the war, England, Germany, America, Japan and other countries would flood our country with their goods and spoil even the present industries of this country. The Government of India should make the necessary arrangements to avert such a disaster.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

The Indian trade.

53. The Hindu Nesan, of the 10th August, reproduces an article under this head appearing in the Swadesa Paripalini of Rangoon commenting on the appointment of Mr. Chadwick as the Indian Trade Commissioner, and in the course of this article the following observations occur:—A Commissioner like the one appointed in London for providing facilities for commerce between India and other countries such as France, Russia and Italy, and to look after matters relating to Indian industries and trade, can do good work. But it is essential that the whole attention of this Commissioner should be devoted to devise means for the improvement of the Indian trade. We firmly believe that arrangements will not be made to curtail the trade of India so that the other parts of the Empire may profit thereby, as such a procedure would only end in a loss to the Empire itself. We, therefore, hope that, as a result of this appointment, the trade of India would flourish.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Mr. K. R. Karandikar.

54. The Swadesamitran, of the 10th August, publishes from the pen of a correspondent the proceedings of a public meeting held on the 8th idem in Madura, under the auspices of the Local Home Rule League, the District Peoples' Association and the District Congress Committeee, in which resolutions were passed expressing satisfaction at the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India and the hope of acquiring Home Rule during his administration, and condemning the action of the Government in directing Mr. K. R. Karandikar to quit this Presidency.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore on Home Rule.

55. The Swadesamitran, of the 11th August, publishes in Tamil a telegraphic summary of the lecture on Home Rule delivered in Bengali by Sir Rabindranath Tagore at a public meeting held in Calcutta on the 10th idem, which appears in the Hindu of the 11th idem.

In publishing an abstract of the above lecture, the Hindu Nesan, of the 13th August, observes that it is essential that the Government should pay some attention to the views expressed by Sir Rabindranath.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 11th August, contains a Telugu version of an article in the Amrita Bazaar Patrika criticising the remarks of the Statesman on an article contributed by Sir Rabindranath Tagore on the subject of "Nationalism in the west," which appears in the Hindu of the 10th August.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant's reply.

56. Adverting to the communiqué issued by the Government publishing therein the letters received from Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues declining the offer of the Government permitting the publication and sale of their religious works under certain conditions, the Swadesamitran, of the 11th August, observes:—Mrs. Besant does not accept that liberty is one thing in the case of religion and another in the case of other matters. Liberty of speech is an indispensable factor for every propagandist work. Who can distinguish between the liberty exercised in a religious movement and that exercised in political movements. The contention of Mrs. Besant, therefore, is that, so far as the endeavours for the maintenance of the liberty of speech are concerned, the Theosophical Society and the political organizations are agitating for the same purpose, and it is not therefore possible for one only of these to acquire freedom separately. Had Mr. Chamberlain begun to condemn others after learning the true state of things, he could have avoided causing unnecessary distress and disgust to the thousands of members of the Theosophical Society.

Dravidian, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Brahmans and Home Rule.

57. In the course of a long article on the cry for Home Rule contributed by a correspondent to the Dravidan, of the 11th August, the following observations occur:—Our Dravidian people are a hundred times larger in number than the Brahmans, and yet why should they not work hard to put an end to the arrogance of these Brahmans so that these may not utter the expression Home Rule? Indeed, how great must be the fortitude of these Brahmans that, with the mad idea of getting His Excellency Lord Pentland removed from his office, they should go on delivering speeches directed against His Excellency, merely because he spoke against their aspirations for Home Rule. What accounts for this courage in them? It is indeed due to want of union, education and civilization amongst us. The uncivilized Dravadians around us, on account of ignorance and want of union on their part, make a mountain of a mole hill, create quarrels among themselves, give thousands of rupees to these wretched Brahman vakils, and thus help them, who are in a very low state, to come to an eminent position in life. Are not these Brahmans to earn a living by begging, by conducting funeral rites and wandering in search of marriage houses? Such are the qualifications of these Brahmans; and instead of realising the present condition of our country and the difficulties and sufferings experienced by our Emperor and by the people, and instead of daily praying to God that our Emperor may be blessed with peace of mind and complete victory in the present war, these Brahmans are, like the frogs croaking in winter, raising, in every corner of the country, a loud cry for Home Rule. Can there be such seditionists as these Brahmans? Indeed they seem to have raised the cry without the discrimination as to how they would administer the country if they are granted Home Rule. Have they any knowledge at all of politics? They think that political tenets are as easy to learn as the mantras they chant while performing funeral ceremonies. Even during the present time when the British Government have established law and order and have done every good essential for the convenience of the public, these Brahmans are playing such devil dance, and God alone knows what sufferings we will have to undergo if unfortunately the administration of this country should vest in them. Eventually they will grow jealous of each other, and causing great commotion in the country, spoil the prestige of India. It is their habit to kick when you kiss them and to kiss when you kick them. These are bringing disgrace to the very Government who have conferred on them high appointments, and placed them in a good position and are justly ruling over the people. Are there any others who are as ungrateful as these Brahmans? It is indeed our Dravidian people and the officers of the Government that are responsible for this attitude of the Brahmans.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

An appeal to the Muhammadans.

58. The Swadesamitran, of the 13th August, refers to the intense excitement caused at the public meeting held recently in the Gokhale Hall, when Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar read out to those assembled the letter written to him by the mother of the two brothers, Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali, and observes:—There is no doubt that, after reading the message of this patriotic lady, our Hindu, Muhammadan and Christian brethren will all of them take courage and come forward, without the least hesitation, to serve their country. Need we say that, if there are at least a few more mothers like this in our land to infuse a spirit of enthusiasm and determination in our people, our country will come up very soon? Though the leaders in this province have evinced their sympathy sufficiently with the two Muhammadan patriots in their distress, they should now at least devise means to remedy the defect of their not having followed the excellent work done by these two brothers. It was the efforts of Muhammad Ali that rendered possible the spirit of unity that characterised the meetings held at Lucknow at the end of last year. We would take this opportunity of appealing to our Muhammadan brethren to give up their shortsighted efforts based on a wrong impression that they should obtain separate advantages for themselves and, realising fully that, in the interests of the country and themselves, they should co-operate with all for the purpose of acquiring Home Rule to come forward with even greater strength and zeal than the Hindus to serve the country.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant's health.

59. Adverting to the permission accorded by the Government to Mrs. Besant to have a change of residence, if she desires, on account of her present health, and to her willingness to reside in Coimbatore as soon as a convenient accommodation is secured there, the Swadesamitran, of the 13th August, observes:—We may hope that Mrs. Besant's health will improve by a change from Ootacamund. But the sudden stoppage of her intense activity in various matters of public interest and the feeling in her that she has been unjustly interned are telling upon her health. We trust, therefore, that the Government will realise that the annulment of the order of internment is the only proper remedy for it now.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant's health.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th August, reports the Hon'ble Mr. Mazharul Haque to have said in an interview with the representative of New India:—The state of Mrs. Besant is very pitiable. The change is very striking. . . She was in a weak state, and was very emaciated. I wish to inform the Government of India of this as early as possible.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

Lord Islington on Indian reforms.

60. The Swadesamitran, of the 13th August, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Englishman and the Amrita Bazaar Patrika on the pronouncements made by Lord Islington about the Indian reforms in a lecture delivered by him before the students of Oxford, which appears, in the Hindu of the same date, and makes the following observations on this subject:—It appears as if the bureaucracy are trying to ascertain the depth of the Indian feeling about certain proposals by letting out some of them through Lord Islington. Though he has given out in the beginning of his lecture that he is not speaking in his official capacity, he has, indeed, the opinion of the bureaucrats that India is not fit for Home Rule. It is also apparent that he has the inward fear that the Indians would surely acquire Home Rule in the end. From the comparison he has made of India to countries like Australia which have acquired self-government, we can say whose opinions he has come to give out. It is not strange that the officials in the office of the Secretary of State for India and elsewhere should have taken hold of Lord Islington to make the British public believe that, even at a time when stringent repressive measures are adopted in India, they are considering measures for reforms. The London Times writes that, if a committee is organised to consider the reforms to be introduced in the administration of India, Mr. Montagu should not be its President. This, indeed, causes displeasure to us. It may justify its statement by saying that, as he is one of the final authorities on matters relating to India, he should not be a member of such a committee. From the way it writes, it appears that there is a conspiracy even now to find fault with the acts of Mr. Montagu in case he should endeavour to fulfil the aspirations of the Indians. When we observe a sentence or two occurring in the speech of Lord Islington, we find it necessary that our people should take steps to impress on the authorities and the British public that the Indians cannot be duped by meaningless words and the artifices which may be adopted by administrative officers. They must be made to understand that the Indians persist in thinking that they should be given Home Rule and that, as a first step in this direction, nothing less than the introduction of the reforms proposed by the 19 representative members of the Imperial Legislative Council and by the Congress and the Muslim League will satisfy them. It seems that Lord Islington has said that the giving effect to these reforms would only increase the number of those who condemn the action of the Government of India, but that the true responsibility of the popular representatives could not be secured thereby. This is a very old contention. It is usual for the bureaucracy to raise this plea whenever the Indians ask for a share in the responsibility in the administration of their country. Let us take the case of any advanced State. The Legislative Council, which is the representative institution of the people, cannot but criticise the action of the Government, and in so criticising can only offer suggestions. Which Legislative Council has taken the responsibility of administration on its shoulders? So long as the British public are not aware of the views of the Indians, it appears that Lord Islington has thought it fit to raise the same plea before them also. It is, indeed, the proper function of any Legislative Council made up of the representatives of the people to control the executive without taking the administrative responsibility on its shoulders, and the duty of the Executive Council is to carry on the administration subject to the control of the Legislative Council. The nineteen representative members ask that the Legislative Councils should have a non-official majority and that these councils should have powers of control over the Executive Councils. It is true that the present representatives do not truly represent the people. The rules framed by the Government of India in pursuance of Lord Morley's reform scheme have made them so. If they truly represent the people, it would be unnatural to say that their criticisms and suggestions should not bind the administrative authorities. Even the congress has proposed that, in case the representatives pass a resolution by a majority of votes, and the Government consider that it will be prejudicial to the interests of the Empire or the country to carry it out, the Governor-General should have powers to suspend giving effect to it; and the nineteen representative members too have said the same thing The Government should, however, use this power only sparingly. It is apparent from the fact that Lord Islington has stated this as one of the reasons for not giving the people the power of control over the administration, that he too has no confidence in the representatives of the people as the bureaucrats. It was also stated by him that the Legislative Councils should consist of members elected on the basis of class representation. With a Legislative Council thus constituted, he says that the responsibilities for the administration of certain departments may be transferred to it. This appears to be a very mischievous suggestion. It is apparent from this that the main intention of the bureaucracy is to see to the continuance of powers in their hands for all time. It is our belief that Mr. Lloyd George is indeed for the grant of Home Rule to India. We hope that he and Mr. Montagu would reject the old pleas referred to above, and see that the recommendations made by the Congress and the Muslim League after great deliberation are carried out. They should understand that nothing else can be done in the matter of the grant of Home Rule to India.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 13th August, has the following observations on this subject:—Lord Islington has a knowledge of Indian affairs. Yet from the retrograde recommendations made by him as the President of the Public Services Commission we can boldly say that he has only wrong impressions of these affairs. The meaning of his statement, that the British statesmen alone have the experience to guide India in her weary journey, is apparent. Thereby he seems to point out that the present juncture is not the fit occasion for the Indians to carry on agitation for Home Rule and that till that opportune moment arrives, the British statesmen should guide the Indians by means of a long rope along the road for such a realisation and that any swerving from this road would only cause the Indians to fall into the pitfalls on either side. We are not much disheartened at this, as he has prefaced his speech with the statement that he does not speak in his official capacity. Had he only spoken in his official capacity, we would be led to think that we could not have much confidence in the pronouncement on Indian reforms to be made by the Secretary of State for India. We trust that Mr. Montagu will ponder over this matter seriously, and see that his pronouncement will be such as to allay the fears at present entertained by the Indians in the matter.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

Lord Islington.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th August, reports the Amrita Bazaar Patrika to have written:—The views of Lord Islington cannot be a source of encouragement at all to the

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Indians. They may really form part of the views of the Indian bureaucracy. . . May we be saved from the reforms suggested by Lord Islington. We trust that Mr. Montagu will give us better reforms.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug 13th, 1917.

Laws and Regulations in India and England.

61. In an article on this subject from a correspondent published in the Hindu Nesan of the 13th August, the following observations occur:—There does not seem to be any relation whatever between legislation and the public in India. We can indeed say that certain Acts like the Press Act and the Defence of India Act are means devised by the Government not in the interest of the public but with the object of controlling them. Further, the idea that some of these Acts have been passed on account of the present war has already changed. These Acts are capable of being applied in any way. They have the power to inflict punishment without any trial. They also admit of different interpretations in different Provinces. In Madras, for instance, their aid is sought to prohibit meetings, while in Bombay such meetings are permitted. In Calcutta, the Government of Bengal prohibited the holding of a meeting convened by the Sheriff at the request of the chief leaders of the place. These differences indeed signify the defects in the constitution of the Acts. Let us now turn our attention to the nature of punishment inflicted under this Act. Although the Indians and the Englishmen commit the same offence, the latter are dealt with leniently. When we consider the nature of the Judges, we find that several of them are apt to act according to the views of the Government, and if in their midst there is one person entitled to be rightly called a Judge, the Government take steps to make his judgments inoperative. It is the duty of our Government to note the differences pointed out above and to carry out the necessary improvements and it is our duty to bring these facts to their notice.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

American women.

62. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th August, gives in Telugu a character sketch of American women from the pen of Dr. Sudhindra Bose, which contains:—In India, especially in ancient times, people married, loved one another and were happy until death. In America, on the other hand many people separate from one another after marriage, by divorce. In this matter, the United States of America occupies the foremost place. . . The dress of American ladies, instead of being comfortable, is calculated to attract others. . . Half the number of those who go to Women's College are unmarried. Only a few of the rest wish to have issue. This is a great problem. . . The churches are the chief places for promoting friendship among young men and young women. . . Like other women in the world, the American women also are not free from defects, but they have many good qualities also.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Prof. K. Ramamurti.

63. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th August, publishes a letter from the pen of Prof. K. Ramamurti, in which he says:—"I thought I would be afforded an opportunity to serve my sovereign as best I could, but a discouraging answer was given to me as will be seen from the correspondence between the Adjutant-General of the Indian army and myself. This has been a great surprise to me. It has been a source of greater surprise that certain papers doubted the loyalty and the enthusiasm of the Indians and heaped undeserved insults on their heads. Impartial people will do well to consider the matters published on page 10 of the Illustrated Times of India, Weekly, dated the 20th June 1917, in the light of what I have written above. . . As a result of the correspondence referred to above, I have made up my mind not to connect myself with the work of recruitment to the Indian Defence Force. The reason is that it is plain that the Government do not agree to use my services in this work. While this is the case, Indians are accused of want of enthusiasm in the service of the Empire. Papers do not hesitate to tarnish the good character of the Indians. . . To collect more recruits than the required number is the only suitable reply to the malicious writings of the paper referred to above. . . O! Sons of India! Join the army in large numbers in order to maintain the reputation of our mother country. Enlist yourselves in the army in order to put to shame those who insult us. Join it in order that you may be enabled to defend your houses and your lands.

The paper remarks that the fifth enclosure sent to it with the above letter says that Prof. K. Ramamurti cannot be engaged 'in this work.'"

64. Referring to the prohibition of the Calcutta protest meeting, the Andhra-patrika, of the 11th August, says:—The Calcutta Sheriff called for the meeting and Dr. Rash Bihari Ghose was to preside over it, the organisers of the meeting are distinguished Bengalis. Under such circumstances, there was no reason to suppose that anything improper would take place in the meeting. Many protest meetings took place in India before this. After the order prohibiting the Calcutta meeting was passed, a protest meeting was held at Bombay, in which people of different provinces took part. No greater harm would have ensued from the Calcutta meeting. . . In answer to a deputation that waited on His Excellency the Governor of Bengal, His Excellency said that he would cancel the prohibition order, and soon publish the reasons for passing such an order The Government issued a press communiqué cancelling the order. . . They base their orders on the reports they receive. When responsible leaders of the people represent that those orders are unnecessary and only tend to promote commotion, it is the duty of the authorities to place confidence in their words. Lord Ronaldshay placed such confidence in the leaders, and without undertaking to maintain prestige, has pursued a peaceful policy, and thereby shown his farsightedness. It is now necessary that the rulers and the ruled should place confidence in each other and promote mutual love. The leaders of the people are prompted by loyalty and patriotism. It is therefore necessary that the Government follow a peaceful policy and promote contentment in the people. Mr. Montagu, the present Secretary of State, is not very particular about maintaining prestige. . . Whatever reforms may be introduced after the war, they will be of no use until the repressive laws are cancelled. Indians should therefore request the Government to repeal these laws and promote love between the rulers and the ruled. . . There are signs that changes will take place in the present methods of administration. It is believed that repressive measures will be repealed and a liberal policy will be pursued. . . We pray that the Government will satisfy the wishes of the people, pursue a liberal policy and earn the gratitude of the people.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The Calcutta protest meeting.

65. The Andhraprakasika, of the 11th August, says:—On a perusal of the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Acharyulu, which he delivered as president at the anniversary of the Home Rule League, Negapatam, it may be said that he growing younger. He said: I will not keep quiet even if the Government should stop my pension. Come what may, I am prepared to sacrifice everything. It is such spirited language that upsets young brains. The Hon'ble Mr. Acharyulu is by suggestion requesting the Government hereby to stop his pension and secure for him the reputation of a martyr. It will be well for him to know that such language will create unnecessary commotion in the country. He says he will work for Home Rule, through a series of births.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Acharyulu.

66. In an article describing the undue influence of the Brahmans in the Vizianagram Estate, the Andhraprakasika, of the 10th August, writes that a dishonest overseer who collected bribes in the name of an amin was retained in service while the amin, a Christian, was unjustly dismissed from service, although witnesses deposed in favour of the latter. The paper adds, expressing astonishment at the said injustice, that the overseer who was removed as unfit for service once or twice before has been entertained again in the service by the Brahman Personal Assistant in the Revenue department of the estate.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Vizianagram estate—the Brahman rule.

67. The Desabhimani, of the 12th August, says:—The three things that are agitating the whole country at present are the holding of processions, the holding of meetings and the giving of lectures. The fourth is the expression of opinions in papers. As regards the last, there is not much for the branch committees to consider. It depends on the capacity and resources, and the courage and firmness of the individual editors of newspapers. . . The order prohibiting the holding of processions is unlawful. It is one kind of passive resistance to make up one's mind to hold processions resisting any order prohibiting them, and submit oneself to the consequences. . . Lecturers would do well to write and read their lectures, or deliver them in plain and simple language. When that is prohibited, it need not be stated that it is the characteristic feature of a heroic nature to resort to passive resistance and await the consequences.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Aug. 12th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Death from vaccination.

68. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th August, publishes in Telugu the letter of a correspondent to New India in which he refers to a case of death of a young man soon after vaccination, and requests the authorities to enquire into the cause of his death.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

The High Court of public opinion.

69. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th August, publishes in Telugu the plaint, the statement, the issues framed, and the judgment delivered in an imaginary suit in the "High Court of public opinion", instituted by Dr. T. M. Nayar, plaintiff, against Diwan Bahadur P. Kesava Pillai. Among the issues framed occur :—

(f) Did Dr. Nayar get any high office for decrying the Brahmans and political associations through the columns of newspapers for about six months past?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Meeting of the United Provinces Conference.

70. Referring to the proceedings of a special session of the Provincial Conference of the United Provinces, the Andhrapatrika, of the 14th August, remarks :—Such special sessions of conferences are to be held in Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces. Discussions are carried on in provincial conferences regarding passive resistance. We pray that the Government may soon give up repressive methods, restore peace, and earn the gratitude of the people. All trust that Mr. Montagu will soon fulfil the aspirations of the Indians.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Aug. 12th, 1917.

Zamindars.

71. The Desabhimani, of the 12th August, reproduces from the Kistnapatrika, of the 4th August, the article under the heading "zamindari ryots and some questions relating to them" abstracted on page 2165 of the weekly report.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Aug. 12th, 1917.

The Joint Conference

72. The Desabhimani, of the 12th August, publishes in Telugu the resolutions passed by the Joint Conference of the All-India Congress Committee and the Council of the Muslim League.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The India Council.

73. The Desamata, of the 8th August, says:—As formerly, the members of the India Council were not able to place the views of the Indians before the Secretary of State, the views of the authorities and those of the people differed, and the people had grown discontented. At the time of the partition of Bengal there was none in the Council to represent the views of the people. This was why Lord Morley arranged for two Indian Councillors in the Council. Mr. Chamberlain deserved the gratitude of the Indians by appointing another Indian in the Council. . . Indians cannot agree with the London Times in its views about the India Council. The Indians have found by experience that the India Office is a source of harm and not good to them, and request that it may be abolished and that India may be administered by the Secretary of State assisted by two Under Secretaries. Indians also request that their salaries may be paid from the British treasury, so that the British may evince greater interest in the administration of this country.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 8th, 1917.

Captain Wedgewood's opinion.

74. The Desamata, of the 8th August, says:—Captain Wedgewood has not only recommended the conferring of commissioned offices on the Indians but also wrote as follows:—This is the last recommendation that I intend to make. Not only should the Indians be given full rights of citizenship without any delay, but they should also be allowed a greater share in the administration of their country. As it happened that the Indians could not acquit themselves equally with the British in the present war inasmuch as the bureaucracy in India are not bound by public opinion in administering the country, it will be well to give the Indians some control over the bureaucracy. Lord Kitchener said that loss of India is preferable to defeat in this war. . . The paper remarks—When under the Moghul rulers the Indians held high military offices and offices of Ministers and Viceroys, it is improper to say that they are incompetent to hold high military offices even after they have been under the British rule for 150 years. We pray that the bureaucracy here and the people in England will consider the views of Captain Wedgewood and do justice to India.

75. The Desamata, of the 8th August, reproduces from the Kistnapatrika of the 4th August the Telugu version of the letter of the Congress Committee addressed to the Viceroy and the Secretary of State, already noticed on page 2166 of the weekly report.

The letter of the Congress Committee.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 8th, 1917.

76. The Kistnapatrika, of the 11th August, writes:—From the writings in some papers it may be surmised that some persons are afraid of the attempts made to convene a non-Brahman Conference at Coimbatore. This fear is not, however, without grounds. It is true that some of our antagonists are scheming to create dissensions amongst the Indians to show that there is no agreement among them regarding political matters. And it is also true that some of the non-Brahmans are yielding to such machinations. It is also a fact that some of them are giving expression to perverse opinions on political matters . . . All in the country, Brahmans and non-Brahmans, must be interested in the well-being of the country. Who else than the Non-Brahmans are bearing most the burden of taxation? . . Who else are suffering most from the oppression of the zamindars and from the heavy encumbrance of the capitalists? Who else are becoming dependent upon others on account of administration not being carried on and education not being given through the medium of vernaculars? There are many ryots who can argue their cases independently and efficiently if prominence is given to the vernaculars in the courts of law and in Legislative Councils. . . If the Coimbatore Non-Brahman Conference is to be of use, it should attract ryots, merchants and all deliberations therein should be conducted in the vernacular. . . The goal of political reforms is not appointments under the Government. Let Non-Brahmans agitate to obtain more of them. It makes no difference whoever gets the higher appointments under the present political administration. The country does not gain an iota of benefit thereby. The question that should be determined with great concern is whether administration should be in the hands of the bureaucracy, or of the representatives of the people. If it is the representatives that should wield the authority of the State are they to be elected in accordance with considerations of caste and creed? . . . It is desirable that the Non-Brahman should, instead of opposing the Home Rule movement, help on the gradual amelioration of all castes and the creation of electorates having equal opportunitiesl.

Non-Brahman Conference.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 11th, 1917.

77. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th August, publishes a Telugu version of the article written by a correspondent to the Young Men of India. It contains the following:— . . . "In whatever way we view the question it cannot but strike us that India is in a very poor condition. The Congress leaders and such great men as Dutt, Digby, Ranade and Lord Cromer expressed the same opinion.

Comparing India with civilized countries we find that she is in a much backward condition in the matter of education. The consequent economical losses are numerous. The facts can be ascertained from the census accounts . . .

The future of agriculture.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

78. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th August, writes under this heading:— The popular leaders believing that the scheme of post-war reforms despatched by the India Government will not satisfy the aspirations of the people, prepared a scheme themselves and submitted it to the authorities in England. The rumour is current that even Mr. Chamberlain thought that the reforms proposed by the Indian Government would not satisfy India. . . Lord Islington observed that reforms in the Indian administration are necessary and that it is harmful to delay their introduction. It may therefore be supposed that some reforms will be made immediately. But the scheme proposed by Lord Islington does not satisfy the Indians. We do not see therein the basis of self-government. The resolutions of the Congress express

Political reforms.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

the popular opinion. Any reforms differing from them may introduce some changes, but they cannot lay the foundation of self-government. We shall enumerate the reforms proposed by him. . . .

The chief characteristic of democracy is that the Government should be responsible to the people. This is the principle of self-government. In order to reach this goal it is necessary that the representatives of the people in India should be given greater rights. The popular representatives should have the powers to make the Government spend the revenues derived from the people for their benefit. It is, therefore, necessary that the powers of the Legislative Councils should be extended. Unless the powers of the popular representatives are increased, provincial autonomy cannot be very beneficial to the people. No mention is made of the extension of popular rights in Lord Islington's scheme. The root principle of self-government consists in giving power to the Legislative Council over the Executive Council. No reference is made of this in the said scheme. . . . The root principles necessary for making the Government responsible to the people are wanting in that scheme. These reforms may be agreeable to the London Times, but they cannot give satisfaction to the Indians. . . We give the principle points in the reform scheme submitted by the popular representatives. . . . In this scheme full powers are provided for the Government to check the people when they abuse their powers. If we represent rationally and constitutionally that this scheme contains what the Indians wish to obtain, the liberty-loving English Government will not fail to fulfil our desires. It is this belief that is giving life to the hopes of the Indians. Further, the existing repressive laws must be repealed in order that the expected reforms may be fully enjoyed. We must be representing that the liberty of speech, liberty of the press and liberty of person which are the birth-rights of man should be re-established.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Indian reforms.

In commenting adversely on the speech of Lord Islington on "Indian Reforms", the Manorama, of the 14th August, questions the propriety of His Lordship's delivering a speech on the subject to an audience consisting of Oxford students, regrets that His Lordship should have disapproved of the memorandum submitted by the nineteen members of the Imperial Legislative Council, who, it thinks, are better judges of the needs of India than Lord Islington, who is far away, and observes that it goes without saying that there is vast difference between the reforms outlined by His Lordship and those demanded by Indian leaders.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

Nationality.

79. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th August, writes under this heading:—The words "nation, race and country" are freely used in English. . . The critics that say that nationality has not been awakened in India are ignorant of the ancient history of India. . . The Vedas, the Puranas, and the Itihasas teach the people of India from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. . . The Muhammadan rulers wielded sway over the Indian Empire from their throne at Delhi, and Indian nationality has gathered strength under the British Empire. The National Congress has spread the notion of an Indian nation among the educated men. To say that national feeling has not been awakened among the Indians is, under these circumstances, opposed to truth. It is opposed to Indian traditions to declare that nationality can have no room in India, unless and until differences of caste, creed and language are obliterated. It is only a united Indian nation that is possible, but not a homogeneous Indian nation. No revolution can sweep away the said differences.

Even in Western countries where it is supposed that homogeneous nations exist, the exact meaning of the words "nation, race and country" has not yet been fixed. The speech recently delivered by Principal Fraser in Bombay, may dispel some of the misapprehensions of the critics. . . In an Empire subject to the same Government, there exist several races. The Chinese, the British and the Russian Empires are instances of this. Take Switzerland for instance. . . The doctrine that a common language, common institutions and a common religion enter into the definition of nationality, would not apply even to Europe. . . When the western people themselves waver about the exact definition of nationality, it is audacious to apply terms in use among Europeans to India, and to declare that India is devoid of national feeling.

80. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 14th August, writes:—The Home Rule League is steadily gaining in strength. The number of branch leagues also is increasing. Since the externment of Karandikar many have come from Bombay to work for Home Rule. At a large public meeting held on the 9th August, Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar as president made an extraordinary speech. An aged Muslim lady had written a most wonderful letter. She and her two sons Shoukat Ali and Muhammad Ali have joined the Home Rule League. Though she is poor, she is rendering considerable help to the Home Rule cause. She has great regard for Mrs. Besant. The latter has innumerable sympathisers in this country. They urge that she should be released in view of her failing health consequent on the internment. The Home Rule cause seems to have only gained fresh strength by the internment. Two ladies, namely Sivakamu Ammal and Abdul Begum, are rendering great service. Sivakamu was a medical student who left college and became a Home Rule worker as a protest against the order forbidding students to take part in politics. Mr. Gandhi's doctrine of passive resistance is now being adopted in the furtherance of the Home Rule cause. The masses have resolved to defy all orders against Home Rule methods and to suffer the punishment that such defiance might entail. If this doctrine should be universally adopted by all the Home Rule Leagues, Home Rule will perforce have to be granted in a few years. A section of the British public is already willing to grant Home Rule. If God and the British public should both favour the cause, there would be little difficulty in obtaining Home Rule.

Home Rule.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 14th, 1917.

81. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 15th August, writes: —There are over ten thousand Indians in South Africa. They are all labourers. The Boer Government there has passed a law to the effect that neither these labourers nor their successors shall purchase land in that country, that they shall not possess any property, and that they may be employed only as labourers. The British people there are also responsible for this law. It is most deplorable that such a law has been suffered to exist. We cannot help regretting that the British in South Africa had not the goodness to consider what they would have felt if a similar law were to be enacted in India in regard to foreigners.

Indians in South Africa

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 15th, 1917.

82. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 11th August, observes:—At a recent meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council, His Excellency Lord Willingdon speaking on the resolution regarding the loss sustained by the death of Maharshi (the great sage) Dadabhai Naoroji, praised the work done by this leader and thereupon hoped that the Indians would work towards the ideal of self-government within the empire. Our contemporary the Subhodaya of Dharwar thinks that these words from the mouth of His Excellency the Governor indicate the triumph of the Home Rule cause. Only some four or five months ago His Excellency had warned that it was futile to agitate for Home Rule and that the agitation might affect even those privileges which were proposed to be given; and now His Excellency has set his seal to the Home Rule cause. In a sense, this is a triumph of the advocates of Home Rule. How did this change of opinion come about in four months? As the Subhodaya conjectures, the influence of Mr. Montagu's State Secretaryship might be one of the causes. Or it might be due to the change in the attitude of the Bomay Times, consequent on the adverse public criticism which resulted from the famous internments in Madras. For, the host of Anglo-Indian journals exist to defend the methods of the bureaucracy, and the bureaucratic machinery exists to carry out the views of the Anglo-Indian journals. This mutual support is something akin to the mutual admiration between the asses and monkeys in the fable. However that may be, we welcome this change in the attitude of Lord Willingdon. But, as the Bishop of Bombay told us, it appears that though the authorities in India may have the wish to grant anything they have not the power. From this we must infer that the change in His Excellency's views is not of any practical benefit to Indians. Still it is in the power of administrators, like Lord Pentland, to repress the legitimate aspirations of the people. The fact, therefore, that His Excellency the Governor of Bombay has not done so must be deemed a laudable service, and in this sense it is a triumph of the Allies.

Lord Willingdon and Home Rule.

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, Aug. 11th, 1917.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Grazing on poramboke lands.

83. Swadeshabhimani, of the 11th August, writes:—The Board of Revenue has invited the opinion of the District Collectors on the subject of allowing grazing grounds, including poramboke lands, to continue to be used for the same purpose. The Board has referred to the ravages of epidemics among cattle consequent on these common grazing grounds and the damage done to the pasture by the herding of cattle on such grounds. We shall dwell at greater length on this subject in another issue. In the meantime we must observe that the closing of these small grazing grounds, whether in towns or in villages, for fear of epidemics would be akin to the idea of closing all markets for the same reason or that of prohibiting the use of water altogether to avoid the spread of enteric fever and other diseases arising from contaminated wells. We would therefore suggest that the District Association and all cattle owners in villages should take prompt steps to address His Excellency the Governor on the occasion of His Excellency's forthcoming visit to this district in October that the porambokes may be kept as they are.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Rupee and two-and-a-half rupee currency notes.

84. Referring to the news that it is proposed to issue rupee and two-and-a-half rupee currency notes, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 15th August, explains that the Government are constrained to have larger recourse to this paper currency on account of the dearth of gold and silver caused by the war, and that, since it is the duty of all Indians to render every possible service to the Government who are carrying on this great war for the welfare of the people alone, the latter ought to do their best to popularise these new currency notes and thus demonstrate their loyalty to their benign rulers.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Administrative reforms in India.

85. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 11th August, writes:—Seeing that the agitation in regard to Home Rule was fast increasing despite the internments, the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces made a speech to conciliate the Home Rule politicians. Recently the Pioneer, which is supposed to represent the views of the Government of India, has been repeatedly urging the holding of a popular conference to discuss and ascertain the reforms demanded by the people. It is conjectured that this suggestion has its origin in the views of the Government of India. However that may be, it will be admitted that it is the duty of the Government to carry out the wishes of the people. It will not be difficult to determine the mode of organising this conference. There are the provincial congress committees which represent the people in every province. There are again the District Congress Committees. These bodies, it is urged, may meet in conference under the presidency of some responsible non-official gentleman. It will thus be possible to ascertain the views of every taluk, district and province. Each of these provincial conferences may send four representatives to the Imperial Conference, of which the Viceroy may be the President. Let the reforms be carried out in accordance with the views of the people as ascertained at such a conference. It is feared in some quarters that some of the members in their solicitude to please the Government might mar the benefit of the conference. Such fears are groundless. Let us hope that the members will be candid and straightforward in expressing their views at the conference. If any of them should behave in a manner detrimental to the interests of the country, the popular leaders will be sure to punish such, not only through their contempt for them but also by ostracizing them. The defects, if any, in the result of the conference will of course be duly criticised. There is thus no need to fear that the conference may not lead to any benefit. Even an officially organised conference must lead to some good. For, even those members who take the side of the Government cannot wholly ignore the demands of the people. There will thus be some good gained, and we should welcome it on the principle that something is better than nothing; and there will still be room for grumbling that the demands of the people have not been granted. The people would therefore do well to consider these advantages, and to attend any conference that may be organised by the Government and represent their political grievances; and in case they are not remedied, to continue to agitate on constitutional lines for reforms. We, therefore, heartily endorse the suggestion of the Pioneer on the subject.

86. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 11th August, writes:—The people of India have long been complaining that the Indian Finance department is not sufficiently careful in regard to its accounts; and it is well known that the Government have not paid closer attention to this matter; nor has the department improved. There have been many instances in the past to justify this accusation; and it is again borne out by the Auditor's Report on the Government of India Home Accounts. The Auditor has given an instance to show that the responsible authorities in India were unable to make a correct estimate of the value of India's supplies to England and the Colonies. In 1915–16 the Indian Exchequer was about to lose £13,000. But the Auditor brought this to the notice of the authorities. The Auditor pointed out that the hire claimed by the Government in respect of two transports was inadequate, with the result that the Government later claimed another £13,000. There is no need to comment on the words of the Auditor in this connection to show what little care is taken by the Indian Finance department in regard to its figures. The Hindu rightly observes that under the present economic distress in India a rupee saved may be a life saved. A new era will have dawned for India when the truth of the above goes home to the minds of those who hold the keys of the Indian treasury.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The Indian Finance department.

87. The Manorama, of the 10th August, points out that, while the Government of India plead want of funds for educational and other reforms, in England the Government have, in spite of the war, set apart forty million pounds sterling for education, and that, while the reply of the Government to India's demand for self-government which would give her large financial and administrative powers, is "let the war be over", in England the question of granting Home Rule to Ireland is being carefully and seriously considered, and calls upon the readers to note the difference in the treatment of the two countries.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 10th, 1917.

Want of funds.

88. The Qaumi Report, of the 6th August, writes:—The Queen of Hindustan has felt it incumbent upon her to condole with the widows, mothers and daughters of Indian soldiers killed in action, or dead from the consequences of active service. Her Majesty has accordingly sent to each one a special likeness of herself with an autograph message of sympathy.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 6th, 1917.

The Queen's sympathy.

This gives further proof of Their Imperial Majesties' sincere affection towards the Indian subjects.

The Editor regrets he cannot reproduce this interesting portrait, but is sure that Queen Mary's countenance is pourtrayed to the imagination in the fine message she has sent.

There is no doubt that the bereaved relatives of the dead heroes of India will appreciate the kind words of womanly sympathy even more than the picture itself.

The Editor refers to Her Majesty's frequent visits to hospitals and to the ready sympathy she always shows to all sufferers and concludes with: It has been finely said:

"To own His sway no lack of cherub in the skies.
"But man was born on earth with man to sympathise."

The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 8th August, also refers to the Queen's sympathy with the widows, mothers and daughters of Indian soldiers killed in action and publishes a translation of Her Majesty's autograph letter.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

Her Imperial Majesty's sympathy.

89. The Editor of the Qaumi Report, of the 8th August, learning from other papers the news of the release of Mr. Zafar Ali Khan from internment, expresses his great joy and hopes that he may now be able to serve his community.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1917.

Mr. Zafar Ali Khan's desire.

But, the Editor observes;—"It is reported that, on arriving at Simla, he induced some of his friends to make a great demonstration.

"It is very difficult to understand why Mr. Zafar Ali has given up his old ideal and now desires to meddle with political matters. If he has raised the standard of Home Rule instead of proceeding to Simla, he should have gone to Lucknow and convinced the Muslim League authorities there."

Qaumi Report, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

90. The Qaumi Report, of the 7th August, refers to a note published in its local contemporary New India to the effect that "Mr. Muhammad Ali and Mr. Shoukat Ali (two interned leaders) have joined the Home Rule League established in this country; and it is hoped that the believers in Home Rule all over the country, welcome this decision with great enthusiasm" and writes:—We do not know how the Government will welcome this decision and what the Muhammadans of the country say and think about it. We will not, however, express any wonder at the action, if true, of Mr. Muhammad Ali and Mr. Shoukat Ali. On the other hand, what astonishes us is why they had not joined the League before.

Interned Muhammadans and Home Rule.

Mr. Muhammad Ali was not interned, because of his views with reference to Home Rule. The Government have not yet told us what offence he was interned for.

When it is obvious that they have not been charged with an offence against the Defence of India Act, we cannot understand the logic of bringing them under the operation of this self-same Act. The difficulty is that the Government do not appear to settle the question.

If the intelligence that Mr. Muhammad Ali and Mr. Shoukat Ali have joined the Home Rule League turns out to be true, it is a matter for congratulation. In reality those persons are to be felicitated who moved or supported the internment of these two gentlemen, and who, in their foolish friendship, acted inimically to the interests of the Government and the country.

Possibly certain other interned Muhammadans may approve the procedure of those two brethren and join Home Rule League. If it should happen so, the Government will have to explain what advantage it is deriving from its policy.

Should the Government consider the Home Rule movement unlawful and repugnant, it will lay itself open to the charge of misleading and involving serious minded persons in an illegal and objectionable movement!

We are sure, if justice had been done to these two gentlemen, they would have become the greatest supporters of Home Rule, and through their energetic endeavours there would have been less of the two extremes in the Home Rule question. The Government, have, however, made the community despair by depriving it of its leaders and now they (the Government) whether they like it or not, will be obliged to feel the consequences.

The Muhammadans have been so much disappointed over the release of their leaders that they have now begun to take their cue from the Hindus and be one with them in heart and voice. For instance, it can easily be gathered from the meetings held regarding Mrs. Besant that they have really been convened in support of the case of their own leaders. Possibly the Government appreciate this secret, but we consider it our duty to invite their attention to it all the same.

It is astounding to find that the Government, instead of taking the cases of the interned Muhammadans into careful consideration, are openly disappointing their aspirations.

Such incidents are very injurious to the country, but we hope that the British people, with their love of freedom and sense of justice, will understand the secret of the foresight of the authorities, and not prove to be the movers or supporters of disappointment.

III.—Legislation.

Vaisyamitran, Devakottai, July 23rd, 1917.

91. Referring to this Bill which the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao proposes to introduce in the Madras Legislative Council and to the statement made by Sir Alexander Cardew on the celebration of the Agricultural College day at Coimbatore, that there are seven millions of children in this Presidency and that their education will be impossible unless an additional tax is levied for the purpose, the Vaisyamitrnn, of the 23rd July, writes:—Mr. Krishna Rao proposes in his Bill that the supervision of elementary education should vest with municipalities. The revenues of these municipalities are indeed insufficient to meet the essential expenditure they have to incur in the interests of the public, and it is therefore impossible for them to incur any expenditure on elementary education. Funds required for this purpose should, however, be provided for from the allotments sanctioned by the Government of India for the Educational Department and these funds should be placed under the control of the district boards. If the aid from the Government is found to be insufficient, provision should be made for meeting the deficit from the revenues of the district boards and for the imposition of a separate tax for education to meet further deficit if any. From the statement made by Sir Alexander Cardew, that the total revenue of this Presidency is only 50 lakhs a year and that it would not suffice to meet even a day's expenditure in the present war, it appears that there is not the least possibility for the progress of elementary education in this Presidency. We should, therefore, consider well as to what should be done in the matter and adopt measures for advancement in this direction.

Compulsory Elementary Education Bill.

The Dravidan, of the 7th August, dwells at length on the benefits of compulsory elementary education in this Presidency, and expresses its satisfaction at the proposal of the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao to introduce this Bill in the Legislative Council. DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1917.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

92. In commenting upon the Travancore budget for the year 1093, the papers noted in the margin also congratulate the Diwan on the sound condition of the finances of the State. The Yogakshemam, of the 10th August, thinks that Forest and Railway matters do not receive proper attention at the hands of the Darbar, questions the necessity for a costly Survey department and for the posts of Deputy Director of Education and Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and observes that the funds set apart for sanitation and Panchayat Courts are not adequate enough.

The Travancore budget for 1093 M.E.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 10th, 1917.
YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Aug. 10th, 1917.
DESABHIMANI, Quilon, Aug. 11th, 1917.
LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Aug. 13th, 1917.

ERRATA.

Report No. 31.

Page 2092, line 13, delete "to" before "such".
„ 2099 „ 15, delete the comma after "necessity".
„ 2099, paragraph 45, line 18, delete "the" before "Providence".
„ 2109 „ 65 „ 10, insert "the" before "Indians".
„ 2123 „ 119, line 10, omit "," after "view".
„ 2123 „ 119 „ 21, insert "and" after "internment".
„ 2123 „ 119 „ 24, omit "the" before "lovers".

Report No. 32.

Page 2140, paragraph 27, line 14, for "soley" read "solely".
„ 2141 „ 30 „ 11, for "should" read "would".
„ 2143, line 25, for "impove" read "improve".
„ 2152, paragraph 51, last line, insert a comma after "granted", and replace the full stop at the end of the line by "!".

Issued, 22nd August 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 34 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 25th August 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(d) Education—
Research professors	2211
(e) Local and Municipal—
The Corporation of Madras	ib.
(k) General—
Passive resistance	2212
The Madras Zamindars and Home Rule ..	ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont.	PAGE
(k) General—cont.
The Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar.	2213
Theosophy and politics	ib.
The Congress Presidentship	ib.
The Home Rule mania	ib.
Indian reforms	ib.
The adulteration of food-stuffs	2215
Commissions for Indians	ib.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

The prospect of peace 2216
The end of war .. .. ib.
The mischief played by submarines .. .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration.

(b) Courts—
The Madras High Court 2217
The District Judge of Guntur .. .. .. ib.

(d) Education—
The methods of education 2218
Use of exercise books in schools .. .. ib.
A rough note on commercial education .. ib.

(e) Local and Municipal—
Chidambaram Municipality .. .. .. ib.

(k) General—
The Registration department 2219
The present political situation 2220
A warning to the Dravidians 2221
Home Rule League, Negapatam 2222
The Allahabad Home Rule League .. .. ib.
Passive resistance .. .. ib.
Our political condition and passive resistance .. 2223
The power of preventing processions and meetings .. .. ib
The health of Mrs. Besant 2224
Brahmans and non-Brahmans .. .. .. ib.
Lord Islington and his reforms 2225
Forfeiture of the security of New India .. 2226
The Home Rule day at Kumbakonam .. .. ib.
Sir B. Robertson on the present situation .. ib.
What is the cause of this agitation? 2227
Indian volunteers .. .. ib
Swaraj .. .. ib.
India and Home Rule 2228
The internment of Mr. Besant and her colleagues 2229
Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms 2230
The Imperial Legislative Council 2232
The plight of a woman that sent all her sons to the front .. .. ib.
The Johannesburg tram-car tragedy .. .. ib.
Mr. Eardley Norton on Indian reforms .. ib.
Repressive measures .. .. ib.
Protection of trade 2233
Reforms and the Government of India .. ib.
The Chittoor District Conference 2234
The North Arcot District Conference .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.
The Coimbatore District Conference 2234
A meeting of the Congress Committee at Kumbakonam 2235
The Non-Brahmana Conference, Coimbatore .. ib.
A message from Commander Wedgewood .. ib.
A special meeting in the United Provinces .. ib.
A protest against protests 2236
Pleaders and the Home Rule .. .. .. ib.
Indians and Anglo-Indians .. .. .. ib.
A lady passive resister .. .. ib.
Mr. Bhupendranath Basu .. .. .. ib.
Lord Pentland and the Andhra movement .. 2237
The Berhampur Swaraj League .. .. .. ib.
The zamindars .. .. ib.
Internment day meeting at Madras .. .. ib.
Mr. Montagu 2238
The Bombay Home Rule League .. .. ib.
Our agitation .. .. ib.
Industries 2239
A Muhammadan lady .. .. ib.
Sir Rabindranath Tagore .. .. .. ib.
A swadeshi festival 2240
The Cocanada news .. .. ib.
Legislative Councils .. .. ib.
English students—Indian students .. .. ib.
Nationality 2241
The letter of the Begum .. .. ib.
Salt Cotaurs station .. .. .. ib.
Indian Railways and the Indians .. .. ib.
An obscene play .. .. ib.
The grand speech of the Prime Minister .. ib.
The 'Oovamudal' destroyed by fire .. .. ib.
Egmore ladies' meeting .. .. ib.
Recruitment and Home Rule 2242
Home Rule and passive resistance .. .. ib.
The Bengal Government and public meetings. ib.
The Mesopotamia Commission Report .. .. ib.
Mrs. Besant and her theosophical works .. ib.
Rabindranath Tagore and swaraj .. .. ib.
Local self-government 2243
Currency notes of the value of one rupee and of two and a half rupees .. .. .. ib.
The Madras Government and New India .. ib.
Her Imperial Majesty's sympathy .. .. ib.
A lecture on the war .. .. ib.
Petition from the Congress and League .. ib.
What a free Musselman thinks of self-government? 2244

III.—Legislation.

The Village Panchayat Bill .. .. ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(d) Education.

Research professors.

1. Justice, of the 18th August, writes:—"What are Research Professors? We could not exactly make out what some of the gentlemen of the Senate exactly meant by the term Research Professors. . . Almost all professors carry on research work when they are not actually occupied with teaching the students. At least that is our experience of professors. . . We are told that it is quite different in India. Professors in this country deliver lectures to students during specified hours, and outside those lecture hours they usually play tennis or drink iced beverages or sit in their pyjamas and read French novels or generally try to feel cool . . We can quite understand what will happen when a 'Research Professor' is actually appointed in Madras. Under the terms of his appointment he will be expected to do some research work, and every year probably he would be expected to submit a report to the University authorities describing the research work done by him during that period. . . In a large number of cases the Buckingham Canal would be a more suitable receptacle for the Professor's annual report than the University library. . . If Professor Sir Thomas Fraser were to be appointed to that chair of experimental pharmacology we can very well imagine the sarcastic smile far more eloquent than any words he may utter when he is asked to submit his annual report of the work done by him to the Senate of the Madras University there to be made a subject of criticism by innumerable vakils. No. We do not think that research work will ever thrive in the Madras University under existing conditions. The atmosphere of Madras is anything but academic, and the Senate of the Madras University may, with ordinary luck, develop into a fourth-rate debating society; but it will never be able to develop into a body which can foster original research."

Justice, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

(e) Local and Municipal.

The Corporation of Madras.

2. The Hindu, of the 20th August, remarks:—"Administration reports and other publications issued by the Government usually contain a good deal of facts and figures, but hardly any sentence or statement which would force on us a smile. But the Report on the Administration of the Corporation of Madras for the year 1916–17 drawn up by Mr. J. C. Molony, I.C.S., presents some curious features of which abundance of misplaced humour is one. . . His references to the debates of the Commissioners and to the share of the responsibility of administrative work between the Commissioners and Executive are hardly complimentary to those gentlemen who have the fortune or misfortune to sit with him in his Council. In fact, his humour appears to border on the ridiculous, and is little consistent with such a serious document as the report professes to be."

Hindu, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

Writing under the heading "Molonyese," the Indian Patriot, of the 22nd August, says:—Ever since Mr. J. C. Molony took charge of the management of the Madras Corporation, the most interesting portion of his report is not what he has to say, but in his manner of saying it. He has been in our midst sufficiently long, however, to have exhausted the fountains of Irish wit and humour. We are familiar with his sackful of expressions, and we are sure he himself must be feeling the strain of bringing forth fresh phrases and jokes, with the result that his report falls flat. . . Describing the hand-carts which ply in the Madras roads, he makes the quite enjoyable observation that 'from the road-maker's point of view he handcart is an invention of the devil.' Where, however, we have the best specimen of Molonyese is where he describes the relation between himself and his Indian Patriot, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

'fellow Commissioners' whom he thanks 'for the co-operation that they have afforded' him. And then comes the moonsoonic outburst of humour. 'In debate we have not stagnated; indeed at the moment we are in the midst of what old Sir Nigel would have termed 'a very pleasant bickering.' But rare and refreshing though oratorical Donnybrooks may be to an Irish exile, I venture to close my song of gratitude on a note of advice. Commissioners and executive are equally responsible for what is well done and for what is ill done. Denial that any improvement is attempted or affected, if sufficiently reiterated, finds in time acceptance in the general mind; deprecatory criticism without end leads at least to the general belief that the critic is as futile as those whom he criticises."

(k) General.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 18th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

3. The West Coast Spectator, of the 18th August, observes:—"As we anticipated, the Madras Provincial Congress Committee has accepted passive resistance. Those who run this show, that is the committee, are almost all members of the Home Rule League and dance to the tunes of Adyar and Mylapore. It is not surprising therefore that the committee has played second fiddle to the League and accepted a cult which stands absolutely no chance of securing any support worth mentioning in the country, except from faddists and cranks labouring under that peculiar malady called softening of the brain. . . Are the passive resisters prepared to resign all honorary offices, membership of the Legislative, Municipal and District Councils and to disobey the laws of the realm? If they are sincere they must, and we can then understand them. Our own opinion is that the talk about passive resistance is all bunkum which will fizzle out in the course of three revolving moons. A few may make 'martyrs' of themselves, applauded by the Extremist press, but the result will be dismal failure and general laughter."

New India, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 22nd August, remarks:—"Our amiable contemporary the Madras Mail has, as may have been expected, burst into fury over the resolution passed by the Madras Congress Committee on passive resistance. But what is of importance to Home Rulers is the proof this article furnishes of the efficacy of the weapon they have chosen for securing their object. Here are the Mail's precious words: 'They (public meetings) are the principal recreation of the educated Indian, who feels that any day got through without attendance at one is a day lost. Our intellectuals lisp resolutions in their cradles, and their last word when death closures the debate is a firm but constitutional protest against the autocratic interference with freedom of speech. . . let us not needlessly irritate people who live from public meeting to public meeting.' There is a lesson here for us all. We see in what contempt the bureaucrats, of whom the Mail and other papers of that class are mouthpieces, hold our literary protests and petitions and of what insignificant value they are, if we are not able to back them up with effective action. For, to Englishmen mere talk is comic; resolute action is the one thing that appeals to them. And what line of action is open to a party of loyalists fighting a determined band of obstructionists to get behind them to our real rulers except resolute passive resistance to all such obstruction in the way of our onward march? . . . The proposed movement for passive resistance is not intended to win self-government. It is directed entirely against the repression now going on. It is the only weapon, free from violence, which is available against the executive orders which are invading the liberties of Indian British subjects in this country. The extreme form of total abstinence from association with Government has not been advocated yet, though it may be necessary later."

Non-Brahman, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1917.

The Madras Zamindars and Home Rule.

4. The following appears in the Non-Brahman for the week ending 19th August:—"Where is the Hon'ble Mr. K. Rangaswami Ayyangar? He was busy saying that the Zamindars were in a body eager for Home Rule, but the lie was pricked and then he made some desperate efforts in the columns of the papers abusing those who signed the anti-Home Rule manifesto, but finding the exposure rather cruel he has at present disappeared from the political arena.

His name was flaunted by New India as organising secretary of the Home Rule League but it has disappeared from there also. Where is he? The answer is forthcoming; he has reappeared as the President of Varnashrama Dharma Conference. Perhaps he is satisfied with the praise he has had from Mrs. Besant and does not hope for more—'Charming' as the tribute which Mrs. Besant paid to the Brahman Zamindar."

5. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 19th August, has the following:— NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar.

"The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar, the good old gentleman who once played the buffoon in the Council Chamber by moving a resolution under a misapprehension and withdrawing it, has now been limping into Home Rule conferences and behaving as much as he can manage like Mrs. Besant. Of course Sir S. Subrahamanya Ayyar must get the first prize for uttering undiluted nonsense, but Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar has almost come to the front by abusing those who would not follow him."

6. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 19th August, writes:—"The Government of Madras have published the full text of the letter from the interned, and lo and behold the Home Rule Theosophical combination is silent. The other day we heard that the Government had placed the interned in a safe position; Mr. Chamberlain was described as having told a lie when he said that Mrs. Besant had said that Home Rule and theosophy was one. And now when the letters are published, there is silence. Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar is also silent. It is, we think, the duty of the Government now to enquire about the Theosophists whether they are Home Rulers, and if they are, and happen to be Government servants, pull them out at once, whether they be High Court Judges or petty clerks. We have played long enough with gunpower. This dangling with edgetools must cease." NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1917.

Theosophy and politics.

7. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 19th August, observes:—"Signs are that Mrs. Annie Besant will be elected the President of the Indian National Congress, and the spirit of passive resistance is behind it. . . Why is the Congress respected? Because it has behind it, or rather had, for the time has come to speak of the Congress in the past sense, the mature wisdom of sober statesmen, who did not consider it patriotism to persecute the Government. The day Mrs. Besant is elected President, the Congress will be dead; to the Government it would not be an association of the great men who, though they differ in views between themselves, they respect and honour: it would be an organisation of undesirables, of whom they will take care. It would be an association of passive resisters and nothing more. With one passing of the hand, the great record written by men like Sir Pherozesha Mehta, Mr. Ghokale, Sir Dinsha Edulji Wacha will be washed away, and the Congress shall be dead once and for all." NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1917.

The Congress Presidentship.

8. In an article on this subject, the Non-Brahman, for the week ending 19th August, says:—"The craze for Home Rule has taken firm hold of certain old theosophic noodles, and they, waking or asleep, dream dreams and see visions of untrammelled self-government granted to them. Poor Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar sheds tears of blood over the deteriorating health of his Guru shut up at Ootacamund, and he is perturbed with thick rumours probably of his own internment. . . The hollowness of the part standing for the whole has been mercilessly exposed, and the hypnotised monomaniacs have their brains notched so that the unhealthy humours and the rank blood are let out. Nevertheless the old farce of Brahmans as representatives of the whole Indian population has not ceased to be enacted. Thoroughly reassured by the success of their tactics in times past in beguiling the bureaucracy and bamboozling the Executive Government, the Brahmans still hold to their faith and try to create splits where none exist and profess compromise when they seriously mean destruction." NON-BRAHMAN, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1917.

The Home Rule mania.

9. The Hindu, of the 21st August, states:—"The Government of India published last evening, in a Gazette of India Extraordinary, the text of a statement made in the House HINDU, Madras, Aug. 21st, 1917.

Indian reforms.

of Commons by Mr. Montagu, the Secretary of State for India, on the question of Indian reforms. It is an insipid, uninspiring and disappointing declaration which will cause keen dissatisfaction throughout the country. . . The language employed is extremely vague. Everybody knows that British statesmen have been proclaiming for over a century and a half that it is the policy of the Government to associate Indians more and more with the administration, in every branch of it, and the further statement that it is their desire to develop gradually self-governing institutions in the country 'with a view to the progressive realisation of responsible Government as an integral part of the British Empire', does not take the problem very far. . . To be frank, this long-waited-for pronouncement smacks very much of gubernatorial utterances with which the Indian public have become only too familiar during the last few months and it will fall flat on the country. . . One silver lining in the cloud, however, is the announcement that it has been decided to give commissions in the Indian Army to Indians. . . This is a measure of bare justice to Indians which has been inaugurated none too early, and we trust that this act of tardy recognition will not be so diluted by restrictions and conditions as to rob it of all value."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Aug. 21st, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 21st August, says:—"We publish today the text of two Gazettes Extraordinary, issued in Simla almost simultaneously, one announcing that the bar has been removed which precluded the admission of Indians to commissioned ranks in the army and the other that the Secretary of State will be visiting India to settle the scheme of self-government for India. This is the direct result of India's contribution to the war. We have been expecting this concession long since, and urging it with intense perseverance. We are sure that this generous resolution of the Government will be hailed with delight throughout the country. . . We congratulate the Government on choosing the right moment to announce the concession, and read along with the announcement that the Secretary of State is to visit India on a political mission, we are, we think, justified in believing that Mr. Montagu has lost no time in asserting himself in his position. . . Such a step has never been taken before, such a step, we might add, had never been contemplated in India by any of us. There is the impatient idealist who might read into this the excuse for delay; he might be honestly afraid that the Secretary of State will live, move and have his being in the bureaucratic atmosphere; that the Secretary of State may be hypnotised by officials, that he may be prejudiced. But Mr. Montagu comes here not for the first time, and India already knows him enough and will not entertain any such fears. . . Nothing is calculated to throw the Secretary of State more completely into the hands of the bureaucrats than rash and ill-digested ideas such as passive resistance. Let us realise that we are on the eve of great changes. There cannot be a more handsome acknowledgment of the force of popular agitation than that the Secretary of State himself should make up his mind to study the question on the spot. The Moderates, of course, will find in the announcement the echo of their views on the present situation—the Gazette of India uses almost the identical language used by our leaders. In the face of this announcement the virulence of the present agitation must disappear, and those engaged in the propaganda might well formulate their views clearly and with a due sense of responsibility."

Justice, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Justice, of the 22nd August, observes:—"His Majesty's Government have decided that the Secretary of State should pay a visit to India to discuss the question of Indian reforms with the Viceroy and the Government of India, to consider with the Viceroy the views of Local Governments and to receive with him the suggestions of representative bodies and others. We welcome this decision and consider it a wise one under the circumstances. . . The form of the announcement made by the Secretary of State is noteworthy. It has already provoked hostile criticism in the Home Rule press. Evidently, the new reformers expected and certainly wanted Mr. Montagu to ignore the Government of India and the Local Governments at their bidding. But Mr. Montagu, who is a responsible statesman and not a political charlatan, cannot afford to commit such an outrage on the existing constitution. His statement suggests more than it expresses. He means to consult the Viceroy, the Government of India, the Local Governments and to receive suggestions from 'representative bodies and others'. In other words, the men on the spot who know every part of the complicated machinery so thoroughly are not to be discarded and slighted. Their opinions will carry the greatest weight with him and the Government of which he is a member. . . One other aspect of Mr. Montagu's statement remains to be noticed. He is not in favour of gigantic innovations. . . No declaration could be more straightforward, more unambiguous and more statesmanlike. The advocates of revolutionary changes, those men and women in their frenzy, who imagined that because England was engaged in a terrible war, she would hand over the Government of this country into their keeping, may now, if they have any spark of sanity left, turn their attention to schemes of constructive politics suited to the requirements of the country. . . We may depend upon it that with the sources of information now open to him Mr. Montagu will be able to get at the best mind of India and to set his face against the rhodomontade of the noisy agitators who pose as the representatives of the people of India."

The adulteration of food-stuffs.

10. The following appears in New India of the 23rd August:—"A long communique appeared in our Saturday's issue on the reprehensible practice, which has of late become so common in this country, of adulteration of food and other articles of commerce. This and other dishonest practices were unknown in the trade of this country when it was self-governed, as is testified to by almost all historians of ancient and medieval India. For this new vice, we have to thank the western spirit of competition and the undermining of our faith in our traditions wrought by the denationalising educational system and the mischievous activities of the Missionary."

New India, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

Commissions for Indians.

11. New India, of the 24th August, states:—"The decision of the Government to grant commissions in the army to Indians has not evoked any marked enthusiasm in the country. The reform is, of course, welcomed everywhere; but it is regarded more or less in the light of a minor change. The absence of enthusiasm is, however, quite understandable. The repressive policy has created so profound a feeling of resentment and sullenness that any decision short of its reversal is not likely to create popular enthusiasm. . . The demand of the people of India is simple and clear. The colour of the skin shall be no bar to promotion in the army. The military training colleges shall be as freely open to Indians as they are to non-Indians; and the officers, after training, shall be placed on the same footing. Is it the desire of the Government to concede that demand, or do they merely propose to promote a few select Indians as the necessities of the time require?"

New India, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Mahavikatadutan, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

12. The Mahavikatadutan, of the 18th August, reproduces from the Swadesamitran of the 2nd idem a Tamil version of a communication appearing in the Commonweal on the problems connected with the conclusion of peace referred to in paragraph 14 of Report No. 32 of 1917.

The prospect of peace.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 21st, 1917.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 21st August, writes:—"When will the war end?" This is a question which is being asked in all quarters of the globe. Under the present circumstances there is no near prospect of peace. Both parties are as irate as ever. The Kaiser is expressing the deepest contempt for America and even boasts that he will punish her for her intervention. The Allies are urging that he should be kept under due restraint. The Kaiser is using every possible artifice for bringing about peace. He is organising peace conferences and is trying to bring about differences between the Government and the people in various countries, so that the allies may ask for peace of their own accord. The Germans are at the root of the Stockholm Conference. That is why the allies have refused to issue passports to those who wish to attend this conference. It is, therefore, likely that Germany is fearing defeat. The fact that so many neutrals are one after another joining the Allies makes it evident that the German enormities are coming home to their minds. America joined the Allies after remaining neutral for two years and a half. Brazil, too, joined lately. Portugal has joined them and begun to fight. Even China who cannot control her own people has declared war against Germany. Japan is helping with her transport of troops. All this goes to show that the Kaiser and his military officers are not equal to the occasion. Swaggering can never achieve what tact can. From the provoking manner in which the Kaiser derides America, it is easy to see that whatever other powers and resources Germany may have, they are woefully lacking in statesmanship and diplomacy. It is generally believed, and we think rightly enough, that the trend of all these events forbodes evil to the enemy.

Peace proposals.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th August, says with reference to Pope's peace proposals:—It is not proper to agree to a peace when there are indications of victory. That has to be considered when the Germans publish their terms. It is to be believed that the Allies will in the meanwhile do their duty and will not leave off fighting till the independence of small States is re-established.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 21st, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st August, says:—The tricks played by the Germans to enter into peace have not succeeded. The Russians did not accept the peace proposals of the Pope. . . It is not honourable to enter into peace with the dishonest Germans. The war must be prosecuted till the militarism of the Germans is put down and they are completely conquered. Only when the independence of small States is plainly re-established. the English will have fulfilled their vow. The war situation shows that such an event is fast approaching.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

13. The Andhraprakasika, of the 18th August, says:—From the utterances of Mr. Lloyd George, it will appear that this terrible war will end by this year. Will the prophecy that the terrible European war will draw to a close with the great battle at Flanders prove to be true?

The end of war.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, Aug. 18th, 1917.

14. The Kistnapatrika, of the 18th August, writes:—"A London correspondent to the New York Times has written a strange article on the subject. This article caused extraordinary agitation in America. The New York Times

The mischief played by submarines.

writes that the correspondent's statement that ships belonging to the Allies of a total tonnage of 1,600,000 are sinking every month may be wrong, and that the figure may be 600,000. In his second letter, the correspondent emphatically asserts that ships of a total tonnage of 600,000 are being lost by the British themselves and that the total tonnage of all the ships lost by the Allies comes to 750,000 per month. It is certain that the mischief done by submarines is causing considerable loss in this war. The Allies can do nothing more than to build ships greater in number than those lost by them. It cannot be said that the submarines can cause equally great loss in future. The means for destroying submarines has been invented. The Allies have invented a machine which can make the sound, made in water at a distance of 3 or 4 miles, audible. With its help the existence of a submarine can be found out even when it is at a distance and there are contrivances to destroy it.

II.—Home Administration.

(b) Courts.

The Madras High Court.

15. Referring to the increase of the number of permanent Judges in this High Court from eight to ten, the Hindu Nesan, of the 15th August, remarks that though this increase may apparently look an advantage to the Indians, it is practically a disadvantage especially to the vakils, inasmuch as, according to the rule that a third of the Judges should be barristers and a third again civilians, only two seats will be available to the vakils. Adverting to the existing personnel of the High Court, it observes that, excluding the barrister and the Civilian Judges, there remain only Messrs. Sadasiva Ayyar and Seshagiri Ayyar and that, as the former of these is one who has come up from the regular line, the latter is the only vakil Judge on this bench, and expresses its surprise at the anomaly of only one seat being occupied by a vakil in a bench of ten Judges.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

A circular by a District Judge.

16. Adverting to the resolution passed by the Guntūr Vakils' Association protesting against the conduct of Mr. K. Srinivasa Rao, the District Judge of Guntur, in issuing a circular to the Sub-Judges and District Munsifs to report the names of the vakils who are members of Home Rule Leagues, the Swadesamitran, of the 18th August, asks whether Sub-Judges and District Munsifs are officers of the secret police, and is at a loss to understand how the District Judge too came to have this function.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The District Judge of Guntūr.

Referring to the circular of the District Judge of Guntūr calling for a list of pleaders taking part in the Home Rule and the Swadeshi movement, the Andhrapatrika, of the 17th August, says :—There is a different department altogether to find out the political views of pleaders. That the District Judge should try to discharge the duties of that department will give room for unnecessary agitation, and will also affect the independence of the pleaders. . . We therefore hope that the District Judge will not give room for such agitation, but will attend to the discharge of his own duties.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

District Judge of Guntūr.

Desabhimani, of the 19th August, writes that in a meeting of the Guntūr Bar Association as well as in that of the Home Rule League, resolutions were passed condemning the instructions said to have been issued by Mr C. K. Srinivasa Rao, District Judge of Guntūr, to the Sub-Judges and the District Munsifs in the district to report to him the names of those pleaders that take part in the Home Rule and swadesi agitation and remarks as follows:—We are surprised at the change that has come over Mr. Srinivasa Rao, who, before entering into Government service, was working on the side of the people. We know of people who while in service are quiet and, on retirement, join the people and work for them, but this is a rare case of perversity. Prior to his becoming a sub-judge he was working for the people and through their support he became a Legislative Council Member and was therefore able to enter the Government service. This is just like a person kicking away, with his left leg, the ladder by which he has risen.

Desabhimani, Guntūr, Aug. 19th, 1917.

(d) Education.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

The methods of education.

17. The Andhrapatrika, of the 16th August, reports Mr. Ernest Wood to have said:—Aristotle said that love of learning is natural to every man, and that there is no use oppressing his mind. But at present, it is plain that the minds of pupils are so oppressed by giving them education that is unnecessary for life. The result is that their enthusiasm and originality are lost. They pass examinations and entertain great expectations, but the methods of education are an obstruction to their progress. They have no individuality and are unfit for anything but serving as clerks. For this evil, the methods of education adopted in schools are responsible.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Use of exercise books in schools.

18. Referring to a circular issued by the Director of Public Instruction, Mr. C F. DeLaFosse, asking the Inspectors of Schools to explain to the teachers that in view of the enormous increase in the price of paper, they should take care not to make heavy or unreasonable demands on school children in regard to their exercise books and that they should aim at every possible economy in this direction, the Swadesahbhimani, of the 17th August, says that this very complaint from a correspondent had been published in its columns sometime ago, and urges that in the Madras Presidency, too, the Director of Public Instruction should issue similar instructions to the Inspectors of Schools

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

A rough note on commercial education.

19. The Qaumi Report, of the 16th August, writes:—A glance at the balance sheet of our commercial education reveals the fact that, although national importance is not entirely bankrupt, it is in a parlous condition. Facts show that the loss is great and involved, and it is feared that this will be very detrimental to future progress and success.

The Government is spending large sums of money on the Madrasah-i-Azam. It is generally believed that the Madrasah is a magnificent Muslim educational centre. Results, however, prove that it has not yet been able to attain even the standard of certain Hindu schools.

The Hindu High School is a living memorial of the wisdom of self-respect and spirit of the Hindus, and simply with the help of the ordinary Grant-in-aid, given by the Government, it is becoming renowned for its education.

Although the Madrasah is purely a Government institution, its students have not, generally speaking, been able to excel the pupils of the Hindu High School. What is the explanation? There is no committee here to be blamed nor is there any native official responsible. The Madrasah is supervised by a capable European officer. Whatever defect there be in the system may be attributed to the fate of the Muslims their real enemy.

The fate of the Muslims is their enemy not only in the Madrasah-i-Azam and the Madrasah-i-Islamia, but also in the Alighar College where the colour of the sky is changing.

Many people blame the Madrasah-i-Islamia, for the result that only one of its students was successful at the last final examination. In the history of the Harris High School and the Madrasah-i-Azam there are, however, many such examples, and every one enquires whether the community derives any practical benefit from the money spent on these institutions, but the rough note on our commercial education proves we are suffering losses everywhere.

(e) Local and Municipal.

DESABHIMANI, Cuddalore, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Chidambaram Municipality.

20. Referring to the report on the administration of the Chidambaram Municipality for the year 1916–17, the Desabhimani, of the 11th August, has the following in English:—"Adverting to the side of expenditure incurred by the municipality, the amount spent by the municipality during the year under review was Rs. 61,104–12–1, which is less than the revised budget estimate of Rs. 70,970. That the municipality was found unable to utilize in full the amount allotted in its revised budget cannot at all events be considered as a sign of efficiency, and it is all the more painful to see that the Provincial grants made by the Government with the best of intentions are allowed to remain unspent during the year. It does not certainly mean that the objects for which the Provincial grants were made are not of urgent need to the municipality; but, on the other hand, these grants are scarcely enough to bring the condition of the municipality to its proper level. It is the sluggishness of the executive that may be said to be responsible for this state of things. We wish greater activity be shown in this direction during the current official year. Certain new works started in the previous years are reported to have been completed during the year. Leaving the other minor works, the construction of the model elementary school, mutton stalls, etc., need mention here. The money spent by the municipality on education was Rs. 3,516-1-10 which is below the budget estimate of Rs. 3,600. The Hindu Model Elementary School under the municipal supervision is, though increasing in strength, struggling for want of adequate staff of teachers. The opening of a fourth standard is felt to be of dire necessity, to maintain which the municipality eagerly expects from the Government a recurring grant of Rs. 900, besides the sum of Rs. 320 already granted. We trust the Government will not hesitate to come to its rescue. Coming to the health of the town, the prevalence of small-pox in a virulent form all over the town specially during the latter part of the year was, no doubt, a sad commentary on the general health of the people, and it is a pity that in spite of the measures said to have been taken by the municipality to combat the disease, the epidemic raged virulently during almost all over the year. The private scavenging service as usual worked at a profit during the year, though the number of houses served is less than half the number assessed to the house-tax. It is highly desirable that the municipality follows in this matter the sympathetic spirit of the Government which have on several occasions distinctly expressed the desirability of making the private scavenging service always self-supporting and not profitting by it. If this is done it will not only give relief to the poor house-owners, but will be a further incentive to a greater expansion of the service in the town."

(k) General.

The Registration department.

21. Adverting to the report on the working of the Registration Department in this Presidency for the three years ending with 1916, the Hindu Nesan, of the 11th August, writes:—It is but natural that a report written once in three years slightly exceeds the prescribed number of pages. The Government, however, seem to be very particular about the page limit of the reports submitted to them, and the Inspector-General of Registration, therefore, regrets that his report has exceeded the usual number of pages. It is highly undesirable that the heads of departments should be placed in a position to ask for pardon when their reports have to exceed the usual page limit because of the inclusion therein of matters which, in their opinion, have necessarily to be noticed.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

Again, although the Registration Department is an important department of the Government, and the Government derive very large income therefrom, we cannot understand their wisdom in considering that it is enough if the administration report of this department is written once in three years. Surely this cannot be accepted, especially when reports of the other departments are submitted annually. We will, therefore, urge that at least in consideration of the large revenue derived from this department, its administration report should be written every year.

The Government observe with satisfaction that in the years under report not only the number but also the pay of the Probationary Sub-Registrars have been increased, and that the low pay of the clerks has been raised. The revenues of this department are, indeed, greater than its expenditure, and yet the Government have not the mind to raise the scale of pay of the staff. They say that, on account of the financial pressure caused by the war, it is not possible to raise the pay of the staff. There will, indeed, always be obstacles in the way of improving the pay of the subordinate staff, and the present financial stringency now forms one of such obstacles. For whatever reasons the pay of the subordinate staff of the other departments may not be raised, it is essential that the pay of the subordinate staff of the Registration Department should be raised without any reasons being assigned to the contrary.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The present political situation.

22. The Hindu Nesan, of the 11th August, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, a long article on the present political situation, in which references are made to the condition of Russia before and after the revolution and to the endeavours made by Ireland for the acquisition of Home Rule. In the course of this article, the following observations occur:—It is certain that the present internment of Mrs. Besant cannot continue for ever. All those who are endowed with divine powers have to suffer in the beginning for the fulfilment of their objects. Therefore, our chief duty is to do what we are bound to do. The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar has already given notice of the several questions he proposes to ask at the next meeting of the Legislative Council regarding the internment of Mrs. Besant. We can only learn by and by whether the Government would give appropriate answers to these questions or give their usual reply that they are not prepared to answer them.

When we ask for the grant of Home Rule, we only ask for a thing to which we are entitled, and we should not be considered as longing for a thing which is not ours. What is it that the people of every civilised country have said and are saying? What is it that has driven us to the necessity of taking part in this great war and thereby incurring heavy loss of life and property? Why should the British people come forward to help Belgium when they heard that the Germans had captured that country? Is not, indeed, the one great principle that democratic views should be established throughout the world and that all people should be granted liberty thereby, the cause of all this? We must remember the statement made by Mr. Lloyd George, when he spoke of the services rendered by India for the war. Who else can have better title to, or bestow greater attention upon, the consideration of measures for the safety of our country and its progress than ourselves? But some fuss is now being made by a small section of the people of this Presidency alone that it is necessary that the Indians should have Home Rule but that they are not yet fit for it. When and in what manner can it be found out whether the Indians have the required capacity or not? Are they not conducting themselves properly as members of Legislative Councils? Are there not Indians who have creditably discharged their duties as High Court Judges? It is a fact admitted by the Government themselves that the capacity, intellectual power and industry of the Indians are highly praiseworthy. At this moment when endeavours are made throughout the world for the preservation of liberty and the establishment of democratic principles, the statement that India alone should not have Home Rule and that time has not yet come for the grant of such a rule to this country cannot, under any circumstances, be accepted. It will, therefore, add to the prestige of the British people, who are known for their democratic views, to help India in her efforts to acquire liberty and Home Rule. It will, indeed, be directly against their avowed principles if they should hesitate to do the needful in the case of India, which is under their own rule, and to adopt in her case the policy which they have adopted in relieving foreign countries from the atrocities of Germany.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The present political outlook.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 15th August, reports from the pen of a correspondent the proceedings of a public meeting held on the 12th idem at Trichinopoly, under the auspices of the local Home Rule League, when Mr. M. K. Achariyar is reported to have delivered a lecture on "the present political outlook", under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. R. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar, which is referred to in the Hindu of the 14th idem. The adoption of the policy of passive resistance is stated to have been advocated at this meeting.

Dravidan, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The Dravidan, of the 15th August, also reproduces the proceedings of the same meeting from the pen of its own correspondent, who reports the lecturer to have stated before an assembly consisting of a number of students, among others, that the people should fight with the Government with the aid of the method of passive resistance and that their grievances would not be redressed unless they adopted this course.

A correspondent writes to the Hindu Nesan of the 13th August a long article on this subject wherein he makes references to the loyalty of the Indians and the help rendered by them for the war, to the poverty of India, to the hardship caused by the Arms Act, to the enormous expenditure incurred on account of the exodus of the Government to the hills and to the protest made by the zamindars against the grant of Home Rule for India. In this article the following observations occur:—At this anxious juncture, we are even threatened. Can the Government think of teasing the people who conduct lawful discussions, or can the Police come forward to suppress the excitement caused in the minds of the people? How are the Police justified in prohibiting the public meeting which was proposed to be held at Arni? Had sufficient reason been found by the Government for directing the Police to interfere with this meeting? It will, indeed, be good if the authorities exercise their powers without causing provocation to the people. It is the duty of the authorities to lend their ears to the reasonable arguments adduced by the public and to do justice. The Police are really intended to be an agency for preventing crimes like murder and theft and helping towards the administration of justice in the country. How can such an agency be directed against law-abiding and peaceful people? It is the duty of the Government, therefore, to protect the freedom of the people from any interference on the part of the Police and this will indicate the greatness of the British rule. The people of this Presidency are known for their peaceful nature and their moderate views. It will be wise on the part of statesmen to pay proper attention to the objects and ideals of such people. If the Government begin to wound the feelings of innocent people, it will only affect the confidence they have in the Government.

The present situation.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

In a leader under this heading, the Lokopakari, of the 20th August, refers to the present ruffled state of the political atmosphere of India caused by the repressive policy adopted by the Government and while expressing the hope on one hand that the authorities will realise the seriousness of the situation, as it looks as if the feeling of discontent now prevalent among the people will lead to their adoption of passive resistance, advises the people also not to worry the rulers during this stressful period of war for the fulfilment of their (people's) aspirations.

The present situation.

Lokopakari, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

Under this heading the Desabhimani, of the 19th August, reproduces from the Andhrapatrika the speech delivered by Syed Vazir Hussain in the meeting held at Chinabagh, Bombay, in which he praised Mrs. Besant and her work, and declared that the repressive measures adopted by the Government would throw the 330 millions of India into despair.

The present political situation.

Desabhimani, Guntur, Aug 19th, 1917.

23. In criticising in detail a communication addressed to the press by Mr. C. V. Venkataramana Ayyangar, the Secretary to the Reception Committee of the Fourth Coimbatore District Conference, condemning the action of the organizers of the Non-Brahman Conference and their attitude towards Home Rule, the Dravidan, of the 13th August, observes:—None of us (non-Brahmans) should attend the conference convened by the Brahmans, who defraud us under the guise of friendship and, with sweet words but a wicked heart and with a smiling face, serve their own interests. They may merely make a promise to help us. When reforms are sanctioned, their words will become useless as far as the progress of our people is concerned. and we will have to repent then. We have known their conduct well for several centuries, and so we are not satisfied with them. They will allure us in many ways. They will cry aloud that they will give us every advantage. They will entreat us by a winning smile and kind words to attend their conference. They will fall at our feet till their business is finished. As soon as that is done, they will begin to ride over us. All these Brahman Conferences are only got up by some vakils. The Government never care for the cry of these people; for they know the real secret. But they are ready to redress our grievances. There is not an iota of truth in the words of these Brahmans. If we believe in them, we will be completely ruined. Let us swear that we will attend only that conference which is held for our own benefit. O Dravidians! Do not yield to the deceptive efforts of the Brahmans.

A warning to the Dravidians

Dravidan, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Home Rule League, Negapatam.

24. The Swadesamitran, of the 14th August, publishes in Tamil the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar on the occasion of the celebration of the first anniversary of this League on the 8th idem. The speech appears in full in the Hindu of the 9th August 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

The Allahabad Home Rule League.

25. The Swadesamitran, of the 14th August, publishes in Tamil the substance of the Home Rule Manifesto issued by this League, which appears in extenso in New India of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

26. The Swadesamitran, of the 15th August, reproduces in Tamil a letter from the Secretaries of the Madras Provincial Congress Committee communicating the resolutions passed by the committee at their meeting held on the 13th and 14th idem to consider the advisability of adopting the method of passive resistance as a protest against the present repressive measures of Government. This letter appears in the Hindu of the 15th August 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Swadesamitran, of the 16th August, also reproduces the substance of a speech delivered by Mr. Prakyajibhai under the auspices of the Bombay Home Rule League on this subject, in which he is reported to have stated as follows:—The time has come for the Indians to adopt the method of passive resistance in India alone. India is now fighting on the side of the empire for the sake of liberty and independence. Such being the case, it is incongruous that there should be no liberty or independence in India. We ask for Home Rule. If the bureaucrats silence us by means of repressive measures, we will adopt the method of passive resistance. Our aspiration for Home Rule is a legitimate one, and no contrivance can draw the Indians away from this.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Referring to the unwillingness of the Bombay Congress Committee to commit itself to any definite opinion regarding the feasibility of adopting the method of passive resistance and the readiness with which the Madras Congress Committee has advocated its adoption, the Hindu Nesan, of the 16th August, says:—Pondering over the affair deeply, India cannot be compared to South Africa in all respects. In South Africa all the Indians stood as one against the whites. But in India, all the people cannot follow a certain method together, as there is not that national tie and a feeling of brotherhood among them, which existed among the Indians of South Africa. Excesses under the pretext of passive resistance may not be wise in the present condition of the country. It is not that we do not approve of the method as such, but we deprecate the commission of excesses in the name of passive resistance.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Dravida Patrika, of the 15th August, explains passive resistance to be a salutary principle of not submitting to anything which appears to be untrue or unjust and quoting eminent names in foreign history and ancient Indian lore, such as Leo Tolstoy in Russia and Prahlada in India, as having acted on this principle successfully for obtaining a recognition of just rights and the preservation of truth, and dwelling at length upon how this method helped the Indians in South Africa to achieve their object, says:—As this method was till now followed outside India, our officials never expressed themselves against it. If, however, it is adopted in the very country, where they exercise sway, we cannot say now how they will view it. There is reason to believe that they will probably be only against it. Still we do not think that the benign Government will keep quiet, without evincing any anxiety, until matters reach this pass. As the mischief that may result by ignoring this for some time longer will be immense, we hope the Government will satisfy the aspiration of the Indians for liberty.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th August, gives a Telugu version of the resolution passed by the Madras Congress Committee regarding the adoption of the policy of passive resistance.

Passive resistance.

Referring to a resolution passed at a recent meeting of the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee that the views of the various Congress Committees should be ascertained in regard to the adoption of the principle of passive resistance as a protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant, etc., the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 20th August, writes:—Instead of inviting the views of the committees in this manner it seems to us that a better plan would be to defer the question till December, so that it may be widely discussed by the public both in the press and at the annual meeting of the National Congress. We have now a new Secretary of State who is by no means an autocrat. Besides the various Congress Committees and other public bodies have sent cablegrams to the Ministers in England protesting against the internments. The British Government and the Government of India have been fully afforded opportunities of mending their policy. It is never good to be impulsive. We should always bear in mind that nothing succeeds like patience. The British Government is the home, as it were, of democracy. The present autocratic methods will soon see their end. We must, therefore, caution all Indians against hasty and impulsive action.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 20th, 1917.

Our political condition and passive resistance.

27. Quoting the substance of a letter said to have been written by Mr. Gandhi to the Indian Opinion of South Africa, in which he dwells upon the advantages of passive resistance as a means of bringing home to the authorities the injustice of their ways, the Swadesamitran, of the 15th August, writes:—Though the news received by us every day makes it apparent that the political atmosphere of the country is being ruffled in many ways, the movement that is now on foot demonstrates definiteness of purpose on the part of the people; for our leaders and the public have not wavered in the least in condemning the repressive policy of the Government incessantly. Not only this. The increase of repression on the part of the authorites has led to the proposal of the adoption of passive resistance as a means of altering the policy of repression. The definite opinion already expressed by a number of Provincial Congress Committees supporting the adoption of the method of passive resistance and suggesting that it may be done immediately, shows the change that is taking place in the attitude of the people on account of repressive measures, and it is necessary that the authorities should note this. If they do not do so, they will have to take the whole responsibility for the results that may follow. Our people and the leaders have been well known for the two qualities of patience and peacefulness. As these two qualities are essential in adopting the method of passive resistance, we do not think that the people need have any anxieties about adopting this method, and we hope that the people of this Presidency especially, whose determination as passive resisters in South Africa has been well described by Mr. Polak, will not hestitate in the least to take to it, if necessity arises. In this connection we would like to invite the attention of the bureaucrats to one point. The duty of preventing the spreading of an impression in the minds of the people that redress of grievances cannot be obtained by the usual means rests solely on them. How can their having recourse to repressive measures one after another be compatible with this duty of theirs? What is the use of merely repeating the statement often that there should be no agitation during this stressful period of the war? If the bureaucrats hastily and impatiently impose restrictions and resort to serve measures which may lead to agitation and say that agitation should not be indulged in, how can this be possible? Will they not realise the true condition of the country at least now and without attempting vainly to delay or obstruct the fulfilment of the ideas of Home Rule, which stand a sure chance of being accomplished, come forward to satisfy sincerely the aspirations of the Indians in a spirit of sympathy, which alone can secure the permanent welfare of the Empire?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The progress of passive resisters.

The Dravidan, of the 17th August, reproduces in Tamil the gist of the comments made on this subject by Justice in its leader of the 16th idem.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

The power of preventing processions and meetings.

28. In reproducing the substance of the communication addressed by the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar to the Hindu of the 15th August, regarding the notice served upon him by the District Superintendent of Police, Tanjore, forbidding any public assembly or procession in the streets of Kumbakōnam on the 16th idem except under a special license, the Swadesamitran, of the 15th August, observes:—Ever since repressive administration came into vogue here, we have often been hearing of the Police prohibiting processions and meetings, and as the Police are using their powers in this matter rather freely, it has become necessary to discuss whether they are acting within their powers in doing so. Section 31 of the Police Act, read with the two previous sections, makes it clear that the Superintendent of Police can insist upon an individual, who is to convene a meeting or is about to conduct a procession, taking out a license for the same, if he is satisfied that the said meeting or procession will disturb the public peace and the District Magistrate also agrees in his view. This is one fact to be noted. The Act goes on to say that the Superintendent may grant a license subject to certain conditions which are specified. Read with the context, the word 'may' has to be construed as 'shall'. Therefore, the Superintendent has no power to refuse a license, but has power only to specify the conditions subject to which a meeting or a procession shall be conducted. Even this power rests only with the District or Assistant Superintendent of Police and the Police officials below them in rank have it not. Then, again, the Act seems to have contemplated only the taking of precautions against the disturbance of public peace or obstruction to traffic, but not an interference with the liberty of the public. Therefore, the orders issued by the authorities should be only such as help the accomplishment of the above subject. The authorities may impose conditions such as that a procession should go on a particular side of the road or that it should not stop in any place; but they have no power to say that there should be no procession connected with Home Rule, theosophy or Annie Besant. The power of the Police has reference only to the manner in which a procession is conducted, but not to the attitude of the people taking part in it. Mrs. Besant, theosophy and Home Rule may be unpalatable subjects to some officials, but this will not justify their interfering with the liberty of the people. For the followers of a certain ideal to conduct a procession with their own flag is a western habit, and it is deemed to be a right of the people. It is not British policy to try to prevent our following a British practice. Considering the position of the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar and the fact that the procession conducted by him last month went off very smoothly, an impression is bound to be created in the minds of the people that the real motive of the authorities in prohibiting a procession is not a suspicion that it would lead to a disturbance of the public peace, but the idea of suppressing the Home Rule movement. Mr. Chamberlain observed in Parliament that there was no objection whatever to constitutional agitation, and that objection was taken by the Government only to dangerous methods. What was the danger that was apprehended at Kumbakōnam?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

DESABHIMANI, Cuddalore, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The health of Mrs. Besant.

29. The Desabhimani, of the 11th August, reproduces in its Tamil columns the letter written by Mr. Jinarajadasa to the editor of the Hindu about the health of Mrs. Besant and the comments thereon of the Swadesamitran of the 4th idem, abstracted in paragraph 50 of Report No. 32 of 1917.

MAHAVIKATA DUTAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant's health.

The Mahavikata Dutan, of the 18th August, reproduces a portion of the comments of the Swadesamitran of the 13th idem on this subject which are abstracted in paragraph 59 of report No. 33 of 1917.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant's health.

The Desamata, of the 15th August, publishes in Telugu the words of the Hon'ble Mr. Mazharul Haque, regarding the health of Mrs. Besant, already noted on page 2196 of the weekly report.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Brahmans and non-Brahmans.

30. In the course of a communication appearing in the Dravidan of the 15th August from the pen of a correspondent, in which he condemns the habit of the non-Brahmans of presenting money and articles to Brahmans on festive and funeral occasions, the following observations about the Brahmans occur:—The Dravidians in this country have for long been conducting their festive and funeral occasions only with the aid of the Aryan caste Brahmans. The reason for this is nothing but the tricks played by the latter. The Dravidians are innocent people, believing every one, while the caste Brahmans are adepts in the art of deception. Having written the necessary works in Sanskrit to help them in extorting an enormous amount of money from the Dravidians, they have been cheating the latter, who have become a victim to their deception. The caste Brahmans do not know anything of the truths in the ancient Tamil works. They conduct the festive and funeral occasions of the Dravidians only with the aid of their own smiritis These smiritis strongly advocate the distinctions of caste and speak highly of the Brahmans and lowly of the Dravidians. They prescribe one mantra for each caste and smell wholly of flesh. The Dravidians should not be allured by their tactics. It is very hard to find out the deception practised by the caste Brahmans under the guide of friendship. They will take up any work provided it yields them a profit without caring whether it is high or low.

Brahmans and non-Brahmans.

A correspondent of the Dravidan, of the 17th August, characterising the activity of the Home Rulers of Mayavaram as a work of interested Brahmans and comparing their cry for Home Rule to the howling of jackals, questions their motive in getting two non-Brahmans to sign a notice of the local Home Rule League, and makes the following appeal to the Dravidians:—O! Dravidian brethren! Ponder well over the nature of the present-day Brahmans. Who can deny that they have for centuries been ekeing out a livelihood by cheating the non-Brahmans and that they have been doing this even under the British rule? They pretend to help us in obtaining the grace of the Almighty and in expiating our sins and attaining salvation, and have on this pretext made an abode of our temples. They cleverly wrest our property from us, saying that it is for the benefit of our ancestors in the other world and live upon it. Not content with playing these tactics with us, they are now convening public meetings to threaten even the benign English Government. I warn my Dravidian brethren from having anything to do with these meetings.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Another correspondent of the same paper appeals to the Dravidians to give up the habit of getting their festive and funeral occasions conducted only by Brahmans and, realising that befriending a Brahman means a danger to life, to avoid them altogether. Making special reference to the non-Brahman Conference held at Coimbatore, he asks all non-Brahmans to strive for the cause of this conference without becoming a victim to the allurement of the Brahmans.

Lord Islington and his reforms.

31. The Dravidan, of the 15th August, reproduces the substance of the comments of Justice of the 14th August on the scheme, foreshadowed in a speech recently delivered by Lord Islington, of reforms to be introduced in India.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Islington proposals.

The Swadesamitran, of the 16th August, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Times of India on these proposals appearing in the Hindu of the 15th idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Lord Islington's reforms.

In its leader on the reforms proposed by Lord Islington, the Andhrapatrika, of the 17th August, remarks:—Lord Islington has not distinctly stated the relationship that ought to subsist between the Government of India and the Parliament. While the Indians have been urging that the India Council is unnecessary, Lord Islington has not expressed his view about it. . . Provincial autonomy can have no meaning if Provincial Governments do not enjoy independent powers in regard to their income and expenditure. The Times of India remarks that Lord Islington has not given any decisive opinion on this point. . . In proportion as the Government changes into a government by the people, the administrative powers of the people should go on increasing. This has not been plainly stated in Lord Islington's proposed scheme of reforms.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Lord Islington on Indian reforms.

In a lengthy leading article commenting upon Lord Islington's recent speech on the subject of reforms in the Indian administration, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 17th August, writes:—Just at a time when the people of India were most keenly watching the political firmament, all their hopes of profuse showers in the shape of administrative reform have been nearly swept away by the recent speech of Lord Islington. . . Lord Islington kept harping on the dangers of haste. While urging, in very agreeable language, the importance of spreading education and of giving the public a larger share in the administration, he still thinks it impossible to divest the bureaucracy of the powers now centred in its hands and make it responsible to public opinion. This is the key-note of his speech. We are, therefore, constrained to observe that he has wholly ignored the importance of popular opinion which has been urged in the reforms proposed by the memorandum of the 19 members. He did not make the speech in his capacity as Under Secretary of State, but only as a friend of India. Nevertheless since he does hold an exalted position in the India Office, it it is necessary to look deeper into the various observations he made in this speech.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 17th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Forfeiture of the security of New India.

32. The Swadesamitran, of the 16th August, quotes the order served upon the editor ot New India that the security deposited by him and the copies of New India wherever found have been forfeited to His Majesty, on account of certain articles which appeared in that paper and which are of the nature described in section 4 (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, and observes:—Though there is nothing strange about the Government of Madras having begun to exercise the inordinate powers conferred upon them under the Indian Press Act, once again in the case of New India, some expected that at least, in view of the attitude of the people at present, the Government would devise the necessary means of allaying unnecessary panic. So the present action of the Government has caused them great disappointment. No one can say that this will lead to any good either to the country or to the Government. The fact that the very first article published in New India after it was purchased by Mr. Telang is one of those condemned by the Government shows that the Government have had an eye upon this paper ever since Mrs. Besant handed it over to the present editor. This is really strange. The aforesaid article was contributed by Mr. Horniman, the editor of the Bombay Chronicle, whose capacity and experience in the field of editing is well known. He has been incessantly criticising the measures of the Government in his own paper and no official in Bombay has had occasion to find fault with his articles. But an article contributed by him to New India has been declared by this Government to be objectionable. As all the articles now condemned by the Madras Government will soon come up before the High Court and be adjudged upon their merits, we do not now propose to dilate upon this topic now. Our readers can themselves understand what the condition of the editors is at present.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

The Home Rule day at Kumbakōnam.

33. The Swadesamitran, of the 16th August, appreciates the spirit in which the authorities at Kumbakōnam cancelled their order prohibiting processions and meetings on the 16th instant, the moment they found that their action was not legal and adds that, if the higher officials of the Government, who are above these district officials, are as cool-headed in these matters as the latter, half of the unrest now existing in the country will surely disappear.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Sir B. Robertson on the present situation.

34. Anent a speech said to have been delivered by Sir B. Robertson, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, at Amraoti, condemning the political agitation carried on in India now, the Hindu Nesan, of the 16th August, takes special exception to his statement that the Indians are unnecessarily agitating in this period of war, without devoting all their attention to the war and, remarking that sufficient arguments cannot be adduced to prove the above statement, says:—It is regrettable indeed that it has not struck the bureaucrats, who accuse the Indians of not devoting their whole attention in the matter of helping the British to win a victory in this war, that they should, for this very purpose, put the Indians on their back and keep them in cheerful spirits. The best policy to be followed by the Government now will be to give up the adoption of repressive measures and make a definite announcement that certain specified benefits will be conferred on India, after the end of the war, and thereby encourage the Indians.

35. The Swadesamitran, of the 16th August, writes:—The authorities often criticise the conduct of the Indians in carrying on an agitation, when a serious war is being waged, without attending to the requirements of the war. As the Provincial heads here seem to be forgetful of the help rendered by India in this war, it is necessary that they should read the details given by Lord Hardinge in this matter, in speaking on the report of the Mesopotamia Commission. As for the cause of the present agitation, it will become clear, if the speech of Pandit Mothi Lal Nehru, as the President of the United Provinces Congress held recently at Lucknow. There cannot be any one now who thinks that a Government can become an efficient Government, if it has secured the protection of the life and property of its subjects. The present-day opinion is that the rule of the people is the best rule. It is in pursuance of this opinion that the Government arranged for the people to have a voice in the administration of this country. When the people, finding that their voice was not heard, began to complain about it, there came the war and the Government wanted to bestow all attention upon the war and to avoid all controversies. The people consented to this. We immediately sent our men and materials to Europe and they rendered timely assistance to the allied armies in France. The result was that the British statesmen and Generals applauded our loyalty and valour and claimed us as equal sharers in the Empire. We were greatly gratified. At this juncture was introduced the United Provinces Municipal Bill, which tended to create a split between the Hindus and the Muhammadans. The Government were advised by popular leaders that the consideration of the Bill should be postponed, but they would not yield and what happened subsequently is known to all of us. On whom did the blame lie? Almost, at the same time, the Government of India wanted to introduce the Defence of India Act. In spite of the fact that it tended to take away the liberty of the people, the popular leaders gave their consent to it, in view of the emergency caused by the war. Immediately began the interments under the Act in the different provinces, the demanding of security from New India and the subsequent forfeiture thereof and various other repressive measures. When the authorities were doing all this, what did the people do? Nineteen representatives in the Imperial Legislative Council drafted a memorandum of the reforms to be introduced, for extending our privileges, and prayed that they might be given effect to. This provoked the officials and further repressive measures followed. We are at a loss to understand the necessity for this repressive policy. For aught we know, the people are agitating by constitutional means for the grant of certain privileges. We believe that, if our voice prevails in the Government, it will be conducted better. We do not deny the benefits conferred by the British Government. We say that they are not enough. Our contention is that because we have progressed, we have become fit for greater privileges. Efforts are being made in England and the Colonies to introduce reforms in various directions. Even while the war is going on, the Government in England are considering about various reforms. Can she, on that account, be said to be indifferent to the war? The Government of India, too, have been considering about reforms and have sent up a communication on this subject to the Secretary of State for India and the latter is considering about it. What if we are told what his views are? Are we not the people to be affected by these views? If these things are pondered over, the cause of the agitation having gained strength will become clear.

What is the cause of this agitation?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

36. Adverting to the communication addressed to the press by Professor Ramamurti about his efforts for obtaining permission to enlist volunteers have ended in nothing, the Dravida Patrika, of the 15th August, says that the men chosen by Ramamurti are bound to be far superior to many soldiers in the matter of height, education and wealth, and that it cannot, therefore, understand the reason why the Government failed to give a proper reply to his letters, if they really wanted that Indians should be enlisted as volunteers.

Indian volunteers.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

37. In the course of a leader under this heading, the Dravida Patrika, of the 15th August, describes self-government to be a natural feature of modern civilisation and the efforts to obtain it a characteristic trait of every wise man and, tracing the development of the idea of acquiring swaraj for India from the time it was avowed openly as the ideal of the Indians in the Congress of 1906 until it became implanted firmly in the Indian mind owing to the efforts of Mrs. Besant, to whose love for India the paper pays a glowing tribute, observes:—This idea has now spread from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. The number of Indians, who have now come forward to work for improving the condition of this country, is growing immensely. The cry of Home Rule rends the air and even women have begun to chant it as a mantra. The Indians, who have now become united in their ideal, do not in the least mind the impediments and difficulties in their way. Wholehearted service for the country is deemed to be an excellent object of life. Going to jail is considered to be an invaluable service rendered to the country. The desire is growing that one's life should be purified by one serving the country, even at the risk of having to suffer severe punishments. Union among Indians has become an accomplished fact. Under these circumstances the goal of the Indians is sure to be reached. Mrs. Besant has conferred several mighty benefits on India. But the spectacle of her striving for Indian swaraj is the best of these and is a heart-rending one. It has resulted in this excellent English lady losing her wealth and liberty and suffering in her old age. She has by this service laid the thirty crores of Indians under a deep debt of gratitude. There is only one way in which we can repay that debt to some extent at least, and that is to follow her example. May all the Aryan patriots take this to heart and act up to it! Service of the country is an excellent object of human life and the names of those who render it will become famous in the history of the world. Such a name cannot be easily acquired by every one. It is only very rarely that opportunities for acquiring it occur in the history of the world, and those who let lose such opportunities should be deemed to be really unfortunate men.

Swaraj.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The same paper refers to the grant of Home Rule to the Indians in the Portugese India, and observes that the authorities here are saying that the people in British India are unfit for Home Rule and that they should give up their aspiring for it.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

India and Home Rule.

38. The Dravidan, of the 16th August, writes:—Batches of Poona Brahmans are coming here from Bombay to teach political matters to the people of this Presidency. Are not the people here ashamed of themselves on seeing this? Just like the adage that cattle which do not sell where they are, have a high value set on them in another place, these Brahmans, who are non-entities in Bombay go here and brag that they are going to instruct the people of this Presidency in political matters and give an impetus to the development of swadeshism. What to say of the Brahmans of Madras, who hail young men from Poona, who, being incapable of completing their collegiate course and graduating have come here under the false guise of patriotism, as their leaders without bestowing any thought on their capacity, antecedents, age and worldly experience. It is really regrettable that our countrymen should be allured by three or four non-entities, who have no idea of this Province, when elderly people here are sacrificing their all for the advancement of this Province. The childish pranks of these persons cannot but be harmful to us in the future. These wiseacres who could not improve their own Provinces have come here to improve others and they pretend that they are the only patriots. What doubt is there that all this pretence is but one of the mischievous traits of the 20th century.

The same paper refers to a speech delivered by Eardley Norton at Coimbatore in which he is reported to have condemned the present agitation for Home Rule on the ground that the very term "Home Rule" is so very unpalatable to the Englishmen that they would not be inclined to look behind it and attend to any request that may be made and, remarking that Mr. Norton has a far keener intellect and greater experience of and love for Indians than Mr. Arundale and others, appeals to the Dravidians to act upon the advice of Mr. Norton and refrain from pressing the British Government for Home Rule at this particular juncture.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

India and Home Rule.

The Swadesamitran, of the 17th August, reproduces in Tamil extracts from a lecture said to have been delivered by Sir Rabindranath Tagore at Calcutta, a running summary of which is quoted in the Hindu of the same date from the Bengalee and in which he pleads for the speedy grant of Home Rule to India, refuting the arguments of those who are against it.

The Home Rule propaganda.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 18th, 1917.

Referring to the meeting of the All-India Congress Committee and the Moslem League recently held at Bombay to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant, etc., and the prohibition of the meeting proposed to be held in the Calcutta Town Hall and to the memorial submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy by certain popular leaders in Bengal urging the release of Mrs. Besant, etc., the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 18th August, writes:—It was resolved to put off the question of passive resistance until the result of the memorial was ascertained. All this goes to show that a crisis is likely to arise here too as in Europe. A large number of people seem to think it better not to live at all than live without liberty. The British are pre-eminently a democratic race. Their main glory consists in warding off autocracy wherever it may be found. The Indians are loyal to England in mind, word and deed. They are sacrificing their life and all in the service of the empire. Although the autocratic officials might be opposed to Home Rule, the British people, the British aristocracy and the British Parliament would never hesitate to reward our loyalty in an adequate manner. Some people, therefore, argue whether it would not be expedient to defer all agitation in regard to Home Rule, until the present European crisis is past. Others say that if even at that time the autocratic officials prove all-powerful and defeat our aim, we may appeal to the British public, and if that appeal too fails, we may resort to passive resistance. Others, still, affirm that if the present opportunity is lost, Home Rule might never come. The Government of India would, therefore, do well to set these speculations at rest by giving expression to their views in regard to these popular demands.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

39. The Swadesamitran, of the 17th August, publishes the proceedings of the meetings held in different places in the city and in Chingleput, Madanapalle, Kumbakonam, Masulipatam and Tanjore to celebrate the day on which Mrs. Besant and her colleagues were interned, at which resolutions were passed condemning the action of the Government in this case and praying for the release of the interned.

Referring to these meetings again in a leaderette, the same paper observes:—Public feeling has not only become strong in this matter but is also spreading, not in the city alone but even in the rural parts. If, in accordance with the British system of Government, the Government here attach an importance to public feeling, they are bound to release all the interned, without the least delay. The authorities often say that some people misrepresent the objects and action of the Government to the people. It is quite clear that the repressive policy of the Government is proving more harmful to them than even the misrepresentation of some, if true. The people naturally ask why, if any one has committed an offence, it should not be proved and the offender punished. As the Government intern people, without doing this, an impression is created that innocent people are made to suffer. It is not wise statesmanship to allow such an impression to be created in the minds of the people. The idea that there is no use in complaining is also growing strong. In every meeting held by the people, several arguments are adduced and some resolutions passed. Every one of these resolutions should be regarded by the Government as a petition submitted to them. As they receive all these resolutions and keep quiet, the people come to the conclusion that nothing can be done hereafter by words and that they can convince the Government of their condition only by means of deeds and are ready to adopt the method of passive resistance. Once this is begun, it may spread like wild fire. A people, who are accustomed to treat happiness and misery alike, will not hesitate to undergo some bodily suffering for the sake of a principle. The Commissioner of Police, who was present at the meeting in the Gokhale Hall yesterday, will have formed an idea of the strength of mind of those assembled there. We hope that he would at least intimate to the Government what he saw in person and convince them that this flood cannot be checked by a dam.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The internment of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues.

The Swadesamitran, of the 18th August, publishes in Tamil the proceedings of the public meetings held on the 16th idem at Ootacamund, Dindigul, Madura and Coimbatore to celebrate the internment day and to protest against the internment orders. The proceedings of the meeting at Ootacamund appears in the Hindu of the 18th idem and those of the rest in the Hindu of the 20th idem. The adoption of the policy of passive resistance was advocated in the meetings held at Ootacamund and Coimbatore.

SWADESAMITRAN AND HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, and the Hindu Nesan, of the 18th August, publish, as reported by correspondents, the proceedings of a public meeting held at Kumbakōnam on the 16th idem for the same purpose, which is referred to in the Hindu of the 17th idem.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 8th, 1917.

The three interned.

In an article under the heading "the three interned", * the Kerala Sanchari, of the 8th August, writes:—The protest meetings held in various parts of the country show that the internment has created great unrest in India. Mrs. Besant is now seventy years of age, and her actions show that she is intensely loyal to the crown. Though some of her speeches and her writings in New India were at times intemperate in tone, the opinion that neither Mrs. Besant nor her associates have committed any such offence as deserves internment is gaining ground day by day. Her speeches and publications have caused no disturbance in any part of India, and there is no reason to think that any disturbance will take place. It is, therefore, a great hardship that the Defence of India Act should have been put in motion against her. It is regrettable that the internment has seriously affected her health. It should be considered that the power of the Government is a divine power, and that there is no other power to match it. The Government should not therefore abuse that power. While the internment has been productive of no good, it has, on the contrary, increased the agitation and unrest in the country. The British Government have set at liberty even the Irish rebels. It is, therefore, high time that the Government should lend a sympathetic ear to the opinion and the prayers of the people of India, and should at once liberate Mrs. Besant, who was carrying on a constitutional agitation for the grant of self-government to India under the British Rule.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms.

40. The Swadesamitran, of the 17th August, reproduces in Tamil the substance of a scheme prepared by the late Mr. Gokhale for the reforms to be introduced in India and left in charge of His Highness the Aga Khan, who has published it now deeming this to be the most suitable juncture for such publication and a telegraphic summary of which appears in the Hindu of the same date, and observes:—Comparing this scheme of Mr. Gokhale with that prepared by our political bodies and members of Legislative Councils, it will be seen that they agree in substance. Though there is a difference in one or two points, this will not affect the main agreement in any material respect. In England our British brethren who living beside the war-fronts suffer much on account of the stress of the war and are engrossed upon gaining the victory therein, statesmen, who have no time to look to the affairs of others in the Empire itself, and even young students, who are not fit by nature to take an interest in the welfare of Indians, are now anxious that political reforms should be introduced in our country soon and the people given Home Rule. At a time when all of them are seriously discussing as to how this object can be fulfilled, those who are mainly affected by this are asked by several officials to refrain from all discussion, give up the political work of explaining to the ordinary people what is meant by reforms and the necessity for the same and to be satisfied with the petty refoms which the all-powerful officials are pleased to grant to us of their own accord. To make us do this, the authorities advise us, warn us, admonish us and have recourse to repressive measures against us. How can the people and the popular leaders deem this to be fair and keep quiet? So, we should, by all constitutional means, make the British Government, who have the ultimate authority over us, understand our grievances and wants and the aspirations with which our hearts are throbbing. When His Excellency Lord Pentland severely criticised the Home Rule movement in May last, he said that, if Home Rule meant that the Legislative Council having a majority of elected members should have a control over the Executive Government, those who thought that the Indians would be granted such Home Rule were really dreaming. Three years before now, when on account of the war there have been great changes characterised by a breadth of view and the predominance of the voice of the people, Mr. Gokhale wrote it down definitely that this was no dream, and arranged for its being intimated to the British public. Who is the dreamer—Lord Pentland, who has a meagre experience, or Mr. Gokhale, who, having served this country throughout his life successfully, attained a worldwide fame?

* Received this week.

Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms for India.

The Swadesamitran, of the 18th August, reproduces in Tamil the scheme of reforms for India said to have been formulated by the late Mr. Gokhale and the statement made by the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastriyar, which are published in the Hindu of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 18th August, quotes in a leaderette some of the views expressed by the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastriyar in connection with the late Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms, as published in the Hindu of the 18th August 1917.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

Gokhale's scheme of reforms.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, in its leader writes:—The Aga Khan now says that Mr. Gokhale before his death prepared a scheme of reforms which he intended to propose. . . Some critics venture to say that Mr. Gokhale would not have accepted the reforms proposed by the National Congress. If we look into the scheme of reforms now published, it becomes clear that Mr. Gokhale would have concurred with the Indian representatives. There is not much difference between the scheme of reforms proposed by the National Congress and that proposed by him. We shall however give below the two schemes. . . As regards provincial autonomy Mr. Gokhale does in no way differ from the National Congress. . . In Mr. Gokhale's scheme the constitution of the Indian Government was not satisfactorily defined.

The National Congress agrees with him in his recommendation to abolish the Council of the Secretary of State for India.

That Mr. Gokhale's scheme should be now published is of great advantage. A way would be open to make it clear that the reforms required by the National Congress are not revolutionary. We believe that these reforms would attract the attention of Mr. Lloyd George, the Prime Minister. In a meeting convened in honour of the ministers of colonial Governments who had come for the Imperial Conference Mr. Lloyd George made the following statement. . . The truths which he expressed seven years ago hold good even today. The future of the British Empire depends upon the genius of Mr. Lloyd George. Will he extend his magnanimity to the Indian aspirations and make the Indians contented?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, publishes in Telugu a letter written by Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri while forwarding a copy of Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms. It contains the following:—. . . Mr. Gokhale wanted to prepare a draft of the scheme of reforms in consultation with Mr. Mehta and the Aga Khan. But as the health of Mr. Gokhale and Mr. Mehta failed even then the three could not at all meet. . . It is, therefore, a rough draft and not a representation of his settled opinion. . . Nor was it his opinion that the Indians are fit only for such reforms. Mr. Gokhale thought that if such a scheme of reforms was published in time by Government, keen agitation might be avoided during the time of war. He prepared the draft of reforms only six months after the commencement of war. By that time the endeavours of the people did not become extensive or perfect. Further, the idea of democracy did not gain such support in the western countries as now. I believe firmly that if Mr. Gokhale wanted to make proposals of reforms on behalf of the people, he would have written them in a broader spirit and in a manner conducive to the progress of the country and to the peace of the Empire. . . Had Mr. Gokhale been living today he would have proposed the very same reforms which the 19 council members and the Congress and Moslem League have proposed.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

The Imperial Legislative Council.

41. Adverting to the meeting of this Council to be held at Simla on the 5th September next, the Swadesamitran, of the 17th August, observes:—This means that there has been no occasion for the Government and the popular representatives exchanging views for the last five months. We need not point out what important problems have cropped up in the interim and how far the attitude of the people has undergone a change on account of their not having been able to obtain an explanation for what have occurred. It is only on such occasions that every one understands the difference between a responsible and an irresponsible Government. If the Government were a responsible one, would it have made such a delay in allaying the excitement of the people? Even though the Government is an irresponsible one, if the Legislative Council meets often, there will be room for it to understand the trend of popular opinion directly from the popular representatives. It is in view of this that the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malavya moved a resolution in March last that the Legislative Council should meet often. However this may be, though permission is not usually given for a large number of resolutions being moved in the Simla session of the Council, we hope that the Government will, in view of the excitement that now exists all over India, give a patient hearing to the suggestions of the popular representatives and behave as they ought to at such a juncture.

KALIYUGA VARTAMANI, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The plight of a woman that sent all her sons to the front.

42. The Kaliyuga Vartamani, of the 28th July, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran, of the 28th July, on this subject which are abstracted in paragraph 60 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

KALIYUGA VARTAMANI, Madras, July 28th, 1917.

The Johannesburg tram-car tragedy.

43. The Kaliyuga Vartamani, of the 28th July, also reproduces an article appearing in the Swadesamitran of the 28th July, relating to this matter, which is abstracted in paragraph 61 of the above report.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Mr. Eardly Norton on Indian reforms.

44. Referring to the speech made by Mr. Eardly Norton on the 10th August 1917 at Coimbatore on the reforms to be introduced in the administration of India, the Swadesamitran, of the 14th August, says:—From what Mr. Norton has said, it is apparent that he too urges only on the introduction of the reforms demanded by us. But from his statement that we should wait till the end of the war, we are led to believe that he has not realised the present situation. The Government of India have already proposed certain reforms without either informing us or consulting us, and the office of the Secretary of State for India is considering these proposals. We have to apprehend from the words of Lord Islington, that the British statesmen might determine the nature of the reforms without consulting us at all. If under such circumstances, we are to wait patiently till the end of the war, what can we do, if afterwards they should say that the "matter has been finally decided"? The Indians cannot, therefore, commend the advice given by Mr. Norton in the concluding part of the speech.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

Repressive measures.

45. Adverting to a statement said to have been made by a correspondent in the Bombay Chronicle that the Collector of Hyderabad, the capital of the Province of Sindh, issued an order prohibiting the conduct of any processions or the holding of any meetings in connection with the internment of Mrs. Besant, the Swadesamitran, of the 14th August, observes:—It is clear from the action of the Collector of Hyderabad that it will be wrong for any one to think that there would be a cessation of the policy of repression adopted by the authorities without realising the condition of the people and sympathising with their aspirations. These repressive measures are spreading like a contagious disease and affecting a large number of the people. But there is a limit for everything, and should there not be a limit to these repressive measures as well? What is the object of adopting these measures? Is it that, by the internment of Mrs. Besant, who plays a very prominent part in the Home Rule agitation, the agitation would lose its vigour? If so, that object can never be achieved. Many will, indeed, think that the bureaucracy have not realised that it is only possible to obstruct all acts and endeavours which outwardly manifest themselves, but that there is no means whatever to suppress or crush the natural aspirations with which the hearts of the people are throbbing. These measures seem like the action of a few in a story, who with the object of completely obliterating all thoughts about an individual from the memory of others, met together, and resolved to hold a public meeting every year for accomplishing their object. Such action of the authorities not only causes disgust in the minds of many of the people, but also gives room for laughter.

Protection of trade.

46. The Swadesamitran, of the 17th August, reproduces an extract from an article written by Professor Marshall under the heading "After-war problems", in which he is reported to have stated as follows:—Some of the arguments, adduced for the levy of a tariff to protect the British industries, apply even more strongly to the case of weaving and other industries in India. The main feature of the British administration in India is its upright and unselfish nature. If, as a result of the enquiry recently conducted and the situation caused by the war, an extraordinary value is set upon the arguments in favour of introducing trade-protection in England and protective duties are levied, it will not do to deny the same protection for Indian trade in the same breath. If this is done, the British will immediately lose the good name they have acquired as governing India in the interests of the Indians.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

India's trade.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 16th August, says:—In his report on the Old Records of the India Office, Sir George Birdwood made the following remarks, which were dictated by his conscience and which were based on history:—The trade between India and England appeared to have been most thriving in the last quarter of the 17th century and in the first half of the 18th century. But after 1721, penal duties were resolutely and mercilessly imposed on that trade and penal laws put into force, with the result that the trade was ruined. . . A law was passed in 1700 to the effect that silk goods made by hand in Persia, China and East India and calico should not be worn or used after the 20th September 1701, and that all such goods imported into Great Britain after that date should be exported to various countries. A law was passed in 1721 that anybody wearing calico was liable to a fine of £5 and anybody selling it to a fine of £20.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

The correspondent remarks:—We have to note that the patriotism of the English people together with the help of suitable laws passed by their Government, helped to develop the commerce of that country in a short time, and that for want of such patriotism and such State help, our handicrafts and our trade were ruined in a short time.

Reforms and the Government of India.

47. The Dravidan, of the 17th August, reproduces the substance of the speech of Lord Islington said to have been delivered recently, in which he is reported to have dealt with the reforms that may be likely to be introduced in India after the end of the war and expressing its surprise at the London Times, which supports the views of Lord Islington, being against the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Chairman of a Committee to enquire about these reforms, observes that the enquiry of such a committee is sure to bring out the real wants of the people.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Political reforms.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th August, refers to the telegram of the Bengal Provincial Conference addressed to Mr. Montagu, expressing their disappointment at the suggested reforms of Lord Islington and says:—The Madras Provincial Committee also expressed the same disappointment last night. It can be supposed that the other provinces also will follow the example of Bengal and Madras. It is plain that the proposals of Lord Islington are not in accordance with the wishes of the people. The people should now demonstrate that the scheme prepared by the congress is the only foundation to Home Rule.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The comments of the Times of India on the speech of Lord Islington are opportune. That paper wonders that while the Provincial Governors and the Under Secretary of State spoke about reforms, His Excellency the Viceroy and the Secretary of State, who are responsible officers, have not given their views. Many wonder similarly at their silence.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Political reforms.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th August, contains in English and in Telugu the comments of the Times of India on the speech of Lord Islington regarding Indian reforms.

DESABHIMANI, Quilon, Aug. 18th, 1917.

Indian reforms.

Referring to the speech of Lord Islington, the Desabhimani, of the 18th August, observes that the Indian papers of advanced views contend that the reforms outlined in His Lordship's speech fall short of the expectations of the Indian National Congress and the All-India Muslim League, and that therefore they will not satisfy the Indian public.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The Chittoor District Conference.

48. The Swadesamitran, of the 18th August, reproduces in Tamil the gist of the presidential address of the Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar delivered at the Chittoor District Conference, which appears in extenso in the Hindu of the same date.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The Chittoor District Conference.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, publishes in Telugu an abstract of the speech of the President of the Chittoor District Conference, which contains the following:—

". . . As the Indian armies are fighting in the battlefield the attitude of the Government towards India has changed. The Chief Ministers have decided that our country should hereafter be a partner of the British Empire and not a dependency. . . The Indians have given up all idea of wishing for a return for the service they have rendered to their Sovereign. We only ask for our birthright and the equality promised in the Queen's proclamation. . . As on account of war the British have no leisure, it is said, they could not take up the Indian problems for consideration immediately. There are no grounds for this statement. . . The Indian Government and the British Government are carrying on their correspondence regarding post-war reforms in their usual confidential way. While correspondence is carried on between Governments themselves, it is anomalous to discountenance the discussion regarding post-war reforms on the ground that the Government has not leisure on account of war". . . (The lecturer next proceeded to examine the Government order prohibiting students from attending political meetings, and said that it was unjust and prejudicial to the progress of knowledge.)

The same paper in one of its leaderettes on the same subject writes:—The speaker pointed out the necessity of asking the Government to give up the policy of repression. . . He expressed his disappointment regarding Lord Islington's scheme of reforms, and recommended that constitutional agitation should be carried on until the reforms proposed by the Congress and the Moslem League are effected.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The North Arcot District Conference.

49. The Swadesamitran, of the 20th August, publishes in Tamil the proceedings of this conference held at Arni, which are published in extenso in the Hindu of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The Coimbatore District Conference.

50. The Swadesamitran, of the 20th August, also reproduces in Tamil the substance of the presidential address delivered by Mr. P. K. Raman Menon at this conference. Full text of his address appears in the Hindu of the 20th August 1917.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

The Coimbatore District Conference.

In a leading article giving a summary of Mr. K. P. Raman Menon's speech as President of the Coimbatore District Conference, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 23rd August, writes:—It will be remembered that the President who made this speech is a non-Brahman. It behoves all Brahman haters to read the speech carefully. The Brahmans do not hate the non-Brahmans nor do the non-Brahmans hate the Brahmans. Only a few are trying to see if there is anything in such hatred to promote their self-gain. There is nothing to gain from such hatred. The Brahmans are mostly a class of ascetics. They would only try to do a good turn to the non-Brahmans who might do them harm. It is part of their duty to do so; and in it lies their safety. There is absolutely no connection between the Home Rule question and the Brahman hatred. There can be no doubt that the attempt to create differences between the Brahmans and non-Brahmans will be foiled before long. Man proposes but God disposes. We have no doubt that the time is not distant when the Brahmans and the non-Brahmans will forget their differences and again work hand in hand in the cause of truth and righteousness. May God grant our wish!

A meeting of the Congress Committee at Kumbakōnam.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 20th August, publishes an abstract of a meeting of the Congress committee held in Kumbakōnam on the 17th idem, under the presidency of Rao Bahadur N. Krishnaswami Ayyangar, when a resolution is said to have been passed recommending the adoption of the policy of passive resistance.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The Non-Brahmans Conference, Coimbatore.

52. The Swadesamitran, of the 20th August, publishes in Tamil, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of this conference, which appear in datail in the Hindu of the same date.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras. Aug. 20th, 1917.

The Non-Brahman Conference.

In its leader on the Non-Brahman Conference, the Andhrapatrika, of the 21st August, says:—The President said: "We are also anxious about reforms. Home Rule is our ideal also. But we are of opinion that it can be got only through social and political reforms". The Home Rulers also do not say that Home Rule should be granted all at once. They also say that training in self-government is necessary before attaining the goal. They request the Government to promise that they will, after the war, begin to take the people to that goal. Mr. Ramarayanimgar expressed the view that the scheme of reforms prepared by Mr. Gokhale is not revolutionary. We already pointed out that there is not much material difference between these reforms and those suggested by the representatives of the people. . . It is our opinion that it is not possible to spread education soon without the help of the Government. Mr. Ramarayanimgar who is a member of the Imperial Legislative Council knows that it is difficult to spread education without introducing compulsory elementary education. If all the Indians should receive education, the people should have the power to make the Government spend money for such purposes. This is indeed the key-note of swaraj. We request Mr. Ramarayanimgar to show if there is anything absurd in this. His opinion that education includes industrial, commercial and agricultural education is in agreement with the principles of national education. We are at a loss to know why under such circumstances the President said that national education is ruinous and is a means for the spreading of the authority of Brahmans. . . In the third Andhra Conference, at which Mr. Ramarayanimgar presided, a resolution was adopted unanimously that it is the duty of every Andhra to encourage national education, etc. We do not know what made Mr. Ramarayanimgar to change his angle of vision.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 21st, 1917.

A message from Commander Wedgewood.

53. The Swadesamitran, of the 20th August, reproduces in Tamil Commander Wedgewood's message to Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar and two others in reply to their cable regarding the Madras internments and Home Rule. The message is published in the Hindu of the 20th August 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The letter of Commander Wedgewood.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th August, publishes in Telugu the letter written by Commander Wedgewood to Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar and Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar regarding Home Rule in India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

A special meeting in the United Provinces.

54. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th August, gives in Telugu a gist of the proceedings of the special meeting held in the United Provinces, expressing disapproval of the internment of Mrs. Besant and others.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

A protest against protests.

55. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th August, gives a Telugu version of an article which appears in the Hindu of the 11th August under this heading, as having been reproduced from the Karnataka.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Pleaders and the Home Rule.

56. The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th August, reports Mr. Konda Venkatappayya Pantulu to have written from Guntur:—It appears that a circular was sent to the District Munsifs and Sub-Judges requesting them to communicate the names of pleaders having any connection with the Home Rule and Swadeshi movements. It is true that the members of the Home Rule League will not mind this, but it is regrettable that Judicial officers have been appointed to do things which do not differ from what the Criminal Investigation Department should do. Whatever may have been the vagaries of the Executive officers of the Government, the courts have been discharging their duties fairmindedly and in a manner deserving the confidence of the people. Even if it be for helping the Government it will be well to strictly prevent the officers of law courts from doing such things. . . When it has often been decided that the agitation of the Home Rule Leagues is not unconstitutional, why should the District Judge take to this strange step?

It cannot be believed that the Government wanted the information through the law courts, for they already have the Criminal Investigation Department. The District Judge appears to have issued the circular of his own accord.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Indians and Anglo-Indians.

57. The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th August, refers to an incident in which a respectable Pathan who gave birth to heroic sons, was treated with disrespect by an Anglo-Indian Railway officer at the Rawalpindi station, and reports another paper to have made the following remark:—Contemptuous treatment of Indians, however educated and respectable they may be, by the ordinary people among Anglo-Indians and Eurasians is daily on the increase and is passing all bounds.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

A lady passive resister.

58. The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th August, publishes in Telugu the letter of a lady passive resister which appears in New India of the 14th August, with its remark thereon that the letter gave great encouragement to those who heard it read out and prompted them to move a resolution on passive resistance in the conference to be held at Arni.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

Mr. Bhupendranath Basu.

59. The Andhrapatrika, of the 16th August, says:—Mr. Bhupendranath Basu has said that India should firmly and patiently represent its aspirations to England, which is prepared and willing to hear them. Law-abiding Indians do not wish to betake themselves to anything other than constitutional agitation. But do the authorities allow them to conduct such agitation? Mr. Basu has to answer this question. Indians are becoming more and more disappointed in this matter. Grant us reforms today or years hence. What the people want is an opportunity to express their wishes to the Government plainly. The essential factors of the agitation suggested by Mr. Basu are freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of the individual. The Press Act does not allow the papers to express public opinion plainly. The Defence of India Act, which is a war measure, is an obstruction to constitutional agitation. Meetings are prohibited. Notices are served on speakers. Mr. Basu has to say how we are to represent public opinion to the Government under such circumstances. It is, therefore, necessary that before the grant of any reforms the repressive measures should be repealed. If Mr. Basu exerts his influence in his new office, gets the repressive measures repealed, and succeeds in getting political reforms introduced into India, he will undoubtedly win the gratitude of his countrymen.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

Hon'ble Mr. Basu's appointment.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th August, gives a Telugu version of the observations made in the July issue of the Review of Reviews regarding the appointment of Indian Members to the Secretary of State's Council. It contains the following:—" . . Thus the proportion of the Indian Members in the Council would be one to three. In order to secure an efficient representation in the India Council the Indians have still to travel far. . . . Amongst political reformers Mr. Basu is one of those who take a forward step. Even if such a strange phenomenon as that of Mr. Patan and Mr. Khan agreeing with him occurs and even if he employs all his powers of speech, there would be only a few to join his side." The paper observes:—"Even the Review of Reviews which always sympathises with the aspirations of the Indians has not asserted that much good would come of the appointment of Mr. Basu."

60. The Andhrapatrika, of the 16th August, says:—Though in the regimé of Lord Pentland, there has been an increase of unrest in the country some of the aims of the Andhra movement have been satisfied by him. The Training College has been revived at Rajahmundry. A Government College has been opened in the Ceded Districts. . . There are indications that in the rule of Lord Pentland, the aims of the Andhras will be fulfilled. As his term of office also has been extended, it will be advantageous if the Andhras, without hesitating, acquaint the Government of their wishes. It is the duty of the Andhra leaders to work incessantly now in connection with the Andhra movement.

Lord Pentland and the Andhra movement.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

61. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrka, of the 16th August, contributes a letter under this heading regarding a performance by the London Electric Cinema Company at Berhampur on behalf of the Home Rule League of that place. The paper makes the following remarks thereon in one of its leaderettes:—There was a rumour that some members of the Home Rule League dishonestly represented to some Anglo-Indians that the money collected at the performance would be sent to the sick soldiers. On the strength of this rumour, the Police Inspector sent for the Secretary of the Home Rule League and told him that the members of the league duped the English officers including Mr. Greg, the Engineer. The Secretary wrote to Mr. Greg about this and received a reply that he knew nothing about it. The Secretary sent Mr. Greg's letter to the Police Inspector, pointing out that the charge of which the members of the league were accused was groundless. No reply was received. The Secretary of the League is a highly educated man. . . We pray that the Government will see that such unnecessary confusion does not crop up.

The Berhampur Swaraj League.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

62. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th August, reproduces from the Hindu in Telugu an article which refers to various opinions given in 1908 about granting separate representation to landholders and says:—Those who examine the latter part of political history will laugh at the praises bestowed on the importance of landholders in political matters and their leadership in the country and the scant courtesy with which the leaders who have become so by their knowledge. . . The two senior members of the Madras Executive Council who are now doing their best to help the zamindars and the non-Brahmans, did not show such anxiety in their behalf in 1908. . . The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew did not in his proposals even allow separate representation to the zamindars. . . The Hon'ble Mr. Gillman remarked: "If the Councils be full of big landlords and zamindars, all the people will be dissatisfied. . ." When the Government consulted the zamindars in 1908 regarding the political situation, the zamindars manifested greater wisdom about their state and influence.

The zamindars.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

63. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th August, gives in Telugu the proceedings of the meeting held at Madras on the internment day and the speech of Mr. Kasturiranga Ayyangar regretti g the repressive policy of the Government and also the speech of Mr. Seshagiri Rao advocating passive resistance.

Internment day meeting at Madras.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

The Desabhimani, of the 19th August, writes that, in a public meeting held at Guntūr on the 16th instant to commemorate the day of Mrs. Besant's internment, lectures were delivered and verses in Telugu read upon "passive resistance".

The same paper publishes the verses, above referred to, praising Mrs. Besant and pointing out national education, swadeshi and passive resistance as the means to be resorted to for gaining rights and privileges.

Internment day celebrations.

DESABHIMANI, Guntūr, Aug. 19th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The internment day.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th August, publishes brief reports of public meetings held at Narayanavaram, Dondapadu, Tenali, Guntur, Bezwada and Rajahmundry regarding the internments. In the meetings held at Dondapadu and Tenali the people were asked to take the swadeshi vow and in the meetings held at Guntur and Bezwada passive resistance was preached. The president of the meeting held at Rajahmundry spoke advocating passive resistance and the swadeshi vow.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

Internment day celebration.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, publishes the proceedings of the Madras meeting on the internment day, in which some persons spoke advocating passive resistance.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 21st, 1917.

Mr. Montagu.

64. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st August, says:—The speech of Mr. Montagu on the Mesopotamian question has justified our confidence that his appointment will tend to the advancement of India. His announcement found in today's telegrams will remove all the doubts of doubting minds. To show that his angle of vision has changed, he removed the obstacles to the Indians getting commissions in the army. We pray that he will also cancel the internments.

Mr. Montagu's liberal-heartedness became manifest in the discussion on the Mesopotamian question. His speech sounds like that of a Congress leader. . . He said that while the Governments of England and the Colonies are undergoing changes according to times, the Government of India only is remaining unchanged. He said emphatically that, if the Parliament should pay the salary of the Secretary of State, the Parliament would not be indifferent to Indian questions. He said that the Government should be made responsible to the people. The establishment of a responsible Government is the aim of Mr. Monagu. . . The establishment of a federation of Governments is his ideal. . . The ideal of the advocates of an Andhra Province and the opinion of Mr. Montagu agree with each other. . . We cordially welcome Mr. Montagu to India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

Appointment of Mr. Montagu.

Next commenting hopefully upon the appointment of Mr. Montagu, the Andhrapatrika, of the 20th August, gives in Telugu the opinion of the Review of Reviews on the subject as follows:—"The Indians ask us to declare without delay that our desire is also to grant self-government to India and to give practical demonstration of our intentions. At the present juncture the Parliament has granted franchise to English women. The Irish revolutionists have been pardoned. The Irish are to meet to discuss the scheme of Home Rule. How, then, can the aspirations of the Indians be considered dangerous?"

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The Bombay Home Rule League.

65. The Desamata, of the 15th August, gives a gist of the proceedings of a meeting of the Bombay Home Rule League, held on the occasion of sending some workers to Madras in place Mr. Karandikar, in which some of the speakers said, that, if necessary, they would betake themselves to passive resistance.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Our agitation

66. The Desamata, of the 15th August, says in its leader under this heading:—While our rulers, the British, whose example we follow in political matters, are making progress in politics by means of constitutional agitation, how can we keep quiet? . . . We are not to blame for our agitation. If the agitation is wrong, the fault lies with the East India Company. This is the result of the mistake if that is a mistake that the company made in the case of the education of the Indians. . . The Rev. Dr John Wilson expressed the fear that to give education in the vernaculars might do harm to the Government, and stated, while speaking about Sivaji, as follows:—"The vernacular literature that developed in the province of Bombay during the two centuries before the birth of Sivaji, fed, in Sivaji and his followers, their fervour about the Hindu faith. This is the chief reason why they hated the Muhammadan authority and successfully revolted against it."

Lord Macaulay wrote as follows in 1836 in his letter to his father:—"Great is the result of the education given to the Hindus. . . It is my firm belief that if our methods are followed in the matter of education, there will not exist even one idolator in Bengal among respectable classes thirty years hence."

Believing that all the Indians would become converts to Christianity, Lord Macaulay contended that only English education should be given to the Indians. Whether the authorities agreed with him or not on this point, they introduced English education in schools with the object that the English-educated Indians might serve the Government as clerks. As this was the object of the authorities, and as the educational methods of those days do not suit the present times, we request that those methods may be reformed and that education may be given on national lines. Though by the introduction, by the authorities, of English education, vernacular education has suffered to a large extent, the English education has not been without its benefits. It is that English education that is the cause of the agitation of the Indians. It is because the Indians have received good English education, studied the history of western countries, examined the political institutions existing there, and digested works on liberty and self-government written by J. S. Mill and others, that the Indians are contending that self-government is their birthright. . . This is the result of English education and there cannot but be agitation now. This cannot be stopped by any attempt to oppose or repress it. This is not opposed to nature. We pray that the bureaucracy will not misunderstand it, but will reap some good out of it and conduct themselves in a way that will tend to the welfare of India and the British Empire.

Industries.

67. The Desamata, of the 15th August, says:—Not only the Native States, but also the English Government are evincing some interest in the matter of industries. The Government of the United Provinces have already been taking some interest and how the Government of Bombay also are taking interest. If the other Provinces also follow the example of the Bombay Government, our country will rise to eminence ere long.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 15th, 1917.

A Muhammadan lady.

68. In giving a gist of the proceedings of a meeting held in the Gokhale hall under the auspices of the Madras Home Rule League, the Desamata, of the 15th August, says:—In that meeting, Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar, read out a letter addressed to him by the mother of Mr. Muhammad Ali and Mr. Shoukat Ali, who are now under internment. That letter was a very pathetic one. The patriotism, the courage and the firmness shown by that mother of heroes are praiseworthy. Those who read that letter cannot but shed tears. . . It is auspicious for the Home Rulers that even conservative Muhammadan ladies give up their ancient traditions, adapt themselves to the times with courage and firmness, and rally round the Home Rule banner. May the Indian ladies follow the example of the Muhammadan lady referred to above, and Mrs. Sivakamu, who is working for Home Rule, and be a source of encouragement to Indian womenhood by their firm attitude towards the question of Home Rule for India.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 15th, 1917.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore.

69. The Desamata, of the 15th August, reports Sir Rabindranath Tagore to have said:—The Government officers cannot suppress a just movement by internment and repressive measures. At a time when the British are sacrificing their lives for the sake of Belgium, it is an anomaly that they should say that the Bengalis should not feel for the people of Madras. There is no force in the contention that before the Indians can be a self-governing nation, they should pass through many political stages. The Parliament in England reached its present stage after committing many blunders. It is in the nature of the people of England to see to the prestige of England whatever justice may be; but, if this policy is adhered to, it will, in my opinion, prove injurious to the British rule.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The gems of Sir Rabindranath Tagore.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, gives in Telugu an abstract of the speech recently delivered by Sir Rabindranath Tagore in the Alfred's Theatre in Calcutta. The paper represents the abstract to have been taken from the Indian Patriot, and it contains the following:—Of all the rights which man regards as his invaluable treasure the right of being his own lord and of governing himself is a very great one. . . Our present rulers give us the same advise, namely, 'you are not fit for self-government. You will commit many blunders in this matter. Swaraj is unsuitable to you.' In reply to these words, the words of such great men as Manu and Parâsara may be quoted :—'It is better to err in the enjoyment of independence than to be in subjection to others. There is the possibility of truth coming to light only when man has the freedom to err. We have to tell our rulers, who are proud of driving the car of their self-government, that even in their country self-government did not always exist, that their Parliamentary car travelled many a night capsizing and recovering its position, and that therefore no one hoped in those days that it would reach its destination safely. . . At one time the members were compelled to attend the Parliament. As for the mistakes committed by it, they were many. Its want of far-sightedness will be known if its conduct is considered in regard to Ireland and America and in the settlement of affairs concerning the Dardenells and Mesopotamia. . . Whatever may be the number of mistakes we may commit, self-government is very necessary to remove our discontent and our troubles. . . Ideas of democracy are agitating the minds of all in these times. If we fail to support such endeavours we shall be causing disgrace to our motherland. It may be preached, as the Brahman did to the Sudra, that British ideas, in these matters, do not apply to India. . . Without forgetting that the Indians are longing for swaraj, we must always be telling the Government about it. . . The English expressing their sympathy for the sufferings of Belgium and other countries, are waging war for helping them. Under such circumstances how is it justifiable that we should not be allowed to express our feelings concerning the Madras Presidency?"

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 15th, 1917.

A swadeshi festival.

70. The Desamata, of the 15th August, gives in Telugu, the article which the Bombay Chronicle has written about the swadeshi festival in Hyderabad (Sind), which concludes with :—It appears that on account of the present attitude of the Government towards the Home Rule propaganda, the members of the Home Rule League have made up their minds to work for Home Rule and swadeshi with redoubled perseverence.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The Cocanada news.

71. The Andhraprakasika, of the 18th August, remarks under this heading :—The absence of a definite notification in the District Gazette over the signature of the Collector or the Government Secretary is an obstacle in the way of those who evince an interest in the work of recruitment to the Indian Defence Force.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 18th, 1917.

Legislative Councils.

72. The Kistnapatrika, of the 18th August, in its leader under this heading, writes :—"In every civilized country it is the council of the representatives of the people that enacts laws. . . Our Legislative Councils are neither Legislative Councils nor are they representative Councils. Of the reforms proposed by the Congress held at Lucknow, the reform of the Legislative Councils was the most important. For the measure in which a system of administration is agreeable to the people is determined by the constitution of the Legislative Councils and their power. The ultimate goal of all political reformers is that the Legislative Councils should be completely representative bodies. But the Congressmen instead of asking for the ultimate goal are demanding that four-fifths of the number of members of the Councils should consist of representatives of the people. This fact makes it clear that Congressmen are advocates not of an immediate and complete swaraj, but of a gradually evolved swaraj. . . If our Legislative Councils are to be made more popular, it is a desirable change to confer on all persons, who possess certain prescribed qualifications, the right to directly elect members to the said Councils, instead of confining that right to a few persons who are members of municipalities or district boards. The leader concludes with authoritative opinions against representation on caste basis.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 18th, 1917.

English students—Indian students.

73. The Kistnapatrika, of the 18th August, writes under this heading :—"Lord Islington delivered a lecture to the students of Oxford regarding future Indian political reforms. But it is a great crime to lecture to the Indian students about these reforms concerning their own country. When Indian history cannot be a subject of study for the School Final candidates how can they hear of current affairs?" India is in every way unique. That is why in no other civilised country do we find such a course of education as is adopted here. Who can imagine what the future condition of our students will be who are not in touch with the past or present, but are trained in a Thrisankuswarga (an imaginary region in the sky which is neither heaven nor earth, but something existing mid-way between the two).

74. A lady correspondent to the Kistnapatrika of the 18th August in her exhortation to her sex to adhere to their national ideals, observes:—" . . . The education given in High schools today is not national education. That is why nationality suffers from its impact with the western civilization. . . Nationality is life itself to a society. If nationality perishes society becomes lifeless. . . . The present Arms Act has obliged the Indians, who had led heroic lives, to renounce warrior's life.

Nationality.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 18th, 1917.

75. The Kistnapatrika, of the 18th August, gives in Telugu the letter addressed to Sir S. Subramanya Ayyar by the mother of Soukhat Ali and Muhammad Ali who have been undergoing the punishment of internment for the last two years.

The letter of the Begum.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 18th, 1917.

76. The Andhraprakasika, of the 14th August, writes under this heading that though large profits are accruing to the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Company, the roads within the limits of the Salt Cotaurs are in a state of disrepair, that, for want of proper accommodation, goods are left exposed to sun and rain, that, while goods are unloaded from the waggons, they are carelessly thrown down upon the platforms with the result that damage is caused to the articles and loss to the parties, and that the Railway authorities would therefore do well to attend to these drawbacks. The paper further adds that the merchants will be much benefitted if contractors are appointed to undertake the delivery of the goods at the parties' business places as in the case of Railway parcels, and hopes that the Government also will pay some attention to this matter and look to the convenience of the merchants.

Salt Cotaurs station.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

77. Referring to the incident of an Anglo-Indian Railway official, forcing a respectable pathan to quit a Railway compartment at Rawalpindi, the Andhraprakasika, of the 14th August, remarks:—How much must the old man's feelings have been wounded thereby! If the Government do not take due action in the matter, Indians will often be subjected to such troubles.

Indian Railways and the Indians.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

78. Referring to the play named Krishnavijayamu put on boards on the 19th in the Victoria Public Hall by the Deena Poshaka Samajam, the Andhraprakasika, of the 20th August, remarks:—This play is no other than the Prasanna Yadava Natakamu of M.R.Ry. Chilakamarti Lakshmi Narasimham. Mr. Narasimham will do well to consider how obscene the verse addressed by Naraka to Urvasi is. If in a new edition of the work, it is not set right, we hope the authorities will take steps to remove the objectionable passages.

An obscene play.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

79. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, referring to the speech of the Prime Minister regarding the present state of war observes:—The Prime Minister's speech gives a good reply to the advocates of peace. It is clear from the speech that gaining victory over the enemy in the war is the means of obtaining peace.

The grand speech of the Prime Minister.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

80. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, publishes in Telugu and English the news of the destruction of the hospital ship "Coromandel", by fire and expresses its regret.

The "Coromandal" destroyed by fire.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

81. Referring to the fact that a Police officer took his stand behind the curtain in the meeting, the Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, remarks that, if a Police officer be required to watch the proceedings of a ladies' meeting held in a private building a lady must be appointed for the work.

Egmore ladies' meeting.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 21st, 1917.

Recruitment and Home Rule.

82. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 21st August, writes:—The Governor of Bombay is taking great pains in regard to recruitment. But there is little response on the part of the people. The Germans call the Indian recruits mercenary troops. If we are granted Home Rule, there can no longer be room for such obloquy, for it will then be recognised that our interests are identical with those of England. It behoves the authorities to consider this point.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 21st, 1917.

Home Rule and passive resistance.

83. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 21st August, writes:—It is urged in some quarters that there should be perfect unanimity in regard to passive resistance. It is wrong to expect that any principle should be adopted universally. No nation has perfect unity among its people. Even the most civilised nations of the west have no agreement among them. The present war proves this. There is full agreement among the people of India in regard to political matters. Those who are under the influence of anti-Home Rulers might be opposed to Home Rule to all appearance. We trust however that there is not a single person who is opposed to Home Rule at heart.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 17th, 1917.

The Bengal Government and public meetings.

84. Referring to the prohibition of the public meeting at the Calcutta Town Hall to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant, etc., the Swadeshabhimani, of the 17th August, writes:—Thinking that if they took up the bludgeon of the Defence of India Act for every little thing, the people might resort to passive resistance and convene the meeting, the Bengal Government withdrew their weapon and permitted the holding of the meeting. We rejoice to hear this news. Whatever be the motives which prompted the Government to prohibit the meeting at first and to permit it afterwards, as the Sanskrit proverb has it that it is better not to dirty your feet at all than to put them into mud and clean them afterwards, though the Bengal Government betrayed its want of prudence in issuing the order, its present conciliatory attitude is indeed laudable.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 17th, 1917.

The Mesopotamia Commission Report.

85. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 17th August, in an article remarking that the Mesopotamia Commission's Report is a curious conglomeration of matters partly comprehensible and partly incomprehensible, quotes Commander Wedgewood's observations therein, and remarks that while the statement that Lord Hardinge is responsible for the Mesopotamia disaster is wholly untenable, his suggestions in regard to some other matters, such as the desirability of appointing Indians to higher posts in the army and of giving the Indian public a larger share in the administration as in the Colonies and of admitting them to the full rights of British citizenship are well worth the earnest consideration of responsible authorities both here and in England.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant and her Theosophical works.

86. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 17th August, after stating that it is the avowed policy of that paper to avoid, as far as possible, certain topics, such as the internments, the Congress and swaraj, knowing how distasteful these subjects are to some, refers to Mrs. Besant's reply in regard to the relaxation (in the case of theosophical books) of the order of Government prohibiting the publication of books written by her and her associates, and calls it a mark of righteous indignation on her part in refusing to treat her theosophical works as distinct and separate from her political and other works.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Rabindranath Tagore and swaraj.

87. Referring to a recent speech by Sir Rabindranath Tagore explaining the sympathy of Bengal towards Madras in regard to the internments, and stating that repression will not succeed, that the authorities are wrong to suppose that self-government can come only by slow degrees and that it is harmful to the glory of the British to ignore justice in their anxiety to maintain their prestige, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 17th August, remarks:—Sir Rabindranath Tagore is a man of unbounded reputation, respected alike by his countrymen, its administrators and also by foreign countries, such as America and Japan. There can be no extremism in this universally revered personage either in mind, word or deed; and this is what he spoke recently on the subject of swaraj.

88. In an article referring to the proceedings of the Municipal Conference held at Poona, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 17th August, after complaining about the inappreciable measure of progress in the direction of local self-government in India, says that the most effective remedy for ensuring better progress consists in increasing the non-official element and replacing the present property qualifications of voters for the most part by educational qualifications irrespective of other considerations of class or caste.

Local self-government.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 17th, 1917.

The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 14th August, says:—"We have frequently discussed in these columns our compatriots' untimely efforts and patriotic vapourings on the Home Rule question."

Home Rule or self-government.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1917.

With this prefatory remark the paper reproduces an article against the Home Rule propaganda from the Agra.

89. Referring to the proposed introduction of currency notes of the value of one rupee and of two and a half rupees, the Yogakshemam, of the 17th August, doubts whether people will accept these notes all at once.

Currency notes of the value of one rupee and of two and a half rupees.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Aug. 17th, 1917.

90. Referring to the order of the Madras Government forfeiting the security of Rs. 2,000 deposited by Mr. P. K. Telang, editor of New India, the Manorama, of the 17th August, writes:—The result of this new order will be to shake the popular belief that the present unrest in India will abate in course of time. We think that it will not be sound policy on the part of the Government to try to silence public opinion by repressive measures.

The Madras Government and New India.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Referring to the same subject, the Yogakshemam, of the 17th August, writes:—We do not consider that the attitude of the Government towards the Home Rulers will have the desired effect. It cannot be conjectured what evil consequences will follow, if this matter does not receive serious consideration at the hands of the Madras Government. God alone knows what calamity will befall the people.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Aug. 17th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Lokaprakasam, of the 20th August, says:—It is not to be apprehended that the paper will stop publication as a result of this order. We are not at all prepared to admit that their present repressive measures will bring credit to the Government. People fear that it might be otherwise.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Aug. 20th, 1917.

91. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 13th August, in giving a translation of Her Imperial Majesty's message of sympathy to the widows of Indian soldiers killed in action, says:—This is intended to comfort the hearts of the relatives of the brave and faithful men who gave their lives for king and country in this great war.

Her Imperial Majesty's sympathy.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 13th, 1917.

92. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 16th August, referring to the lecture recently delivered by Lieut.-Col. Stewart Commanding the East York Regiment at Lucknow, observes:—The power of Britain is so great that Russia apart, even if two or three powers were to conclude a separate peace with Germany, nothing could check Great Britain's successes; she is quite capable of driving the Germans out of Belgium. The fact is Great Britain does not desire success at the cost of enormous bloodshed. It is solely on this account that our gallant General, Sir Douglas Haig, is advancing by degrees.

A lecture on the war.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1917.

93. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 15th August, referring to the petition prepared by the Congress Committee and League Council at Bombay to be submitted to the Secretary of State for India and the Viceroy, writes:—We wonder how the committee and the council, during the absence of some of their important members, approved the draft of such a momentous petition, which has not yet received the unanimous consent of the community, and of which, as a matter of fact, it has no knowledge whatever of what is being done in its behalf.

Petition from the Congress and League.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

We often said that whatever is done, without the common consent of the community, cannot rightly be called the work of the community.

The editor, referring to the Home Rule question forming one of the twenty demands made in the petition, makes the following observation:—The question of self-government has now practically disappeared, and its place has been taken by Home Rule for which a scheme is in course of preparation. In these circumstances Muhammadans will not occupy a safe place, when the administration of Government will pass entirely into the hands of the Hindus. Their condition will be worse than it is at present, their historical importance will be lost, and strangers will supersede them by virtue of their education and learning. Hence it is necessary that the scheme should be resubmitted to the community, and that, on the basis of the different opinions and views expressed on the subject, a plan should be formed, which will preserve unchanged the political importance of the Muhammadans, and provide against a recurrence of present drawbacks and difficulties.

Secondly, from the speeches of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Governor of Madras it appears that they regret that demands are being made by Indians, and they advise them not to make any request before the end of the war, otherwise they will be severely dealt with. They have further announced that very slight changes will be effected in the condition of India, and that even these will fall short of public expectations.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1917.

What a free Mussalman thinks of self-government.

94. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 17th August, has a letter from a Mussalman of which the following is an excerpt:—It appears to me, the correspondent states, that all the subjects of a King have a right to equality. We rejoice to see we are ruled by a generous nation, that acknowledges not only this principle but also educates us to make us fit to be regarded as men.

From the political point of view Mussalmans are wanting in education, wealth and numbers. The first two defects can be rectified sometime or other in the future, but the third will probably be constant.

The present philosophy of administration needs 'a majority of opinions' and a non-Muslim community is endeavouring its utmost to see that this principle is not done away with. This being the case every man with commonsense, will conclude that Home Rule, or self-government, will not prove beneficial to the Mussalmans in India.

III.—LEGISLATION.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The Village Panchayat Bill.

95. In an article under this heading a correspondent of the Swadesamitran, of the 18th August, criticises, as follows, the provisions of the Bill to amend the Madras Village Courts Act:—The Bill empowers Collectors to nominate members of a panchayat. Though it is stated in the statement of object and reasons that, in the selection of such members, the Collector will be guided as far as possible by the wishes of the people of the locality, he may find it impracticable to find out the proper persons from the scattered villages, and he will have therefore to depend upon his subordinate officials like the Revenue Inspectors to make his choice. The result will be that these officials will recommend only such men as are in their good graces. I do not see why the Government want this power to be in their hands. If, perhaps, they think that the people in villages are not sufficiently qualified to make a choice, it is a mistake. Though there is some truth in the fact that the villagers have not yet realised their responsibility in the matter of electing members to the Taluk Board, it can be definitely stated that so many irregularities as occur in an election in a western country by a people of mature experience do not occur here. Sufficient arguments can be adduced—here the correspondent quotes the opinions of Sir Harvey Adamson and the late Diwan C. Ranga Acharlu in support of his view—to prove that the people are very well fitted to elect members of panchayats. And again it is but fair that a bench which decides disputes regarding the person and property of the public should be composed of the representatives of those concerned in such disputes.

This Bill provides that a member of a panchayat continues as such during his life. This is entirely wrong. This rule may lead to the members gradually seeking the favour of the officials, ignoring the public opinion or justice. It should, therefore, be changed, and a panchayatdar should be appointed as such for not less than a year and not more than three years.

The power given to the District Collector of suspending or removing from office any member of panchayat for incapacity, misconduct or other just and sufficient cause and of appointing another member in place of the one so removed is a very hard provision. This will lead to the members to curry the favour of the subordinate officials still more. We are afraid that as this renders the panchayatdars the subordinates of salaried officials, respectable persons may not be willing to come forward for taking this appointment. So this provision should be removed.

As regards the constitution of the bench, the only difference between the existing bench courts and the new panchayat courts is that, instead of each party choosing one member as was the case before, each party can choose more than one member. If the official arranging the bench happens to be the village munsif, he can so choose the members that only such men as agree with him may sit on the bench. So, the rules should be such as to make it possible for the members constituting the bench in each month to be ascertained beforehand. In certain specified cases, it should be declared that only three or five panchayatdars should form the bench. It will be desirable to follow the system of choosing by lots in fixing the bench. If any individual member cannot attend, the remaining members can choose one in his place.

The Bill gives the President a casting vote when the opinion is divided equally. Such a power is not enjoyed even by the High Court Judges. If, as suggested before, it is ruled that the bench should consist of three or five panchayatdars, there will be no necessity whatever for the casting vote.

As regards punishment though the provision conferring the power on the village munsifs to put an offender in stocks has been annulled, the provision giving them power to confine a person for two hours has been retained. This should also be cancelled.

ERRATA.

Report No. 32.

Page 2138, paragraph 21, line 7, substitute "world-wide" for "worldwide".
„ 2139 „ 22 „ 4, insert "," after "Hijaz."
„ 2139 „ 22 „ 12, substitute "rapt" for "wrapt."
„ 2168 „ 105 „ 3, substitute "fellow" for "brother."
„ 2168 „ 106 „ 31, substitute "Zafar" for "Zafat."

Pages 2167 and 2168, paragraphs 105 and 106, lines 13, 29, 43, 53, 33 and 34, insert "," after "hopeless," "Sahib," "Bahadur," "ability," "men" and "expediently."

Page 2168, paragraph 106, line 25, omit "the" before "real."

Issued, 29th August 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 35 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 1st September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(b) General—
Passive resistance	2249
Government pensioners and passive resistance.	2252
The editor of the Bombay Chronicle	2253

II.—Home Administration—cont.	PAGE
(b) General—cont.
The Home Rule flag at Coimbatore	2253
Foreign honours	2254
The Congress presidentship	ib.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

The submarine activity 2255
Pope's note on the peace question .. .. .. ib.
German contradictory statements 2256
Peace proposals .. .. ib.
Saloniki .. .. ib.
The war .. .. ib.
Mr. Lloyd George's views on the war 2257

II.—Home Administration.

(b) Courts—
The District Judge of Guntūr .. .. .. ib.

(d) Education—
Education and industries .. .. .. ib.
English or vernacular to be the medium of instruction in schools .. .. ib.
Student and politics 2259
Religions and education .. .. ib.
A case of bribery .. .. ib.
Teaching of English in schools .. .. .. ib.

(e) Local and Municipal—
The sanitation of Madras .. .. .. ib.
Mr. Molony's humour 2260
The Narasaraopet Municipality .. .. .. ib.
An overbridge .. .. ib.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement—
The resettlement of the Nilgiri district .. ib.

(h) Railways—
The necessity of a platform at the Taliparamba road station 2261

(k) General—
Reform scheme .. .. ib.
The National Congress 2263
Internment of Mrs. Besant .. .. .. ib.
The communiques of the Government of India. 2264
The North Arcot District Conference 2265
The Chittoor District Conference .. .. ib.
The Coimbatore District Conference .. .. ib.
New India security forfeited .. .. .. ib.
Mr. Montagu's visit to India 2266
Congress and self-government 2267
Agricultural loans 2268
Commissions in the army .. .. .. ib.
Mr. Hasan Imam on Home Rule .. .. ib.
Passive resistance 2269
The manifesto against passive resistance .. 2270

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.
The present situation 2271
Brahmans and non-Brahmans .. .. .. ib.
The activities of the Home Rulers .. .. ib.
The Home Rule League, Kumbakonam .. ib.
The Home Rule League, Trichinopoly .. ib.
The Home Rule League, Mannargudi 2272
The Madras Special Provincial Conference .. ib.
Swaraj 2274
The Gokhale's reform scheme .. .. .. ib.
The plain truth .. .. ib.
The broken-down bureaucracy 2275
Vaccination .. .. ib.
The Indian Defence Force .. .. .. ib.
The best principle of administration 2276
The Brahman vakil boat-mail .. .. .. ib.
Health in Madras 2277
Home Rule flags .. .. ib.
The next meeting of the Madras Legislative Council .. .. ib.
"A white-washing commission" .. .. ib.
Mr. Montagu and the Madras Mail .. .. ib.
Mr. Polak 2278
Glad news .. .. ib.
The swadeshi .. .. ib.
The non-Brahman Conference .. .. .. ib.
Federal rule .. .. ib.
Indian Members of the India Council .. .. ib.
Political life in Nellore 2279
What is our duty now? .. .. ib.
The imaginary dialogue regarding internments, etc. .. .. ib.
Industries .. .. ib.
Mr. Montagu and the non-Brahmans .. .. ib.
A warning to editors .. .. ib.
A District Board member, Kistna 2280
A circular .. .. ib.
The future of India .. .. ib.
Mr. Montagu and Home Rule .. .. .. ib.
Popular leaders and the backward classes .. ib.
Lord Islington on Indian reforms 2281
Eye treatment at district hospitals 2282
Self-government .. .. ib.
Good news for India 2283

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.

Starvation among the poor in Malabar due to scarcity of rice .. .. ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(k) General.

1. The West Coast Spectator, of the 23rd August, writes:—"If the leaders would only explain the meaning of passive resistance, we are sure there would be very few people to understand it. But all have fought shy. . . We mention it deliberately that passive resistance would create a division in the political ranks most undesirable at this stage of our evolution. The difference between moderates and nationalists would become more accentuated even leading to the destruction of that unity the National Congress has created after years of hard toil. The boycott movement was a miserable failure and succeeded only in creating a most fearful situation. Passive resistance, which is cousin germain to boycott, must necessarily re-enact those scenes which darkened Bengal and brought disgrace on her. We are convinced that the extremists have taken a false step, but hope that they would retrace before it is too late."

Passive resistance.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

In a leader under the heading "the manifesto against passive resistance", New India, of the 25th August, says:—"The statement which certain Madras publicists have thought fit to publish, considering it their duty to point out the 'grave inexpediency' of passive resistance in the present circumstances, is one which under other circumstances we would have allowed to speak for itself. But at this juncture and on the eve of the Special Conference to discuss the political situation of the country to give adequate expression to the feeling of the public in regard to the repressive policy of the Government, we cannot but lodge a protest of surprise and pain at the way in which a jumble of sentiments and thoughts, arguments and representations, have been put before the public with a view apparently to influence them on what is certainly the most burning topic of the hour. That gentlemen like Messrs. Subba Rao, Sarma and Ramachandra Rao, who attended the last meeting of the Provincial Congress Committee at which the resolution in regard to passive resistance was adopted, and on which, though no doubt dissenting, they did not deem it their duty at the time to make any emphatic declaration such as has now been made—is a course of proceeding the propriety of which we shall deal with later on. But that Diwan Bahadur Govindaraghava Ayyar, the President of the Congress Committee, who allowed himself to be elected to the sub-committee, which has been appointed to make practical suggestions on the questions raised by the adoption of the resolution and to submit a report to be forwarded to the All-India Congress Committee, should have signed this manifesto—is certainly a matter which obviously requires an explanation. . . If our friends who have signed the manifesto are sincere in their belief that it is only by making further sacrifices and taking further risks that the country can advance along the difficult path of attaining self-government, the ordinary man in the street would have expected them not to discourage those who are willing to bear such sacrifices and sufferings, but rather tell them in what manner and by what most efficacious means such a spirit of sacrifice and suffering and such desire to work for the country could be used so as to produce the maximum of benefit to the country. . . To come to the main point at issue, what is it in the resolution of the All-India Congress Committee that has scared these people and impelled them to come out at this moment to point out the 'grave inexpediency' of passive resistance? . . . It must be obvious to even the most casual reader that the passive resistance here contemplated is not any general passive resistance, aimed at compelling the Government to grant self-government as a consequence thereof, but it is passive resistance of the kind to which an approval is definitely given by the signatories to the manifesto themselves when they say that 'an exception should be made in cases where the executive arbitrarily prohibits peaceful and constitutional meetings in circumstances in which passive resistance will become not only legitimate but unavoidable for citizenship'. . . In so far as repression and internments go, the resolution has confined it to orders relating to public meetings. It is impossible to see where then these friends have found the mare's nest which has so obsessed their minds. . . It is only where the prudence of the leaders borders on timidity or where leaders are unable to know their own minds or to make up their minds at any important and critical juncture of public agitation, that the followers find it difficult to proceed with their work. . . We do trust that the painful impression which their communication has conveyed to the public will be removed by a satisfactory explanatory statement that could easily be made in the course of the proceedings of this evening's conference."

New India, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 25th August, remarks:—"The Madras moderates have at last come out of their seclusion to counteract the mischief and emotional politics a certain type of Home Ruler is engineering. Elsewhere we publish a manifesto issued by Messrs. N. Subba Rao, V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, M. K. Ramachandra Rao, B. N. Sarma, P. Siva Rao and Venkatapati Raju exposing the shallowness and undesirability of the passive resistance movement the extremists want to commit the country to. We would earnestly commend their admirably reasoned and timely manifesto to the thoughtful attention of our countrymen. We hope the warning issued now will cure the political insanity that is extant in certain quarters."

Justice, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

Justice, of the 27th August, observes:—"The Special Madras Provincial Conference is, we believe, the name given to the Brahman confabulation at the Gokhale Hall on Saturday and Sunday last. . . The main subject discussed at the confabulation was whether to resist passively or not. Some of the Home Rule leaders such as the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, Mr. V. P. Madhava Rao and Mr. N. Subba Rao had issued a manifesto against the adoption of passive resistance at this time, but the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achari, Dr. Nanjunda Rao and Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar were able to carry the audience with them in their advocacy of passive resistance. The Home Rule leaders who issued the manifesto against passive resistance ought to be convinced, at least now, that the so-called Home Rulers in this Presidency are an unruly mob not amenable to discipline or to the leadership of their acknowledged leaders. They would follow their leaders as long as their leaders led them where they wanted to go, but would turn round and abuse them the moment the decision of the leaders differed from their own unruly will. . . Some of the resolutions are in the nature of an ultimatum, others are threats, while yet others practically amount to an open declaration of war against the Government. . . Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achari may continue to grow his beard and Dr. Nanjunda Rao may go on hunger strike between meals. Beyond that whether any one except the Poona importations will really run the risk of going to jail is a question the development of which we shall watch with the utmost interest. . . Perhaps, the best part of the conference was the ultimatum addressed to Mr. Montagu to the effect that before he could get the willing and whole-hearted co-operation of the people of the country the internment of Mrs. Besant should be cancelled, failing which Dr Nanjunda Rao, Mr. Ramanuja Achari and Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar would boycott Mr. Montagu. Mr. Montagu has our sincere sympathies. To be boycotted by the Ghokale hall politicians is a serious calamity to an ordinary citizen, but to a Secretary of State it is absolutely disastrous. . . The Home Rule leaders are now emphatic in their demand for the release of Mrs. Besant, because they want to remain secure in their homes while Mrs. Besant ran all the risks of carrying on a violent agitation. . . All the bluff and bounce of the Gokhale hall politicians, we hope, will not frighten the Government into relaxing their determination to preserve law and order in this Presidency. Mrs. Besant was the one dangerous element that seriously threatened to disturb peace and order. She is Irish and is made of sterner stuff. The Madrassi part of the Home Rulers, the Government will find if they have not already done so, is all froth."

The Indian Patriot, of the 27th August, writes:—"The special session of the Provincial Conference, which came to a close yesterday evening, was not of the usual kind that used to assemble within the limits of this Presidency. It was excited, far from harmonious. Delegates, as some of them said, had come to have the resolution on passive resistance passed. They were not, therefore, prepared to listen to the wise counsels which had been given in the manifesto issued the previous evening, and they were in a majority. The passive resistance resolution having been passed, many of them had apparently accomplished the purpose for which they came; for yesterday's attendance at the conference was much less than it had been the previous day. . . It is hardly to be expected that the passing of the resolution by the conference would compel the adherence of people to it. On the other hand, those who are of the honest opinion that a declaration of passive resistance, particularly at this time, would do harm to the country would remain firm in their conviction that they are in the right. They are not likely to change their opinion because the younger section of the conference, led, though it was, by the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achari, would never find a sufficient number of followers among the people to make the resolution passed by it effective. . . What we actually find is that the most thoughtful opinion in Madras, and the most thoughtful opinion in Bombay, in the United Provinces and in Bengal, is deeply convinced of the impolicy of venturing on an enterprise which is doomed to failure, and in failure, there will be danger. . . We are not in the first place a community without any rights under the Government. We hold high offices under Government, we hold semi-official offices in the Legislative Councils, and on local bodies, we serve as honorary magistrates. Not one of these offices will be discarded by any one without a sense of serious loss. Even Mr. Ramanuja Achari would not resign his chairmanship of the Kumbakōnam Municipality, or his seat in the Legislative Council as a protest against the internment of an individual or against the prohibition of a public meeting. If he does, there will be hundreds of others to take his place. The proposal to use passive resistance in certain matters alone will be ridiculous, if the passive resisters cannot carry their resolution to its legitimate end. Why should passive resistance be confined to matters which do not involve any personal sacrifice, though it may involve personal suffering. If a person is interned, then he alone will suffer by reason of his disobedience of the order, and what are people to do if a meeting is prohibited under authority? Are all of them to resist the police and suffer the penalty for their resistance? How many will be found to scuffle with the police? We are not at all clear as to the methods intended to be pursued, and we wish passive resisters to give more thought to the practical side of the question. We see clearly before us the prospect of a division, the same kind of division which we witnessed once before. We are sincerely afraid of this development."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 27th, 1917.

Writing under the heading "Sowing the Wind," Justice, of the 28th August, states:—"From what transpired at the Gokhale hall meeting the more sensible of the Home Rule leaders are to be ignored; and with the determination to disobey Government orders and to disregard their leaders mob rule may be considered to have set in. The most serious aspect of the situation is a general tendency on the part of Home Rulers to defy the law. Defiance of law is a dangerous game at any time. It is particularly so in times of war when the preservation of internal peace is the most essential condition for the successful prosecution of the war. . . We are afraid that the Madras Government by delaying too long those measures necessary to secure peace and quietness within their jurisdiction have given a false impression to the Home Rulers at least, that they are weak and timid. The unpardonable delay in dealing with the Home Rule leader whose methods of criticising the action of the Government would not have been tolerated for a moment in any of the belligerent countries and the almost half-apologetic manner in which that leader was dealt with have strengthened the impression that the Madras Government are afraid of the Home Rulers; and the Home Rulers have not been slow to spread the rumour broadcast that the Home Government were about to overrule the action of the Madras Government. . . The passing of the resolution for starting passive resistance by the Brahman confabulation was not accidental. It is the result, we believe, of the general impression artificially created that the Madras Government are afraid to strike. . . Things have come to such a pass that every school boy thinks that he can openly defy the law and the Madras Government put together. No Government can continue with undiminished prestige for any length of time under such conditions. Ever since the Government issued the order preventing school boys and college students from attending political meetings college students have been very much in evidence at all political meetings, at least in Madras, and now the movement has spread to Trichinopoly. . . We see no reason why the movement should not spread to other centres. With the active Bombay men and the too passive Madras Government the wonder would be if the movement did not spread. And if the Madras Government are not able to stop the demoralisation that is spreading and the defiance of authority that is developing, the Secretary of State will have seriously to consider a reform of the Madras Government itself."

JUSTICE, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

Indian Patriot, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

The Indian Patriot, of the 28th August, observes:—"The significance of the vote in favour of passive resistance adopted notwithstanding the protest of the President of the Conference and other political leaders cannot be regarded with indifference. It shows undoubtedly a certain lack of discipline in our public life but it also shows that the development of public life must in the end lead to the overthrow of leaders who would be followed only if they walk before their followers. . . If they want to be in public life, they must be able to put up with a position of subordination to their erstwhile followers or must retire altogether."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 28th, 1917.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 28th August, remarks:—"Diwan Bahadur P. Kesava Pillai's address at the Special Provincial Conference will be read with interest as the utterance of a sensible Moderate whose vision is not blurred by the gas that is let off by the other party. It is interesting that Mr. Pillai condemns passive resistance although he admits that our countrymen have sufficient provocation. All those who have kept their heads cool and restrained the passion from subduing sense have pointed out the danger that lies in arming ourselves with the boome-rang. We trust our countrymen are not so misguided as to be led away by emotional talk into putting their neck into the halter.

* * * * * *

"We are not in the least surprised that the 'packed' Provincial Conference has passed the passive resistance resolution, in spite of the earnest appeal of that distinguished statesman Mr. V. P. Madhava Rau, which was joined in by Mr. Srinivasa Sastri. It would be interesting to learn how the conference would give effect to the resolution. The utter lack of the sense of responsibility, moderation and constructive political wisdom displayed by the conference is truly to be regretted. We find consolation, however, in the fact that the public, apart from a few visionaries and irreconcilables, is not likely to be misled by the heroics of an handful of amateur politicians and statesmen."

Justice, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

2. Justice, of the 28th August, has the following:—"It would be interesting to know the opinion of the Madras Government on their pensioners taking an active part in the passive resistance movement. The Theosophical Society itself is not a purely religious organisation. It is now an active political association though Government servants are still members of it and have also subscribed for the Besant Fund. But the case of the Government pensioners who lead the passive resistance propaganda is entirely different. Mr. Samarth of Bombay in his arguments against the Congress adopting passive resistance pointed out that if passive resistance formed part of its programme the Congress would become an unlawful assembly. We do not propose to discuss the legal aspect of the question. But common sense ought to tell us that those who proclaim in public their determination to defy the law and the authority of the Government must consistently with their position be prepared to give up their pensions. However, it is interesting to know the Madras Government's view on the point."

Government pensioners and passive resistance.

3. The following appears in Justice of the 27th August:—"Not long ago we had to refer to Mr. Horniman, the editor of the Bombay Chronicle, as a hireling. A perusal of some of his later effusions convinces us that he is also a hooligan."

JUSTICE, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

The editor of the Bombay Chronicle.

4. The Hindu, of the 28th August, states:—From a communication published elsewhere, it would be seen that the District Magistrate of Coimbatore passed an order yesterday under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Mrs. Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia, directing them to pull down the Home Rule flag flying in their residence, and on their refusal to do so, got the same removed by the Police. The order was made ex parte and has thus already been carried out by force. It seems to us, if the facts are substantially correct as stated, an extraordinary act of high-handedness on the part of a responsible officer of Government. . . The Home Rule flag was flying during the time of Mrs. Besant's stay at Ootacamund and whatever opinions may be held as to the necessity of flying a flag, we can only regard it as a gross misuse of the power given under section 144 to apply it to remove the flag in the manner in which it is said to have been done at Coimbatore. . . The Indian public have been expecting for sometime past the release of the interned persons, and to them the news of the action of the District Magistrate of Coimbatore, aggravating the situation further will come with a painful shock of surprise".

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

The Home Rule flag at Coimbatore.

Writing on this subject, Justice, of the 29th August, remarks:—"The Home Rule flag floating on the flagstaff in front of Mrs. Besant's residence at Coimbatore was hauled down by the police under orders from the District Magistrate at 1-22 p.m. on Monday last. Fortunately the hour at which this insult to the Home Rule flag was offered was not Rahu kalam. All the same the flag and flagstaff have been carried away by the police. We are sure that Home Rulers all over the country will resent this insult to their flag and may convert passive resistance into active hostilities until a Home Rule flag is set up once again in front of Jail View Bungalow, Coimbatore, and Mr. Macmichael, the District Magistrate, Coimbatore, salutes it. . . Mrs. Besant's dreams of becoming an uncrowned queen of India were certainly shattered by the unsentimental action of the Madras Government. To intern an intending queen is an unsympathetic action, but to deprive her of the last tinsel and trappings of sovereignty is the refinement of cruelty worthy of German Kultur."

JUSTICE, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

New India, of the 31st August, observes:—"What is the significance of the Home Rule flag? We answer with a question, what is the significance of the Union Jack to the citizens of the British Empire, of the tri-colour to the citizens of the Republic of France? Our flag is to us exactly like the other flags in the world, a symbol, the Symbol of our National Ideal of Freedom and Self-Rule. . . It is to us the 'outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace'. Our flag is to us, who believe in it, a fountain of power unfailing, flowing from the ideal it stands for. It is the power which enables us to re-create the motherland, as we want her to be. We derive from it the inspiration for the work that is necessary to shape the future as we see it. . . The flag of our interned leaders has been cut down and taken away; and today we hear that the same order has been served on Home Rulers in Coimbatore and Erode. Such action has come as an on-slaught upon the Nation's deepest and most sacred feelings, the culmination to a dramatic development of events in swift and regular succession, each event a cruel assault upon a nation condemned for venturing to desire her liberty. Such a striking down only exalts the flag in our eyes and such profanation has only sanctified our flag. It sets the seal of approval by the Gods of its worthiness to be a sacrifice unto Them. The flag has now been rendered holy and planted deeper into our hearts. . . What is the Home Ruler's duty? His duty is to fly a Home Rule flag over his home and keep it flying till the Great Day arrives. He must declare to all the world what he stands for. This is his only possible response. He has also the right to fly the flag. How can any one deny his right to stand in the open light of day and make his declaration of faith? If he shirks this right, he shirks his duty to the Mother. If he would rather not have his flag seen by all, he would rather not be seen in the company of liberty which he professes to adore. Keep the flag flying and let it be seen by all. The flag of our interned has been cut down. Let a thousand flags arise in its stead. The right to fly it has been challenged in one quarter. Exercise then the right in all quarters. The flag is the flag of our Mother; it is the duty of her children to uphold it."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

Justice, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Foreign honours.

5. The following appears in Justice of the 30th August:—"In the course of his speech at the Victoria Hall meeting on Monday to do honnor to the late Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar said that reference ought not to be made to Mr. Dhadabhai Naoroji as the Grand Old Man of India as the phrase and the conception are alien. It will be time enough for Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar to preach the abrogation of foreign phrases of honour after he has returned the insignia of the foreign honours with which his breast is decorated. Before he does that he will not be taken seriously."

Justice, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

The Congress presidentship.

6. Justice, of the 31st August, writes:—"An associated press message published elsewhere gives an account of what took place yesterday in Calcutta at the meeting of the Reception Committee of the Congress held to elect the president of the forthcoming session of it. . . It has come to this, that the Congress is no longer, even in name, an organisation of the educated people of India, but a purely Besantine caucus which represents none but Mrs. Besant and the irreconcilables and the irresponsibles who have gathered round her. . . We cannot help remarking in this connection that leaders like Mr. Surendranath Banerji are not altogether free from blame. The moment they consented knowingly or assented passively to be led by a foreign adventuress whose antecedents were all against her, they ought to have known that they were committing a grave blunder the consequences of which would recoil on themselves. If this was all, we would not have minded it much. But we are afraid that the country will suffer for it. We care not for the Congress. No self-respecting Indian who has any spark of patriotism in him would allow himself to be a member of an organisation which is led by the nose by an irresponsible foreign lady who has been everything in turn but nothing long. But we must see that the interests of the country do not suffer and that the progress it has been making receives no set back."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

7. The Swadesamitran, of the 24th August, reproduces in Tamil a communication addressed to the London Times by its correspondent, who, referring to the facts that the loss to the British on account of submarines up to date comes to 2,000,000 tons and that efforts have been made to recoup this loss as much as possible, observes:—Though the efforts made by the British till now to combat the submarine activity of the enemy appear to be satisfactory enough, they should take even more active steps in this matter. There should be no relaxation hereafter as there has been for the last two weeks. The best course is to take the offensive in attacking submarines. It should not be judged from the very fact that there has not been much loss in April last, that the efforts made in connection with the submarine warfare are satisfactory.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

The submarine activity.

8. The Dravidan, of the 23rd August, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Madras Times on the Pope's note to the belligerent powers on the question of peace.

Dravidan, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

Pope's note on the peace question.

The Qaumi Report, of the 20th August, refers to the Pope's peace note and says:—There is no doubt that the sympathy and the humanity of the Pope deserve all praise, and his admonition and advice, given the members of his church in his capacity of Vicar of Christ and Mary on Earth, command attention. We consider his note, however, to be very defective, inasmuch as he has not anywhere revealed the secret as to how spiritual power is going to overcome physical force, or how peace and tranquility can be guaranteed in future.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The Pope and peace.

Every man, who has in the past devastated the world with fire and sword, has claimed that he was pacifically inclined!

No tyrant has ever admitted himself to be an oppressor.

It is regrettable that the Pope has not considered what the wisdom of the Koran has to say. With reference to persons who, in the sacred name of peace, use the sword oppressively, Islam says—

"When they are asked not to do mischief in the world they reply 'verily we are reformers.' The fact is they themselves are evil doers."

In reality the sword alone that can eradicate them (evil doers). The sword alone furnishes the answer to their sword.

The Koran has laid down the principle "An eye for an eye."

Had His Holiness known anything about Koranic philosophy he would never have suggested such terms of peace. God has power both over the oppressor and the harmless, and when these transgress His law He will surely punish them.

The history of the world shows that the empire or nation that has disobeyed God has perished.

It is interesting to note that Europe has not taken the Pope's appeal seriously.

Reports on the note from America say that all have stopped their ears.

England has evaded it by saying that it emanated from the enemy.

This may be due to the fact that Britain and Germany are not followers of the Pope. Austria and France, however, are his followers, but so long as England and Germany do not come to an understanding, overtures for peace are not likely to be successful. The Pope's paper plans will not materialise until he obtains, for the world, a sign from the Virgin Mary.

For the present the reply to the Pope is best expressed in the words of Khaja Hafiz—

"A mendicant and recluse art thou,
"Hafiz, do not crow.
"Kings know their State secrets best."

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 22nd August, referring to the Pope's peace-note in a lengthy leader, makes the following observations:—Peace is best and no power is more anxious for it than Great Britain; for its sole object in taking part in this war was the protection of the weak kingdoms. But a peace which is not based upon the original principle—the protection and preservation of small States—would be not only useless, but injurious. Such a peace could never be a permanent one and the danger of another war in the near future would be constant.

The Pope and peace.

Therefore it is essential to carefully consider the question in all its bearings.

In the present war there have been such stupendous sacrifices of men and money that it would be the height of folly to lay the foundation of another war for which posterity would not bless us.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 25th August, has a leader on the Pope's note of peace, in the course of which it appeals to the loyal and faithful Ministers of the Crown to strive to see to it that only such terms of peace are accepted as have been put forward by Mr. Lloyd George.

The Vicar of Christ His Holiness the Pope's peace note.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

9. The Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd August, says under this heading:—A German wireless says that the Allies retreated at Oucrourtwood and Marthomi not being able to fight with the Germans, and that the Germans gained much. Sometime afterwards another German wireless stated that the French took possession of Marthomi and some other positions.

German contradictory statements.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

10. Referring to peace proposals, the Andhraprakasika, of the 24th August, says:—The Kaiser is not earnest in the matter of peace. He wants thus to impose on the Allies, take advantage of their inadvertence and do havoc. But the Allies will not be imposed upon by these deceitful proposals.

Peace proposals.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

11. The Andhraprakasika, of the 24th August, reports that two-thirds of Salonika, which is at present the chief seat of the Allies in Greece, have been destroyed by fire.

Salonika.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 24th, 1917.

12. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 24th August, writes:—Military experts had expected that the war would end in three years. This did not come true. Von Hollweg says that neither party has had any material success and that both parties have had an equal measure of loss and gain. This might be true. Germany has conquered some territories in Europe but lost some territories in Africa. The Germans claim that the allies have lost a tonnage of 3,000,000 through their submarine campaign. The allies have proved that these claims are false. However that may be, the allies are employing crores of men in building new ships which outnumber those that are destroyed. America is taking vigorours steps to increase her tonnage. The allies are building submarines which can destroy enemy submarines. As Hollweg observed the German conquests of territories do not amount to much. Their successes, too, are not many. Their hopes of future successes are rapidly declining. Nearly a year has elapsed since the Kaiser boasted that he would bring the war to a successful end. Some months have gone by since he swaggered that he would conquer the British by reducing them to starvation in less than a month. He now says that the war will go on till 1919. All this goes to show that, however desirous the Kaiser may be to win the war, he has not the power to do so, and that the allies are not weaker than the enemy. It would appear that though a small section of the Germans are for peace, the majority seem to be bent on the continuance of the war and that though a few are willing to have peace on terms of status quo ante a large number is opposed to the restoration of conquered territory. We must, therefore, conclude that the war is showing no signs of an early termination. It is not likely that peace will be concluded unless either party is totally defeated.

The war.

13. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 24th August, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—Since Mr. Asquith's resignation, Mr. Lloyd George has been discharging the important and responsible duties of the Prime Minister in a most brilliant manner. He has given all Europe proof of his statesmanship and administrative ability. In lofty ideals and high resolve it would be neither improper nor out of place to compare him with Mr. Pitt who frustrated Napoleon's plans and covered Great Britain with glory.

Mr. Lloyd George's views on the war.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

With these prefatory remarks the editor gives a translation of the statement made by Mr. Lloyd George on food-stuffs in the House of Commons on the 16th instant.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

(b) Courts.

14. The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th August, says:—Some Indian officials trouble and annoy their own countrymen in order to gain the patronage of the Government. The District Judge of Guntūr has sent a circular over his signature calling for a list of the names of those pleaders who take part in politics. To assign to his subordinate Judges this duty of preparing such a list is high-handedness on the part of the District Judge. He has to decide cases according to their merits, and he has nothing to do with the political activities of pleaders. It appears that instead of putting down such irregularity, the Government are encouraging it. The sooner the Government put an end to such irregular acts, the better.

The District Judge of Guntūr.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

(d) Education.

15. The Dravidan, of the 22nd August, reproduces in Tamil a lecture delivered on this subject by Rao Bahadur P. Thyagaraya Chettiyar at Coimbatore, which appears in Justice of the same date.

Education and industries.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

16. Referring to the opening speech of the Viceroy in the Educational Conference held at Simla, the Swadesamitran, of the 23rd August, says:—In the course of this speech, the Viceroy gave two reasons against the use of the vernaculars as the medium of instruction in schools, and these are (1) that it is only the English-educated men that get appointments and (2) that there are no text-books in the vernaculars. The Viceroy has not evidently noted that the Government can, in a moment, get rid of these reasons. All that is necessary is for them to issue an order that a knowledge of English is not required for holding an appointment. Though it may cause some difficulty in the beginning, the new state of affairs will soon adjust itself. If another order is passed directing that education should be imparted through the vernaculars, text-books in vernaculars will appear within a very short time. The Viceroy asked those assembled in the conference to assume that English should be the medium of instruction in schools and suggest measures for improving this instruction. When the people are against English being the medium of instruction in schools, the officials want suggestions for improving the instruction given through English. There may be some justification for this view of the officials if the only objection for English being the medium of instruction is that it does not impart sound knowledge. The main objection to it is that the educated men who learn a foreign language, forgetting their own, become denationalised. We need not dilate upon the part played by the vernaculars in the creation of a nation. That there are numerous languages in this country is stated by the Viceroy to be an argument against making the vernaculars the medium of instruction in schools. Evidently, he has not noted the extent of this country. It is quite natural that, in a country like this, which is equal in extent to Europe excluding Russia, there should be several languages in use. In a very small country like Scotland, the language of the northern portion is quite different from that of the southern, and the language of the Irish is not understood by those in England. Considering all these things,

English or vernacular to be the medium of instruction in schools.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

the existence of several languages in this country need cause no anxiety. He remarks again that the English language will hereafter be used even at home, which would help the boys to understand it much better. The idea of our people is only to prevent such an anomaly. Even when English is used only by the males outside the home, we see them keep away from the people of the country and become denationalised. If, with this, girls also begin to speak in English, we will be spoiled in every way. We hope the object of the Viceroy is not to bring about this result.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

In commenting upon the same speech, the Hindu Nesan, of the 23rd August, remarks:—Considering this speech carefully, he cannot be said to have evinced any interest in the matter of adopting the vernaculars as a medium of instruction in schools. We have to regret that he forgot altogether that it is not possible to impart education to, and improve the knowledge of, the ordinary people in India except by means of the vernaculars.

Dravidan, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

English or vernacular to be the medium of instruction in schools.

The Dravidan, of the 23rd August, welcomes the speech of the Viceroy at the Simla Conference as relieving the anxiety of the paper whether the Educational authorities would perchance give primary importance to the vernaculars relegating English to an inferior position.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 23nd, 1917.

The vernaculars.

In commenting on the proceedings of the Secondary Education Conference held at Simla, the Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd August, says:—The speech of His Excellency Lord Chelmsford has disappointed the advocates of vernaculars. . . That it is unnatural that education should be received through the medium of foreign languages is borne out by the fact that such a system is not in vogue in the civilised world. . . A wonderful change has now come about in the ideals of the country. Professor Karvey has established a women's university and is giving education in the vernaculars with success. The Nizam of Hyderabad has decided to establish a Urdu university, and Canarese is encouraged in the Mysore university. The people are showing more and more love for national education, and it may be asserted that there will not now be keen differences of opinion in the matter of giving education in the vernaculars. . . It does not appear satisfactory that His Excellency the Viceroy should have said that it is not possible to spread education through the medium of the vernaculars. . . Again, to carry on the administration of the country in the vernaculars is the foundation of self-government, and the chief means for it is to give education through the vernaculars. Such education will be useful even in the case of ordinary administration. It will also help the people to take greater interest in the administration of the country. It is impossible that the English language can ever become the common language of the Indians, and it will not tend to the welfare of the country to discourage the development of the vernaculars. . . The Maharaja of Alwar said:—Though it may be that to imitate others is to honour them, it forbodes death to imitate others without showing one's individual talent. Vernaculars should be spread in all directions in order that our nationality may be preserved, and that our spiritual progress may not suffer.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th August, says:—It is not right that the representatives of the Gurukula and the Santi Niketana institutions and those of the Mahila university and the Andhra National College have not been invited to the Secondary Education Conference, and their opinions consulted. It is now plain that the advocates of vernaculars have much to do. The question of the vernaculars has attracted the attention of the Government.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Vernacular education.

In an article referring to the proceedings of the recent Directors' Conference at Simla, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 24th August, expresses itself in hearty agreement with the views expressed by His Excellency the Viceroy on the occasion in regard to the relative positions to be assigned to English and the vernaculars in schools, and remarks that the question is a vital one and deserves to be settled in the manner indicated by His Excellency.

17. The Swadesamitran and the Hindu Nesan, of the 25th August, reproduce in Tamil the special message sent to New India that 200 college students at Trichinopoly convened a public meeting and expressed their determination to attend Home Rule meetings, which appears in its issue of the 24th idem under the heading "Students and G.O. No. 559".

Students and politics.

SWADESAMITRAN AND HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan, and the Dravidan, of the 27th August, publish, as reported by their own correspondents, an abstract of the proceedings of a public meeting held on the 23rd idem in Trichinopoly, under the presidency of Mr. T. V. Swaminatha Sastriyar. Many students are reported to have been present at this meeting, and at their request Messrs. Deobhanker and Chinnaswami addressed the audience on "students and politics", condemning in the course of their observations G.O. No. 559, under which students are prohibited from taking part in politics.

Students and politics.

HINDU NESAN AND DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

18. The Vidyabhanu, for June-July, expresses its regret at religious instruction not being given in schools and, attributing the absence of a love for their religion on the part of many Indians to this defect in the system of education and dwelling at length upon the advantages of religious instruction being made an integral part of this system, suggests that hereafter at least the people should wake up and see that instruction on Hindu religion is included in the curricula of studies in our schools.

Religion and education.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, June-July, 1917.

19. The Hitakarini, of the 19th August, refers to a case in which the Drill Teacher in the Training School at Ellore is alleged to have received bribes from students, and prays that the Educational authorities will carefully enquire into the case and bring the Drill Teacher to book.

A case of bribery.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, Aug. 19th, 1917.

20. Referring to the proceedings of the Educational Conference recently held at Simla to consider the question of teaching English in secondary schools, the Kerala Patrika, of the 25th August, endorses the view of the Conference that English education should be begun when children are between nine and eleven years of age. It is of opinion that English should be taught as the first language in schools, and that due importance should be given to the teaching of vernaculars also by doing away with the study of unnecessary matters. It then refers to the defects in the present system of education, and observes that, unless these defects are removed, no appreciable benefit will be derived therefrom.

Teaching of English in schools.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 25th, 1917.

(e) Local and Municipal.

21. Adverting to the report of the Health Officer of the Madras Corporation on the sanitation of the city in 1916, the Swadesamitran, of the 29th August, says:—In the opinion of the Health Officer, the sanitation of the city was much better in 1916 than before, and he attributes it to the facts that the streets were cleaner than before, that water was available in abundance and that efforts were made to check the spread of malarial fever. If these facts had, by themselves, contributed to the improvement of the sanitation of the city, a greater attention to these would yield better results. It will not be sufficient if the streets alone are clean. Everyone in the city could have noted scavengers emptying fœcal matter in the side-drains, and the bad odour emitted therefrom should lead to disease. If the Health Officer will prevent this, the people in the city will be highly grateful to him. The statement that the streets were cleaner than before cannot apply to all of them. Many streets become miry after the slightest shower and the bad smell therein is unbearable. If such streets are metalled, rain water will not stagnate. When this question was discussed at a meeting of the Corporation several months back, some Commissioners stated that it was impossible to metal small lanes and that they could not be repaired often. But they would not have stated so, if they had seen such lanes after a shower of rain. As small lanes are full of ruts and as there is not much of sunlight therein, water stagnates and a bad odour is emitted. Big streets are disinfected by sunlight. In the case of small lanes, it is man that should do it. If the authorities want to verify the truth of our statement, let them go and see the streets next to Kotival Bazaar after a shower of rain. The Health Officer seems to realise the necessity for a sufficient supply of pure water. But the Corporation is not in a position to ensure this supply. As the existing filters are not enough to filter the entire quantity of water necessary for the city, it is a mixture of filtered and unfiltered water that is now being supplied. Perhaps the Health Officer will have to mention in his next report that the death-rate of the city has increased on account of this. Pure water, air and food are essential equally for man and beast. Pure water is not available. Pure air also has become rare. The high structures which are gradually being raised on the beach are preventing the free ingress of sea-breeze into the city. The Health Officer would do well to suggest in his next report that the open spaces that still remain on the beach should not be built upon. The description by the Health Officer of the food-stuffs, especially in coffee hotels, is harrowing. It is suggested by the Assistant Health Officer that the people themselves should improve the state of affairs by ceasing to patronise such hotels. This may be a very good suggestion in countries where the people understand sanitary rules. But we are in India, a country where the people believe that death and disease are due to fate. Unless law is enforced and the defects removed there will be no use here in throwing the responsibility on the people. It appears the Public Works Department of the Government would not remove the brick-kilns outside the city limits, even after they were requested to do so on the ground that their existence inside the city contaminates the air. It is the duty of the Government departments to set an example in abiding by the provisions of law. If they do not so, the Corporation should take action against them. This will be a warning to the people. We understand from the report that the number of deaths from malaria was less in 1916 than in the previous year. But we doubt if from the very reduction in the death-rate, it can be concluded that the people are not affected by this fever as much now as they used to be. There are many who having become victims to malaria, have been almost crippled. If it is true that this disease is conveyed by the bite of a kind of mosquito, the people should be made to understand this and then they will devise means to prevent the breeding of this mosquito. It will not do for some officials merely to go round. We hope the Health Officer will consider all these things and improve the sanitation of the people in this city during his tenure of office.

The sanitation of Madras.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

Mr. Molony's humour.

22. The Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd August, publishes in Telugu the remark of the Madras Mail on the observation made by the Hindu that the humour of Mr. Molony has proved to be ridiculous, and states that it need add no comments on the matter.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The Narasaraopet Municipality.

23. In the course of its review of the Municipal administration of Narasaraopet, the Andhrapatrika, of the 25th August, says:— If municipalities should have good drainage, the Municipal Councils should have plenty of money and the freedom to spend it. Without good drainage, it will not be possible to improve sanitation and keep the roads in good condition. . . It is strange that the Collector had not the curiosity to inspect the Narasaraopet Municipality even while he passed through it. It will be well for the Government to grant the Municipal Council of Narasaraopet the freedom of election.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

An overbridge.

24. The Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd August, suggests that an overbridge may be constructed over the railway crossing at Periamet.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

The resettlement of the Nilgiri district.

25. Referring to the report on the resettlement of the Nilgiri district, the Swadesamitran, of the 28th August, expresses its surprise at no mention having been made either in this report or in the order of the Government thereon about the necessity of establishing schools for the Badugas and improving their condition by means of education, which it is the duty of the Government to attend to, and reiterating the arguments adduced by the Government for not enhancing the assessment in 35 out of the 42 villages in the taluks of Coonoor and Ootacamund, observes:—In view of the facts stated in the report relating to the special hardships suffered by the Badugas, the order that the assessment need not be increased should have had reference only to the lands of these Badugas. But the order says that the assessment would not be increased, for another fifteen years, for the lands of others, the majority of whom are planters. It appears the coffee plants are affected by some disease and that therefore much interest is not evinced in this plantation. But the produce from tea plantations is said to be increasing. It is not fair to increase the assessment where the produce is on the decrease, and it will be discouraging a new plantation, if the assessment thereon is increased. The Board, therefore, recommended that the assessment need not at all be increased. We have no objection to this order, but our prayer is that this principle should be applied even in the case of other districts. The fact that there has been an increase in the value of land and the scale of prices and in the population should not, by itself, be deemed to be an argument for an increase of assessment. Care should be taken to see that the people have enough left, after paying assessment, for their subsistence.

(h) Railways.

26. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 22nd August, invites the attention of the Railway authorities to the necessity of constructing a platform at the Taliparamba road station and of a gate on the road leading from the backyard of the station to Taliparamba.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The necessity of a platform at the Taliparamba road station.

(k) General.

27. The Swadesamitran, of the 22nd August, reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of the meeting held in the Madras Mahajana Sabha hall on the 20th idem in connection with this scheme, which are published in the Hindu of the 21st idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Reform scheme.

In the course of a leaderette on this subject, the Dravidan, of the 24th August, observes:—Whatever schemes of reforms may be drafted in England for introduction in the administration of this country, we can openly declare that these reforms cannot have any permanent value unless compulsory primary education is introduced and immediate steps are taken to uplift the lower classes and measures devised to create a sense of equality in the minds of all Indians. The reformers should, therefore, immediately bring forward proposals for Indian educational reform, and we trust that Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford will bestow their attention on this subject.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Indian reforms.

Adverting to the Conferences held in Coimbatore, North Arcot and Chittoor, the Lokopakari, of the 27th August, observes:—All these conferences have unanimously declared that the Indians should acquire greater powers in the administration of this country, and have urged that such reforms should be introduced therein as will gradually lead to the grant of Home Rule to India. No party demands the immediate grant of this Home Rule. The British statesmen too are giving out similar views in the matter. It is, therefore, necessary that the officers of the Government of India should follow these views.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

Indian reforms.

Referring to the statement of the Secretary of State in Parliament regarding Indian administrative reforms, the Manorama, of the 24th August, approves of his decision to go over to India with a view to consult the Viceroy, the Governors and the Indian leaders, and says:—But his visit to India will be productive of no good to the country, if he goes back to England with the idea that he has learned a good deal of the state of affairs here from the reports of officials at Simla and their supporters. He should take special care to make himself acquainted with the views of recognised

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Indian administrative reforms.

Indian leaders and representatives. He says that reforms in the administrative machinery of India should be introduced only "step by step", and from this it must be inferred that the reforms which the Secretary of State proposes to introduce will not come into effect in the near future. But the granting of commissions in the army to nine Indian officers engaged in the present war may be considered as the first step in the ascent, which no doubt, was long overdue. In any case, it is better not to be jubilant over the present statement, so that we may not be disappointed when the reforms effected fall short of our expectations. His announcement would have given greater satisfaction to the people if the Secretary of State had decided that till he holds a consultation with the Government of India and the Indian representatives the repressive measures of the local Governments, which have caused such agitation in India, soould be deferred, and that such of the workers for the advancement of their country as have been interned should be liberated.

Yogakshemam, Trichur, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Referring to the same subject the Yogakshemam, of the 24th August, writes:—It is stated that the Secretary of State comes to India with the object of considering the question of making the Indian Government more responsible to the people and of "gradually" introducing such changes in the Indian Administration as will make Indians fit for self-government. There is a great deal of suspicion among Indian leaders as to whether anything is specially meant by the word "gradually". Some people say that it is now over a century since this word "gradually" is being heard, and that, judged from the administrative changes during that century, it will take several centuries to get self-government by such gradual changes. Others wish to know whether he intends to introduce any changes which can be carried into effect during the life-time of the existing generation. While yet other people contend that before carrying out reforms, the first thing that should be done is that those who have been interned for agitating for reforms in the administration should be set at liberty, failing which the Secretary of State cannot expect co-operation from the Indian peoples in his present mission. On the whole the people of India do not seem to be enthusiastic about the visit of the Secretary of State nor about the subjects which would engage his attention. Many people wish to see that administrative changes, instead of being talked of, are actually carried out.

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore City, Aug. 29th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu on Indian reforms.

The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 29th August, in another article welcomes Mr. Montagu's recent announcement regarding reforms in the Indian administration and his proposed visit to India, and observes that his words are a clear indication of his earnest love and regard for India and that his visit will doubtless lead to most beneficial changes in the administration and to greater cordiality between the rulers and the ruled.

Mysore Star, Mysore, Aug. 26th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Mysore Star, of the 26th August, reproduces the substance of the above and adds that India ought to be equally grateful to His Excellency the Viceroy for recognising the far-reaching importance of the Secretary of State's visit to India at this juncture. The paper says that the throwing open of the commissioned ranks to Indians is "another boon" which will be hailed with joy in all quarters with feelings of deep gratitude.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Promised reforms for India.

The Qaumi Report, of the 25th August, referring to the pronouncement of the Secretary of State for India on the subject of the proposed reforms for India, makes the following observations:—"From the Secretary of State's speeches it appears that he is well acquainted with the sentiments and aspirations of Indians and admits that the failure in Mesopotamia has opened the eyes of the British nation, and that the Imperial Government is convinced that the present form of administration is not satisfactory.

Had the Imperial Government in India been established on a firm and broad basis, the Mesopotamia disaster would never have occurred. It is, however, regrettable to find that Mr. Montagu has not considered the position of Muhammadans from the point of view of their importance and deserts. Perhaps he has not hitherto been afforded the necessary opportunity of understanding the position, but now that he is to visit India in his capacity of Secretary of State, we are sure that he will consider the Muhammadan question from their national standpoint. He has saved the Muhammadans from the dangers of Home Rule, for, up to very recently, they were not likely to derive any advantage from the measure, and, consequently, we had not quite made up our minds to agree or disagree on this political question. Possibly the same occurred to Mr. Montagu, for, he too appears to have had an open mind like ourselves.

The Muhammadans cannot derive any immediate advantage from this constitutional freedom. They are backward in education and commerce and require a very considerable time to get ready for the responsibility. Should Home Rule be granted at once, it would be necessary to safeguard our rights and maintain our distinct and unique status.

Political reforms.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th August, says:—We wrote that Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms only represented the old aims and aspirations of the people and that they were insufficient to satisfy the aims which the people have begun to cherish after the commencement of the war. Even the resolutions adopted in the non-Brahman conference went beyond Mr. Gokhale's scheme. If the reforms to be granted are to be like those suggested by Mr. Gokhale, they will surely not meet with the approval of the people. It will not be reasonable to publish Mr. Gokhale's scheme now and ask the people to accept old opinions. The people should represent to Mr. Montagu that only the Congress's scheme of reforms will be acceptable to the Indians. . . The Manchester Guardian has advised Mr. Montagu not to rest contented with consulting the officers but to take into consideration the opinion of the people. . . It may be believed that Mr. Montagu has made up his mind to satisfy the people's aspirations, and that he will not be influenced by the advice of those who are opposed to reforms. We need not be anxious. . . We must necessarily tell Mr. Montagu that the people can never enjoy the full benefit of any reforms unless repressive measures are repealed.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Reform scheme.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd August, publishes in Telugu a gist of the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma on the subject of reform scheme found in the Hindu of the 21st August.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The National Congress.

28. The Swadesamitran, of the 22nd August, gives a Tamil version of the letter of Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar, regarding the presentation of a petition to the Parliament for the release of Mrs. Besant, in case she is elected President of the Congress, and of the enclosures thereto. Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar's letter and the enclosures referred to above appear in the Hindu of the 22nd and 23rd idem, respectively.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Internment of Mrs. Besant.

29. The Dravidan, of the 22nd August, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held in Madura on the 16th idem, to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant. In the course of the report, the correspondent makes the following observations:—Tiruppur Doctor Varadarajulu Nayudu and another, a Deputy Collector, have given up their offices and come forward to work for Home Rule. Are these Brahmans or non-Brahmans? Whose curse or whose sin is it that our people should not realise even now that the Brahmans are making a cat's paw of the Dravidians to gain their own advantage?

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug 22nd, 1917.

Internment of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues.

The Swadesamitran, of the 22nd August, publishes the proceedings of the public meetings held at Trivadi, Negapatam, Kollengode, Agaramangudi, Tirumiyachchur, Tuticorin, Sulur and Gooty on the 16th August 1917 to protest against the internment orders. All these meetings, except those held at Tirumiyachchur and Sulur, were held under the auspices of the local Home Rule Leagues. Resolutions were also passed at Tuticorin that the externment order issued by the Government against Mr Karandikar was improper and illegal, that such orders as these are productive of harm to the British Empire, and that the above order should, therefore, be immediately cancelled as well as the internment orders issued against Mrs. Besant and others.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The communiqués of the Government of India.

50. Referring to the two communiqués issued by the Government of India regarding the announcement of Mr. Montagu to visit India and the conferment of commissions in the army on nine Indians, the Swadesamitran, of the 22nd August, observes:—As these communiqués should be deemed to be definite declarations regarding the future condition of India, it becomes necessary to understand their real meaning. It cannot be denied that they are somewhat disappointing to many who expected the introduction of important reforms; for these communiqués have been worded with great caution, nay very unnecessary caution. As regards the conferment of commissions on nine Indians, we appreciate a longstanding prayer of ours having been granted. But the introduction of petty and belated reforms will not be valued much now on account of the new spirit that is actuating the Indians at present. It is only the grant of reforms connected with Home Rule that will be welcomed heartily. It will be a great mistake to think that the very fact of Mr. Montagu having become the Secretary of State will help the grant of Home Rule to India. The great machinery of the Government of India is wholly made up of the bureaucrats Whatever change there may be in the individual parts of the machinery, the work of the machine will follow only in the same groove. We have, on several occasions, seen many persons of liberal views forsaking their independence and opinion the moment they are linked to this machinery. So it is not an easy thing to go against the principles of these bureaucrats. But our consolation is that Mr. Montagu seems to have understood the real state of affairs. His remarks about the Indian administration in the course of his speech on the Mesopotamian debate, show clearly that he is fully aware of the grievances of the Indians and that he has definite proposals about Indian reforms. But though he had occasion to have personal knowledge of India four years back, he does not know how far she has advanced subsequently. That is why he has a wrong idea that there is no active agitation in India about Home Rule. This will be made clear as soon as he comes here and sees the country. Now it is necessary to note two points which are made clear by these communiqués. One is that the reforms proposed by the Government of India without consulting the Indians have not been approved in full and the other is that the final proposals will be framed only after consultation with the Indian representatives. At this juncture, the Indians should offer proper counsel in one voice in view of the progress of the country. There should be complete mutual confidence between the Government and the people. The latter should be made to understand that the Government will be ready to fulfil their legitimate aspirations. There is only one way of doing it and that is the cessation of the repressive policy and the release of the interned. Mrs. Besant has not said anything more of the bureaucrats than what Mr. Montagu did. Rightly or wrongly the people seem to be under the impression that Mrs. Besant has been interned only for her having criticised the bureaucrats. So this lady and her colleagues should be released so as to remove all displeasure and disgust from the minds of the people. Unless Mr. Montagu attends to this first, his bona fide proposals will not evoke any enthusiasm in the present condition of India.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Referring to this subject, the Hindu Nesan, of the 22nd August, says:—The announcement of Mr. Montagu is bound to give some satisfaction to the Indians, as it has been long expected by them. If the Government had made this announcement a little earlier there would not have appeared in India all the unrest that exists now. The proposed visit of Mr. Montagu to India may cause some apprehension to a few on the ground that after coming here he would be sorrounded by the bureaucrats and the Viceroy who listens to their words, and would not therefore be accessible to our people. But those who know Mr. Montagu well will not entertain any such fear; for he is not a man to change his views easily as a result of his environments. Now there is one thing which the Indians should do. They should cease agitation and state definitely and clearly their wants and ideals. The announcement that the Indians would be granted commissions in the army is sufficient proof for the fact that the British Government and the Secretary of State for India are willing and ready to introduce reforms in the Indian administration, which will not be disappointing to the Indians.

31. The Swadesamitran, of the 22nd August, publishes in Tamil the continuation of the proceedings of this conference held at Arni which appears in the Hindu of the 21st idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The North Arcot District Conference.

A correspondent by name Chinnaswami Ayyar who claims to have a large extent of land under the Valkadai-Mukkur hissa tank in the Cheyyar taluk of the North Arcot district, contributes a long article to the Swadesamitran, of the 28th August, in which he expresses his appreciation of the resolutions passed by North Arcot District Conference and reiterating the arguments adduced against the increase of assessment in the North Arcot district at the resettlement and against the raising of the Valkadai-Mukkur hissa tank from the second to the first class, as a source of irrigation, observes:—If our leaders ask for liberty for India, the Government say that it cannot be had all at once, but should be acquired gradually. If, without applying the same principle to the resettlement of this district, they increase the assessment by almost 50 per cent, how is it possible for the ryot to adjust his wants? As a matter of fact, we, the ryots, here cannot pay anything more than the usual rate. But, as the Government are maintaining a separate department for this purpose at a great cost, they may perhaps raise the assessment by 5 to 10 per cent This will not affect the people much. Even now, there is nothing to prevent the Government from reconsidering the resettlement of this district, and we are ever praying that the Government will adopt this course.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

The North Arcot District Conference.

32. The Swadesamitran, of the 22nd August, also reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of this conference in full as they appear in the Hindu of the 21st August 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The Chittoor District Conference.

33. The Swadesamitran, of the 24th August, reproduces in Tamil the speech delivered by Mr. K. Narayana Sastriyar, as Chairman of the Reception Committee of this conference, which was held at Coimbatore recently.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

The Coimbatore District Conference.

Referring to the Non-Brahman Conference at Coimbatore, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 24th August, observes:—When it is known that the Conference was held with the deliberate intention of spoiling national work, how is it possible to expect from it anything but the vilification of the Brahmans, unjust accusations against the national movements, and eulogy of the authorities who are carrying on the policy of repression? If, by this type of conduct, the Non-Brahmans are in any way likely to elevate their own condition, and render the nation more self-reliant, we would earnestly advise all brethren not to hinder their work. If the authorities are prepared to grant self-government, let them grant it to them alone. The Brahmans should only rejoice at it. We are eagerly looking forward to the privileges which will result from this new Conference. Dr. Nayar who is officiating as the high priest at the sacrifice avowing anti-Brahmanism for such a long time now in this presidency and others of his fold must be thinking that they have done a meritorious deed in convening this Conference of the Non-Brahmans at Coimbatore.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 24th, 1917.

The Coimbatore Conference.

34. The Desabhimani, of the 18th August, has the following English leaderette on this subject:—"We are deeply sorry to learn that the Madras Government have recently ordered for the forfeiture of the security of Rs. 2,000, which Mr. P. K. Telang, the keeper of the New India Press, gave to Government for his conducting the New India Press. The reason assigned by the Government for having passed this order is that certain articles which are objectionable in their view were published in New India and they are specified in the order. The internments of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers have already caused much resentment and feeling in the public mind and it is nearly two months today since this measure was taken by Government. Though we have no mind to comment upon the nature of the articles referred to in the order, with a view to discuss if they are objectionable or not, one thing must necessarily be said in this connection. It is desirable that our Government endeavour to take a calm and sober view of the present political condition in India and pursue a policy that may not embitter the feelings of the people but tend to take them into their confidence."

DESABHIMANI, Cuddalore, Aug. 18th, 1917.

New India security forfeited.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

35. The Swadesamitran, of the 22nd August, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Rangoon Gazette, the Punjabee, the Civil and Military Gazette and the Tribune on the announcement made by Mr. Montagu to visit India which appear in the Hindu of the same date.

Mr. Montagu's visit to India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 23rd August, reproduces in Tamil the opinions expressed by the Statesman, the Indian Daily News and the Amrita Bazaar Patrika on this subject, which are published in the Hindu of the same date.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 24th August, gives a Tamil version of the opinions of the Statesman and the Indian Daily News, as they appear in the Hindu of the 23rd idem.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

The Dravidan, of the 23rd August, welcomes the announcement that Mr. Montagu will visit India shortly for the purpose of deciding the reforms to be introduced, and remarks:—The Home Rulers have been severely criticising the speech of Mr. Montagu in which he announced his proposed visit. They clamour for their opinion being acted upon by him without his consulting the Provincial Governments or other English statesmen. We hope Mr. Montagu will not yield to this suggestion. The Government of India should be a little careful in choosing the Indian experts to be consulted by Mr. Montagu. Instead of asking every one to offer his opinion and the Government deciding later contrary to such opinion and creating a good deal of confusion thereby, it will be better to choose competent experts in the very beginning whose opinion may be consulted.

The proposed visit of Mr. Montagu to India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 25th August, reproduces in Tamil the suggestion made by the Times of India regarding the postponement of the departure from India of the three Indian Members of the India Council until after Mr. Montagu has been a few weeks here.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Referring to the federal ideal suggested by Mr. Montagu for India, the Andhrapatrika, of the 25th August, identifies that ideal with the goal in the view of the advocates of the Andhra movement and says:—At this juncture, there is no use if the Andhras rest satisfied with resolutions and pious wishes. The members of the Legislative Council should point out to the people what they have to do and begin to do it themselves. . . . If the present opportunity is not availed of and the enthusiasm is not translated into action, it will not be possible to reach the goal soon. . . . At a time when the English people are sacrificing their life and treasure to put down German militarism, the Indian nation has requested the Government to lay the foundation of self-government in India. Mr. Montagu is visiting India. The speech of Lord Islington bears testimony to the fact that the demand of the Muhammadans and the non-Brahmans for separate representation in the scheme of self-government has attracted the attention of the English people. If the provincial ideal of the Andhras had been adopted by all the Indian communities the division of the country into different provinces would have been deemed as the first step in a scheme of self-government. . . . Mr. Montagu is coming out to India to hear the wishes of the representative assemblies. In the meantime the Andhras will do well to discuss their aims and publish a scheme for themselves, holding a separate meeting if necessary. They must by their endeavours set an example to other provinces, so that those provinces also may agree to the provincial division of the country being included in the scheme of national movement. If by any cause, these endeavours do not succeed, at least the Andhras by themselves may wait on Mr. Montagu and represent their aims reasonably and satisfactorily.

Mr. Montagu's visit to India.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

The Adhraprakasika, of the 23rd August, says:—The appointment of Mr. Montagu, who is a Liberal, in the place of Mr. Chamberlain, who is a Conservative, has met with the approbation of all Indians, and the Home Rulers have praised him to the skies for his speech on the report of the Mesopotamia Commission. But now that they hear he will come to India and consult the local authorities and representative bodies, they have begun to decry him. The Home Rulers who want to have Home Rule at once do not like the idea of his visit. . . There is little doubt that the Home Rulers number only a few, and Mr. Montagu is not so mad as to mistake the agitation of a few for that of the whole country. . . The Home Rulers fear that separate representation will affect the exercise of their authority and therefore object to it. They do not like the idea of class representation and want to make a monopoly of all offices in Government service for ever. It is audacious to think that the people and the rulers will be influenced by the Home Rulers. We can say that the visit of Mr. Montagu is welcome to all, for he will look to the interests of all personally. . . It is the duty of the Government to raise the backward classes like the Muhammadans, the Christians and the non-Brahmans to the level of the more advanced classes They have to confer commissioned offices in the army separately on the backward classes.

Mr. Montagu.

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The new Secretary of State for India.

The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 20th August, referring to the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India, writes:—The present Secretary of State for India was formerly Under Secretary of State for India, and so he is not altogether unacquainted with India's needs and requirements and the ideas of its people. It is a good thing for the people of India to have, as Secretary of State, a cautious man who understands their country and their sentiments. Perhaps it is not generally known that Mr. Montagu is by religion not a Christian but a Jew.

God grant that, from the point of view of the Indian people, his tenure of office may be successful, fortunate and auspicious.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu's visit.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 25th August, says that several people understand the words of Mr. Montagu in several ways and remarks:—We fear that the mind of Mr. Montagu may be confused by the Home Rulers laying stress on passive resistance, the Andhras, on the movement for an Andhra Province, and the Muhammadans and other classes, on the right of separate representation. But Mr. Montagu is a great man and we need not fear. . . Mr. Venkatappiah says in an article published in New India that no country which is administered in a foreign language enjoys perfect self-government in the world. We must first have the country divided on a language basis and administered in the languages of the country. Then we must endeavour to attain swaraj. . . Differences of opinion are on the increase and the leaders of the people are unable to reconcile them.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The Secretary of State's visit to India.

The Qaumi Report, of the 22nd August, writes:—Mr. Montagu, the Secretary of State for India, has announced in Parliament that with the approval of His Majesty, he is proceeding to India to discuss the question of reforms. The Muhammadans will take advantage of this opportunity to obtain a recognition of their special status in the scheme of reform.

DRAVIDAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 23nd, 1917.

Congress and self-government.

36. The Dravidapatrika, of the 22nd August, observes:—Some people think that the agitation for Home Rule carried on now throughout India has been brought about only by Mrs. Besant in the last two or three years. This is a mistake, for there has been such an agitation in India on several occasions before this Mrs. Besant came forward to conduct this agitation on western lines, without transgressing the law and has increased the thirst of the people for Home Rule.

The paper then traces how the congress has been agitating for the last 32 years to remove the defects in the Indian administration, how, on account of the opinion of several Indians that as much benefit has not accrued from the work of the congress as was expected, it was expressed by the late Mr. Dadabhoi Naoroji as the President of the Congress in 1906 that, unless India was granted Home Rule, there was no possibility of all these defects being removed, how, after the split in the Congress in 1907 and the partition of Bengal by Lord Curzon, the Bengalis preached the cause of Home Rule and swadeshism throughout the country which led to the annulment of the partition and the introduction of the Minto-Morley Reforms in 1909–10, how, owing to the spirit of these reforms not having been carried out by the officials to whom was entrusted the duty of giving effect to them, the Indians began to demand further privileges and it was decided in the congress of 1916, where the Hindus and the Muhammadans had been brought together by the skilful efforts of the lady who is now all alone on the Nilgiris, to spread the idea of Home Rule to the uncultured masses also and how, as nothing was done to give effct to this decision for a long time, Mrs. Besant started Home Rule Leagues in different centres for this purpose and continues:—

Similar efforts were made by those in Northern India to spread the idea of Home Rule among the people, and yet the Government are trying to suppress these workers believing that they obstruct the progress of India. It is clear from the comments of the numerous newspapers in this country and the protest meetings held in several places that the policy adopted by the Government is an incorrect one. So the Congress committee at its meeting in Bombay decided to adopt the method of passive resistance in propagating the idea of Home Rule among the masses. If this decision is given effect to, many people will surely have to go to jail for disobeying the law. Of course there will not be much difficulty for the Government, if the number of those imprisoned is only one or two. If a large number of Indians are prepared to go to jail, it will cause great inconvenience to the authorities. So it is hoped that the Government will come forward to take the necessary steps to quench the thirst of the Indians for Home Rule.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

Agricultural loans.

37. Adverting to a communiquè recently issued by the Madras Government which shows that the loans granted by the Government for making improvements in agriculture have not been availed of by the people to a large extent, the Swadesamitran, of the 23rd August, invites the attention of the Government to the fact that only very few people are aware of the particulars connected with the grant of agricultural loans by the Government, and observes that if these particulars are published for the information of the people, many of them will doubtless come forward to avail themselves of the loans granted by the Government.

SWADESAMITRAN Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

Commissions in the army.

38. The Swadesamitran, of the 23rd August, gives a Tamil version of the comments of the Amirta Bazaar Patrika, about the recent pronouncement made by the Secretary of State for India regarding the conferment of commissions in the army on the Indians, as they appear in the Hindu of the same date.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore City, Aug. 29th, 1917.

Indians in the Army.

The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 29th August, referring to the news that Indians will be admitted to commissioned ranks in the Army eulogises the generosity of the Imperial authorities.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Commissions for Indians.

The Qaumi Report, of the 22nd August, referring to the grant of commissions to Indians, writes:—It is common knowledge that hitherto Indians could not rise higher than the rank of Subadar-Major. They have now been granted commissions, which means that they can rise to the ranks of Lieutenant, Captain, Major or Colonel. But nine is a very small number. It is hoped, however, that there are, on active service, many Indian officers, who are worthy of the grades of Major and Colonel.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Indians and commissions in the army.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 25th August, rejoices at the decision of the Government to grant commissions in the Army to Indians, and observes that the people of India ought to be grateful to them for having recognised the claims of Indians at least now.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

Mr. Hassan Imam on Home Rule.

39. The Swadesamitran, of the 23rd August, reproduces in Tamil the speech said to have been delivered in vernacular by Mr. Hassan Imam in moving the Home Rule resolution in the last Behar Provincial Conference, in which he expressed the opinion that the Indians were entirely fit to have Home Rule, that they should go on agitating for it until they get it, that they were till then treated as children by the Government, that this would no longer do and that they should be treated as men.

Passive resistance.

40. The Swadesamitran, of the 18th August, abstracts in Tamil the further portion of the letter said to have been written by Mr. Gandhi to the Indian Opinion of South Africa on the advantages of adopting the policy of passive resistance, referred to in paragraph 27 of Report No. 34 of 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 24th August, reproduces in Tamil a lecture said to have been delivered by Mr. Lakshminarayana, Barrister-at-Law, at Brahma Mandir, Georgetown, advocating passive resistance, in which the lecturer, after convincing the audience that there is no justification for the plea that the Indians are not fit for Home Rule and that the very raising of a doubt regarding their fitness is an insult to them considering their past history, and appealing to those assembled to adopt passive resistance, is reported to have observed :—If you use the weapon of swadeshism zealously so as to make the mills in Manchester stop work for at least a day in a week, we will surely win. If you take steps here which affect the merchants in England, our prayers will be surely granted without any demur.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

A correspondent, by name P. S. Ramasubba Ayyar, the editor of the Purnachandrodayam of Madura, contributes an article to the above paper on the mighty force of passive resistance as a means to gain an end and, intimating his decision to tour round the country establishing Home Rule Leagues and swadeshi bazaars and preaching to the people the advantages of passive resistance, until Mrs. Besant and her colleagues are released, appeals to all Indians to be prepared to sacrifice everything for improving the condition of this country.

The Swadesamitran, of the 25th August, publishes in Tamil the proceedings of a public meeting held in Negapatam, under the joint auspices of the Tanjore District Congress Committee and the Negapatam Home Rule League, when a resolution was passed approving the proposition of the Madras Provincial Congress Committee to adopt the policy of passive resistance.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 22nd August, reports that at meetings held at Triplicane, Egmore and Rayapuram, the question of passive resistance was discussed. It says also that the Maharashtra Association dwelt on the advisability of resorting to passive resistance.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th August, reports that the Kistna District Congress Committee has decided that the policy of passive resistance should be necessarily adopted.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 25th August, says, with reference to the disapproval expressed by Mr. N. Subba Rao Pantulu and six others, of the proposed adoption of passive resistance :—It will be well if the Home Rulers heed their words. Passive resistance will not be of use in our country. . . The Ganjām District Association entertains doubts about the efficacy of passive resistance. The people of Chittoor and some others want passive resistance. . . Mr. Montagu is coming to India to consider about the political rights to be given to India. The conditions of India are in this wise. We cannot say whether India will be granted political rights or whether the matters will end in confusion.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Desabhimani, of the 26th August, reports Mr. P. Suryanarayana Rao to have said at a meeting at Guntūr :—Mrs. Besant represented to the Government among other things that they should carry out their pledge to give over the administration of India to the Indians. For this, she had to suffer internment. We cannot realize her ideals unless we all join together and work with courage and firmness of mind. Though our agitation is constitutional, the Government are subjecting us to hard punishments. Though we represent to them that this is unjust and that many statesmen have pronounced that the agitation for swaraj is not unlawful, the Government have turned a deaf ear and have begun to enforce repressive laws. So long as we submit to this, we will be made victims to such laws. We must not mind the enforcement of the laws by them and submit to it. If we do so, we cannot deserve to be called heroic in action. By this do not suppose that I am exhorting you to break the peace. Our duty cannot be accomplished unless we refuse to submit to their orders. This is what our people call passive resistance.

DESABHIMANI, Guntūr, Aug. 26th, 1917.

. . . Prahlada resorted to passive resistance when he was subjected to severe trials by his father Hiranyakasipa. He showed God in a pillar and his father was at last immensely pleased with him. Every individual naturally endeavours to attain liberty. Our rulers will surely grant our desire for swaraj. Unless we adopt passive resistence, that desire of ours will not be fulfilled.

The paper reports Mr. Gollapudi Ramanathayya to have said:—Even the father will not willingly give up the management of the house to his son, however clever he may be. If he does, he can no more exercise the independence he enjoyed before. . . In the same manner, the Government do not give us self-government, but intern the Home Rulers, and impose security on their papers with a view to suppress the papers. If self-government is granted to us, the comforts of the Goverment officials administering our country on behalf of the Parliament, will be affected. They are exercising authority over us just as they please. If they lose their independence, by giving liberty to us and to our country which they have been ruling with unlimited authority, nowhere else can they exercise similar authority. In a sprit of self-interest, therefore, they say that our agitation is unlawful, and that our papers are beginning to write seditious articles. They then impose securities on our papers, intern leaders, and do such other things. By such designs, they try to suppress our agitation and keep the desires and aims of the Indians concealed from the people of England. Fearing that the people of England may grant our desire for self-government if by a circulation of the papers they should come to know of the ideals of the Indians, they place such obstructions in the way of papers circulating largely. We must therefore resort to passive resistance. Unless this is adopted, the goal cannot be reached. As the rulers enforce such repressive laws against constitutional agitation, we must not mind those laws.

The paper then publishes the speech of Mr. Chatti Narasimha Rao, in which he refers to a case of successful passive resistance by the washermen of the place some years ago and placed that as an example for the Indians to follow today. He remarked:—"If a Police Inspector is sent here to stop the meeting, you will say, 'No! we will proceed.' This is passive resistance." He said in conclusion. Pa sive resistance depends upon will force. The correct meaning of this resistance: is to do one's duty with firmness and without fickleness of mind. May the descendants of the Rishis who were noted from time immemorial for the eminence which they attained by mere soul-force, call to mind once today the example of Prahlada and others and establish righteousness.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 24th August, says in its leaderette:—The Madras Provincial Congress Committee has boldly decided that passive resistance is not unlawful and recommended its adoption. It is difficult to know whether it is lawful or unlawful until it is adopted. The passive resisters must not approach Mr. Montagu and ask him for anything.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

Referring to the recent discussion at the Madras Provincial Conference regarding the question of passive resistance, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 30th August, says that passive resistance implies a degree of harmony and mutual cordiality among the different classes and communities which constitute the nation which is impossible under the strifes and animosities which seem to characterise the people at present, and that judging from the present state of things one would almost despair of India ever becoming a united nation.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The manifesto against passive resistance.

41. The Swadesamitran, of the 25th August, reproduces in Tamil the manifesto issued by some popular leaders against the adoption of passive resistance immediately and expressing its surprise at this manifesto not having been communicated to it, observes:—The advisability of the method of adopting passive resistance was discussed recently by the Provincial Congress Committee for two days and it came to the conclusion that it should be adopted. Subsequent to this decision there has been no change in the circumstances under which it was arrived at. Mrs. Besant and her colleagues are still in internment. The policy of repression cannot be said to have ceased. Under these circumstances, what has made a few leaders to issue this manifesto? Are they not bound by the duty of abiding by the decision of the majority? If they differed in opinion, the proper course would have been for them to convene a meeting of the Congress Committee again and to discuss the question. They have evidently not thought over the point whether the issue of a manifesto by them, though it may secure for them cheap popularity, is in consonance with their responsibility as popular leaders.

42. In the course of a leader under this heading the Dravidan, of the 23rd August, repeats its argument against the grant of Home Rule to India at this juncture, that it will lead only to the administration being centred in the hands of a few Brahmans and makes fun of the clamour of the Home Rulers by describing the proceedings of an imaginary parliament in which each Brahman member dwells upon his own hobby.

The present situation.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

43. The Tamilian, of the 15th August, publishes a number of verses from the pen of a correspondent which condemn the Brahmans as having written false books styled Vedas, Puranas and Manudharma Sastra to support their claim of belonging to the highest caste and to help them in eking out a livelihood and calls them mlechas.

Brahmans and Non-Brahmans.

TAMILIAN, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

44. A correspondent of the Tamilian, of the 15th August, contributes an article to it in which he refers to the internment of Mrs. Besant and others under the Defence of India Act and the fear entertained by men like Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar and Tilak that they would also be interned and adds:—The best policy for the Government will be to put down every one whoever he may be, that causes intense excitement in the country. It is necessary that our Government of India and the local Government should take prompt steps in the matter. It is owing to their delay that even the old men in villages are being taught to claim Home Rule. It is only 10 per cent of the people that are educated in India, and so the majority have no idea whatever of politics. Some seditionists go to these people and spoil their minds by sweet words. These people, instead of speaking the truth, find fault with the Government and poison the minds of the villagers. I hope the Government will move swiftly in interning all these under the Defence of India Act.

The activities of the Home Rulers.

TAMILIAN, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1917.

The Mahavikata Dutan, of the 25th August, also condemns the activities of the Home Rulers and makes fun of a few educated Indians clamouring for Home Rule when the majority of the people are not able to make both ends meet and when there is enough of internal dissensions in the country on account of caste and creed. The paper thinks that there is no use of granting Home Rule to India until compulsory education is introduced throughout the country.

MAHAVIKATA DUTAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

45. The Swadesamitran, of the 24th August, publishes, from the pen of a correspondent, the proceedings of a meeting held at Kumbakōnam, on the 21st idem, under the auspices of this League, when Mr. N. Tiruvengadathayyangar is reported to have observed that by Home Rule the people were only urging for the grant of more powers to their representatives and for the consultation by the Government of the opinion of the people prior to the enactment of any legislation undertaken by them.

The Home Rule League, Kumbakōnam.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

46. The Dravidan, of the 23rd August, and Swadesamitran and the Hindu Nesan, of the 24th idem, reproduce in Tamil the proceedings of a public meeting held under the auspices of this League at Trichinopoly on the 19th idem, when Mrs. Sivakamu Ammal, Mr. Sri Ram and Mr. Deobhanker are reported to have advocated the adoption of the policy of passive resistance. The proceedings are published in the Hindu of the 23rd idem.

The Home Rule League, Trichinopoly.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917; SWADESAMITRAN and HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

The Home Rule League, Mannārgudi.

47. The Swadesamitran, of the 28th August, also publishes the proceedings of a public meeting held, under the auspices of this League, at Mannārgudi, when Mr. Sri Ram is reported to have addressed the audience and, in the course of his observations, to have stated that Home Rule under the British Government was the ideal of the Indian people, to have advocated the adoption of the policy of passive resistance to oppose courageously all unjust measures of the bureaucracy who stand in the way of the grant of that rule and to have impressed that the first duty of the Indians was to regain the freedom of speech and the liberty of the press.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The Madras Special Provincial Conference.

48. The Swadesamitran, of the 25th August, gives a Tamil version of the first day's proceedings of this conference, as it appears in the Hindu of the same date.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

The special session of the Madras Provincial Conference.

The Swadesamitran, of the 27th August, reproduces in Tamil the first and second days' proceedings of this session as well as the speech of the Chairman of the Reception Committee and in the course of a leader commenting on the proceedings, observes:—We need not dwell upon the main features of this conference, as they will be patent to any one who has watched the proceedings. The resolutions passed at this session, which express the views of the people and their feelings at the present juncture and point out the remedies to be promptly applied by the Government and the efforts to be made by the people, deserve careful attention by all. The proceedings clearly show that the mufassal delegates were more earnest and enthusiastic about the resolution on passive resistance than about the others. For all outward purposes, the reasons for this may be the omission of this subject from the agenda of the conference as originally published and the manifesto issued by some leaders on the day previous to the date of the conference suggesting that the adoption of the method of passive resistance might be dropped for the present. But the main cause of their enthusiasm, which was patent, was their own earnest opinion on this question. This should be noted by the authorities and the moderates among us. Why did the majority of the delegates in the conference throw away the suggestion of these moderate friends? As all of them had an interest in obtaining political reforms and were anxious to have them soon, they too knew that they should secure the good will of those that had to shape such reforms. But is it necessary or conducive to our benefit that we should forsake our natural rights in order to obtain political privileges? Should we lose the liberty of our person for the sake of securing rights of self-government? In whatever manner and at whatever time, political privileges are secured, when the natural rights of a people, who are not slaves by birth, are crippled by means of repressive measures, the first step towards the acquisition of Home Rule is to try to get rid of such measures. As the authorities, especially in the mufassal, have been given excessive powers to curtail the privileges of the people by means of repressive measures, which are both subtle and severe, and these powers are being exercised in several ways, we think the popular representatives are quite justified in seeking to remedy the state of affairs by any means, nay even by adopting the method of passive resistance. But many, who are inimical to our countrymen, will try to put a dangerous construction upon the resolution on passive resistance and, magnifying its objects, misrepresent facts. It is necessary that our people should refute any such attempt. The resolution merely declares that passive resistance is a constitutional method and that it will be desirable to adopt this method only when peacefully conducted political work and public meetings are prohibited by the repressive policy of the authorities. We do not see any cause herein for danger or surprise, nor does there seem to be anything in it indicative of impatience or immoderation. Some say that there will be no necessity or occasion in the future for adopting this method in connection with public meetings. If that be so, no harm can result from this resolution. Anyway, this resolution only conveys the public opinion through those who were present at the Conference, and no definite action has been taken on it. Who can deny that it is a just opinion? This expression of opinion will only make people view things in the right manner and no one can say that, on account of it, there will be any untoward event or anything which may create a disgust in the minds of those who have to consider about the reforms. So, if the authorities would only act with true statesmanship and, appeasing the people by giving up their repressive policy as an indication of the coming reforms and by releasing Mrs. Besant, who can suggest means for securing the permanent welfare of the people and the Government at this important juncture, and others, avail themselves of her capability and introduce, without delay, reforms conducive to Home Rule, they will immediately become entitled to the gratitude of the people.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 27th August, also publishes in Tamil the proceedings of this Conference.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

The special session of the Madras Provincial Conference.

Anent the proceedings of this conference, the Dravidan, of the 27th August, says that Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar, the Chairman of the Reception Committee, had no business to state in his address that the time had come for all the people to take to the method of passive resistance including herein even the non-Brahmans, and remarking that there were only ten non-Brahmans and no Muhammadan among the 580 delegates in this conference, repeats its view that the resolutions passed therein will affect only the Brahmans and will not concern in any way the non-Brahman world. It refers also to the disorder that prevailed in the conference when the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and others spoke, and funnily observes that it is possible to give medicine for a disease of the blood or the skin but not for one of the nerve.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

In dwelling on the proceedings of this conference, the Dravida Patrika, of the 29th August, observes:—Special sessions of conferences are novel ones, the like of which have not been held till now, and they indicate the mental excitement of the people of this country. They demonstrate the union of the people. It is necessary that the Government should note these. It is not advisable to delay the fulfilment of the aspirations of the people any longer. It will be in consonance with the prestige of the English rule to understand them and seek to improve the condition of the nation.

DRAVIDA PATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

The Special Provincial Conference.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd August, publishes in Telugu the draft resolutions of the special session of the Madras Provincial Conference, and in the course of its observations thereon, says:—The announcement made in yesterday's papers bears testimony to the fact that the angle of vision of the Government has changed to some extent after Mr. Montagu's appointment. If the Government also cancels the internments, there can be no doubt that they will deserve the gratitude of the people in a greater degree. Whatsoever reforms may be given to the country, they cannot be enjoyed in full unless the internments are cancelled. If this Provincial Conference helps to gain such a result, the usefulness of the conference will be plain. We request the Government to satisfy the wishes of the people at this juncture.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The Madras Provincial Conference.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th August, refers to the proceedings of the Madras Special Provincial Conference and says:—Diwan Bahadur Kesava Pillai, the President of the Conference, has the confidence of both the Government and the people, and it is right that his words should be respected by the Government. . . The members of the Round Table supported the contention of the Colonies and wanted to have a share in the work of uplifting India, which is backward in civilisation. The Government have, without consulting the people, prepared a scheme of post war reforms and sent it to the authorities in England. They did not publish it and take the opinion of the people. Under such circumstances the people had no choice but to represent their aims and aspirations to the Government. If the Government agrees to the colonies having political control over the Indians and if the Government shape India's future without the knowledge of the Indians, it will be incompatible with the self-respect of the Indians. So the leaders of the people could not but represent to the Government their aims and aspirations. The publication of the report of the Public

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

Services Commission during the war has been an additional source of disappointment to the people. The report of the Mesopotamia Commission has shattered the opinion that the Indian bureaucracy is without defects. It laid stress on the necessity of the reforms asked for by the people. It has been revealed that neither the scheme of Mr. Gokhale nor the reforms suggested by Lord Islington will satisfy the people. Even the non-Brahmans, who have decried the Home Rulers, were not satisfied with them. The differences of opinion now prevailing among different classes in India will soon disappear, for they are all agreed as to Indian's future, and to the urgency of cancelling the internments. . . The Special Provincial Conference has decided that it is not desirable to co-operate with Mr. Montagu until the restrictions imposed on the primary rights of man are removed, and that the resolution of the Provincial Committee regarding passive resistance should be adopted. . . The announcement of Mr. Montagu has softened the naturally soft minds of the Indians and increased their confidence in British justice. It has induced some leaders to state that passive resistance need not now be resorted to. If the Government now removes all repression, the enthusiasm of the people will pass all bounds. We request that the Government may do so and satisfy the people. The paper then exhorts the Andhras to hold a special Andhra conference, draw up a scheme for themselves, and arrange to place it before Mr. Montagu when he comes to visit India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

The Madras Provincial Conference.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th August, publishes in Telugu the proceedings of the Special Provincial Conference held in Madras and a gist of the speeches of the several speakers, some of whom advocate on passive resistance. It reports the President to have said in the course of his speech, "In this country and in the colonies all the Indians are treated with contempt. The Public Services Commission also approves of such methods." It reports Doctor Nanjunda Rao to have said: "The British have ruled the country for 150 years. Even now they want to have their own way and do not listen to our words. We must make them listen to us by passive resistance."

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Swaraj.

49. The Hindu Nesan, of the 24th August, reproduces from the Dravida Patrika, of the 15th idem, an article on this subject which is abstracted in paragraph 37 of Report No. 34 of 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Mr. Gokhale's reform scheme.

50. The Swadesamitran, of the 25th August, gives a Tamil version of the opinion of Lord Sydenham on this scheme, as it appears in New India of the 24th idem.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 21st, 1917.

The late Mr. Gokhale's draft memorandum on Indian Administrative Reforms.

The Manorama, of the 21st August, gives a summary of the late Mr. Gokhale's draft memorandum on Indian Administrative Reforms, recently published by the Aga Khan and says:—It need hardly be pointed out that these reforms are not suited to the existing conditions in India. Before forming any opinion on the subject it should be considered when it was Mr. Gokhale that prepared the draft. There is a vast difference between the condition of the Indians in 1915, a few months after the outbreak of the war and that in 1917. After Mr. Gokhale's death many revolutionary changes have taken place all over the world. In 1915 Indians had not the same opportunity to display their gallantry in the various theatres of war and their willingness to sacrifice their all for the success of the British arms as they have at present. It cannot, therefore, be said that Mr. Gokhale's scheme is in entire agreement with the present aspirations of the Indians. Hence we are of opinion that it would not be proper to prepare a scheme for reforming the administrative machinery in India on the lines proposed in this draft memorandum.

UTTARA TARAKA, Parur, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Uttara Tarka, of the 25th August, says:—The London Times is of opinion that the Government should attach great value to Mr. Gokhale's views, the publication of which would be a good thing indeed, if it would serve to set at rest the present agitation for self-government.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The plain truth.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 20th August, reproduces in Tamil a portion of an article appearing under this head in the India and published in the Hindu of the 20th idem.

52. The Swadesamitran, of the 20th August, also publishes in Tamil the gist of an article on this subject from the India in the course of which the following observations occur:—We never at all dreamt that the bureaucracy at Simla would commit such an eggregious blunder in the matter of the Mesopotamian expedition. They have lost the esteem they commanded, and the days of their influence may be said to be numbered. They can no longer lay claim to abilities superior to those of the ordinary men or say that their rule alone is the really good one.

The broken-down bureaucracy.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1917.

53. A correspondent from Madura writes to the Dravidan, of the 24th August, as follows:—The pay of the temporary vaccinators who have had only five days' training is Rs. 16 per mensem, while that of the experienced vaccinators is only Rs. 10. The latter not only look after vaccination but also have to maintain the birth and death register. Much harm is produced by these temporary vaccinators, as they are not well up in their work. A Brahman youngster recently vaccinated a person whose face is full of marks of small-pox and we are at a loss to know on what principle he did so. The Sanitary Officer, however, says that no harm would be caused thereby. It was suggested that these temporary vaccinators might be employed in maintaining the birth and death register and that the experienced men deputed to vaccination work, but the reply was received that such an arrangement would only result in registers being spoiled. It is not possible to ascertain whether the fatality due to small-pox is among the vaccinated or among the others. I have written in vain to newspapers for information on this subject on several occasions. But so far as my enquiries go, I understand that the fatality is indeed among those who have been vaccinated. There is no column in the death register to show whether the deceased had been vaccinated or not. There is none to bestow any thought on this matter. According to the figures furnished by the Sanitary Officer, there have been 1,000 deaths due to small-pox in five months, of which 900 are among children. Alas! How is it that, in our country, there are none to look after the health of the children, while in England several measures have been zealously adopted for the purpose? We learn that Lord Pentland has condemned vaccination and holds views against it. We trust that he would bestow a little thought on this subject and appoint a committee to discuss whether vaccination can prevent small-pox altogether.

Vaccination.

Dravidan, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

54. Regretting that Madura, the second important city in this Presidency, stands only the fifth in the matter of recruitment of men for the Indian Defence Force, a correspondent to the Dravidan, of the 24th August, observes:—Even Deputy Superintendents of Police are aware that the Home Rulers have acted in such a manner as to prevent the youths from enlisting in the Indian Defence Force. Madras, the first city in this Presidency, stands only the fourth in the matter of enlistment, while Malabar and Trichinopoly have taken the lead. The total number recruited for this force is indeed very small. The reason for this should be inferred. The effect of the Home Rule movement and the policy of passive resistance is worth consideration. Is there no remedy for it?

The Indian Defence Force.

Dravidan, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

In an article referring to the poor results of the recruiting movement under the Indian Defence Force, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 24th August, makes a lengthy exhortation to the public not to let go the splendid opportunity of acquiring some degree of military skill, and proceeds as follows:—In European countries and elsewhere military service is compulsory. Those who refuse to serve are shot dead. That is what compulsory recruitment means. The British are a generous race. Military service was purely voluntary among them. Now they have introduced conscription. In this country enlistment is so far optional. But if any crisis arises it will have to be made compulsory. There is no use practising the use of weapons in war time. The art of warfare should be learnt at leisure. It is to be hoped that the public will give due thought to the matter. In the west, if a soldier tries to surrender, he is shot dead by his own comrades. There is why they prefer to die on the battlefield and don't turn their back. It must be remembered that only a fraction of those that go to war die. There is glory to the fighter whether he dies or lives. Every one should, therefore, be actuated by patriotism in this respect. If some of the Indian Chiefs and Zamindars take the lead, the people, it would seem, will be more ready to enlist.

The Indian Defence Force.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 24th, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

The best principle of administration.

55. Quoting Mr. Churchill, the present Minister of Munitions, to have stated in a speech at Dundee that, hereafter, Governments should not treat their subjects as chattels, that the subjects should be able themselves to decide what is good or bad for them and that the system under which a few persons, with egotistic and narrow views, determine the lines and aspirations of crores of people should cease to be, the Swadesamitran, of the 27th August, says that our prayer is only that this principle should be applied also to countries dependent on Britain.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The Brahman vakil boat-mail.

56. In the course of a leader under this heading, in which the boat-mail that arrived in Madras on the morning of the 25th August 1917 is described as having been full only of Brahman vakils who came here to attend the special session of the Madras Provincial Conference, the Dravidan, of the same date, says:—As already stated by us, the Brahmans comprise only 30 lakhs out of about 4 crores of people in this Presidency. Among these Brahmans, leaving alone the purohits, coffee-hotel keepers, those who recite vedas, the archakas in temples and others following similar avocations, the majority of the educated men are in Government service, and these cannot openly take any active interest in political matters. Of the Brahmans that remain, the majority are either teachers or vakils. It is these that consider themselves to be experts in the political matters of this country and, vaunting that they are the representatives of crores of people, interfere in every useless activity, having no other business to do. In whatever towns there is a large number of Brahman vakils, there is much agitation about Home Rule and passive resistance and the minds of the ordinary non-Brahmans, quietly and loyally eking out their livelihood, are spoiled by them resulting in disturbances. Taking our own city, there are two important reasons for the unnecessary agitation found here now. The first is the advent of agitators from Northern India, who pose to be the leaders of this Presidency, and the second is the noise made by the Brahman vakils here. It is really regrettable that the Government have not yet paid any attention to prevent the gradual increase of active agitation in the country owing to these two reasons. They should spend some thought over this matter and take such steps as will prevent the happening of any untoward event here, until the European war comes to an end. What these agitators of Northern India and the Brahman vakils and teachers in this Presidency chiefly aim at is the adoption by the people of the method of passive resistance. Some years back, their cry was about Swadeshism and Vande Mataram. The then Brahman leaders spoiled also some non-Brahmans and, after causing them to be punished by the Government and incur their displeasure, skulked away. So we would warn the non-Brahman vakils not to yield in the least to the evil advice of the Brahman vakils. They would betray us at the nick of the moment and laughing over the whole matter, escape by dancing to the tune of the officials and pleasing them in every possible way. Our Dravidan brethren should not forget this even in their dreams. The special session of the Provincial Conference to meet this evening in the Gokhale Hall is only a meeting of the Brahman vakils of Madras, Mayavaram, Kumbakōnam and Tanjore. A large number of Brahman teachers also will take part in it. These teachers, whose duty is to guide boys, seem to think that they can act as they like. For aught we know, the Brahman teachers in some towns in the south induce boys secretly to use books on Indian politics for extra reading. In some schools they make students recite portions from political books on occasions such as anniversaries. Once, on an enquiry, it was definitely stated by some students in a town in the Tanjore district that Brahman teachers had supplied boys of a tender age with a list of books written by Indian Home Rule leaders, that they were creating an enthusiasm in the boys by means of small associations and that they (the students) were always using political books for extra reading. Thus, when the Brahman teachers themselves secretly transgress the order of the local Government that students should not interfere in politics, ature becomes plain. The main prayer of the conference this evening will the release of Mrs. Besant. This is as it should be. Mrs. Besant came to residency relying on the Brahmans here; her work, writings and speeches ll for them, and it is again for their sake that she is now suffering. So, it fair that the Brahmans should clamour for her release. But the Brahman es in the Provincial Conference should realise that what they do is not for r crores of people in this Presidency. Mrs. Besant did not work for us, ahmans, and so we need not be anxious about her. Let the Government e Provincial Conference note this.

. Referring to the unwholesome condition, in the Madras city, of the sweets offered for sale in sweetmeat bazaars generally exposed to dirt and insects and of the hich is adulterated with impure water and other substances, the Dravidan, 25th August, observes that the consumption of these supplemented by the ed pipe-water and impure soda-water is productive of various diseases and hat sufficient precautions will be taken by the Government in this matter.

Health in Madras.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

. The Swadesamitran, of the 28th August, publishes in Tamil an abstract of the proceedings of a public meeting held in Erode under the auspices of the local Home Rule e to advocate the hoisting of Home Rule flags in every house as an emblem mony between the Hindus and the Muhammadans. Thereupon a good of these flags are stated to have been hoisted by the people of the locality r houses.

Home Rule flags.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

. Adverting to the meeting of the local Legislative Council fixed for November next, the Swadesamitran, of the 29th August, dwells upon the fact that the Government cannot have a clear idea of the condition of the y and the excitement caused by the speech of His Excellency the Governor at se of the last meeting and the repressive policy adopted by him subsequently, ount of their having been on the hills all along, and notes with regret that, s not convening the meeting often, there is an increasing tendency on the f the Government to circumscribe the subjects about which resolutions can ved at a meeting. It refers in particular to the disallowance, without any being assigned, of certain interpellations about the internments of which on'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar has given notice and, comparing the le of this Government with that of the Secretary of State for India who plying, as much as it lay in his power, the questions on this very subject liament, remarks that such events only go to confirm the impression that ill not happen, if the Government of India is primarily responsible to s and not to foreigners. It thinks that, though questions on the same t proposed to be asked in the Imperial Legislative Council do not seem to een disallowed, there may be room for disappointment, considering the nd capacity of the bureaucrats in wording replies in such a manner that ave no meaning.

next meeting of the Legislative Council.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

. The Hindu Nesan, of the 29th August, reproduces in Tamil a portion of an article under this head appearing in the Hindu, of the 25th idem, criticising the work of the ssion appointed to enquire into the methods of recruiting and conditions of labour on the estates in Ceylon and Malaya.

ite-washing commission."

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

. Referring to the remarks of the Madras Mail on the proposed visit of Mr. Montagu to India, the Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd August, says:—When great changes are taking place in the political ideals of the Indians, adras Mail has ventured to say that parliamentary institutions will not serve s ideals to them. It remarks that the desire of the English people to spread ientary institutions all over the world is not proper. In its opinion, the al conditions essential for the establishment of such institutions do not exist country, and their establishment will not be possible for even fifty years to Such a thing was possible in the Phillippine Islands and in China, Japan

Montagu and the Madras

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

and Persia. But it is stated that it is not possible in India, which is noted for its ancient civilisation and which once contained democratic institutions.

It may be surmised that the ideal of Mr. Montagu is to establish parliamentary institutions. That he has that ideal in view is evident from his speech on the report of the Mesopotamia Commission.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Mr. Polak.

62. In commenting on the speech of Mr. Polak at a dinner given by the editor of the Hindu, the Andhrapatrika, of the 25th August, says:—Mr. Polak has exhorted the people to do everything that lies in their power in order to maintain the rights of their countrymen in the Colonies. The report of the Indian representatives that attended the Imperial Conference will not, as we stated already, be of much use to ameliorate the condition of the Indians in the Colonies. If the disabilities of the Indians should disappear, the Colonials should be subjected to the same disabilities in India as the Indians are subjected to in the Colonies. Mr. Polak also gave expression to the same view. . . He has stated that whatever help he and Mr. Montagu may render to India, India's future lies in the hands of the Indians and that if they make the necessary sacrifices and show their fitness, they will undoubtedly reach the goal. History also teaches us that a nation can attain national prosperity if it begins to shape its own destiny. May the words of Mr. Polak breathing experience inspire new spirit in the minds of the Indians.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

"Glad news".

63. The Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd August, represents the Message to have written:—We are glad to read in the columns of the Amrita Bazaar Patrika that the Government of Bengal are intending to release some of the young men interned under the Defence of India Act. . . The paper observes that the people in Madras also desire the same thing in connection with the Madras internments. It hopes that the desire may be fulfilled, and that the rulers and the ruled may be drawn together in a closer tie.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The swadeshi.

64. Writing on the subject of swadeshi, a correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd August, says:—Till some sixty or seventy years ago, even England had her trade protected. After her industries had well developed, she adopted her present policy in a spirit of selfishness. Indian politicians and English economists have stated that protective tariff is supremely necessary for the advancement of the country. The rulers not having responded to it, our country has been reduced to poverty and cannot stand the competition of foreign countries.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

The Non-Brahman Conference.

65. The Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd August, refers to the resolutions passed at the Non-Brahman Conference and says:—It is to make known the liberal spirit in which the resolutions were conceived and to show how the desire for self-government has permeated all classes, that we have referred to the resolutions in detail. The Hindus and the Muhammadans are agreed in the matter of self-government. It has today become plain that the surmise that the non-Brahmans in South India are opposed to the self-government propaganda, is groundless. Mr. Montagu is to visit India soon. The Indians may attain their object by representing to him with one voice their national aspirations.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

Federal rule.

66. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th August, urges the division of the country into provinces on a language basis and finds support for its contention in the federal rule suggested by Mr. Montagu for India, the observations made in this behalf by the Indian Chronicle, and in the ideals of many European countries such as Poland, etc. It says that there is nothing absurd in the desire on the part of the Andhras to have a separate province for themselves and exhorts the Andhras to convince the rulers of the truth of their contention and gain their end.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

Indian Members of the India Council.

67. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th August, endorses the suggestion of the Times of India that the Indian Members of the India Council may postpone their voyage to England so that they may meet Mr. Montagu in India and confer with him on the question of self-government for India.

68. A Nellore correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 24th August, says:—In the district of Nellore, 80 per cent of the people are ignorant of political matters, though it is now eight years since the associations in this district came into existence. . . The leaders of the people are ignorant of the grievances of the masses. Forty per cent of the people in the western villages of our district have a half-meal only once in two days.

Political life in Nellore.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

69. In the course of an article under this heading, a correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 24th August, says:—Innumerable are the wrongs done by Government officials. They claim it as their right to take bribes and misappropriate money. Who knows how many throats are cut in India by reason of this greed for money. . . Should we have swaraj under such circumstances? Can we get it at all? Can we derive happiness from it? First of all, remove the cause of our decline. You do not indeed see that. Have you not yet known that India is groaning under differences? Merge all differences at least hereafter, give up all false pride, and with a patriotic heart, consider what you ought first to do.

What is our duty now?

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

70. The Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd August, publishes an imaginary dialogue in which one character is made to say with reference to the externment of the sub-editor of New India: "All that His Excellency the Governor does is of this nature. . . The Government have gagged the mouth of Mrs. Besant. They can do what they please. What can anybody do?" Another is made to say:—Yes, it is their kingdom. Others cannot open their mouths. . . They are putting all to great trouble without discrimination. I cannot bear it any longer. I have patriotism. Let me see as far as it lies in my power. I am no ass to put up with all that they do.

An imaginary dialogue regarding internments, etc.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

71. The Andhraprakasika, of the 24th August, reports Mr. Tyagaraya Chetti to have said:—The Universities turn out graduates and lawyers to a great extent. As the number of lawyers increases, litigation and courts also increase and the people are greatly ruined. . . Indigenous industries have all declined on account of competition. While the foreigners profit, we suffer. . . We are grateful to the British Government for many benefits, but it is doubtful if we are advancing from an economic point of view. The people are also degenerating physically.

Industries.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

72. In its leader the Andhraprakasika, of the 24th August, exhorts the non-Brahmans to unite together, appoint a representative committee, and avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by the visit of Mr. Montagu, by representing to him their grievances.

Mr. Montagu and the non-Brahmans.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1917.

73. The Hitakarini, of the 19th August, says in its leader:—The sword of the Press Act is becoming sharper and sharper. Every one knows that many poor papers have fallen a prey to it. . . . It hangs over the heads of those that conduct papers and the pen of the editor is beset with risks. The attitude of the authorities is very serious, and the Criminal Investigation Department officers have gained the capacity to see wrong where it is not. These officers bring into memory the acts of the old plague inspectors. They find seditious expressions in innocent writings and acts likely to break the peace in the conduct of innocent men, and thus try to win the favour of the bureaucracy and extend their term of office. . . But the enforcement of the Act only tends to stimulate the papers published in English to greater national enthusiasm and activity. . . We cannot say how many more deposits of security have to be devoured. . . If security is imposed on helpless Telugu papers, there will be none to hear their complaints. . . This is not the time for editors to speak out their hearts. They need not fear that the time may not ever come to discharge their duty. The rigour of the Press Act will not last for ever. The authorities may change their attitude. If the Empire opens its eyes, the freedom of the press will be restored. The editor must be confident that although the papers may bow down their heads today, they may wave the flag of their duty to-morrow. We warn the editors to wield their pen in a peaceful manner.

A warning to editors.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, Aug. 19th, 1917.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, Aug. 19th, 1917.

A District Board member, Kistna.

74. The Hitakarini, of the 19th August, recommends the name of M.R.Ry. Mote Gangaraju, who is noted for his liberality, and who has now been appointed as a member of the District Board of Kistna, to a title on the occasion of the next birthday of His Majesty. It is at a loss to know why the authorities have not yet honoured him with a title.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, Aug. 19th, 1917.

A circular.

75. Referring to the circular of the District Judge of Guntūr calling for a list of the names of pleaders taking part in the Home Rule propaganda, the Hitakarini, of the 19th August, writes:—Did the Government send orders in this connection to all District Judges in the Presidency or to the District Judge of Guntūr only? When the C.I.D. officers are waiting to do their utmost in the matter, why should the District Judge of Guntūr bother himself about this? Will he by this rise in the estimation of the Government?

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Aug. 26th, 1917.

The future of India.

76. The Desabhimani, of the 26th August, says in its leader:—We cannot divine the future. Just when a tree is yielding fruit, it may be affected by a disease and disappoint us. . . Political circumstances are of this nature. The whole country is in a state of confusion. The rulers of provinces are more or less the cause of this confusion. Especially, Lord Pentland, the ruler of our province, has made an uncalled-for speech against the opinion of the people and created confusion. To add insult to injury, His Excellency has issued orders of internment. This gale has slowly spread over the whole country frustrating the hopes of the people. The people do not know what to do, and are thinking of different things. The leaders of the people go here and there, consult with one another, and are about to come to a conclusion. They have made up their minds to some extent. That is to resort to passive resistance. . . Nobody says that improper methods should be adopted. That is opposed to the Hindu Sastras and customs. Hindus look upon the sovereign as God. His Majesty King George V is good. He looks upon the subjects as his children. As soon as he returned to England after visiting India, he made suggestions regarding the way in which India should be governed to the satisfaction of the Indians. Indians can never entertain any hostile opinion about him. Our future depends upon his knowing about us. . . . The appointment of Mr. Montagu augurs good for India. There have been indications of future good during the last few days. But we cannot trust till we realise our hopes, because we have experienced disappointments. . . If proper enquiries are made on the lines indicated by the utterances of Mr. Montagu, Indians may get self-government ere long. We want to have a share in the administration of the country, and we are not so very concerned with offices. Indians are satisfied with small things.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 26th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu and Home Rule.

77. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 25th August, writes:—The latest issue of the Gazette of India states that the Secretary of State will come to India to effect reforms in the Indian administration, that India will be granted self-government (swaraj), that arrangements will be made for the establishment of Home Rule, that Indians will be admitted to commissioned ranks in the army, and that all these reforms will be considered forthwith. If this be true, we must consider our country very fortunate.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, Aug. 26th, 1917.

Popular leaders and the backward classes.

78. In a leading article referring to the presidential speeches at the two Conferences of the Brahmins and the non-Brahmans recently held at Coimbatore, the Mysore Star, of the 26th August, observes:—The root cause of these class differences between the Brahmans and the non-Brahmans which are so detrimental to the progress of the country, is abundantly clear from these speeches. Is it not incumbent on the educatad leaders of the country, who bear on their shoulders the responsibility of guiding the backward classes, to prove themselves more broad-minded, unselfish and generous to their brethren who are lagging behind, so as to ward off all fears created in the past that they as leaders might utilize their powers to keep the others downtrodden? Unless this is done, the country cannot progress, nor will it be possible to get the privilege of self-government, which can only come to a united nation. All far-seeing people must admit this point. This is why all administrators are solicitous to help the advancement of the backward classes. The latter it is that form the vast majority of the population. All statesmen are agreed that when these show an awakening and wish to come forward, it would be very inexpedient to keep them in discontent instead of helping them to gain their wishes. In the recently published scheme of reforms drawn up by the late Mr. Gokhale, he has fully emphasized the necessity of giving every class and community, such as the Moslems and Lingayats, wherever they form an appreciable number, the opportunity of electing their own representatives to the Legislative Council and thus indicated the manner in which the backward classes may be helped to come forward. All true and far-seeing statesmen who aim at the advancement of the country as a whole will doubtless endorse his view. If all popular leaders should earnestly show the same brotherly feelings towards the backward communities, who would regard their leadership with suspicion or fear? It is such leaders that can truly help to reform the administration. If, on the other hand, the leaders should remain self-seeking at heart, but only profess broad principles, they will only mar and not make the progress of the country.

Lord Islington on Indian reforms.

79. In continuation of an article in a previous issue (vide Report No. 34, article 31, paragraph 4) the Swadeshabhimani, of the 24th August, commenting on Lord Islington's recent speech on the subject of reforms in the Indian Administration, says:—Even the most casual glance at his suggestions will bring home to the reader's mind that they are not likely to satisfy even a hundredth part of Indian aspirations. Before laying bare the true nature of these Islingtonian reforms, it would not be inappropriate to tell our readers that the Bengal Congress Committee has expressed its dissatisfaction with them and educated Indian opinion in the whole country is deploring his extremely disappointing pronouncement. Lord Islington is only arguing in a vicious circle in saying that the non-official majority in the Councils can only increase the number of critics and serve no purpose in the absence of any real responsibility resting with them. His statement (endorsing the views of the bureaucracy on the subject) that the idea of self-government cannot be carried out in a day, because England took many centuries to establish self-government and Ireland has yet to get it, ignores the fact that it is not necessary that the same process of evolution should be gone through in every case and that in every age man can profit by the discoveries and results achieved in the past and make his task easier. If England took many centuries to obtain self-government, why did Poland too not take the same length of time? Is it not one of our own Allies—Russia—that granted self-government to Poland? Is it not the British themselves who granted the same right to the Boers? Why was not the plea of gradual progress urged in their case? If the main principle of democracy itself is to be ignored, where would be the good of a few minor soulless reforms? To give the people control over particular departments with the main responsibility still resting elsewhere is akin to giving them the privilege of carrying an empty palanquin. We do not know what he actually meant by the words that India should resemble the Commonwealth of Australia. We can attach no more value to these pleasant words than to what parents are heard to say to humour their children. So long as the principle of democracy is to be ignored, it is useless to discuss the nature of the other reforms. If this is all that is to come to the expectant public, we must observe that they will be deeply disappointed. One welcome feature of Lord Islington's pronouncement, however, is that while Lord Sydenham and the Bishop of Bombay and other provincial authorities and thorough Anglo-Indians are asking us not to urge this vexed question of reforms during the present crisis, Lord Islington has shown that he and a few others do have the leisure to give thought to Indian problems and that they do utilise it to this end.

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, Aug. 24th, 1917.

The paper next refers to the scheme of reforms drawn up by the late Mr. Gokhale and remarks:—These reforms are inadequate in the opinion of the Congress and the Moslem League. As the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri observes, if Mr. Gokhale were alive at present he would have headed the list of signatories to the memorandum of the nineteen. Thus, the memorandum of the nineteen, the Congress, the Muslim League and the Home Rule Leagues and other educated Indian opinion have made it abundantly clear that Mr. Gokhale's proposals stand very low in the scale of demands now made by the people. They establish one important point however, namely, that even before the autocratic nature of the authorities was brought to light by events such as the Mesopotamian tragedy, Mr. Gokhale saw the need for changes in the prevailing system of the administration.

The same paper in another article says:—The disappointment caused by Lord Islington's pronouncement has been somewhat allayed by Mr. Montagu's later utterances on the subject. While we are left to wonder what his crumbs of reform will be like, we are told that he will consult responsible authorities such as the Viceroy on coming to India. If we may judge from the present attitude of these authorities, we are at a loss to know how this consultation would help Mr. Montagu. If however he should frame his reforms in the light of the suggestions given by the representatives of recognised popular bodies to India, there will be some return for the pains taken in undertsking such a long journey. If, on the other hand, he should allow himself to be guided by his officials, it is impossible that he can succeed in his mission. We only hope that the sweet rose of Mr. Montagu's reforms will not be befouled by the onion touch of official attitude in India.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 24th, 1917.

Eye treatment of district hospitals.

80. In an article welcoming the proposal to afford facilities for the treatment of eye diseases at district hospitals at certain centres, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 24th August, says that it is to be hoped that the authorities concerned will lose no time in giving effect to a proposal of such incalculable good to the public.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 24th, 1917.

New hospitals for the treatment of eye diseases.

The Manorama, of the 24th August, approves of the decision of the Government to establish Ophthalmic Hospitals at Coimbatore, Tanjore and Vizagapatam, and in referring to the advantages of treating eye diseases according to the Ayurvedic system, dwells upon the necessity of appointing an Ayurvedic specialist in eye diseases in each of these hospitals.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Self-government.

81. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 22nd August, says:—It cannot be denied that the internment of Mrs. Besant and her associates has created considerable agitation in various parts of India. Though the public may not be aware of the reasons that induced the Government to take this step they cannot be said to have done so without sufficient grounds. It was after this internment that the number of Home Rule Leagues in India and the members thereof increased, and that the people began to evince more interest in matters relating to self-government and swadesism. The aim of these leagues is to liberate Mrs. Besant and her lieutenants from their confinement. As a result of the endeavours of the people in this direction the Local Governments and administrations were constrained to adopt repressive measures for curtailing their liberty. To thwart the measures taken by the Government the people have decided upon adopting passive resistance, as was done by the Indians in South Africa. But as the conditions there are different from those prevailing in India, such a step, if taken, would, instead of benefitting the people, be prejudicial to their interests. We do not believe that the Government are opposed to the grant of self-government to India. But what they contend is that it is not advisable either to demand or to grant complete self-government all at once especially in this time of war. We think that a majority of the Indians will not agree with Government, if they say that India is not yet ripe for self-government. We even doubt whether the tone of the speeches of some of the ardent Home Rulers has not displeased or irritated the Government. The recent repressive measures of the Government should, therefore, be considered as an indication of their displeasure. It cannot be denied that the responsibilities of Government are great. We are of opinion that to obtain powers and privileges from such a Government the people should approach them respectfully, and represent their wishes in a moderate and loyal tone, but that, instead of doing so, it will be ruinous to them if they go beyond their limits. The swadesi movement is, no doubt, beneficial to the country. But then it is not commendable to take the swadesi vow in a hostile spirit and with a view to boycott foreign goods.

Self-government.

In a leader under the heading "Self-government" the Uttara Taraka, of the 25th August, condemns the resolutions relating to passive resistance passed by the Home Rule Leagues in various parts of the country and says:—It is improper on the part of the Home Rulers to adopt such methods at a time when England is engaged in this colossal war. What value can be attached to their contention that they are loyal? As a result of this war the liberties of the people in England have been curtailed temporarily. There is no nation in the world which has so much love for liberty as the English. Yet, they willingly submit to the stringent laws that had to be made owing to this war. This is genuine loyalty. The protagonists of Home Rule ought to understand that their efforts would not be conducive to the welfare of the country, if they think that the critical position in which England is placed at present may be taken advantage of for pressing their claims for self-government.

UTTARA TARAKA, Parur, Aug. 25th, 1917.

Good news for India.

82. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 23rd August, writes:—Last Tuesday evening's Gazette of India publishes the good news which reveals the policy of His Majesty's Government in the matter of Indian reforms.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1917.

What could afford India greater pleasure than the announcement that Mr. Montagu, the Secretary of State for India, is to be the first Secretary of State to visit this country?

It is said that he will make the necessary changes in the administration of the country and consult the Viceroy and the local Governments on the subject of reforms.

The editor appeals to his compatriots to unstop their ears, to look with their eyes, to set aside all prejudice and bias, and to consider for a moment whether, in spite of the existence of a well-ordered Government, all this clamour for Home Rule is becoming.

In accordance with the saying "Kings know their own State secrets best," everything consistent with reason is being done for the administration of this country. The Government are not for a moment unmindful of what is required for the prosperity and advancement of the country. If agitators refrain from expressing their pleasure at the coming visit it will be a manifest mark of their ignorance and folly.

The editor refers, in appreciative terms, to the glad tidings that the Government have decided to grant commissions to Indians, and to the liberal spirit in which the Government are approaching the question of reforms, and, in conclusion, points out that it is the duty of his co-religionists to lend the Government a helping hand and to put a period to extravagant demands.

V.—PROSPECTS OF THE CROPS AND THE CONDITION OF THE PEOPLE.

Starvation among the poor in Malabar due to scarcity of rice.

83. Referring to the scarcity of rice in Malabar, a correspondent in the Manorama, of the 24th August, writes:—By the time we get Home Rule people would die of starvation. They cry aloud "how are we to support our children?". . . We shall agitate for Home Rule sometime hence. Let us first try to find out a remedy for this. The Government now turns a deaf ear to our representations. Their reply is "Let the war be over".

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 24th, 1917.

* * * * * *

The present condition of Malabar is deplorable indeed. It is Malabar that stands first among the districts of this Presidency that contributed the war loan. Yet the Collector is not satisfied. He says that, considering the wealth of the district, the contribution is not adequate. We cannot but be sorry for this statement of the Collector. To speak the truth, the collection of such a large amount is due to the extreme loyalty of the people and nothing else. If the Collector visits the houses of some of the rich landlords in Malabar, he cannot form an idea of the miserable condition of the people in general. Let him go round the country in cognito. Then he will understand that many people are really starving. It is a pity that such opinions are expressed without understanding all this. . .

* * * * * *

ERRATA.

Report No. 33.

Page 2179, paragraph 11, line 20, for "lead" read "led".
„ 2179 „ 11 „ 21, for "take" read "takes".
„ 2183, line 22, for "the other from" read "the others from".

Report No. 34.

Page 2221, line 29, insert "the" between "on" and "one".
„ 2223, paragraph 27, line 31, for "serve" read "severe".
„ 2224, line 21, for "subject" read "object".
„ 2225, line 9, for "guide" read "guise".
„ 2226, paragraph 32, line 24, delete "now" after "not".
„ 2227, paragraph 35, line 8, for "clear, if" read "clear from".
„ 2229, line 4, from the bottom, for "will" read "would".

Issued, 4th September 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 36 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 8th September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(c) Local and Municipal—
The water-supply of Madras	2287
The Corporation of Madras	ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont.	PAGE
(k) General—
The Secretary of State for India	2288
Passive resistance	ib.
The Government and the political situation ..	2289
Theosophy and politics	ib.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

The war 2290
The condition of the war .. .. ib.
Censorship .. .. ib.
War aims and peace prospects 2291
The submarine activity .. .. ib.
Indian coolies in the colonies .. .. ib.
War news .. .. ib.
The Russians 2292
Our new war weapon .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration.

(b) Courts—
Village courts .. .. ib.

(d) Education—
The Rajkumar College, Madras 2293
Education for our women .. .. ib.
Agricultural education .. .. ib.
Vernacular education .. .. ib.
Mr. Stone's superior intelligence .. .. ib.

(e) Local and Municipal—
Local self-governing bodies 2294
The Corporation of Madras .. .. .. ib.
The taluk boards and the election of Presidents .. .. ib.

(h) Railways—
The Mettupalaiyam mail and the public .. 2295

(k) General—
The present political situation .. .. .. ib.
The Madras Mail and Mr. Montagu 2296
Self-government to the German colonists in Africa 2299
"A white-washing commission" .. .. ib.
Home Rule League, Trichinopoly .. .. ib.
Home Rule League, Bombay .. .. .. ib.
Home Rule League, Negapatam .. .. ib.
Sir Rabindranath Tagore on Home Rule .. ib.
Home Rule for Indians in the Portuguese India .. .. ib.
Passive resistance .. .. ib.
Passive resisters 2302
Home Rule flags .. .. ib.
The Special Session of the Madras Provincial Conference .. .. ib.
The New India security forfeited 2303
Mr. Montagu's visit to India .. .. .. ib.
Students and the Government 2304
The German trade after the war 2305
The demand for Home Rule .. .. .. ib.
A timely advice at the present juncture .. ib.
Mr. Bhupendranath Basu to remain in India .. 2306

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.
Mr. Bhupendranath Basu's utterance .. 2306
Who are the Brahmans? 2307
A split among Home Rulers .. .. .. ib.
The Servants of India Society .. .. .. ib.
The Bihar Provincial Congress .. .. .. ib.
The Central Provinces Provincial Conference. ib.
A Home Rule meeting .. .. ib.
The authorities and the ryots .. .. .. ib.
The Russian trade .. .. ib.
Cows .. .. ib.
A prayers to God 2308
Mrs. Besant .. .. ib.
Reforms .. .. ib.
Pandit M. Malavy's opinion on the political situation .. .. ib.
A cable sent to the Premier and the Secretary of State .. .. ib.
The Andhras and Mr. Montagu .. .. ib.
The Swadeshi movements 2310
The Indian Christians .. .. ib.
India and the British Empire .. .. .. ib.
Election of Mrs. Annie Besant to the Presidentship of the National Congress 2311
Water-cess .. .. ib.
A new incarnation .. .. ib.
Madras Provincial Conference and the Andhra leaders 2312
The Al-Hilal .. .. ib.
Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms .. .. ib.
Industries .. .. ib.
The District Judge of Guntur 2313
The letter of Commander Wedgewood .. ib.
Rice mills at Rajahmundry .. .. .. ib.
Indentured labour .. .. ib.
Federal Government .. .. ib.
Non-Brahmans in service .. .. .. ib.
Allotment of appointments 2314
Industrial research institutes .. .. ib.
The swaraj agitation at Gopisettipaliem .. ib.
Masulipatam Home Rule League .. .. ib.
True statements .. .. ib.
Andhra leaders and passive resistance .. .. ib.
Suffrage of women in England and passive resistance 2315
Postal facilities .. .. ib.
Reforms and class representation in the public service 2316
Our condition in India—No. 1 .. .. .. ib.
The cinematograph .. .. ib.
The Madras Provincial Conference and ourselves 2317
Agitation for reforms (His Highness the Agha Khan's wisdom) .. .. ib.
Defiance of Law .. .. ib.
Ultimately the same thing has come to pass .. 2318

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(e) Local and Municipal.

1. Justice, of the 5th September, states:—"'Our present water-supply' was the subject of a lecture delivered by Mr. Madeley, the Special Engineer of the Madras Corporation, at Kellet Hall, Triplicane. . . We are told that he entered into an account of the system of the Madras water works. That account, however, is not reported. But what is reported of Mr. Madeley's lecture is far more loose talk than any we have so far had on the subject of the Madras water supply. . . We challenge Mr. Madeley's statement that the analysis of water from November 1915 to October 1916 showed there was an average purification of some 90 per cent except for short periods. We not only challenge the accuracy of that statement, but we venture to assert that Mr. Madeley knows nothing whatever about the interpretation of the results of bacteriological analysis of water, and the only way to settle a dispute like this is to publish the actual results of the analysis over the signature of the Director of the King Institute. We challenged the Madras Corporation to do this once before. We do it again.

Justice, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

The water-supply of Madras.

"Mr. Madeley made this statement yesterday, 'I cannot conceive how any reasonable person can argue that the filtered water is not better than the unfiltered water'. Well, we do hereby assert that the filtered water coming out of the Corporation filter beds at the present time is many thousand times worse than the unfiltered water. . . Every medical man who has seen the result of the analysis of the Madras filtered water, excepting, perhaps, the Acting Health officer of the Corporation, is of opinion that the filtered water is thousand times worse than the unfiltered. . . The public have a right to know before the question is referred to anybody else what the opinion of the Government experts are on the subject. Have the Sanitary Commissioner, the Surgeon-General and the Sanitary Engineer to the Government been consulted on the matter? . . . If the opinions of these three officers have already been obtained they ought to be published, and if they can give an assurance to the public that the filtered water is of reasonable purity that will satisfy the public. In the absence of which assurances from Government experts no amount of rigmarole from Mr. Madeley will be of any use. The Government have a responsibility in this matter. Evidently they have been sleeping over it. We hope that at a very early date they will stop the distribution of Molony's mixture to the citizens of Madras.

"If Mr. Madeley, instead of delivering such lectures, will go through a course of drinking the Corporation filtered water every day he would convince the public better of his own faith in the purity of the filtered water than any amount of lectures like the one he delivered last night."

2. Writing on this subject, Justice, of the 7th September, says:—The last meeting of the Madras Corporation, specially towards its latter part, resembled more a bear garden than a dignified civic institution. With a Deputy Collector as President and Molony's mixture as the subject of discussion it was not surprising that the proceedings were of an excited nature. . . It is evident that Mr. Madeley himself knows very little about the scientific data on which the working of sand filters depends and when the ignorant Special Engineer instructed the still more ignorant Deputy Collector-President and he began to give out his rambling justification of the municipal executive, it was no wonder that the commissioners lost their patience. Added to all this came the ruling from the chair that after the chairman's speech the debate was closed. In order to close the debate after the President's speech the President ought to have asked before he got up to speak as to whether any commissioner wished to make any more remarks. In the absence of such enquiry when an excited President jumps up like a jack in the box, in the middle of a debate, he cannot reasonably say that the debate is at an end when his speech is finished. The most that he could have done was to permit all the commissioners who wanted to speak to have their say and then insist on having the last word and make another speech if he wanted to do so. But it is no good blaming the Acting President, for he knows no better. The real blame ought to rest with the Madras Government who have placed him in such a position. Probably he was rewarded for his special smartness in preparing a revised estimate which sent the Madras Government on a wild goose chase, and now that the Madras Government as well as the public have realised the Deputy Collector's capacity to preside at Corporation meetings as well as to frame revised estimates, we hope that he will be sent about his proper duties which is that of a tax-collector."

Justice, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

The Corporation of Madras.

(k) General

Justice, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

The Secretary of State for India.

3. In commenting on the cablegrams sent to the Secretary of State for India in connection with the article headed "A word to Mr. Montagu" in the Madras Mail, Justice, of the 1st September, observes:—"So far it has been the special privilege of the Home Rulers not only to flout the Government, but to defy them and lower their prestige in the eyes of the people. What right has the Madras Mail even to throw out a suggestion about a distant possibility? Is not the conduct of that paper in publishing the paragraph in question atrocious? None but the members of the privileged caste are licensed to speak and write in threatening tones about the authorities. If this sacred right which has been handed down to them from the time of Manu is violated and their functions usurped by others, these latter must not be spared. . . A few politicians among us most of whom are Brahmans have arrogated to themselves the right to speak on behalf of the forty millions of this Presidency compared with whom they are but as a drop. It is time that the pretensions of this pragmatic sect were abated. . . In these days of violent political agitation and deliberate misrepresentation the silent millions and their recognised leaders with large stakes in the country have no alternative left but to have recourse to the familiar methods of political controversy. . . We must in this connection impress upon the enlightened and public spirited Non-Brahmans in every part of this Presidency to be up and doing. This is the time for them to take concerted action and ensure their future political advance. We appeal to them all to form associations and to hold conferences almost in every district, so that they may place their own case before the Secretary of State in the name and on behalf of the millions of the Non-Brahman communities in this Presidency."

Non-Brahman, Madras, Sep. 2nd, 1917.

Passive resistance.

4. The Non-Brahman, for the week ending 2nd September, observes:—"How public life has become a field for display of the brutal nature of man was well illustrated by the special session of the Madras Provincial Conference. Excited politicians came from north and east and west to pour out their vehement nonsense. It was discovered that Rao Bahadur Ramanuja Achari had grown his beard—long may it grow!—as a protest against the Besant internments. He is sure to end a very striking figure in the Legislative Council. Diwan Bahadur P. Kesava Pillai played to the tune of the Brahmans—else it would have gone very wrong with him, for should he not be grateful to his masters? And then for his ruling in the Madura Provincial Conference Mrs. Besant had abused him, and so he resolved to make it up by destroying the Congress constitution—'Special Conference, special constitution.' Even a hired chairman could not have done better!

* * * * * *

"We deal in our leading article with the situation that has been created by this incessant rowdyism. With the aid of a servile press and the thoughtless following of immature youths we think that a great deal of demoralisation is going on. People are speaking of disobeying Government and going to jail. People are beginning to speak of Government as a worm. It is easy for young men to work themselves up to such feelings, and let us remember that a few resolute men can give any amount of trouble to the Government by disobedience and passive resistance. And as for any disobedience in the public ranks, the ease with which the leaders were flouted showed that public life is at present in the hands of the Madras Somaris."

5. In a leader under the heading "Government of Mrs. Besant", the Non-Brahman, for the week ending 2nd September, remarks:—"Defiance of authority is in the air. We hope that the Government will not sleep over it in superior unconcern.

Non-Brahman, Madras, Sep. 2nd, 1917.

The Government and the political situation.

"Those who have the reins of popular agitation in their hands are well organised, they have perfected an excellent system. They always managed to give the public shock after shock. That is one reason why public excitement is high. . . The question is, how does the Government propose to handle the situation. Handle it it must. This kind of Government by Mrs. Besant must give way. What is it that the people say at present, 'Look how one woman is keeping the entire Government of India engaged and anxious. And where are Indians who will follow her and imitate her? Let one dozen come forth and Home Rule will be an accomplished fact'. They are all worshipping her. They have honestly come to believe that more things can be done by Mrs. Besant than by the Government. . . The latest sensation is that Mrs. Besant herself has turned out a passive resister she has refused to haul down the Home Rule flag. That is a call to the country to desobey the Police on the 16th day celebration of the internment. 'You shall not go out on a procession'. The public are to refuse and defy the law. They are out to do it. Let there be no mistake. And the effect of such disobedience on the public mind would be simply disastrous.

* * * * * *

"We quite realise the difficulties of the Government, but we must know, betimes, which is the Government we should obey—the Government of Madras or the government of Mrs. Besant. This dual authority is most inconvenient. If as it seems, Mrs. Besant is more powerful than the Government of Madras, there are many who, as shrewd men of the world, would become Home Rulers, grow their beards and take their chance. The Government of Madras can no longer rest on half-hearted measures. They must take full measures and stamp out this epidemic of lawlessness."

6. Justice, of the 4th September, writes:—"We have already pointed out in these columns that the Theosophical Society in India is no longer a purely religious institution, but a political body carrying on political propagandist work, the original religious character of it now affording shelter to officials actively to participate in politics. . . In the meantime Government who are responsible for law and orden will be well advised if they take the matter in hand, hold a thorough investigation, prohibit public servants and Government pensioners to continue in the society, and if the investigations disclose that the society is a danger to good government, law and order they should not hesitate to aim a death blow at it. There is primâ facie evidence that the Theosophical Society has become a political institution. The president of the society and its secretary have avowed it to be such. Messrs. Wadia and Arundale have corroborated them. Mr. Van Manen offers further testimony in proof of it. The frantic efforts of Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar to disprove it has come to naught. Under the circumstances it is incomprehensible that the Government blink these revelations and allow its servants to transgress a wholesome and well-established rule by joining or continuing as members of the society under the guise of being members of a religious body. . . The policy of drift especially in the matter of discipline is fraught with real danger. Government pensioners apparently feel that they are above discipline. As soon as some of the officials are retired they think it their duty to stump the country to preach a crusade against constituted authority. We cannot understand what justification there is for paying them out of the public revenues to go about creating strife in the country. . . We do not object to freedom of action for politicians, but we object to maintaining them out of the revenues contributed by the people for acting and speaking in a manner detrimental to the people's interests and to public peace. We trust the Government will be warned in time."

Justice, Madras, Sep. 4th, 1917.

Theosophy and politics.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Swadesa Bandhu, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1917.

7. The Swadesa Bandhu, of the 1st August, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran of the 26th July about the affairs in the Russian front abstracted in paragraph 17 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

The war.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 31st August, says:—The news coming from the Russian theatre are heart-rending. Russia is not yet able to escape from the disasters of the revolution. . . A perusal of the message of General Corniloff to the people of Russia causes regret. But it is a matter for some satisfaction to hear that the Russians have now opened their eyes and are determined to vanquish the enemy. We cannot say how far it is true that the Japanese armies will go to the Russian theatre to give help. . . Big men say that as soon as the American armies enter the western, and the Japanese armies, the eastern, theatre, the allies will win the victory.

The war.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

8. The Swadesamitran, of the 1st September, writes:—Reuter's telegrams for the last one week say that more serious fighting is taking place in the western front now than was ever the case till now. But those of our readers who have been watching events will not have forgotten that Reuter has been making the same statement at the beginning of operations on every occasion. If the severity of a battle which is described on a particular day as being waged with an unparalleled vigour and stock of ammunitions is judged by the telegrams about it received the next day, it leads to grave disappointment. So it very often becomes necessary to gauge the real situation correctly. It is, no doubt, true that the operations in the western front were begun with very strong equipments. But it should be remembered that the magnitude of these operations was based on the expectation that the Russians would also deliver a simultaneous attack on the Germans. Our readers are already aware that the Russian front has been weakened on account of internal political dissensions. So we need not say that results, which were expected from an attack being delivered on two sides, cannot be achieved, however herculean may be the efforts on one side. Therefore, in gauging the effect of the operations in the western theatre now, there is no use of our trying to ascertain to what extent the Allies have advanced or how much the Germans have been pushed back. We have understood the enormous loss incurred by the Germans from their own communiqués. The fact that, in spite of the deplorable condition of the Russians in the eastern theatre, the Germans have not been able to take advantage of it and advance is another indication of their exhaustion. They have not been able to gain much by their submarine warfare. In the Italian front the Austrians, unable to stand the repeated attacks of General Cardono, have begun to blame the Germans. In Germany itself the people who were enthusiastically making innumerable sacrifices have now woke up and, understanding the real situation, demand political reforms with unexpected boldness. Therefore, if the Allies deliver constant attacks in the western theatre, the effect of these will, doubtless, tell first upon the internal condition of Germany. As it is the internal reforms of Germany that will lead to a permanent peace, our readers can understand the importance of operations now carried on in the western theatre.

Liva-ul-Islam, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

9. The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 30th August, reproduces in Tamil an article of the New York Times on the American view of censorship published in New India of the 25th idem.

Censorship.

10. The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 30th August, reproduces in Tamil a free translation of an article on this subject contributed by Mr. Philip Snowden to New India of the 23rd August 1917.

War aims and peace prospects.

LIVA-UL-ISLAM, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

11. The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 30th August, also reproduces from the Swadesamitran of the 24th August a Tamil version of an article on this subject contributed to the London Times by one of its correspondents, abstracted in paragraph 7 of Report No. 35 of 1917.

The submarine activity.

LIVA-UL-ISLAM, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

12. Referring to the resolution of the Government on the report of the conference recently held in London to discuss the question of the emigration of Indian coolies to the colonies, the Swadesamitran, of the 3rd September, writes:—Though the Government have not expressed any opinion about the recommendations of the conference, they have declared definitely that the system of indentured emigration will cease to be. For this we convey our thanks to the British Government and Lord Hardinge and to Indian public opinion. This system will be replaced by a system improvised by the Government and supported by them. The object of extending this support is to enable the Indians to stay in the colonies after undergoing a probationary course, to train them to live and work in the colonies and to secure for the colonies a sufficient number of labourers. So the motive of the Government seems to be more to send Indian labourers to countries which require them and to make them remain there than to find an outlet for the extra population of India. We do not see the necessity for the rules suggested by the conference, merely to make the Indians live and work in the colonies. The system proposed does not seem to be in consonance with the natural rights of the Indians. The question is whether an Indian has the right of remaining in the colonies, without working there for three years or not. The present report does not make this clear. According to the new system, an Indian labourer will be made to work under a master for the first six months after his arrival in a colony, after which period he may change to another master, by giving a month's notice. From the very beginning he will be given 10 cents of land to be cultivated for his own purposes. After six months he will be given about 33 cents of land and after 3 years he will not be obliged to work under any one. He will then be given 5 acres of land. In the absence of information about other conditions, these rules are very palatable. Will he have time to cultivate the land that is given to him, when he is serving under a master? If, as is the case in Ceylon, his work will keep him on from sunrise to sunset, when can he cultivate his own land? If the recommendations about the nursing of children and pregnant women are adopted in practice, the hardships now suffered by poor men will abate a little. But as the rules now in force in Ceylon do not seem to obtain in all plantations, there is room to doubt whether they will be given effect to in other colonies. There is no doubt that certain recommendations of the conference aim at improving the existing situation greatly. But some palatable regulations may end in disappointment. On the whole, the advantages offered to the Indian labourers in the new system seem to have been introduced more as a reward for the Indians working for the improvement of the colonies than in recognition of their rights. We hope that associations like the "Colonial Society" will point out to the Government, before they issue final orders on these recommendations, that they do not recognise our natural rights.

Indian coolies in the colonies.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 3rd September, also expresses its satisfaction at the declaration by the Government that the indentured system of emigration will not be revived again, and referring to the recommendations made by the conference to enable Indian labourers to proceed to the colonies, remarks that the Indians will appreciate these only if the conditions of labour in the colonies are such that no difference is made between a European subject and an Indian subject.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1917.

13. The Andhraprakasika, of the 27th August, has the following in an article under this heading:— . . . The Allies feigning retreat allow the enemies to advance and War news.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

strengthening their positions secretly, attack the enemies all of a sudden as they advance and cause much loss of life to them. This stratagem was first employed by General Paten, the French Commander-in-Chief . . .

HITAVADI, Masulipatam, Aug. 1917.

The Russians.

14. The Hitavadi for August says:—The Russian army have out of treachery ceased fighting and the Germans have been retaking the positions taken by the Russians. Though the Russian armies are once again beginning to do their duty, it is feared that the war may continue for a year or two more. The Russian army having been bribed by the Germans and having come under their influence, only the English are fighting in Mesopotamia and Egypt without any help from Russia. But the allies will undoubtedly win in the war though it may take some time.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

The Russians.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 30th August, says:—A Russian wireless announces that the enemy are encountering the Russians . . . and that the Austrians have occupied all Russian positions.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Our new war weapon.

15. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 30th August, has a leader on the excellent work done by the Tanks.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

(b) Courts.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

Village courts.

16. Adverting to the reports submitted by District Collectors on the work done by these courts last year, the Swadesamitran, of the 31st August, writes:—We learn from these reports that the number of cases filed before village munsifs is on the decrease, while that of cases filed before bench courts in villages is on the increase. We are, therefore, led to think that the people have greater confidence in the bench courts than in the village munsifs' courts, and some Collectors, too, have expressed the same opinion. Mr. Paddison, the Collector of Madura, writes that the people have no confidence in village munsifs. This shows that they have greater faith in several persons constituting such bench courts than in a single individual doing duty as village munsif, and if these several persons happen to be the panchayat desired by the people, indeed the district munsifs will cease to have any work in the matter of disposal of minor suits. We trust that this fact would be considered at this juncture when it is proposed to amend the Act relating to village courts.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sep. 6th, 1917.

Village courts in the Madras Presidency.

Referring to the annual report on the administration of village courts in the Madras Presidency, the Samvad Abhyudaya, of the 6th September, writes:—It is reported that as many as 2,894 cases from 600 villages in the Trichinopoly district alone have gone to the District Court. One cause of this is the dearth of qualified village munsifs. Another is the presence of pleaders and touts who induce the parties to litigation. A third cause is the power given to (both) the Village and District Munsifs' courts to hear these cases. A fourth is that the village munsifs have not the power to execute decrees by distraining immovable property. If the village courts (alone) should have power to hear these cases, if there should be no right of appeal in disputes settled with the aid of panchayats, and if village munsifs should be appointed from among those who have passed a prescribed examination, the people will naturally go to these courts. It is urged in some quarters that pleaders and touts guilty of inducing the parties to litigation should be punished with transportation. Such steps would be radical and should be taken only in the last resort.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sep. 4th, 1917.

Village courts.

In reviewing the report on the working of the village courts in the Presidency for the year 1916, the Manorama, of the 4th September, rejoices at the increase in the number of village courts and the cases tried by them, and observes that, inasmuch as several cases triable by these courts are now taken to District Munsits' Courts, it is doutful whether the object with which they have been established is fully gained at present. It then refers to the various causes which induce people to take petty cases to District Munsifs' Courts, and dwells upon the necessity of appointing educated and respectable men of good character as village munsifs. Finally the paper suggests that, with a view to give the village munsifs a training in the disposal of small cause suits, they should be required to attend Munsifs' Courts once a week when such suits are tried by the latter.

(d) Education.

17. The Madar Manoranjani, for July and August, makes almost the same observations as the Hindu Nesan and the Swadesamitran, of the 25th July, on this subject, which are abstracted in paragraph 26 of Report No. 31 of 1917.

The Rajkumar College, Madras.

MADAR MANORANJANI, Madras, July & Aug. 1917.

18. In the course of an article under this heading, a correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 27th August, observes:—We hear and read in books and newspapers that many educated women in the west dislike marriage and even when married are unwilling to give up their life of freedom. The system of female education prevailing there, is responsible for these social evils. We must take a lesson from them and formulate a better method . . .

Education for our women.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

19. The Andhraprakasika, of the 31st August, publishes an article contributed which contains:—There should be an Agricultural College in every district with provision to give practical lessons with implements. . . The Government will be failing in their duty if they do not arrange for it. . . It is inexcusable that the Government are indifferent and do not provide such facilities in India.

Agricultural education.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

20. Referring to the recent Educational Conference at Simla, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 31st August, writes:—Conferences are a conspicuous feature of the advanced methods of administration of the present day. The appointment of Commissions is another mode of discussing a problem. Neither these Conferences nor the Commissions take us far. More often than not, these Conferences and Commissions raise only fresh difficulties. The Educational Conference recently held at Simla is by no means an exception to this. The points that were to be discussed at the Conference were worded like the leading questions of a lawyer to a witness. Although a few of those present were for adopting the vernacular as the medium of instruction, the majority did not endorse this view. Only some of the members were of opinion that at the school final examination all the papers except that in English language may be answered in the vernacular. Others held that the language in which the papers were to be answered may be left to the option of the candidates. These are the main resolutions passed, and they are just what one would expect from the wording of the questions presented for discussion. The object of the Government in giving education to the people might be no more than creating a certain measure of proficiency in English; and we must say that it is in accordance with this view that they outlined the questions before the Conference. But what are Indians to do with mere proficiency in English? If the object of education be to gain knowledge, and if the Conference has agreed on the whole that this object may be achieved through the medium of the vernaculars, is it not surprising that the Conference should have come to the decision it did? Educated Indian opinion at present is unanimous on the point that the vernacular should be the medium of instruction in all subjects and that English should be only a compulsory second language. There might be some few who dissent from this view among those who have neglected their vernacular altogether. Their number, however, can be counted on the fingers. The educated public therefore are bent upon assigning a pre-eminent place to the vernaculars. The result of the recent Conference, however, makes it highly doubtful whether they would gain their wish in the near future. The truth is that what the public wants the Government do not want. This has been established once again by the result of this Conference. Alas! How unfortunate that the vernaculars should be treated thus!

Vernacular education.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 31st, 1917.

21. Referring under this heading to the opinion of the Hon'ble Mr. Stone that science, history and geography, which are foreign to the Indians, should be taught in English, the Andhrapatrika, of the 29th August, says:—It is

Mr. Stone's superior intelligence.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

naturally difficult to learn branches of knowledge which are foreign through a foreign tongue. While this is so, it is strange that this appears easy to Mr. Stone. It is like advising when a house is on fire, that we should pour kerosine oil over it and thereby increase the mischief instead of asking us to quench the fire with water.

(e) Local and Municipal.

Dravidan, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Local self-governing bodies.

22. In the course of a communication, from the pen of a correspondent, published in the Dravidan of the 30th August in which he dwells upon the procedure adopted in electing non-official members to local self-governing institutions, the following observations occur:—All of us are aware that the public have no experience whatever of the deliberations and responsibilities of these local self-governing institutions. For example, two or three persons stand as candidates for every ward of a municipality. The right of voting is conferred upon individuals who have certain prescribed qualifications, and this right is exercised even by keepers of coffee hotels. What interest can an individual of this profession have in the management of municipal affairs? What does it matter to him whoever becomes a councillor? What knowledge has he to guide him in voting for the suitable candidate? Mostly the Brahmans who manage these coffee hotels vote in favour of the Brahman vakils who belong to their caste, and the local self-governing bodies conducted by the Brahman vakils and other prominent Brahmans do not pay proper attention to the welfare of the non-Brahmans. The European Presidents of these institutions, who do not even in their dreams think of caste distinctions, cannot understand clearly the caste prejudices and the narrow views of the Brahmans and their zeal to promote the interests of their own community. Unless seats are specially set apart for non-Brahmans in these bodies, it is certain that, in our present condition, it will not be possible for us to send our representatives to them.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

The Corporation of Madras.

23. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st September, says:—So long as the Government do not agree to give financial independence to the Municipal Corporation, the drainage works in Madras will not be finshed. The Government should at least give some financial help to the Corporation. If they do, the rest of the required money will be met from the Corporation funds and the drainage works will be finished. We hope the Government will do so soon, or the health of the city will be endangered. . . If unnecessary establishment is reduced and those who really serve the people are more amply paid, we hope that the administration of the Corporation will be successful. . . There are some more streets in Madras which are full of stink and they require to be set right. . . We are happy to hear that it is due to Doctor Raghavendra Rao that the city is in a sanitary condition. We see that in the Presidency towns only foreigners are deemed fit for places like that of the Health Officer and that Indians, however talented they may be, are not appointed. Will not Mr. Vijayaraghava Achariyar, the present President, and Doctor Raghavendra Rao, the present Health Officer, do to prove to the Anglo-Indian papers and to the Government, that the Indians can manage their own affairs under a system of self-government? . . . It is not Mr. Molony alone that is responsible for the administration of the Corporation. The Commissioners also are responsible. . . It is not right on the part of Mr. Molony that he should assert his individuality in a public report and decry the Commissioners who criticised the opinions of the Commissioners. . . The removal of the tram line from Chintadripet should first be attended to by the Government, to whom the matter was recommended by the Corporation. . . Unfiltered water may affect the health of the people, and we therefore hope that only filtered water may be supplied.

Manorama, Calicut, Sept. 4th, 1917.

The taluk boards and the election of presidents.

24. The Manorama, of the 4th September, expresses joy at the decision of the Government to allow the Nellore Taluk Board to elect a non-official president and hopes that the Government will be pleased to grant similar privileges to the other taluk boards as well as to the district boards.

(h) Railways.

25. A correspondent of the Prapanchamitran, of the 1st September, signing himself as Doraiswami Mudaliyar of Conjeeveram, narrates how, in a carriage in which he travelled by the Mēttupālaiyam mail from Conjeeveram to Coimbatore on the 15th August 1917, and which could accommodate only 25 persons, there were 34 passengers when the train reached Jalarpet and 30 more got in at that station and how 5 more passengers were shoved into the same carriage by a ticket collector in spite of protest by this correspondent and says:—These ticket collectors seem to think that they are District Collectors. When I pointed out the injustice of his action to the ticket collector at Jalarpet, he quietly asked me to get down, if I liked. Will the authorities pay some attention to the vagaries of these ticket collectors at least hereafter? They huddle passengers in trains like cattle and there is no one to inquire into this. The Railway Companies in India are treating the Indians very badly, while they set apart a separate compartment for the Anglo-Indians and afford them every convenience. If the Government will consider this well and redress this serious grievance, they will be securing the convenience of the people.

The Mēttupālaiyam mail and the public.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

The Lokopakari, of the 3rd September, publishes a letter on this subject, from the pen of a correspondent, which is also published in the Prapanchamitran of the 1st idem, and abstracted in this report.

The Mēttuppālaiyam mail and the people.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1917.

(k) General.

26. Referring to the numerous meetings held in different places to protest against the repressive policy of the Local Government and the letter said to have been addressed to Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar by the mother of the two Muhammadan brothers who have been interned in the United Provinces, the Vaisyamitran, of the 13th August, says:—What do this letter and these meetings indicate but the new spirit that is actuating the minds of the people? If this spirit is exhibited in reasonable ways, no one can call it sedition or transgression of the law. This well-considered activity cannot be suppressed by means of internment orders. The Government are bound to remove the hardships of the people. It is not fair on their part to brush aside intelligent opinion. Sufficient reasons have not yet been adduced for justifying the internment orders. The people fully believe that Mrs. Besant and others could not have had recourse to unjust methods. We hope the Government will cancel these orders without delay. It is unjust orders like these that have led to the agitation about the adoption of passive resistance in India. Indian youths seem to be decided upon taking to it, and they expect elders of mature experience to lead them. As a national spirit is spread throughout India, the efforts of the Government to suppress it by means of repression will only resemble adding fuel to the fire. "Considering about it deeply, this method of passive resistance does not require either physical strength or pecuniary help. It is a soul force and every man and every race can adopt it. The effect of this force upon brutality and despotism is the same as that of light upon darkness. Applying it to politics, it will demonstrate that a Government may be conducted only with the consent of the people," so says Mr. Gandhi. Therefore the people should understand this, and take steps to improve their country. Some persons seem to make a distinction between castes, but it is not wise to do so. All of us are brethren born in the same motherland. This should bring us all together and induce us to work in union for the advancement of the country.

The present political situation.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakotai, Aug. 13th, 1917.

The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 30th August, reproduces an article on this subject from the Dravidan of the 23rd idem, abstracted in paragraph 42 of the above report.

The present situation.

LIVA-UL-ISLAM, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

In a leader under the same heading the Swadesamitran, of the 4th September, refers to the advice given by Mr. Jinnah and the Raja of Muhammadabad that no room should be given for mischievous attempt of some people, who are inimical to the progress of the Indians and who try to create a split in the camp of the Home

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 4th, 1917.

Rulers, to succeed and that the Indians should stand united in working out the reforms demanded by the Congress and the Muslim League, which are the same as those demanded by the Home Rule Leagues, and observes:—There seems to be an impression among highly placed Government officials that the Home Rule movement is, except in one or two provinces, everywhere conducted by a few popular leaders without any support from the masses. After the Government interned Mrs. Besant on this wrong impression, there has been intense agitation throughout India and the Home Rule propaganda based on the very reforms suggested by the Congress and the Muslim League has been carried on widely. When the Government officials have thought it necessary to have recourse to several repressive measures in order to put a stop to the very strong condemnation by the public of the internment order of the Government, it is really strange that they should try to ignore the Home Rule agitation, which has not gone down on account of these repressive measures, as not being supported by the masses. It is a wrong opinion on the part of some that certain communities, which are against the immediate grant of complete Home Rule, are antagonistic to the Home Rule agitation carried on at present. We should note that these communities accept the Home Rule ideal, and want this ideal to be reached by means of important political reforms. It is these very reforms that have been detailed by the Congress and the Muslim League and the Home Rule agitation again is based on these reforms. Therefore all the Indians should try, without being led away by misrepresentations, to understand the real objects of the Home Rule movement and render the necessary help in their fulfilment. We should give no room to those who attempt to create a wrong impression in the mind of the Secretary of State for India when he goes here that there is a difference of opinion among us and that the Home Rule movement has no support whatever.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The present political outlook.

The Vaisyamitran, of the 20th August, publishes in Tamil an abstract of the proceedings of a public meeting held at Trichinopoly under the auspices of the local Home Rule League, referred to in the third paragraph on page 2220 of Report No. 34 of 1917.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1917.

The present condition of India.

Referring to the active efforts made by the Indians to acquire Home Rule for their country and the opposition of the Anglo-Indians to this, led by their organs, the chief among them being the Madras Mail, the Lokopakari, of the 3rd September, remarks:—It is really strange that the very Anglo-Indian papers, which preach to Indians that they should obey Government orders, should begin to threaten the Secretary of State for India, who is above the Government of India. It is the Anglo-Indians that create a disgust in the minds of the Indians, on account of their improper acts and provoke them. The Government should curb them. The Anglo-Indians always enjoy privileges and the aim of the Indians is only to acquire the same privileges. The Anglo-Indians feel that, if the Indians acquire their privileges, their influence will go down. If they realise that this is a mistaken idea, the misunderstanding between the Indians and the Anglo-Indians will disappear in a way. The Government themselves have often pointed out that the Indians and the Anglo-Indians should have a mutual sympathy. Even this has not made the Anglo-Indians treat the Indians with sympathy.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

The Madras Mail and Mr. Montagu.

27. Referring to an article in the Madras Mail headed "A word to Mr Montagu," the Swadesamitran, of the 30th August, observes:—Our readers are aware that several Anglo-Indians, who are not at all for our country acquiring Home Rule now and advancing, and some of our own people, who have not the courage to go against the wishes of these Anglo-Indians, are trying to counteract the Home Rule activity carried on now. Though the Government take no direct interest in this matter, it has often been rumoured that several of the bureaucrats carrying on the administration sympathise with these Anglo-Indians and others and evince an interest in their work. We have noted this often with regret. Nevertheless, it is expected throughout the country that the new Secretary of State will bring about an abatement of the repressive policy adopted by the officials, and instruct the Government of India to follow only methods approved by the people. He has been informed both by the public and

Members of Parliament that the first thing he will have to do before he makes a move as aforesaid is to bring about the release of Mrs. Besant and other interned persons. This has exasperated the Anglo-Indian papers already and they have begun to come down upon him. Though no importance need be attached to this, all the Indians suspected that several bureaucrats and the Anglo-Indian public supported these papers. The note headed "A word to Mr. Montagu" in the Madras Mail of yesterday has confirmed this suspicion. Though this note is worded ambiguously, one or two points are patent therefrom. Firstly, it presumes that the Secretary of State intends to do something which is against the opinion of the men on the spot and threatens him that, if he should do any such thing, acting on the clamour of a few, and bring about the resignation of high officials, the Anglo-Indians and the retrograde Indians here are sure to bring about his own resignation. Though Mr. Montagu may take this threatening quite coolly, Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar, our leader, has today sent a cable to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State, so as to acquaint them with the unanimous opinion of the Indians. If it is a fact, as is stated by the Madras Mail, that the bureaucrats will, as a body, stand against the Secretary of State, when he visits this country in person, it is tantamount to permitting Indians to have recourse to active instead of passive resistance. What are we to say of the strange attitude of this paper, which preached a solemn sermon to our people that they should not indulge in agitation in the time of war and that, if passive resistance is begun, it would displease the Secretary of State and the British public and no good would come of it, inculcating to its own party active resistance and agitation, even to the extent of making the Secretary of State resign and openly vaunting that it has a strong support! For the last few days, this paper advocated severe punishments for all those who talked of passive resistance. We do not know when one will come, who, taking it at its own word, will punish it for advocating active resistance. Though the Secretary of State may not care to suppress this paper, Mr. Morley, whose disciple he is, has given him a lesson, as far as the official, whose resignation is referred to by this paper, is concerned. Mr. Morley has stated: "So long as I am concerned with the Indian Government, if anybody tenders his resignation because he cannot have his own way against the deliberately formed views of his superior authorities, that resignation will be promptly and peremptorily accepted." We anxiously await further developments.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

Adverting to the same subject, the Hindu Nesan, of the 31st August, remarks: - The threat offered by the Madras Mail to Mr. Montagu is evidently the outcome of an exhuberance of loyalty. We do not think Mr. Montagu will flinch in the least and change his policy on account of it. Certain innuendos in the article of the Madras Mail show that there may be some truth in the rumour, which has been current in the city, that Mr. Montagu had suggested the release of Mrs. Besant and others and that Lord Pentland offered to resign, if such a thing should be done. We hope Lord Pentland will not do any such thing. When Sir Arthur Lawley was the Governor of Madras, he offered to resign when Sir Sankaran Nayar was appointed the permanent Advocate-General of Madras. But Lord Morley, the then Secretary of State for India, boldly stated that he was ready to accept his resignation. Immediately Sir Arthur Lawley toned down. The same story may repeat itself even now.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

The Madras Mail and Mr. Montagu.

Referring to the explanation offered by the Madras Mail in regard to its article headed "A word to Mr. Montagu", that it applied not to the political reforms to be introduced by him but to certain individual acts contemplated by him, which tend to curtail the authority of not a provincial Government alone, but of the Government of this country itself, the Swadesamitran, of the 1st September, observes:—This makes it clear that the article in question referred to the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues. If the statements therein are correct, it shows that the Secretary of State for India has decided to cancel the internment orders. So it is quite natural for the Anglo-Indian papers to cry out that the prestige of the officials on the spot would diminish. These Anglo-Indian papers have, on numerous occasions, stated that the prestige of the officials should be saved from being tarnished. It is the opinion of the Anglo-Indians and the bureaucrats that the latter can never commit a mistake. It is really strange that these should ignore justice and clamour for the prestige of the officials being supported. However this may be, we learn from the Madras Mail that Mr. Montagu intends to walk in a path which will secure for him the love of the Indians. We trust that he will not give up his intention, afraid of the vain threatening of the Anglo-Indians.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

The threat of the Mail.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 30th August, says that the Madras Mail holds out a threat that if Mr. Montagu should recommend self-government to India all at once, the Europeans and the Moderates would see to his removal from his office. It remarks that it is childish to tremble at the shadow and hold out such a threat. Mr. Montagu has the wisdom which the Mail has and is not so blind as to put self-government all at once into the hands of its advocates.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu and the Madras Mail.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th August, says:—When a great man expresses his sympathy for the Indians, it has become a common thing with the Anglo-Indian papers to grow indignant at him. . . Mr. Montagu has become the Secretary of State at a critical juncture in the affairs of India. Before he has become such, he expressed his firm opinion about the Government of India. He has stated that he has not changed that opinion. Purity of administration is his ideal, and it is not in his nature to trouble himself about prestige. There is nothing strange in that the appointment of such officers is an eyesore to the Anglo-Indians. At present the political situation in this country is critical. The bureaucracy do not like the new aspirations of the people. The enforcement of repressive laws only increases the commotion instead of promoting peace. Excepting the Bengal Provincial Committee, the other seven Committees have resolved that Mrs. Besant should be elected as President of the next Congress. This shows the decided opinion of the country. Who is there now better qualified than Mr. Montagu to establish peace in the country? Mr. Montagu announced that he would come to India. This has removed the disappointment of the Indians and generated new hopes in them. Reuter says that Mr. Montagu has wired to the Government of India to inform him of all the circumstances connected with the internment of Mrs. Besant. From this it is plain that he is deeply thinking of allaying the present unrest. It remains to be seen if Mr. Montagu will hesitate on account of the ultimatum sent to him by the Mail yesterday. It may be firmly believed that the opinion of the whole country excepting a few Anglo-Indians supports the right endeavours of Mr. Montagu. Will no law apply to the Mail which has undertaken to treat the Government with contempt? As it is natural with the Mail to grow angry with anyone who may endeavour to ameliorate the condition of the Indians, we pray that Mr. Montagu will show his wisdom by not hesitating to restore peace in India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

The last message of the Madras Mail to Mr. Montagu.

Referring to certain statements of the Madras Mail in connection with the visit of Mr. Montagu to India, the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, observes:—The Madras Mail threatens that if by the above words the repressive methods are removed all the Europeans will join in raising an uproar. Is it not ridiculous that the Madras Mail which has been preaching peace to the Indians all the while should grow so emotional and cast peace to the winds. As it writes about the opinions of the authorities it would seem that it is enjoying their patronage. . . India should see that she helps the realisation of the good aims of Mr. Montagu. From all quarters of India thousands of messages should be sent to Mr. Montagu asking him not to draw back on account of the threats of the Madras Mail.

The Provincial Congress Committee has sent today a message on this subject to the Prime Minister and Sir William Wedderburn as follows: . . . It is the duty of the Indians to send similar messages to Mr. Montagu from all parts of India and help him in his good endeavours. The opinion of the Indians is made clear by the election of Mrs. Annie Besant to the Presidentship of the National Congress by the reception committee. May Mr. Montagu note all these facts."

28. Adverting to the proposal to grant self-government to the German colonists in Africa at the close of the war, the Vaisyamitran, of the 20th August, writes :—Is there any doubt that we Indians are superior to these colonists in civilization and in every other respect? However the same right has not yet been conferred on us. Perhaps the Government have no mind even to consult us upon that matter. No question of fitness for self-government seems to arise in the case of these Africans, while it often arises only in the case of Indians.

Self-government to the German colonists in Africa.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, Aug. 20th, 1917.

29. The Swadesamitran, of the 30th August, also gives a Tamil version of a portion of an article under this head appearing in the Hindu of the 25th idem, criticising the work of the Commission appointed to enquire into the methods of recruiting and conditions of Indian labour on the estates in Ceylon and Malaya.

"A whitewashing commission."

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

The Hindu Nesan and the Swadesamitran, of the 3rd September, reproduce in Tamil a further portion of an article under this head appearing in the Hindu of the 25th ultimo referred to in paragraph 60 of Report No. 35 of 1917.

"A whitewashing commission."

HINDU NESAN & SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

30. The Hindu Nesan and the Dravidan, of the 30th and 31st August, respectively publish an abstract of the proceedings of a meeting held in the Trichinopoly Town Hall on the 28th idem, under the auspices of the local Home Rule League, when Messrs. Chandrasekhara Sarma and Mantreswara Sarma are stated to have delivered lectures on "Students and politics" and "National service to the motherland during the present crisis". A large number of students are reported to have been present at the meeting.

The Home Rule League, Trichinopoly.

HINDU NESAN & DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 30th & 31st, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 3rd September, reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of the first anniversary of this league celebrated on the 1st idem, which appear in the Hindu of the 3rd September 1917.

The Home Rule League, Trichinopoly.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

31. The Vaisyamitran, of the 13th August, publishes in Tamil the proceedings of a meeting held in Bombay under the auspices of this League on the 6th idem to bid farewell to Messrs. Shiva Rao and Deobhankar when they left for Madras to join the staff of New India, which appear in the Hindu of the 7th idem.

The Home Rule League, Bombay.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, Aug. 13th, 1917.

32. The Vaisyamitran, of the 20th August, reproduces from the Swadesamitran of the 14th idem the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar on the occasion of the celebration of the first anniversary of this League, referred to in paragraph 24 of Report No. 34 of 1917.

The Home Rule League, Negapatam.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakot'ai, Aug. 20th, 1917.

33. The Vaisyamitran, of the 20th August, publishes in Tamil a telegraphic summary of the lecture on Home Rule delivered in Bengali by Sir Rabindranath Tagore at a public meeting held in Calcutta on the 10th idem, which appears in the Hindu of the 11th idem.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore on Home Rule.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, Aug. 20th, 1917.

34. The Vaisyamitran, of the 20th August, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran, of the 8th August, on this subject, which are abstracted in paragraph 65 of Report No. 32 of 1917.

Home Rule for Indians in the Portuguese India.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, Aug. 20th, 1917.

35. The Swadesamitran, of the 31st August, gives a Tamil version of the reply of Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar to the manifesto issued by the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri and others against the adoption of the policy of passive resistance. This reply is published in the Hindu of the 30th idem.

Passive resistance.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 28th August, says :—New India that published the article written by the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapathy Raju and six others condemning

Passive resistance.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

passive resistance, says that at the special meeting held last Saturday, Mr. Raju fought for passive resistance with zeal. . . . Thus are the rulers and the ruled deceived. . . . Oh, advocates of passive resistance! Can you swear that all the people of the Madras Presidency advocate passive resistance which has been advocated by the self-appointed representatives of the people at the Gokhale Hall last Saturday? If you cannot, mend your mistake, call for another provincial conference, pass a resolution to the effect that the Madras Presidency does not advocate passive resistance, and avert all commotion by the help of truth.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

Notice against passive resistance.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, publishes in Telugu the rejoinder of Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar to the representation published by the seven anti-passive resisters.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, reports that a resolution was passed by the Committee of Mahajana Sabha, Malabar, advocating passive resistance.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Desamata, of the 22nd August, reports that a meeting was held at Rajahmundry on the 16th August, in which a resolution was moved urging the necessity of passive resistance and the use of swadeshi articles.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 29th August, says:—It is to be deemed that the unnecessary drama of passive resistance is due to the fact that the people do not know the mind of the Government. The decrying of the authorities is reaching the skies. The Government are reticent. The acts, writings and utterances of the passive resisters suggest that the Government are afraid. What more is needed for the false words of the advocates of passive resistance to be believed in. Those who wish to live peacefully ask whether their statement that they would disobey the orders of the authorities and their acts, speeches and writings persuading others to do so, are not unlawful. To resist without weapons is a step preliminary to resistance with weapons. If passive resistance is not resisted, it may lead to resistance with weapons and break the peace of the country. Unless the Government put a stop to this passive resistance, riots, commotions, agitations and inconsiderate acts will not cease. The idea of passive resistance has entered the minds of students also and is doing away with the difference between the young and the old. It is setting at naught the order of the Government regarding students and politics. It is separating students from their parents and guardians. Students attend meetings in crowds. New India says that passive resisters at Erode have resolved to hoist the Home Rule flag in their houses and exhorts the passive resisters in Madras also to follow their example. The authorities try to suppress passive resistance by peaceful methods. We cannot say how far they will succeed in this matter. We cannot say what aspect this scene in the drama may take at any moment. The elders and the Government will do well now at least to put a stop to the commotion.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 29th August, represents a certain patriot to have written:—It is a fact that passive resisters number only a few. It is untrue that all Home Rulers have agreed to the adoption of passive resistance. There is no truth in the writings and speeches which state that all educated men are in agreement with the Home Rulers and passive resisters. It is also not a fact that ordinary people know anything about Home Rule and passive resistance. It is a mistake to suppose that all passive resisters are great men and men who think deeply. Mr. Subba Rao and others should not rest satisfied with writing something in the papers against passive resistance. They should arrange for a meeting in Madras and publish to the rulers and to the world that the people of Madras are opposed to passive resistance. We suggest that it is their duty to see that there is no commotion in the country when Mr. Montagu arrives.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 31st, 1917.

The passive resistance movement.

In a lengthy article, dwelling on the passive resistance movement, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 31st August, observes:—At present there are two opinions among the public regarding the advisability of adopting the principle of passive resistance. There is truth in the contention of both the parties. In the term passive resistance there is not the slightest idea or suggestion as to any kind of violence. It is the only device left to the people when all other constitutional methods have failed. It is true that the movement might create some displeasure in the minds of the responsible authorities. But it would be wrong to suppose that the principle will be in operation from the moment it is agreed to by provincial assemblies. For, it has to be approved by the All India Congress Committee. How far have the resolutions passed by the Congress year after year been carried into effect? We must therefore expect that this resolution will share the same fate as the rest. From this point of view, the opposition expressed in the manifesto issued by some of the leaders was hardly necessary or expedient. We wonder why any manifesto should have been issued at all, when these leaders were at liberty to bring forward their views at the meeting itself. One fact, however, is evident from this conflict of views, namely the consensus of opinion among the district delegates and a more accurate measure of its strength.

Passive resistance.

Referring to the news of Mr. Montagu's proposed visit to India, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 4th September, writes:— Some Anglo-Indian papers, such as the Madras Mail, have begun to indulge in unrestrained criticism, and talk as though they have the power to dictate even to the Viceroy, the Secretary of State and the British public, and could even get Mr. Montagu to be dismissed in case he should espouse the popular cause. They are a united body. Their strong unity has brought them the power to control even their rulers. These personages say that if the Indians should resort to passive resistance, they have the means of putting down the movement, that is, they affirm that if the people should disobey any autocratic laws which are detrimental to their progress, they know the means of ending the disobedience with a high hand by sending the people to jail, etc. It is after this policy was adopted and hundreds of thousands were punished that the British constitution came to be established. The writings of the Anglo-Indian Press go to show that a similar state of things might arise in India. Mr. Montagu wants both the authorities and the people to adhere to constitutional methods. The Parliament too desires the same. The British people follow these national traditions. If the Anglo-Indians should presume to know better than all these, and would undermine these traditions, let them. They will reap the fruit of their deeds. All Indians would remain on the side of the Government. Already Home Rule Leagues are being formed in every town and village. Passive resistance is being resorted to. British methods are being followed and laws forbidding the pursuance of those methods are being disobeyed. If those that disobey are sent to jail, they suffer the punishment with a spirit of resignation. They try to feel that it is godliness and conquest of the self to suffer unjustly. This feeling is spreading like wild fire. It is never possible to put 30 crores of people into jail. Nor is it possible to undermine British traditions. If it be possible, be it so. The Indians have been a race of ascetics from time immemorial. It is our spirit of resignation that has protected us always. We should never give it up. Let us not take revenge against those that do us harm. If possible, let us do them a good turn. Let us pray for the reclamation of those that punish us. If they make unjust laws, let us defy them fearlessly. This is the great principle of passive resistance. Let us face all the consequences of adopting it. Let us pray for the Anglo-Indians too. Let us do our duty fearlessly.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Sep. 4th, 1917.

Passive resistance.

The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 29th August, referring to the resolution regarding passive resistance put forward at the special conference held at the Gokhale Hall the day before yesterday, makes the following observations:—A section of the Hindus passionately devoted to passive resistance has apparently no desire to act with prudence or fairness. Their object, in moving this resolution, is to oppose every Government order, whether dealing with crime or prompted by expediency, and suffer the consequences which means that, without having recourse to force of arms, the law should be broken or hampered. They must be willing to go to jail and suffer the severest punishment rather than obey the laws of the Government.

Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

In our opinion if this is not a case of downright madness and lunacy, it is certainly inimical to the interests of the country.

We cannot believe that the passive resistance movement will be successful in Madras. Granted for the moment that our Hindu friends possess all the necessary qualifications, such as spirit, courage, sincerity and determination, can they assure us that they are likely to obtain Home Rule or self-government by such means?

If not, and most emphatically not, how can this policy of spreading disorder and discontent in the country be considered a wise one?

We express our unqualified disapproval and utter abhorrence of this movement. It should be the first duty of every peace-loving citizen of India to support and respect the law. If these people desire to secure the release of Mrs. Besant and her associates, they should adopt legal and constitutional means. It is possible that more dignified and sober arguments might induce the Government to relent and liberate them.

We appeal to the Muhammadans to have nothing whatever to do with this unlawful procedure.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

A passive resister.

36. The Andhraprakasika, of the 27th August, reproduces from the Andhrapatrika a letter addressed by a non-Brahman lady to the President, Home Rule League, Vellore, which contains: "I wish that without discussion passive resistance may be approved of by all unanimously."

The same paper publishes a letter from a correspondent in reply to the aforesaid letter which contains the following: "Without union, India cannot obtain swaraj. Even if she gets it, it will only be the rule of Yama (the god of death), and not one of happiness . . . The present agitation is misdirected."

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

Home Rule flags.

37. The Prapanchamitran, of the 1st September, also publishes in Tamil an abstract of the proceedings of a public meeting held in Erode under the auspices of the local Home Rule League to advocate the hoisting of Home Rule flags, referred to in paragraph 58 of Report No. 35 of 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

The Home Rule flag case.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, reporting about the case regarding the hoisting of Home Rule flag at Coimbatore, states:—. . . "The Hon'ble Narasimha Ayyar asked the Magistrate permission to look into the records but it was refused. On the 28th instant the pillar and the flag were brought to Mrs. Besant, but she sent them back. It is not known who sent them to her. Many hoisted Home Rule flags over their houses at Coimbatore.

In the high school attached to the Coimbatore College, there is employed one Paramjyoti Sreshti, a non-Brahman Christian, who is a Theosophist. He is said to have been dismissed from service. A correspondent from Coimbatore writes that the reason for the dismissal is the instigation of the anti-Home Rulers.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

Home Rule flags.

The Lokopakari, of the 3rd September, publishes in Tamil an abstract of the proceedings of a public meeting held in Erode advocating the hoisting of these flags in every house, referred to in paragraph 58 of Report No. 35 of 1917.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

The Special Session of the Madras Provincial Conference.

38. The Hindu Nesan, of the 1st September, reproduces the comments of the Dravida Patrika, of the 29th August, on this subject, abstracted in paragraph 48 of the above Report.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

The Madras Special Provincial Conference.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th August, publishes in Telugu the speeches delivered at the Madras Special Provincial Conference on passive resistance, etc. It reports Mr. Joseph to have said:— . . . The Government are the cause of our taking to the policy of passive resistance. Their repressive administration should not be allowed to go on. . . . We must create disturbance. It is for that that we intend to use the weapon of passive resistance. . . O, young men! It is your duty to show to the world by the prowess of your action that our words are no empty threats. . .

The paper reports Mr. Gopalaswami Mudaliyar to have said :—If the Government do not enforce repressive laws, there will be no passive resistance. If they do enforce, we cannot but adopt it to protect our rights of citizenship. Those who advise us not to take that step, should first advise the Government and not the people.

It reports Mr. G. Harisarvottama Rao to have said :—When the Government have made a mistake, we shall necessarily apply this weapon of passive resistance.

39. Adverting to the Government order declaring that the security deposited by New India has been forfeited to His Majesty, the Vaisyamitran, of the 20th August, expresses its regret at this action of the Government and remarking that everything done by the Government to curtail the liberty of the people will reduce the love of the people for and their confidence in the Government, says :—All the editors who express themselves boldly are often being warned and threatened by the Government. The prestige of the editors as a class has gone down. The Press Act, as it is, does not enable one to understand what is an offence and what is not an offence under it. If the authorities like they can declare anything in a paper having reference to swaraj or liberty to be an offence. Liberty is a thing which we have acquired from western civilization. It is a right bestowed on us by God. If newspapers are not to have this divine right and speak out boldly, how can the people and the Government understand each other. It is really strange that when the people are crying for Home Rule and justice, the Government should, without fulfilling their aspirations, increase their repressive measures.

The New India security forfeited.

VAISYAMITRAN, [Devakottai, Aug. 20th, 1917.

The Desamata, of the 22nd August, refers to the forfeiture by the Government of the security paid by New India and remarks :—The Press Act is giving arbitrary authority to the Government. No High Court can interfere. We hope that the Government who are noting the trend of public opinion will not grow more and more irascible, but will assume a sympathetic attitude towards the people and the papers.

The New India security.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

40. In the course of a leader under the heading "With the olive branch," the Dravidan, of the 30th August, observes :—Though the statement made by Mr. Montagu some days back in the Parliament raised high hopes in the minds of the Home Rulers, the announcement that he will go here and consult the officials and non-officials about the reforms to be introduced, was received by them with regret. As a matter of fact, Mr. Montagu will feel, after going here, that he is placed between two fires, as opinion regarding the future type of Indian administration is divided here. The Brahmans, who form a minority, clamour for wholesale reforms, while the non-Brahmans, who form the majority, justly claim that the reforms should be introduced gradually. The progressive party will not be satisfied unless the reforms granted are at least to the extent to which they have been demanded in the memorandum of the nineteen non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council. On the other hand, if definite reforms are now introduced in response to the clamour of these people, it will provoke those who believe in the wisdom and justice of the British rule. The introduction of such reforms will, as is doubted now, increase the influence and status of the class which is already enjoying every privilege and lead to the degradation of the majority of the people, who are still trying to improve their education and lead a happy life under the British rule. So Mr. Montagu has a serious responsibility on him in skilfully steering the ship of Indian administration clear of the Scylla of the impatience of the Brahmans and the Charybdis of the views of the non-Brahmans, who have already been victimised by the Brahmans. If he succeeds, by means of his rare fact, in bringing both the parties together in spite of their conflicting views about the Indian administration, his work will become indelibly impressed on the history of this country and will doubtless be remembered by every one.

Mr. Montagu's visit to India.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

Mr. Montagu in India.

The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 31st August, writes:—The glad tidings of the approaching visit of the Secretary of State has caused no little stir in India. A certain political journal, in view of the present complications, puts forward its recognized opinions and writes that, if it is essential for Mr. Montagu to acquaint himself with India's real political secrets, he should endeavour to get into personal touch with the leaders of the various schools of thought. Another thinks that Mr. Montagu should privately consult the Government officials in order to obtain information regarding the origin of those questionable movements that have aroused the suspicion of the Government.

The editor of the Jaridah-i-Rozgar disagrees with both opinions and observes:—From our point of view we consider the best plan would be for Mr. Montagu to make an attempt to settle, in the presence of their accredited representatives, those differences which exist between Government officials and Indian leaders. There would then be no cause for complaint.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

Mr. Montagu's visit.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th August, refers to the remarks of the Anglo-Indian papers on the proposed visit of Mr. Montagu to India and says:—In his speech in the House of Commons Mr. Montagu pointed out the defects of the Government. No advocate of the National Congress expressed firmer opinions than those of Mr. Montagu. . . Even the former history of Mr. Montagu is an eyesore to the Anglo-Indians. . . The Indian Daily News says that Mr. Montagu's visit will only augment the discontent in the country and not reduce it, that all the means required to encourage disloyalty and animosities will always exist in this country, and that whatever boons may be conferred on the Indians, will then be of no use. The gist of its contention is that no privileges should be granted to the Indians. To substantiate this contention, it charges the Indians with disloyalty. It can easily be inferred how hostile such papers are to the Indians. . . The paper says that the extremists will never be satisfied as they will have no work to do if any reforms are granted to gratify the people. We want to know from this paper what personal advantages those who conduct political agitation gain. When there are many repressive laws in force, and when there are dangers on every side, only those who are self-sacrificing and who wish the welfare of the people will agree to suffer and not others. Only when the people are contented and happy, will the Government be able to govern the country efficiently. . . The object of the agitators is to promote the welfare of the people and bring the rulers and the ruled closer together. All the people welcome Mr. Montagu in the hope that his visit will promote the happiness of the people. . . The endeavours of the Anglo-Indian papers to prejudice the mind of Mr. Montagu do not show broadmindedness.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

Students and the Government.

41. The Swadesamitran, of the 1st September, says:—It is a fact known to all that it is the students of today that will occupy responsible positions in the future, and, therefore, unless they understand wordly affairs from now, they cannot acquire this knowledge suddenly later on. It is on account of this that, in western countries, students are allowed to take part in controversial political discussions, and the lecture delivered by Lord Islington recently in the Oxford University can itself be quoted as an instance in point. Even in India, students were allowed, till a few months back, to take part in political meetings. It is they that have served as volunteers in the Congress from the time of its inception. No serious harm has resulted from this. Experience being this way, there is no justification whatever for the order passed by the Madras and other Provincial Governments prohibiting students from taking part in politics. By not attending a political meeting they are not rendered incapable of knowing the political discussion therein, for they learn it from the papers the next day. But they lose altogether the opportunity of listening to the words of eloquent speakers. Thus they are deprived of one of the advantages which a student should derive in his educational career. This much for the students. Even on the side of the Government, their object is not fulfilled. The memorial from the students of the Law College in Bombay and the behaviour of the students in Trichinopoly and Nagpore show that they resent this curtailment of their privileges. Will this not lead to their getting discontented with the Government? Perhaps the Government, whose object is to prevent the students getting discontented on account of their listening to political lectures, have failed to note that their order by itself tends to make the students discontented. We hear that the Madras Government have been apprised, by the Principals of Colleges themselves, of the unwisdom of this order and yet the Government have not cancelled it. We do not think these restrictions will confer any real benefit either on the students or on the Government, which is evincing a greater interest in the students than even their parents. We will point out again that there is time yet for the Government to reconsider the matter in a sympathetic spirit.

42. The Vartakamitran, of the 2nd September, publishes the very same article on this subject as that published in the Hindu Nesan of the 10th August, which has been abstracted in paragraph 52 of Report No. 33 of 1917.

VARTAKAMITRAN, Tanjore, Sept. 2nd, 1917.

The German trade after the war.

43. A correspondent by name S. S. Arunagirinadan contributes an article to the Dravidan, of the 31st August, in which he dwells upon the injustice of a few educated Indians claiming to be the representatives of the masses, who have not yet had the benefit of education, and the justice of the refusal on the part of the British Government to grant Home Rule acting upon the opinion of the few self-interested persons, who demand it, observes:—Some of them, who clamour for Home Rule, are enjoying fire works here in place of the sound of the explosion of bombs, listening to the sweet voice of male and female musicians in the Gokhale Hall in place of the harrowing cry of the heroes dying in the war, seeking the company of prostitutes in place of the misery of the bold and valiant men who proceed to the front leaving their loving wives behind, driving in motor vehicles and side-cars and dozing in beautiful bungalows in place of the fighting of military men in mountain and plain, and having their fill, both at home and in hotels like D'Angelis, and wasting their time in idle talk in place of the fighting of the heroes in the front, unable to have even their rations in time. These think that the English Government will grant them Home Rule if they claim for it. This is a vain attempt.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

The demand for Home Rule.

A correspondent of the Swadesamitran, of the 1st September, refers to the great services rendered to India by Mrs. Besant and the meaning of the word Home Rule, after the introduction of which expression by this lady every Indian is said to love life under it, and appeals to all Indians to work for the cause of Home Rule and, bearing in their minds the learned lecture delivered on this subject by the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar at Negapatam, take a vow to observe the suggestions contained therein. The communication ends with a verse in Sanskrit, printed in Tamil characters, in praise of Mrs. Besant.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

44. A non-Brahman correspondent of the Swadesamitran, of the 31st August, dwells upon the circumstances which necessitated the holding of a special session of the Provincial Conference at Madras, and the expressive, though short, speech of the President of the conference, and remarks:—If Lord Pentland, who is spending his time pleasantly on the hills, had been in Gokhale Hall in spirit on the days of the conference and noted the mental excitement and enthusiasm of the delegates and the failure of the herculean efforts made by certain members of the Legislative Council to control this excitement and enthusiasm, he would, doubtless, have understood clearly the serious situation in which the country has been landed on account of his repressive measures. As we are interested in the welfare of the English Government, we are bound to point out that the Government of India should no longer blindly ignore public opinion as they have been doing till now. When, in the face the pronouncements of Viceroys and High Court Judges that there is nothing unlawful in demanding swaraj under the British rule, we see the present Viceroy, Lord Chelmsford, and the Provincial Governors speaking against our Home Rule movement and gagging patriots and patriotic newspapers by means of strong measures, which are against the British

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

A timely advice at the present juncture.

principle of political liberty, and the serious unrest created throughout the country on account of this, our heart quivers. We are terrified to see even old and far-sighted gentlemen, with enough of worldly experience, having found it difficult to curb their enthusiasm in speaking at this conference. We do not know what mistakes the young men engaged in political work may commit. The timely advice we now offer to the Government is that they should forthwith release Mrs. Besant and other interned patriots and gain the love of the people by kindness and sympathy. To the patriots of the country we will say that they should control their enthusiasm and, in pointing out facts both to the Government and the people, use language which is moderate and within lawful bounds, while being at the same time dignified and definite. Our ideas, words and acts should be such as will infuse a sense of admiration and moral fear in the British public and the great Powers of the world.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

Mr. Bhupendranath Basu to remain in India.

45. The Hindu Nesan, of the 3rd September, approves of the action taken by the Secretary of State for India in asking Mr. Bhupendranath Basu to remain here alone, till he arrives here, and thinks that Mr. Basu will be of much use in introducing Mr. Montagu to the Indian leaders and acquainting him with the political privileges necessary for the people.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

Mr. Bhupendranath Basu.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th August, refers with satisfaction to the news that Mr Bhupendranath Basu will now go to England and come back with Mr. Montagu to India, and hopes that Mr. Basu will justify his appointment and do good to the people.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1917.

Mr. Bhupendranath Basu's utterances.

46. The Dravidan, of the 3rd September, refers to the speech delivered by Mr. Bhupendranath Basu at the Bombay Presidency Association, in which he is reported to have stated that the memorandum of the nineteen was drawn up in haste, and says:—Among the political leaders in India, Mr. Basu has an established reputation of being moderate and keen sighted in his views. If he does not act on the words of Mrs. Besant and make the congress a tool in her hands, he will have to be regarded as an important leader in India. The very fact that he has not done so leads one to doubt whether he and other congress leaders like him can be regarded as the real leaders of the people. Mr. Basu also stated in his speech in Bombay that he would make all possible endeavours to get the principles laid down in the memorandum of the nineteen carried out. It is known to many that this memorandum is full of flaws. Then again it is doubtless a harmful act of his to try to stick to the principles in this memorandum after stating that it was drawn up in haste. It appears to us that, at the present juncture, it will be better to leave the administration of the Government in the hands of the English officials than in those of the congress officials. Any way Mr. Basu admits that the memorandum of the nineteen was drawn up in haste. We hope he will understand the truth in course of time.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sept. 1st, 1917.

Montagu's visit to India.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 1st September, referring to the remarks of the Anglo-Indian papers regarding the visit of Mr. Montagu to India, observes:—"Hearing of the visit of Mr. Montagu to India the Anglo-Indian papers are agitated. It is said that the visit of a Secretary of State is opposed to custom. What? Did not Lord Crew come to India and personally help in the annulment of the partition of Bengal? Another objection is that it would somewhat compromise the dignity of the Viceroy. Why has the Viceroy been secretly trying for political reforms without consulting the representatives of the people? What was the necessity for discouraging words, awe-inspiring punishments and other unpopular and dangerous acts? If the Viceroy had not taken up this course of action, and if he had commanded the confidence of the people, there would have been no need for the visit of the Secretary of State to India nor any cause for the dignity of the Viceroy being compromised. . . . The failure of the Mesopotamian campaign opened the eyes of the Parliament. The old game cannot be played hereafter. The time for sticking on to old customs has passed away. The system of political administration in India must undergo a radical change. Superficial colouring and varnishing will no longer do."

47. In the course of a long article under this heading, a correspondent of the Dravidan, of the 4th September, refers to the various Tamil equivalents for the word "Brahman" and, describing how each name was given to the Brahman on account of certain good qualities to be possessed by him and how the Brahmans of the present day are lacking in these qualities, concludes by saying that calling them by these different names, when they have not even one of these good qualities, which will entitle them to such appellations, resembles a blind man being called a man with the lotus eye and a most ugly fellow being called Manmada, who is the personification of beauty.

Who are the Brahmans?

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Sept. 4th, 1917.

48. Referring to the Special Madras Provincial Conference, the Andhra-prakasika, of the 27th August, observes:—All the resolutions that were passed in the conference must be said to have been approved of by these four hundred delegates but cannot be said to have received the approval of all the people of this presidency. . . It is regrettable that the advice of Mr. N. Subba Rao Pantulu, etc., not to have recourse to passive resistance should have been discarded. . . The Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar's fiery speech reminds us of the speeches of the Irish leaders, who would only push on without caring for the consequences. Need it be expressly stated what our young leaders, who have paid so little regard to the advice of elderly gentlemen, will do when they actually get Home Rule. The moderates will do well now at least to open their eyes to the enormities of the self-constituted young leaders and stop them by clearly proclaiming that it is unwise to take to passive resistance.

A split among Home Rulers.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

49. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th August, reports a correspondent to the Bombay Chronicle to have advised the Servants of India Society not to stand in the way of its members joining the Home Rule League, which is working for India's political liberty.

The Servants of India Society.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

50. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th August, publishes in English and in Telugu a gist of the proceedings of the Behar Provincial Congress.

The Behar Provincial Congress.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

51. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th August, also publishes in Telugu a gist of the proceedings of the Central Provinces Provincial Conference under the heading "Passive Resistance and Internments".

The Central Provinces Provincial Conference.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

52. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th August, reports that a meeting was held at Narasayapalem village, Bapatla taluk, in which the President spoke on the subject of "The Home Rule banner", and a resolution was passed protesting against the internment of Mrs. Besant, etc.

A Home Rule meeting.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

53. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 28th August, says that many instances may be cited in which the authorities treat the ryots with contempt. He states that they should be taught how to respect our rights and our honour.

The authorities and the ryots.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1917.

54. The Andhra Bazaar refers to the report of the Trade Commission sent to Russia, and says:—While Russia which is backward in every direction is trying to take raw products from our country and to establish industries, it is a pity that India which has the help of Britian and which produces so many things, is unable to establish industries and is poverty-stricken. . . Though the cost of the commission has been met from the Indian Treasury, the report of the commission will not be of much help to our merchants, for all our foreign trade is in the hands of foreigners. We have no trade facilities, and . . . no merchants with zeal.

The Russian trade.

ANDHRA BAZAAR, Cocanada, 1917.

55. In the course of an article on the protection of cows, the Andhra Bazaar remarks:—Whatever the Hindus say appear crazy to our people, and whatever the whitemen say appears as gospel truth. This also is just, for, the saying goes:—"As is the King so are the subjects" . . . In the matter of cows, there is a great difference of opinion between the people of foreign countries and ourselves. Nowhere is man

Cows.

ANDHRA BAZAAR, Cocanada, 1917.

so kind to cows as here. We protect the cow and use the many things that she gives, but the foreigners kill her and enjoy her flesh. While we consume the ghee, they are satisfied with the fat. While we live on milk and curd, they live on her flesh. So since the advent of foreigners into our country, we have been suffering from cow-famines. He who devoid of wisdom slaughters a cow, earns sin and not merit. . . India was once enjoying a good supply of fresh milk, but now she has been reduced to a condition in which she is obliged to use tinned milk. . . The municipalities, unions and village panchayats should arrange for the proper grazing of cows, and as far as possible see that cows are not killed for food, and that foreigners do not carry away superior breeds of cows. Only thus, can cows be protected and we enjoy good health.

ANASUYA, August 1917.

A prayer to God.

56. The Anasuya, for August, in the course of its prayer to God, says:—Alas! Scorned and down-trodden we are unable to rise again and we do not feel shame. . . We feel as if we are roaming in a desert having left our own houses. Free us from this miserable condition and uplift the motherland, the womankind and mankind.

DIVYAGNANA-DEEPIKA, Chittoor, August 1917.

Mrs. Besant.

57. In an imaginary dialogue, a correspondent to the Divyagnanadeepika, for August, makes one of the characters say:—Mrs. Besant is comparable to the goddess of learning in knowledge and to Prahlada in devotion. In successfully accomplishing what she has undertaken, she has equalled Anjaneya who did even impossible things. She is doing good to the world.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

Reforms.

58. The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th August, says in its leader:—If we consider what proportion of the Indian revenue is spent on education, the difference between India and England will become plain. The educational policy followed in India is not very encouraging to education. In England, elementary education is given free. Mr. Fisher's ideal is to give secondary education also free. . . When even in the midst of war, England has taken into consideration the questions of education and industry, how is it possible that India will keep quiet without asking for reforms? The Leader has remarked that in this country only is the war said to stand in the way of reforms and that the Government of India have no reason to disregard the endeavours made by Indians to uplift the country.

The same paper says:—By whatever name Indian political reforms are christened, it is admitted by all politicians that reforms in the administration of the country are a matter of necessity. There is difference of opinion as to what reforms are needed, but there is none as regards their necessity. . . It is difficult for those that have been enjoying authority to forego it. People look at the world according to their own lights and not with the eyes of the world. This is the reason for difference of opinion as regards reforms. . . Despite the recent reforms, there are no indications that the original principles on which the British administration is based have undergone any material change. The stronghold of authority is as powerful and impregnable as ever. The wishes of the people are at the mercy of the rulers, and do not depend on their natural rights. Unless these things are changed, there can be no real reforms. . . The rulers do not agree to grant any of the reforms asked for by the National Congress. They have been satisfying the leaders with sweet words. The reforms of the rulers do not satisfy the leaders or the people. Agitation has been on the increase, and the people ask for reforms more and more. The war has wrought a change in the ideas of the people. The starting of New India has marked a new era in political agitation. Mrs. Besant has devoted her intellect and her money to the advancement of the new era and enlisted the sympathy of not only the Indians but of the whole world, towards the reforms. The bureaucracy treated the agitation as if it were a great offence, and have begun to shake the authors of it by means of threats and persuasions. The rulers of the Madras Presidency have taken the lead in it. The utterances and decisions of Lord Pentland have spread the agitation. The internment of Mrs. Besant has increased it. The number of Home Rulers has risen. The moderates have joined the extremists. Protest meetings have been largely held. Home Rule Leagues have been formed.

Provincial Conferences have met. The decisions of the rulers have been strongly criticised. In all the meetings, the release of Mrs. Besant has been prayed for unanimously.

The Madras Provincial Conference met last week. The name of Mrs. Besant has charmed the people like magic. The adoption of passive resistance for the release of Mrs. Besant has been considered a duty. The power of the old leaders has declined and that of the younger generation has gathered strength. The resolution that the adoption of passive resistance for protecting the primary rights of man is a duty has met with the approbation of the meeting, as also the resolution that the release of Mrs. Besant is necessary if the people should co-operate with the rulers in political reforms. These resolutions are enough to let the Government know the ideas of the people. Mrs. Besant has long been working in the Madras Presidency. Under such circumstances, there is nothing strange in the Madras Provincial Conference praying for her release. In other provinces, also, the same thing has been prayed for unanimously. The proposal to elect Mrs. Besant as President of the next Congress shows the trend of public opinion. The rulers will do well to note this and adopt a conciliatory policy. It is an illusion to suppose that such a policy will affect the prestige of the rulers. Should Lord Pentland release Mrs. Besant and establish peace, his reputation would increase, the people would be well disposed towards the rulers, and the rulers and the ruled would be knit together in closer bonds of friendship.

Indian reforms.

The Ravi, of the 30th August, comments as follows on the declaration of the 20th August:—The number of the Indians in every department will be increased and the power of self-government will be increased till full self-government is granted. This is what we have been long asking for. This will not satisfy all, but will satisfy many reformers. . . Unlike formerly the reforms will be discussed beforehand by the public before they take the shape of a law. The reforms may be amended as a result of our discussion. The extremists also may approve of the reforms, because of its many advantages. There is also a precaution that we should not ask for complete self-government all at once. . . We have to be grateful for this declaration.

RAVI, Cocanada, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Pandit M. Malavya's opinion on the political situation.

59. The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th August, reports from the Leader the following remarks of the Hon'ble Pandit Malavya:—I do not think that Mr. Montagu will fall under the influence of our hostile critics here, for he said after his appointment as the Secretary of State for India that he has not changed his opinions about India. . . The agitation will not cease until Mrs. Besant, Mr. Arundale and Mr. Wadia are released. Harsh language regarding the reforms will cease. The establishment of responsible Government was announced as a result of keen agitation. . . So far as the Provincial Governments are concerned, the scheme of Mr. Gokhale does not differ much from that of the Congress. The Congress considered deeply about the Government of India and then decided. So its suggestions will not be rejected. The reforms it has asked for, were considered necessary for the welfare of the people.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

A cable sent to the Premier and the Secretary of State.

60. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th August, publishes in Telugu the cable sent to the Premier and the Secretary of State by Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar on the remarks of the Madras Mail referred to in the above article.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

The Andhras and Mr. Montagu.

61. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st September, says:—In the Non-Brahman Conference, the non-Brahmans also approved of the ideal of self-government. They prepared a scheme of self-government which almost agreed with the scheme of the National Congress. The message of the Non-Brahman movement was also heard in England, and Lord Islington suggested separate representation in his scheme. . . If the principles of self-government are accepted, the details may be settled afterwards. There is no room now for disputes. . . The Andhras believe that the Andhra movement is the foundation of the edifice of an Indian nation. It has often been made plain that the division of the country on a language basis will certainly secure provincial independence. . . The Secretary of State is coming to India. The Andhras should keep ready a satisfactory scheme including division of the country into provinces on a language basis. . . The Andhras should, with the co-operation of the others, see Mr. Montagu.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

The Swadeshi movement.

62. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 1st September, says under this heading "Sir George Birdwood stated:—" . . In response to an agitation in England against competition from the Dacca weavers, the authorities imposed a tax of 75 per cent on all imports of yarn and cotton piece-goods. The export of Dacca muslins, therefore, declined gradually, and the office of resident of the East India Company at Dacca was removed. It is sad and reflects discredit upon the people of England to contrast the prosperity which Dacca enjoyed under the East India Company with the extreme poverty which that city suffered at the beginning of this century when the Imperial Parliament interfered largely with the administration of India by the company. When the East India Company was free from interference by the Parliament, the company was not only encouraging India's indigenous industries, but they did other useful things also in different parts of the country. . ."

The paper then remarks:—Sir George Birdwood, who expressed his sympathy with us and showed how our weaving industry declined, ever deserves our praise. No comment is needed on his opinion. He discussed the grounds on which the charge that his countrymen caused the decline of the Indian weaving indus try are based. . . Cotton goods are imported into India from England and thus our money goes to England, and we are reduced to poverty. The people of our country are not able to notice this.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

The Indian Christians.

63. The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, publishes in Telugu an article from the Christian Patriot, which contains the following:—It is our duty to declare that we agree with the congress as regards the scheme of reforms proposed by it. We must co-operate with the Indians in trying to realise the political ideal which is giving new life to the people in the country.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

India and the British Empire.

64. The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, in its leader under this heading, observes:—The article written by the Nation under this heading, only reflects the opinion of the Indians. . . The Mesopotamia Commission's report has revealed that the dogma that the bureaucracy is faultless is groundless. . . The Nation writes that those who have read the said report see clearly what a good opportunity has been lost. . . The Nation opines that as India did not hold a position in the British Empire equal to that of the Colonies, Lord Hardinge could not demand of the Indians the self-sacrifice which was asked of the people of the colonies. "The Empire is not theirs. To speak the truth they are dependent. . . When they leave India and go to the Colonies, instead of being regarded as citizens of the Empire, they are treated very meanly. When some pressure is employed from London or from the Colonies as regards its rights the bureaucracy tries its best to prevent them from being reduced. . . Simla (Government) cannot rise beyond this." The Nation states that Lord Hardinge did not make India, which has not received the benefit of freedom, to bear the burden of war as he was afraid of frontier as well as internal disturbances. We do not take these words to be true. Despite the public statement of Lord Hardinge in the Parliament that the whole Indian army was despatched to the various scenes of war and the peace of India was maintained with an army of only 15,000, we cannot understand why the Nation holds such a wrong view. . . When war was begun Indians from all quarters sent the message that they were quite prepared to make any sacrifices for gaining victory in the war. Even Mr. Tilak, the leader of the nationalist party, expressed the same idea. But the difficulty of Lord Hardinge to accept these offers was clear. It is said that Simla Government was afraid that when India is prepared to protect the liberties of foreign countries, she may demand her own liberty. Can it be possible for even Lord Hardinge to be able to discard the opinion of Simla all at once? The Nation says that if the rulers had promised to try to lay the foundations of Indian self-government, it would have been possible for Lord Hardinge to create any number of battalions of the Indian army. . . It writes: "When a dependent nation does not share with us our rights, it cannot bear our responsibilities."

A member of the Viceregal Council is said to have observed that India did not render such help as the colonies did. In reply, the Nation says that India is not governed as the colonies are. . .

65. With reference to the election of Mrs. Annie Besant to the presidentship of the National Congress, the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, reports the Indian Patriot to have said:—"Mrs. Annie Besant now represents the very cause of the Indian self-government. When she was interned, that cause was treated with contempt. Her election does not only strengthen the cause of self-government, but it also serves as a reply to the Madras Government for the grave injustice done to her by them.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

Election of Mrs. Annie Besant to the Presidentship of the National Congress.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 30th August, says:—The regard that the Government have for societies such as that of the Servants of India disappears day by day on account of their connection with the National Congress. We are seeing how the Indians are regarded by the Government by such connection. The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar went to Calcutta and is persuading the people there to elect Mrs. Besant for the office of President of the next Congress and to incite the people of Bengal to passive resistance. . . Bengal is not like Madras. The fire there kindled will not be easily extinguished as the fire in Madras. So the leaders will do well to nip this endeavour in the bud.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant and the National Congress.

66. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, refers to the decision of the Privy Council in the Urlam Zamindari water-cess case, and observes:—. . . "The Government believing that the powers already possessd by them are insufficient have been trying to enact a complete law regarding water sources. Owing to war it was postponed. May no danger be caused by new enactments in future to the permanent rights for water established by the decision of the Privy Council. When the decisions of the courts do not appear to be in agreement with the opinion of the Government it is usual to cancel them through the Legislative Councils. It cannot be said what the zamindars, who follow the opinion of the Government, would say then. The Urlam Zamindar, who could afford to do so, fought for getting the water-cess levied by the Government, arbitrarily without an eye to justice, cancelled, spending a large sum of money and believing that justice could not be obtained except by an appeal to the Privy Council. But what about the fate of the poor people? Attempts were made even to deprive the Indians of the right of condemning the acts of Government by filing suits in law courts. But the attempts did not succeed. In India the English Government has its unshakable foundation in judicial institutions. In so administering justice, if the authorities behave autocratically, it is clear to all how difficult and expensive a task it would prove to be for the people to obtain justice in law courts. In contending for a claim in the law courts, it is often seen that the Government works like an ordinary party, making efforts solely to win the case. We know by experience how the Government make use of the laws that are in their own hand. May the Government rule the country so as to be conducive to its prosperity, without taking heavy taxes as regards water-supply, which are proving very burdensome to the people.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917

Water-cess.

67. The Kistnapatrika, of the 1st September, writes under this heading as follows:—It is certain that the coming session of the Congress will prove very important. . . The relations that subsist between the British Empire and the different members of it are going to be readjusted. . . How can India escape the effects of this great movement? The repressive measures of the rulers and the strong opposition of the ruled are indications of this great commotion. Do not suppose that the national movement that is agitating India today is confined only to this part of the country alone. . .

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sept. 1st, 1917.

A new incarnation.

Though by birth Mrs. Besant is an English lady, she is a reformer belonging to the whole world. The love of social freedom of the westerners is incarnate in her. The benevolence of the Indians has taken hold of her. Equality of all men is her aim. The echo of her voice has been heard in all lands. Her message is the regeneration of mankind. . . The several national movements are not so many devil-dances. They all tend to the same goal, and the same end, and to the realisation of the same ideal. Call this new idea that manifests itself by whatever name you like. Call it Avatar in the language of the Vishnavites, or "Christ" of the Logos, or the "Superman" of the German philosopher. Whatever name we give, the knowledge of the man who has no faith in that idea is useless. . . Leaders that have no vision of this universal idea are unfit to lead. . . Unless all countries become free, unless all nations gain their liberty, unless all societies become enlightened, that idea will not be realised. . . To proclaim this message there is no holier place than the banks of the Ganges and the city of Calcutta. That message has to be voiced forth by a woman in the form of a mother. Who else can that woman be than Mrs. Besant?

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sept. 1st, 1917.

Madras Provincial Conference and the Andhra leaders.

68. The Kistnapatrika, of the 1st September, referring to the repulse met with by the Andhra leaders in the recent Madras Provincial Conference, observes:—"The repulse met with by the Andhra leaders in the Madras Provincial Conference on last Saturday is regrettable but it is natural. It is not surprising that persons, who do not understand the signs of the times, and who, clinging to old ways even during critical times, try to oppose the new spirit, should meet with a repulse. . . All that Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Sarma, the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao and Mr. Subba Rao Pantulu, etc., can do is to put small questions in the Legislative Councils and to get laws of little importance enacted, for bettering the administration. . . It is such great men as Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar and Mr. Gandhi alone that are fit to be nation builders.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The Al Hilal.

69. The Desamata, of the 22nd August, gives in Telugu a gist of the correspondence that passed between the editor of the Al Hilal and the Government about his allowance and about permission requested for going to the mosque for praying. The paper says that he resolved to go to the mosque even if the Government should withhold their consent to his request.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms.

70. Under this heading the Desamata, of the 22nd August, says:—Though the Indians have even now the same respect for Mr. Gokhale as while he was alive, they cannot now agree to his scheme of reforms. Since that scheme was drafted, the world has developed considerably. The ideal of every country and every nation now is a democratic form of Government. . . Mr. Gokhale stated that the Government themselves may appoint members to the Executive Council. The Indians do not now agree to this, but want that half the number of members of the Executive Councils should be elected by the members of the Legislative Councils and that the Executive Councils should be responsible to the Legislative Councils. This is the key to the Government of India. Unless this key is in our custody, we will not profit. . . The reforms that India now wants are those proposed by the Congress and the Moslem League. India will not accept anything short of these reforms. Until those reforms are carried out, India cannot but go on agitating in a constitutional way.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

Industries.

71. The Desamata, of the 22nd August, says:—All countries are trying to stand the great future commercial competition. While even America with its industries and industrial knowledge greatly developed, is making great efforts to withstand the future competition, it needs no saying what great efforts we who are very backward in technical education have to make. In order to spread industrial education in their country, the United States of America have enacted separate laws. . . . The Government of India should note what a great amount America spends annually on industrial education, and make the necessary efforts in this matter in India. If they do not make such efforts soon, we not only cannot stand the competition that will come into existence as a result of the spread of industrial knowledge, but will be blotted out of existence.

72. The Desamata, of the 22nd August, gives in Telugu the comments of the Bengalee on the circular of the District Judge of Guntūr calling for a list of the names of pleaders working on behalf of the Home Rule and the swadesni movements, and hopes that the High Court and the Government will interfere in the matter and see that no Judge in future does such things.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The District Judge of Guntūr.

73. The Desamata, of the 22nd August, publishes in Telugu the letter addressed by Commander Wedgewood to Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar, Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar and Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 22nd, 1917.

The letter of Commander Wedgewood.

74. The Andhraprakasika, of the 30th August, publishes a letter from the pen of a correspondent urging the undesirability of sanctioning the keeping of rice mills at Rajahmundry on the ground that they make the surroundings insanitary, and remarks :—Our industries are in an infant stage, and we do not like that they should be discouraged. These mills turn out raw rice and so they cannot be a nuisance. It is therefore not right to put an end to this industry. If those who object to the keeping of these mills are not satisfied with this, they will be satisfied, if they see the nuisance caused by mills in Madras, and by the tramways in the narrow streets of Chintadripet, which sometimes cause danger to life.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Rice mills at Rajahmundry.

75. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd September, says :—Under the system of indentured labour, the chastity of woman has suffered, and murders have prevailed. The indenture system has eclipsed slavery. The Government of India themselves have noted that that system has no place in the civilised world. They have earned the gratitude of the Indians by directing the stoppage of that system under the Defence of India Act. This step has allayed the resentment of the people. But the people are not sure that the system will not be revived after the war, and so the cause of agitation has not yet fully left their minds. . . The Government of India deserve the thanks of the people for publishing the report of the London Committee, for giving the people an opportunity to review it, and for promising that the old indenture system will not be re-established . . India should have the power to retaliate the wrongs to which the Indians are subjected in the colonies. If there were such power, no one in the Empire would venture to subject the Indians to disabilities. Is not self-government necessary if India should have such a power? It is plain that self-government is the chief means by which the Indian problem in the colonies can be solved. We therefore pray that at this juncture the question of self-government also may be satisfactorily solved.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1917.

Indentured labour.

76. Referring to an article contributed to the Commonweal entitled "National reconstruction", the Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd September, says :—Under the federal system, all parts of the Empire should have equal privileges. If India secures a suitable place in the Empire, it will not only help to widen the Empire, but will bring about a confluence of the east and the west. The writer of the article states that the high ideal which will help to uplift India has begun to bear fruit. He says :—"India now entertains a new desire to be constituted into a federation of Provinces. Under that system every province should be constituted on the basis of language. It should have the power of self-government and should be under the control of a powerful Government only in matters relating to the Empire." This article shows that the principle of constituting provinces on a language basis is gaining ground.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1917.

Federal Government.

77. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 31st August, says with reference to the disproportion of Non-Brahmans to Brahmans in public service :—The remedy for this evil is this. The higher Revenue and Criminal Tests should be open to undergraduates and to those who hold school final certificates. A certain fixed number of appointments should be allotted to each class. Till that proportion is reached, the head clerks of Divisional offices and the Huzur Sarishtadars should be Non-Brahmans.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1917.

Non-Brahmans in service.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

Allotment of appointments.

78. The Andhraprakasika, of the 1st September, says:—It is plain from Standing Order No. 128 of 1854 issued by the Revenue Board that the Government intend that the officers in the Revenue Department should be members of different castes. If the Collectors strictly follow this order, they will be doing great good to the Non-Brahmans. There is great scope in the Registration Department to encourage Non-Brahmans. In the Judicial Department also Non-Brahmans should be encouraged.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

Industrial research institutes.

79. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd September, says:—The Madras Mail states that the proposed establishment of an industrial research institute in Japan will cost Rs. 75 lakhs, and this cost will be met by the Tokio Trades Association and the Royal family. This not only serves as an example to our rulers, but also helps the Zamindars and big merchants to request the Government to establish a similar institute on the lines of the Japanese, at their own cost with the help of the lovers of the country. It is strange that our rulers have been indifferent in this matter. . . Foreigners are adopting new methods according as they find them necessary. Our rulers also should give up their indifference and help to improve our industries. . . The selfish Europeans who suppressed our trade in the time of the East India Company and gave importance to their machine-made goods are the cause of the ruin of our industries. They did not help our industries and our labourers but worked incessantly for their own selfish ends. The Lancashire merchants who brought pressure to bear on the Parliament and made our rulers indifferent, are the cause of the decline of our industries.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

The swaraj agitation at Gopisettipaliem.

80. The Andhraprakasika, of the 3rd September, says under this heading:—The Brahman Home Rulers go to every district and make speeches on Home Rule. What do the illiterate masses know about Home Rule? They may, perhaps, think that it is a movement against the Government. It will therefore be well to pass laws to suppress these disturbances.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sep. 4th, 1917.

The Masulipatam Home Rule League.

81. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th September, reports the Secretary of the Masulipatam Home Rule League to have wired the following resolution of a meeting:—This meeting is of opinion that if the Government do not take the necessary steps to release Mrs. Besant, etc., who have been interned without trial, by the time fixed by our elders, the people should be exhorted to agitate constitutionally and to resort to the adoption of passive resistance, if necessary, in regard to repressive measures which curb the freedom of the individual and of speech.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, Aug. 26th, 1917.

True statements.

82. Under this heading, the Hitakarini, of the 26th August, reports John Stuart Mill to have said:—There is meaning and truth in being ruled by indigenous kingly power, but there can be no meaning in one nation being governed by another. One nation keeps another under its control to gain its own ends. It turns the other nation into a machine for making money, and converts that other nation into a cow-fold for its own advantage.

The paper reports Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji to have said:—The English who are God likeand are of good nature have thought it best to keep the Indians under the rule of a lower class of people of their country.

The paper reports Mr. J. M. Maclene to have said:—A large portion of India's money goes to England in the shape of home charges. A third part of the rest is used for the maintenance of the army. In truth, only a small portion of India's money is expended in India.

The paper has also the following quotation:—The British Prime Minister gets Rs. 55 thousands annually from the British Treasury, but the Viceroy of India, a poor member of the Empire, is paid an annual salary of Rs. 2½ lakhs.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sep. 1st, 1917.

Andhra leaders and passive resistance.

83. A correspondent to the Kistnapatrika, of the 1st September, referring to the notice given by some Home Rulers who were opposed to passive resistance just before the holding of the Madras Provincial Conference recently, observes:—". . . Had Messrs. Subba Rao Pantulu, Ramachandra Rao, Sarma and Venkatapathi Raju who signed the notice ascertained popular opinion regarding the internments, self-government, etc., they would have been able to find out that it was the opinion of the majority of the educated people that the weapon of passive resistance must necessarily be employed. Why did they not make it clear whether the views expressed by them were their own and whether they were or were not the views of the people also. . . As the said gentlemen did not observe the popular opinion they lagged behind now as in the case of the Andhra province movement. It would appear that the people have to push them forward and that they are not able to lead the people boldly. I very much regret that they have brought on the Andhras the disrepute of their being greater cowards than the Tamils.

Suffrage of women in England and passive resistance.

84. The Kistnapatrika, of the 1st September, publishes in Telugu the letter of Miss Doratha giving a brief sketch of the history of woman suffrage in England, which contains the following:—". . . Thus were spent fifty years. Thousands of memorials were submitted to the Parliament. Meetings were held incessantly. The whole country praised our movement. The leaders in the country ever spoke sweetly on the subject, but they did not appear to take any steps about it. . . They did not appear to mind us unless they were pricked to the quick. That is why we gave up the softness natural to women and assumed an attitude of roughness. . . When a protest meeting was held by women suffragists they were arrested and sent to the jail. . . We, then, began to employ passive resistance. . . When we forced our way into the Parliament in batches of seven each, one batch after another was arrested and sent to the jail. . . As hundreds of us were thus arrested the jails could not hold us and we were therefore let off.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sep. 1st, 1917.

"We worried the Government in all possible ways. . . . In 1911 Census could not be taken. The Government could not do anything and they kept quiet. Thus have we gained our end."

Postal facilities.

85. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 4th September, writes:—We know that village schoolmasters in India are already doing the work of postmasters as well. In England, shopkeepers too are entrusted with postal work, such as vending stamps, receiving parcels and letters, etc., in addition to their own regular calling. The postal authorities have proposed to introduce this system in Kandy, Ceylon. In the larger towns in India, the public are put to great inconvenience in consequence of the enormous distance between the post office and their place of business. We therefore think it highly necessary that there should be similar post offices in shops in India.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sep 4th, 1917.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

Referring to the news regarding the Labour Conference in London on the 28th August, under the presidency of Mr. Henderson, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 3rd September, writes:—The labourers are the men who provide all the necessary equipment for the continuance of the war. In every country the welfare of the people rests in their hands. If they should strike what can the soldiers or the military authorities or even the administrators do? One has therefore to think twice before overriding their wishes. It is well that this fact has been realised. Mr. Henderson though a Cabinet Minister, resigned his office and dared to differ from the authorities regardless of their displeasure, and by joining the labour party and attempting to bring about peace proved his highly conscientious nature. It is understood that he is organising an international labour conference so as to bring the war to an end through the influence of a united body. It is not easy for these men to control the military authorities and the military autocrats who are blinded by passion and prejudice. But it is also true that great men have untiring energy in surmounting difficulties. If they succeed in their attempt, they will have saved the whole world. These activities of the Labour party are highly laudable. God will be on their side. We hope that they will proceed with their work heedless of obstacles and bring success to the noble cause they have in view.

Shimoga Vrittanta, Shimoga (Mysore), Aug. 29th, 1917.

Reforms and class representation in the public service.

86. In a leading article, the Shimoga Vrittanta, of the 29th August, referring to Mr. Montagu's proposed visit to India, observes that there can be no doubt that the British who are fighting this great war for the vindication of justice, will, at the close of the war, give the Indians full powers regarding the internal administration of their country in recognition of the heroic sacrifices made by them in the service of the empire. The paper proceeds to remark that it is deplorable that, at such a supreme moment of expectations as this, there should be any signs of class differences, such as between the Brahmans and the non-Brahmans and that it is to be hoped that the authorities will not deviate from the established practice of entertaining men in the public service on considerations of merit alone, inasmuch as the principle of proportional representation of particular classes and communities will have the effect of creating disunion and mutual ill-will.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

Our condition in India—No. 1.

87. The Qaumi Report, of the 27th August, writes:—Progress has been, is, and will continue to be, made. Rights have been, are being, and will continue to be, granted. The question, however, is how far have we advanced and how much success can we lay claim to? India is like a white elephant and we are like unto its tail, or take it, we resemble its tusks which are not used for mastication but for show. Our name is mentioned in meetings, petitions and debates, and we are made to appear to be in an exalted position, but when favours are granted we are relegated to the limbo of forgetfulness. Are we to be content with our present position? Are we born in India simply to live and die? Have we no distinct share in the prestige and honour of the country and the empire? We, Muslims, handed over our Empire to the English on the understanding that they would safeguard and preserve us, but they have left us out in the cold on the plea that we have neglected to safeguard and preserve ourselves. It is true that we have been guilty of this crime, and it would be idle to attempt to refute or contradict the charge. Had we entered into the secrets of the State immediately after the kingdom had departed from us and accepted the responsibility of Government in whatever way was possible, there would have been no occasion for us to complain.

Perhaps some will say that the mistake lies with the Muslims, as they are fifty years behind in educational progress. If this argument is sound, how is it that we are being assured of obtaining equal rights under Home Rule. All our votes taken together will not equal even a third of those of the Hindus and we, who are fifty years behind in education, will be fifty years behind in the field of political preferment. Although this will be a dignified retreat and a tactical defeat, yet why should our nationality suffer this blow?

The condition of the Madras Presidency, especially, gives us concern with reference to the higher official posts in the Government. In our Presidency it has come to this that as many as 478 appointments are held by Hindus while only 49 have fallen to the lot of the Muhammadans! Can any one show any comparison between the figures 478 and 49?

The fact is we are either being drawn into the vertex of indifference or being drowned in the depths of the ocean of flattery, but we are not given to realise the situation. On the one hand, a few flatterers have made the Government neglect us, and on the other, some foolish friends, being deceived by false praise, are puffed up with pride. The result is that the Government consider we are happy and, our compatriots suppose we are well off. How long are we to put up with idle show? Offend or please we cannot but complain thus—

> How long are we to maintain silence?
> How long shall I refrain from speaking of the world-consuming fire?
> I burn, I burn, how long is this secret to be concealed?

Qaumi Report, Madras, Aug. 27th, 1917.

The cinematograph.

88. The Qaumi Report, of the 27th August, has an item which runs thus:—"It affords us some pleasure to learn that, on the 5th September, the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent will introduce a Bill in the Imperial Legislative Council to reform cinematograph exhibitions. These moving pictures have begun to drain the pockets of the people of the country, and it is apprehended, should this kind of silent teaching and education go on, the unfortunate Indians will be infected with the virus of occidental fraud and chicanery.

89. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 29th August, referring to the absurd views expressed at the special meeting of the Madras Provincial Conference recently held at the Gokhale Hall, makes the following observations:—In fact, our compatriots did not act with foresight, gave prudence to the winds, and in their precipitancy did not reflect with whom they are contending. The ultimate result will, in the words of Saādī, be—

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

The Madras Provincial Conference and ourselves.

Whoever grapples with an iron fist
Only injures his delicate wrist.

These miserable people gratuitously defamed other Hindus also who were opposed to such an unworthy movement. It is true—

When one member of the community commits an act of folly
Both high and low share in the disgrace.

Our just, wise and impartial Government has given an opportunity even to these foolish persons to turn over a new leaf. They know our sympathetic Government have often overlooked their misdeeds? They know on whose account and why the Press Act has been passed, and they see on what grounds internments are being made. All these calamities have been brought on you by yourselves.

The editor, addressing his compatriots, says, "The breaking of the law is an unpardonable crime. The Government frames laws to suit the time and the occasion. You have no right to try to nullify them; on the contrary it is your duty, as far as possible, to obey them."

It is through God's mercy that the English have been made the rulers of India; and it is under their protection that every community can live in peace and tranquility, none making them afraid.

Our sacred law lays down that in the case of ruler under whose sway every section enjoys peace and security, to take up arms against him is absolutely illegal; in fact rebellion which God Almighty abhors.

90. The Qaumi Report, of the 29th August, refers to the late Mr. Gokhale's proposed scheme of reforms for India published by His Highness the Agha Khan as advised by the deceased and says:—The public have neither approved his legacy of reforms, nor admitted that His Highness has conferred a benefit on the country by publishing it; on the contrary they dispose of the question with the observation that it contains nothing they did not know already.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1917.

Agitation for reforms (His Highness the Agha Khan's wisdom).

We know this is not the time for submitting schemes, still it is necessary to consider how far the reforms, that are being talked about all over the country, are advantageous to Muhammadans, and how we can maintain our national position. The fact that we have no official relations with a foreign power is an open secret. Hindus have nothing to do with the foreign policy of the Empire and they can acquire Home Rule within the boundaries of India. But does not His Highness consider it necessary that, in order to maintain and strengthen Muslim religious obligations and our loyal relations with the British Government, we should reconsider our demand and advise the Government in a manner which will enable it to appreciate our relations with it and to guard against mistakes in future?

In these circumstances it is our duty to keep acquainted with the foreign policy of our Government and to endeavour to strengthen the bonds of mutual relations.

91. The Qaumi Report, of the 1st September, referring to a lengthy article by Doctor Sir Subrahmani Ayyar published in the evening papers of the day before yesterday in which the writer invites the people to embrace the cult of breaking the law, and proves to them the legality of such action, writes:—We regret very much that, despite his age and experience, he has disregarded the rule of expediency. We were under the impression that Sir Subrahmani Ayyar would express an opinion in the matter that would have put an end to unlawful agitation.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

Defiance of law.

But in proving the innocence or obtaining the release of Mrs. Besant and her two associates they should never have had recourse to transgression of the law and violation of administrative rules. We are even more responsible for the maintenance of peace and tranquility than the authorities themselves. Governors or Collectors are required to do their duty in the offices they hold, and for which they are paid, but ours is a natural duty and it is here we have to pay our last debt to nature.

Our commonsense demands that we should oppose the law by constitutional means, expose flaws and drawbacks of the law and meet the law with law. Had this been a religious matter we should have had very little regard for occasion and expediency, for religion supersedes all. But it is folly to cause a great stir and to endanger lives for the sake of a single political or administrative enactment. If Mrs. Besant and her associates have suffered the ignominy of internment it is nothing for them to be elated or downcast about. This is a sacrifice which every patriot or lover of liberty is bound to make. If, by the force acquired by breaking the law, we nullify law, it means that we are refusing to make our sacrifices and are afraid of internment and death for patriotism sake.

Perhaps our compatriots have not yet tasted the delights of such sacrifices, but Muhammadans know from the beginning what these signify.

In spite of all this Muhammadans do not consider the breaking of law justifiable.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

92. The Qaumi Report, of the 1st September, writes:—We learn from Reuter that Mr. Montagu has asked the Government of India, for all papers connected with the internment of Mrs. Besant. We have been complaining that attention has not been drawn to the case of interned Muhammadans but the Muhammadans have taken no notice. In the end the expectations of the agitators have been realised.

Ultimately the same thing has come to pass.

Will the Muhammadans now abandon the refrain of sacrificing rights and the submissive—Very good, Sir?—

It is true—As long as the baby does not cry, the nurse will not give it milk.

ERRATA.

Report No. 34.

Page 2218, paragraph 19, line 11, substitute "," for "of" after wisdom.
" 2218 " 19 " 12 " "grant" for "Grant".
Pages 2218 and 2243, paragraphs 19 and 92, lines 19; 2, 3 and 4, insert "," after "Muslims", "Stewart", "Regiment" and "that".
Page 2243, paragraph 93, margin, insert "the" before "League".
" 2244 " 93, line 1, insert "have" after "We".

Report No. 35.

Page 2261, paragraph 26, 3rd line, for "road" read "Road".
" 2262, 12th line from the top, for "soould" read "should".
" 2274, paragraph 50, 10th line, for "Mr. Gokhale that" read "that Mr. Gokhale".
" 2283 " 83, 9th line, insert the word "towards" after the word "contributed".

Issued, 11th September 1917.]

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 37 of 1917.

REPORT

ON

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS EXAMINED BY THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT, MADRAS,

AND ON

VERNACULAR PAPERS EXAMINED BY THE TRANSLATORS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

for the Week ending 15th September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to the Chief Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, a brief report of any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.	PAGE
(b) Courts—
The Coimbatore Home Rule flag case	2321
(d) Education—
Students and politics	ib.

II.—Home Administration—cont.	PAGE
(k) General—
The political situation in India	2322
His Excellency the Governor's forthcoming tour on the West Coast	2323
Mrs. Besant's release	ib.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics. PAGE

Indian coolies in the Colonies 2324
The Russians .. .. ib.
Foreign news .. .. ib.
The secret endeavour of the Germans .. .. ib
The war .. .. ib.
Reforms and Muhammadans .. .. ib.

II.—Home Administration.

(d) Education—

Students and politics 2325
Is English superior to the vernaculars? .. ib.
Maravars 2326
Vernaculars as media of instruction in Indian schools and colleges .. .. ib.
Civics 2327
The School Final Text-books .. .. .. ib.
The School of Arts 2328
The revolt of the students .. .. . ib.
Education in India .. .. ib.
Collection of fees in primary schools .. .. ib.

(e) Local and Municipal—

District Board Presidents 2329
Corporation of Madras 2330
Trichinopoly Municipality .. .. .. ib.
The sanitation of Madras .. .. .. ib.
Tiruvannamalai Municipality .. .. .. ib.
Mr. Madeley's lecture .. .. ib.
Cuddalore Municipal Administration for the year 1916–17 2331
Taluk Boards, Godavari district 2332
Proceedings of local boards .. .. .. ib.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement—

Land Revenue settlement .. .. .. ib.

(k) General—

The Mesopotamia expedition .. .. .. ib.
Home Rule .. .. ib.
A curious objection to the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India 2335
Strange acts .. .. ib.
Adulteration of ghee .. .. ib.
Exodus to the hills .. .. ib.
Revolvers for railway guards .. .. .. ib.
"A whitewashing commission" 2336
Hoisting of Home Rule flag at Ootacamund .. ib.
The Home Rule League, Trichinopoly .. ib.
The Home Rule League, Tiruvarur .. .. ib.
Home Rule League, Masulipatam 2337
Home Rule League, Kumbla .. .. .. ib.
Home Rule League, Kulitalai .. .. .. ib.
Home Rule League, Coimbatore .. .. ib.
Home Rule League, Calicut .. .. .. ib.
Development of mechanical power in India .. ib.
Short notes .. .. ib.
Our economic position 2340
The late Doctor Dadabhai Naoroji 2341
A public meeting at Tanjore .. .. .. ib,
Sri Vasanta Jayanthi .. .. ib.
Viceroy's speech 2342
The internments 2344
The Lord Bishop of Calcutta on Home Rule .. 2345
Theosophy and politics .. .. ib.
Mr Montagu's visit to India .. .. .. ib.
The hardships of the Panchamas 2346
Weights and measures 2347
Prospect of the release of the interned .. ib.
The Home Rule flag 2348
Silk industry 2349
Employment of non-Brahmans in Government service .. .. ib.
The Madras Mail and the Hindu 2350
Non-Brahmans and Home Rule .. .. .. ib.
Political activities at Tiruppur 2351
The proposed release of Mrs. Besant .. .. ib.
The Brahmans and Home Rule 2352
Our situation .. .. ib.
Brahmans and Non-Brahmans 2353

II.—Home Administration—cont. PAGE

(k) General—cont.

Interpellations in the Imperial Legislative Council 2353
Cotton import duties 2354
The irrigation system in India .. .. .. ib.
Difficulties in sea-borne trade 2355
The Empire Resources Development Committee. ib.
Indian firms with English names 2356
The Department of Industries .. .. .. ib.
The Secretary of State and the Government of India .. .. ib.
Trade in girls 2357
Licenses under the Arms Act .. .. .. ib.
The London Times on Gokhale's reform scheme .. .. ib.
Public reception to His Excellency the Governor .. .. ib.
A public meeting at Kangayam 2358
The Muhammadan burial-ground at Aruppukkottai .. .. ib.
The Sowrashtras and Sir Alexander Cardew .. ib.
The Nadars and Home Rule .. .. .. ib.
A public meeting at Gobichettipalaiyam .. 2359
Home Rule and the authorities .. .. .. ib.
The Home Rule movement and its origin .. ib.
Students' saving certificates .. .. .. ib.
The Madras Special Provincial Conference .. ib.
Mrs. Besant 2360
Mr. Montagu .. .. ib.
Mrs. Besant's birthday .. .. ib.
Passive resistance 2361
Certain opinions regarding the Government of India .. .. ib.
The unity of the Empire .. .. .. ib.
The Andhra students of the Law College .. 2362
Rao Bahadur P. Thiagaraya Chetti's message. ib.
A new non-Brahman movement .. .. ib.
India Council .. .. ib.
A cable to Mr. Montagu .. .. ib.
Anti-passive resistance manifesto .. .. ib.
Our duty .. .. ib.
The District Judge, Guntur 2363
The way to an empire pervaded by freedom .. ib.
Method of federation .. .. ib.
Mr. Gulam Hussain's last message .. .. ib.
The Madras Mail and pacifying methods .. ib.
A meeting of the Home Rulers 2364
The Anglo-Indian papers .. .. .. ib.
The Home Rule meeting at Visagapatam .. ib.
The letter addressed to His Majesty 2365
A great amendment .. .. ib.
The Defence Force and whipping 2366
Indian emigration .. .. ib.
The Madras Mail and the internments .. .. ib
The fetters of service 2367
The swadeshi vow .. .. ib.
Snake-bites in India .. .. ib.
Self-government .. .. ib.
The proposed visit of the Secretary of State to India 2368
The present condition of India .. .. .. ib.
Mr Basu's stay in India till Mr. Montagu's arrival .. .. ib.
If Mrs. Besant be released? 2369
Position unchanged 2370
Mussalmans and education 2371
The Imperial Legislative Council .. .. ib.

III.—Legislation.

Rate-payers' Association, Royapetta 2372

IV.—Native States.

The Pudukkottai Representative Assembly .. ib.

V.—Prospects of the Crops and the Condition of the People.

Sir Alexander Cardew's speech at the Coimbatore Agricultural College .. .. ib.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(b) Courts.

1. New India, of the 13th September, remarks:—"Our readers must have perused, with utter amazement, the document which, we suppose, must pass for judgment in the Home Rule flag case and which Mr. MacMichael has transmitted to Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia through the Censor. . . The statement that the 'state of feeling was such, etc.,' is obviously, as all people acquainted with the English language will unhesitatingly admit, a statement of opinion, of inference or impression and not one of fact which could be testified to by persons who said or heard anything. No witness was produced either by the Superintendent or by the District Magistrate to show the source or sources of the information upon which both these extraordinarily imaginative and active European officials of the district formed that impression. . . The worst part of it was that only the Magistrate who tried the matter spoke of his personal knowledge; the Police Superintendent who testified on oath would not be tendered for cross-examination by the parties whose liberties have been so ruthlessly interfered with. Mr. MacMichael may not care what impression this kind of thing will make upon even the most casual man in the street as to the manner in which justice is rendered in such matter; but surely if he was personally aware and satisfied of the imminence of the riot which justified his action under section 144, it was pretence of the most preposterous kind and a most unjustifiable waste of public time and money to hear evidence on the other side and to listen to arguments which ex hypothesi were in direct contravention of his personal knowledge whatever it may have been. . . Is the public to hold then that because Brahmanas and non-Brahmanas are on strained relations in Coimbatore, therefore people belonging to the one or the other of these communities, presumably the non-Brahmanas, would straight away run mad and commit rioting or affray on seeing a red and green flag? We have yet to know that the educated people of Coimbatore have imbibed the qualities of the Spanish bull so as to get into the arena of the round roads of Coimbatore extension and run amock among the peaceful citizens of the locality. . . We sincerely hope that before it is too late the High Court will be enabled to intervene and remove such mischievous impressions as the judgment of Mr. MacMichael will undoubtedly produce, that the law is powerless to put down the lawbreaker or to protect the liberties of the peaceful citizens."

New India, Madras, Sept. 13th, 1917.

The Coimbatore Home Rule flag case.

(d) Education.

2. New India, of the 13th September, states:—"The considerable amount of discontent with which Government Order 559 was received when it was issued materialised a few weeks ago into a concrete protest when 200 of the under-graduates in the Trichinopoly colleges declared their intention of attending political meetings in spite of the prohibition. This action has been followed up at Guntūr, Coimbatore and Rajahmundry; and the depth of feeling may be gauged from the fact that within the last three days nearly a thousand under-graduates of the various colleges in Madras have signified their willingness to convene a meeting of protest against the Government Order. . . So far, we have refrained from expressing any opinion on the action taken by the students in the mufassal, and contemplated in Madras. We have, however, no hesitation in saying, though we may be running counter to a great body of public opinion, that the attitude of the students, which their action bespeaks, must have the heartiest sympathy. . . While this is our considered opinion, we feel justified in making an earnest appeal to the student population to desist from an action which may precipitate matters and complicate

New India, Madras, Sept. 13th, 1917.

Students and politics.

the general situation. . . In making this appeal to our young men we wish to point out that the general situation has altered radically since the Trichinopoly incident took place and the exercise of a little patience just now may enable all concerned to relieve the acute tension that exists now. . . It is far from our intention to deny them either the opportunity or the right to act for themselves, but we feel that especially at the present moment, public life would be impossible without mutual regard and co-operation between the older and younger generations. . . We hope the Government will not be blind to the indomitable spirit that is coming over our young men. Repression has not succeeded with the elders, and it will fall even more miserably with the younger generation We think it would be wisdom on the part of the Government to revoke the order at once. In the interests of justice and good feeling, superstituous notions of prestige must be sacrificed."

(k) General.

Cochin Argus, British Cochin, Sept. 8th, 1917.

The political situation in India.

3. The Cochin Argus, for the week ending 8th September, writes :—"It is extremely deplorable that at a critical juncture like the present, in the history, not only of the Empire, but of virtually all humanity, political forces should be let loose in India, that are clearly calculated to produce no other effect than the retardation of the political, moral and material advancement of the people amidst whom they have been promiscuously and, we may even say, angrily introduced. Those who are mainly answerable for the introduction and spread of these really baneful forces confidently assure us that they are the heralds of democracy and freedom, but, like all political visionaries, these new missioners are utterly incapable of correctly interpreting whatever signs and portents they discern around them. . . They are deliberately creating mistrust and suspicion between the governing and governed classes, and more than this, they are responsible, if only indirectly, for the tendency now beginning to show itself in many undiscerning quarters to defy the authority of the responsible administrators of the country. . . They are meeting with a large measure of success in their attempts to popularise the remarkable principle that democracy can only be correctly understood, expounded and practised by very young people, including those very much younger ones who are in their second childhood. . . Looking at another aspect of the existing political situation, we do not think that, outside the ranks of political fanatics, visionaries and windbags, there will be found very many, who will condemn the action of leaders, like Babu Surendranath Bannerjee, who courageously decline to take any share in the attempts, once insidious, but now open and aggressive, to reduce the National Congress to a pliable instrument of the Besant party. . . And now there would seem to be a somewhat more subtle movement for associating Mr. Montagu's visit to India with the release of Mrs. Besant from internment and, presumably, with the restoration of her full political freedom. We should be happy to see Mrs. Besant released, but if her release is to be immediately signalised by a resumption of those political activities, in consequence whereof she had to be deprived of her freedom of political action, we would consider that Mr. Montagu's visit to India would have done this country a vast deal more injury than good. The authorities should make no mistakes, in the present circumstances, between genuine concessions to a genuinely aggrieved people, on the one hand, and a mere yielding, in a spirit of meretricious opportunism to excited popular clamour. . . Mr. Montagu will quickly discover that great Indians like Babu Bupendranath Basu, of whom he himself has the highest opinion, are looked upon, in Home Rule circles in India, as useless fossils, and that, in such circles, genius and statesmanship are conceded only to journalistic prodigies like Telang and Karandikar, to legal giants like C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar and lots of others, whom our readers have doubtless heard of, and to political luminaries like Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar. . . If a certain malcontent section of this great people should express themselves disappointed, when the scheme of reforms is eventually drawn up and announced, that will really not matter at all especially in a country like this, where it is still most unsafe to try to gauge real public opinion by sounding the artificially excited pulse of a very microscopic minority."

4. The West Coast Spectator, of the 11th September, observes:—"The report of yesterday's public meeting we publish elsewhere will be read with mingled feelings of surprise and regret. It is deeply to be regretted that in spite of the conciliatory speech of Mr. Evans who presided, and the Viceroy's appeal for co-operation, the forces of extremism exerted themselves. In view of what Mr. Evans said explaining the objects of His Excellency's visit and his reminder that Lord Pentland visited us as the representative of His Majesty, the 'dissenters' had absolutely no justification whatever for the course they took. The whole business is a sad commentary on the frame of mind and mentality of a certain section of the educated classes.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 11th, 1917.

His Excellency the Governor's forthcoming tour on the West Coast.

"If opposition of this kind, as unreasonable as it is undesirable, continues, we must state with all the force we are able to command that the outlook is rather dismal for the future of our land. The old leaders are everywhere sought to be repressed and suppressed, and reason is displayed by tomfoolery and attempts at conciliation are rejected and treated with contumely. In this state of affairs, a satisfactory settlement of the outstanding political problems cannot be within sight. And a cleavage in the public life is inevitable. We have no desire to write more on unfortunate and organised attempt to convert public meetings convened by the moderates into Donnybrook fairs. Before closing this very regrettable episode, it is only fair that we should record our congratulations to Mr. Evans on his having kept remarkable control over his temper which many of those present on his side of the house found it very difficult to hold within bounds."

5. In a leader headed "When?", New India, of the 14th September, says:—"A full week has passed away since Sir William Vincent replied to Mr. Jinnah's question to the effect that the Government of India would recommend to the Local Government that Mrs. Besant may be released; and yet no step has been taken to give effect to it. The public are in a state of dreadful suspense, and every one is asking what the cause of this delay may be. Has not the Government of India transmitted its recommendation? It is impossible to believe that they have not, specially after so explicit a statement in the Council. If they have, why is the delay? What is it that stands in the way? . . . The attitude of the Government of India is perfectly clear. Not only did Sir William Vincent promise to recommend the release, but the Viceroy himself did not deal at length with the internment issue in view of that statement. What does that show? Is it not clear that in the opinion of the Viceroy the interned leaders were to be immediately set free? . . . Are we to remain silent, we ask respectfully, when a full week has definitely passed away without the open statement made in the Supreme Council being given effect to? The country is not kept informed even as to the cause of delay and thereby the authorities are needlessly increasing excitement and restlessness everywhere. Probably this is the bureaucratic response to the highly conciliatory attitude adopted by Indian publicists in view of the Viceregal appeal. If that be so, they have deceived themselves into a serious error. The feeling in the country is too strong and serious to be played with in that fashion; and this dilatoriness with regard to a definite order of the Government of India may create a situation which every fair-minded person will regret."

New India, Madras, Sep. 14th, 1917.

Mrs. Besant's release.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Lokopakari and Prapanchamitran, Madras, Sep. 10th & 11th, 1917.

Indian coolies in the Colonies.

6. In echoing almost the same sentiments as Swadesamitran, of the 3rd September, on the recommendations of the Conference recently held in London to discuss the question of the emigration of Indian coolies to colonies, which are abstracted in paragraph 12 of Report No. 36 of 1917, the Lokopakari and the Prapanchamitran, of the 10th and 11th idem, respectively, trust that the Government will carefully consider these recommendations and pass such orders as would improve the condition of the coolies.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

The Russians.

7. The Andhrapatrika, of the 5th September, says:—Expert opinion is divided as to whether the Germans will endeavour now to march on Petrograd. . . Kerenski and Korniloff are both inspiring military enthusiasm in the armies. . . The temporary success of the Germans cannot change the issue of the war. But it will help to fan the fire of Russian valour and make them manifiest their prowess.

Ravi, Cocanada, Sep. 6th, 1917.

Foreign news.

8. The Ravi, of the 6th September, has the following under this heading:—A rumour is current in Britain that Lord Kitchener was not drowned but has been made a prisoner by the Germans.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, Sep. 8th, 1917.

The secret endeavour of the Germans.

9. The Kistnapatrika, of the 8th September, writes under this heading:—One Mr. E. L. Fox belonging to a neutral country writes that Germany is, in spite of the terrible war, making secret endeavours to re-establish its commercial greatness after the war. . . The Germans are digging the mines containing metals and coal in France, Belgium, Servia and Roumania that have fallen into their hands and are hoarding the minerals in heaps in Germany. They are emptying the kerosine oil tanks in Roumania and are constructing huge iron kerosine oil tanks in their country and are filling them all with the kerosine oil. They are cutting down all the forests in Servia and carrying the timber to the dock-yards. . . Thus Germany intends to develop her commerce after the war.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, Sep. 8th, 1917.

The war.

10. The Kistnapatrika, of the 8th September, writes:—The revolution in Russia has not yet subsided. Riga having fallen into the enemy's hands, the alarm at Petrograd has increased. The Germans are elated with this success. German airships have not yet ceased to throw bombs on London; but there is not much damage. German submarines attacked the harbour at Scarborough and caused some slight damage.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Sep. 4th, 1917.

Reforms and Muhammadans.

11. The Qaumi Report, of the 4th September, writes:—At present the clamour for reforms is so loud and persistent that the natural cry of the Muhammadans can scarcely be heard at all. The unfortunate Muhammadans have neither an elevated platform, nor a minaret from which to proclaim their rights. The Government occasionally deigns to look at them through its spectacles, but sometimes it does not even do that, the unfortunate part of it is that it gets a blurred impression and fails to recognise them. This may be due to the fact that we may or may not have blended our voices with those of other people and our constant condition and separate nationality are now in danger. Judging from Mr. Montagu's speech, we are afraid that he, too, has not understood the Muhammadans. He announced, in his memorable speech, that day by day Indians will be given a larger share in all administrative departments of the Government. In addition to this local Governments will be gradually developed in order that step by step self-government may be established in India.

In looking for a reference to the Muhammadans in the words and import of this communiquè we have been at once successful and disappointed. By no mental or mathematical process can it be evolved therefrom that any regard will be paid to the distinct nationality of Muhammadans.

It is possible that the Secretary of State has given the Muhammadans a separate place in his practical abstract.

This much may be expected from him inasmuch as he was the adviser of Lord Morley who in his famous scheme of reforms assigned Muhammadans a distinct position, and on this basis conceded their separate claims.

The editor, in contrasting Hindus with Muhammadans, says that the existence of both communities is essential to the welfare of India, and, if the former have already advanced in education, they should, as a community, enjoy the fruits of their endeavours. But we are not going to assume any ill-timed responsibilty on their account. Our community has not yet reached that stage of knowledge and wealth, and, until such time as it does so, it cannot derive any advantage from Home Rule. We quite agree with the principles of Home Rule, for we also earnestly look forward to this form of Government. We do not need it today or to-morrow and will demand it only when we arrive at the present position of our compatriots in knowledge and material importance. That is why we support the suggestion on principle, but desire to put off its materialization to a more convenient season. We do not say that the country should be deprived of freedom on our account. On the contrary we are ready to join the Home Rule League forthwith if our compatriots are willing to share with us their educational and financial advantages in a manner that will safeguard our numerical inferiority.

II.—Home Administration.

(d) Education.

Students and politics.

12. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th September, reproduces in Tamil an abstract of the proceedings of a meeting held by the students of Guntūr, to protest against G.O. No. 559, which prohibits students from taking part in politics. The abstract is published in New India of the 4th idem.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

Students and politics.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th September, says that the students of Guntūr have adopted a resolution to disregard G.O. No. 559, inasmuch as it violates their liberty, and that Mr. Sriram has explained in plain language the evil consequences of the Government order.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

Students and politics.

The Hitakarini, of the 2nd September, says:—The pupils of the Amaravati Government Anglo-Vernacular school attended the meeting held in connection with Mr. Tilak's birthday. On being asked if they did so, they spoke the truth. The Director punished them. From this it is clear that the educational authorities have no love for truth. This is teaching them a lesson to speak falsehood.

Hitakarini, Ellore, Sep. 2nd, 1917.

Students and politics.

The Desamata, of the 29th August, has another note which says that at the instance of 200 students in Trichinopoly Mr. Deobhankar delivered a lecture on students and politics, which was attended by 2,000 people; and that it remains to be seen what action the Government are going to take against the students who acted against the Government order on "Students and Politics".

Desamata, Rajahmundry, Aug. 29th, 1917.

Is English superior to the vernaculars?

13. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th September, writes:—If we demand that education should be imparted through the vernaculars, some say that English alone should be the medium of instruction in schools. This view is favourable to the authorities. The reason for the demand by several cultured men that vernaculars should be the medium of instruction is their sincere opinion that, if English is the medium of instruction, the vernaculars do not improve and that the want of touch with the vernaculars leads to the denationalisation of the educated men. We do not say that English education is unnecessary. For some time yet, it will, of course, be advisable to impart higher education through English. Our contention is only that, in imparting secondary education in schools and especially in teaching scientific subjects such as Geography, Arithmetic, Chemistry, etc., English should not be the medium of instruction. Instruction through the vernaculars will not only save them but also help the subject taught being understood more easily. If the object of instruction is the imparting of knowledge, the vernaculars as a medium will yield better results. But if the object is the improvement of the English language, English should no doubt continue to be the medium of instruction. It is, of course, reasonable that many of us should be conversant with the English language. But why should all subjects in secondary schools be, on that account, taught through this language? It is argued that proficiency in it can be attained, only if it is taught from boyhood. That is no doubt true. But there is a corresponding deterioration in the knowledge of the vernaculars. Our view is that greater weight should be attached to one's knowledge of subjects than to one's knowledge of the English language. The fact that this great mistake in the method of instruction has been in existence for a long time can be no excuse for perpetuating it. That is the very reason why the system should be improved at least hereafter. They are spending a good deal of time in teaching English even in elementary schools. There will be many who stop with primary education, and this will be the case especially when compulsory primary education is introduced. So the best policy will be to impart to these as much knowledge as is possible within the short time they continue to study, through the vernaculars with which they are conversant, and not to stuff them with a few hundreds of English words.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

Dravidan, Madras, Sep. 4th, 1917.

Maravars.

14. In the course of a long article on the present condition of the Maravars of South India contributed by a correspondent to the Dravidan, of the 4th September, the following observations occur:—It is highly regrettable that the benign Government have not yet made any arrangements for giving education to such a big community as the Maravars, who form an eighth of the Tamil-speaking population of this Presidency. It is desirable to utilise the revenues of the choultry attached to the Tirukkurungudi Devastanam to impart elementary education to the Maravars residing in the several villages of the Nanguneri taluk, instead of utilising them for establishing a Sanskrit College at Kallidaikurichi, as we understand that all the properties of the above Devastanam were endowed mostly by prominent members of the Maravar community of that locality.

Desabhimani, Cuddalore, Sep. 1st, 1917.

Vernaculars as media of instruction in Indian schools and colleges.

15. The Desabhimani, of the 1st September, writes as follows:—". . . No nation outside India thinks that the medium of instruction in schools and colleges and the medium of conversation, discourse and study should be any but the vernacular of the people. No man outside India will call himself educated, if he knows some foreign language. For instance no Englishman, Frenchman, Italian, Japanese, etc., will call himself educated, because he knows some foreign language tolerably well—after all what we know of English is at the best tolerable, and at the worst ridiculous. But with us it is so different. It is a great pity that we use the English language to such an extent in season and out of season. In every path of life, we give it preference to our mother-tongue. An Indian who knows some English calls himself an educated man, and the generality of the people takes him at his word and also calls him educated. . . It is high time to get rid of the idea that English-knowing men are the only educated people in India. The test of scholarship ought to be how well we know our own vernacular and how well versed we are in our own culture. The present system of education does not go far enough to make men of us. By our deep study of the English language, we can never enrich it, but we simply impoverish our own.

* * * * * *

. . . As a rule, our boys cease to study the vernaculars as soon as they enter English schools, about the twelfth year of their age, if not earlier. They thus practically lose touch with their people, and by the time they obtain their degrees, too many among them find that they are unable either to talk or to write or read their current vernacular language. This want of familiarity breeds contempt for their mother-tongue, and people find it difficult to sympathise with a system which produces the unnatural results of so-called educated men being unable to speak or to write their own mother-tongue fluently and correctly.

* * * * * *

. . . Sixty years of modern college instruction among the Indians—instruction which entails hard study from morning till midnight, and from day to day for a number of years—has not produced an author whose writings can be placed on the same level as those of men of pre-university days. The writings of men not knowing English shows a great deal more originality in them, than those of English-knowing Indians.

If Indians cannot be good poets or authors it is not so much their fault as the fault of the system under which they are brought up. They are incapable of adding to the stock of national literature, because they are almost exclusively brought up on foreign literature. They have no incentive whatever for going deeper into their vernaculars and to write therein.

By the loss of political power, all encouragement to indigenous literature is gone, and with that the people have lost the capacity to be poets or authors. The absence of education through the vernacular in secondary schools and colleges is the greatest evil from which the people are suffering, and if our people are to make any real progress in this line, the vernaculars should be given the same place in the curriculum of study as they are in any other country in the world.

* * * * * *

No doubt we cannot get on simply with our own mother tongue. We have to deal with a larger world than our own, and in that case we ought to cultivate another Indian language—Hindi, which is practically the lingua franca of India. I need not say anything more on this subject, as I have already said it elsewhere. All I wish to say here is, that we can get on quite as well, if not better, with Hindi instead of English and sooner the idea that an Indian is educated, if he can speak and write in English, be exploded, the better for our country.

* * * * * *

16. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th September, reports Mr. Ernest Wood to have said in his article under this heading:—The student's life in India should be fruitful and profitable as in Germany, England, etc. All know that educational methods in this country at present have not borne any fruit. These methods are an impediment to the student wishing to know how to uplift mother India. They cause the deterioration of the intellect of boys and kill originality in them. Under such circumstances, however great a nation may be, it will certainly become weak.

Civics.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

17. Under this heading, the Hitakarini, of the 2nd September, says:—Those who take the first and second branches in the group can pass the school final examination without any knowledge of Telugu. Those that take the third branch will be able to read some Telugu verses. In the B group there is no Government examination. The school authorities themselves will examine the boys. It need not separately be said what interest the boys will have in this. Indian history is included in this B group. It is said that there is no Government examination in this. From this it is plain what stepmotherly love the Madras University has for Indian history. How can there be a better state of things when this University is managed by such servants as Professor Carley who say that there is not a proper Indian history even for the B.A. class students to read. As there is no Government examination in Indian history, the school authorities teach only the British period. The students know nothing of the Hindu and the Muhammadan periods. These two periods, of which we ought to have a good knowledge, occupy a very insignificant place in the school final curriculum. The curriculum should be modified so that the A group may include English, Telugu and Indian history.

. . . Mr. Stone stated that all subjects should be taught through the medium of the English language and thus did injustice to the vernaculars. His partiality for his own language is praiseworthy. He has also set an example to us. But

The School Final text-books.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, Sep. 2nd, 1917.

why should we regret his action? Mr. Sivakumara Sastri, an Indian, has played the second fiddle to him. This is ridiculous. It is to be regretted that even the love for his own language manifested by Mr. Stone has not induced Mr. Sastri to show similar love for his own language. Until the management of the University comes under the control of the Indians, we cannot be freed from this mixed policy.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sep. 10th, 1917.

The School of Arts.

18. The Andhraprakasika, of the 10th September, says that the Government do not evince the same interest in promoting education in arts, etc., as they do in promoting general education. This is evidenced by the fact that while there are many schools and colleges for the spread of general education, there are very few for arts, etc. The paper says that as the public will profit by education in arts and architecture, the country will advance if the Government evinces greater interest at least hereafter in this matter. The paper refers specially to the School of Arts and requests the Government to develop the school.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sep. 8th, 1917.

The revolt of the students.

19. The Kistnapatrika, of the 8th September, under this heading, observes:—"Ever since the publication of G.O. No. 559 prohibiting students from attending political meetings, feelings of discontent, anger and unrest have been growing in them. The students are nowhere paying heed to the said orders. The students publicly attended three or four meetings that were recently held in Masulipatam. It cannot be said that the heads of educational institutions are ignorant of this. They are conniving at the breach probably because they thought either that the order was not a proper one or that it is dangerous to cause excitement among the students. In some towns the students are not merely attending political meetings, but they are also taking a vow that they will attend such meetings. At Tinnevelly 200 students took such a vow. And in Guntūr 350 students wrote to the Director that they would disobey the order. Every student, questioned on the point, will express a similar attitude of defiance. Under such circumstances, unless the Government cancel the order, their prestige will be at stake."

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sep. 8th, 1917.

Education in India.

20. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 8th September, writes:—At the recent Educational Conference at Simla, Doctor Chatterjee urged that Englishmen should not be employed in Indian schools and colleges. He argued that while the people were trying to introduce British methods of administration into their country, the presence of persons in our schools and colleges who were opposed to these attempts would prevent them from achieving their purpose. There may be truth in what he says. Further, it is important from the point of view of efficiency, that the teachers and professors should know the vernacular well. They should have an insight into the intellectual habits of our people. Europeans are wanting in both these requisites. That is why they are generally considered unfit for the teaching profession in this country. This point must be carefully considered. It is imperative that all those who are opposed to Home Rule should be dismissed from our Universities, colleges and schools. Before any Europeans are thus dismissed, however we should first ascertain whether they are opposed to Home Rule. There are among the British also great philosophers of un-biassed views like Mrs. Besant. If we should get the services of such, we should deem ourselves exceedingly fortunate. We should retain these. Branches of the Home Rule League are being formed in every town and village. As these spread their activity, the administration will come to be more and more democratic. This will serve to render the British sovereignty in India to remain for all time.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Sep. 5th, 1917.

Collection of fees in Primary schools.

21. A correspondent in the Kerala Sanchari, of the 5th September, writes:—It is a matter for regret that the Government do not attach any value to the public opinion that primary education should, as in other civilised countries, be made free and compulsory in India. The local boards have decided that no fee should be levied up to the third standard in the Elementary schools under them. But their order that, if the fourth standard is introduced in an Elementary school, fees should be levied from all the classes is really absurd. As it is necessary to educate a boy up to the fourth standard to complete his primary education, they should either cancel this order, or issue one to the effect that fees should be collected only from the boys of the fourth standard.

(e) Local and Municipal.

22. Referring to the order issued on the 31st August by the Government regarding the nomination, as an experimental measure, of non-officials as Presidents of District Boards in four districts, the Swadesamitran, of the 1st September, writes:—We hope that this experimental measure will lead to satisfactory results. Our readers are aware that the Government of Bengal have notified that the President of a District Board would be appointed by election It would have given no greater satisfaction, had our Government also, instead of nominating these Presidents, ordered their appointment by election.

District Board Presidents.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1917.

The Lokopakari, of the 3rd September, also comments on this subject in the same strain.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1917.

The Hitakarini, of the 2nd September, says with reference to the order of the Government proposing to appoint non-official presidents to four district boards as an experimental measure:—In answer to a resolution on this subject in the Legislative Council five months ago, the Government said that the time had not come for appointing non-official presidents to district boards. It is strange that in the course of five months the time has come to appoint four such presidents. Well! The Madras Government have maintained their prestige. The resolution of the non-official member was at that time rejected. What more do they want? They have not submitted themselves to the agitation of the people. They have thereafter deliberately and of their own accord brought that system into force with a view to do good to the public. The public are different from the non-official members of the Legislative Council. These members are not the representatives of the public, and do not take their welfare into consideration. They agitate for their own advantage. This is the song of the Anglo-Indians. To establish this difference is the goal of the bureaucracy. If the Government had accepted the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao, we would be much more glad. We need not, however, be very glad on account of this reform. So long as the system of administration is not changed as stated by Mr. Montagu, it is all the same whether the district board president is a European or an Indian.

Non-official district board presidents.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, Sep. 2nd, 1917.

Referring to the arrangement under which Government, by way of experiment, have appointed non-officials as presidents of local boards in four districts, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 7th September, remarks that although the Government may dispense with this system in case it proves unsatisfactory, it is to be hoped that this welcome piece of reform will effect a distinct improvement in the administration of local boards.

Non-official presidents of local boards.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sept. 7th, 1917.

In commenting favourably on the decision of the Government to nominate, as an experimental measure, non-official presidents to four district boards in the Presidency, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 5th September, says:—It would have given greater satisfaction to the people, if the presidents, instead of being appointed by the Government, were to be elected. The idea of appointing officials as vice-presidents is a good one. But the Government should see that the presidents and the vice-presidents do not fall out with each other. If this experiment proves successful, we hope that the Government would not only confer on the people the privilege of electing the presidents but also appoint non-officials as vice-presidents.

Non-official presidents of district boards.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Sep. 5th 1917.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 8th September, also comments favourably on the decision of the Government regarding the appointment of non officials as presidents of district boards which, it thinks, will give greater freedom to the members of district boards to give out their opinions freely on matters discussed at the meetings of the board without the fear of incurring the displeasure of the Collector-President.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sep. 8th, 1917.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

23. Anent the meeting of the Corporation of Madras held on the 4th September, the Hindu Nesan, of the 6th idem, observes:—

Corporation of Madras.

We condemn the proceedings of this meeting wherein the Commissioners and the President indulged in criticisms against each other. The President is as much responsible as the Commissioners for the calm and deliberate decision of the affairs relating to the Corporation That the President should, without realising this, defend the executive officers of the Corporation, that the Commissioners should contend that no one has the authority to curtail their right to speak at the meetings of the Corporation and that the meeting should be adjourned in consequence of the confusion that then prevailed, appear to be no healthy signs of the cordial relations which should exist between the President and Commissioners. Is it not a lamentable sight to see them thus divided in their opinion?

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

Writing on this subject, the Andhraprakasika, of the 6th September, says:—

The Corporation of Madras.

We thought that with Mr. Molony as President of the Corporation, all irregularities in the Corporation would come to an end but experience has proved that it was a mistake to think so. It is regrettable that Rao Bahadur Vijayaraghava Achariyar's regimé also is unsatisfactory. The proceedings of yesterday's meeting are in point. When a certain commissioner proposed a resolution that the question about the impurity of the present water-supply may be referred to experts, the President, at a stage when the resolution had to be put to vote, got up and begun to speak in support of the Special Engineer and belittling the importance of the report of the Guindy Institute when some commissioner asked for an opportunity to reply, he showed scant courtesy to him. While it is a disappointment, on the one hand, that, even after an expense of 54 lakhs of rupees, the filtered water supplied should be found impure, it is to be regretted, on the other, that the Acting President should behave with indifference towards the commissioners.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

24. Adverting to the reported enhancement of taxes by Rs. 45,000 over that already levied by the Trichinopoly Municipality, a correspondent of the Swadesmitran, of the 7th September, writes as follows:—

Trichinopoly Municipality.

Tax-payers have to pay only increased taxes, while no proportionate good is derived by them. It is a matter of common knowledge that the roads are full of ruts everywhere in the town. In certain parts great inconvenience is felt by the people in consequence of the stoppage of water-supply in the daytime and the inadequacy of this supply at other times. Unlike at Madura only a few Washington lights are put up in the town and the ordinary lights provided by the municipality do not give sufficient light in the night. The mosquito-breed in the drains gives much trouble in the town. It is understood that the Vice-Chairman has recently been given powers in the matter of professional-tax, vehicle tax and land tax and also to enquire into cases of land encroachment. As he is a highly capable officer, we trust that he will improve the sanitation of the town, if he is asked to attend to it as well. It would be well if the Chairman should attend to the office work and look after the collection of revenue and public works.

MAHAVIKATADUTAN, Madras, Sep. 8th, 1917.

25. The Mahavikatadutan, of the 8th September, reproduces a portion of the comments of the Swadesamitran, of the 29th August, on this subject abstracted in paragraph 21 of Report No. 35 of 1917.

The sanitation of Madras.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Sep. 8th, 1917.

26. Referring to the vacant Chairmanship of this municipality, the Dravidan, of the 8th September, hopes that the Government will be pleased to appoint a non-Brahman as the Chairman, in consideration of the fact that the present President of the Taluk Board is a Brahman.

Tiruvannāmalai Municipality.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

27. The Dravidan, of the 7th September, reproduces in Tamil under this heading an abstract of an article published in Justice of the 5th idem on the present water-supply in the city of Madras.

Mr. Madeley's lecture.

28. The Desabhimani, of the 1st September, says:—. . . Taking the constitution of the Council into consideration, we see from the report that the strength of the Council on the 31st March 1917 was 19. On the 18th November 1916, Mr. A. Subbarayalu Reddiyar, Diwan Bahadur, vacated his seat as Councillor and Chairman, and he was re-nominated as Councillor on 21st November 1916 and was re-elected as Chairman, at the election specially held for the purpose on 22nd December 1916. That the re-nomination of Mr. Reddiyar as a Councillor was made just three days after he vacated his office as such shows above all how Government was solicitous to continue to provide him with a seat in the Council allowing practically no gap in the long and continuous chain of his Councillorship. Four elected seats fell vacant during the year; three of which were filled up before the close of the year. The Acting Executive Engineer Mr. P. V. George, a nominated Councillor, had to resign his seat in May 1916 owing to his transfer out of the district and Mr. Rajabadar Mudaliyar, Treasury Deputy Collector, was nominated in his stead. We have to deprecate the policy of nominating a Revenue officer as Councillor for the seat occupied by a Public Works Department Engineer, an officer of special professional knowledge which will ever serve to be an invaluable guide and help to the Council in matters connected with the Public Works Department of the municipality. We wish that similar violation of a principle of the kind do not recur in the matter of nomination.

Cuddalore Municipal Administration for the year 1916–17.

DESABHIMANI, Cuddalore, Sep. 1st, 1917.

* * * * * *

. . . Though the collection of taxes was generally fair, the current year's balances under the various heads of taxes were, however, somewhat heavy. It has to be conceded, as the report says, that this was due to the difficulty experienced in the collection consequent upon a continued fall in prosperity among the tax-payers as the result of the war.

The amount allotted for expenditure in the revised estimate for 1916–17 was Rs. 1,66,930 and the amount actually spent was Rs. 1,04,895 leaving an unspent balance of Rs. 62,035, of which Rs. 52,834 is the Provincial grant made to the municipality since some years ago for the opening out of congested lanes. We cannot but condemn the unwise policy of the Cuddalore Municipal Council in having continued to keep this large amount unspent year after year. The Council, however, as a first step towards the opening of congested lanes, did well in having placed the subject for the consideration and report of a Sub-Committee of Councillors appointed for the purpose and though the Sub-Committee's reports were submitted before the Council in March 1916, and resolutions passed on it by the Council four months hence, viz., on 24th July 1916, it is to be regretted that there has been still so much delay in the opening of the sanitary lanes along the lines indicated in the Council's resolution on the subject. As the Government have given the Council a large grant so long ago as 1914, it is hoped that the Council will not continue to sleep over the matter but soon take on hand this important sanitary work in right earnest. Among other minor items that contributed to the non-utilization of the balance mentioned above, the delay in the acquisition of sites for the Muhammadan burial-ground at Pudupaliam and for the construction of municipal latrines for the use of the public, have to be mentioned here.

. . . Though we are glad that some of the main roads in the municipality as well as a few other roads through which officials and non-officials of higher rank very often have had to pass by, are maintained in good and scrupulously neat condition, yet we are constrained to observe that the condition of several other roads in the interior of the town which are thickly inhabited by the middle and poor class rate-payers sadly require improvement owing to the customary indifference of the municipality towards such quarters. . .

* * * * * *

. . . The water-supply in the town was, as usual, unsatisfactory. Tube wells erected by the municipality during the previous year were invariably not in working order. It is a pity that there has been no further progress in the condition of water-supply in the municipality.

* * * * * *

There were 2,289 births and 1,618 deaths during the year against 2,202 and 1,766 of the previous year. There is no purpose gained by appointing indiscriminately unqualified men for responsible posts in this branch of municipal administration. Unless the Birth and Death Registration staff of the municipality is overhauled and replaced by qualified men, it may not be possible to work out accurate statistics in the matter."

* * * * * *

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sep. 8th, 1917.

Taluk boards, Gōdāvari district.

29. In the course of an article on this subject, a correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 8th September, says :—John Adam once remarked in the Congress that the Regulation of 1817 which gives power to punish without trial and without framing charges is put in force in Presidency towns only where there are Universities and where the people are educated and civilised. Just so, in the taluk boards of the Gōdāvari district which contains two colleges and many schools, the number of officials is very great. This is strange. . . I suggest that the members of the taluk boards of Cocanada, Peddapur, and Rajahmundry may move resolutions recommending the reduction of the number of officials in the boards to four and the election of non-officials to all the other seats.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sep. 7th, 1917.

Proceedings of local boards.

30. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 7th September, observes :—A correspondent of the Hindu writes that the resolutions passed by the Tiruvannāmalai Taluk Board in the months of January and February have only just been published in the District Gazette. This is true not only of this Taluk Board but is the prevailing procedure almost everywhere. As such proceedings are published in our district (South Kanara), too, very late, they are rendered practically useless. It would therefore be well to publish these resolutions in the local journals in future.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

Land Revenue Settlement.

31. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th September, publishes one of the series of the articles contributed by the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar to the Commonweal on this subject and rendered into Tamil by Mr. S. Mahalinga Ayyar, a High Court Vakil.

(k) General.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

The Mesopotamia expedition.

32. In reproducing in Tamil an abstract of the views expressed by the Investor's Review, a western paper on this subject, the Swadesamitran, of the 30th August, says that, according to expert opinion, the administrative policy adopted by the bureaucrats in India, the absence of influence for the Indians in the matter of administration, and the neglect on the part of the authorities to utilise the full strength available in India are the chief reasons which led to the mismanagement of affairs in Mesopotamia.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Home Rule.

33. The Swadesamitran, of the 30th August, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Modern Review on the remark usually made by the Anglo-Indians as regards the fitness or otherwise of the Indians for Home Rule, in the course of which the writer refers to the existence of two political parties in Great Britain, who are always finding fault with each other as being unfit for the administration of the country, and observes that, should such people find fault with the Indians, they cannot be considered to be infallible or entitled to the confidence of the Indians.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Referring to the several observations made by certain newspapers against the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar that he grows a beard and goes about the country taking an active part in the Home Rule agitation, and to the report on the administration of the Kumbakōnam Municipality, which has been highly commended by the Government, the Swadesamitran, of the 30th August, writes :—All the credit of the administration of the Kumbakōnam Municipality goes to the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar, as the municipality has been under his direct supervision. What, then, is the reason for a person with such administrative capacity to take an active part in the Home Rule agitation at present and work hard for effecting a change in the administrative policy pursued by the bureaucrats? When even a person of his stamp should consider that reforms are necessary and has grown enthusiastic over it not only the authorities, but also others should carefully ponder over the matter. If he should have thought that reforms and Home Rule are necessary for India and taken a vow to work for securing the same, can anybody doubt that he regards the welfare of the country as more important than anything else.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 30th August, reproduces in Tamil the comments of the Catholic Times and Catholic Opinion published in England, regarding the the administration of India, in which the following observations occur:—This is the best time for the grant of Home Rule to India. Nobody can now consider the Indians to be unfit for managing their own affairs. The loyalty of India and her readiness to help England with men and money in the present war are unquestionable. But the British authorities had no inclination to utilise the full strength available in India and obstructed her progress. When we consider the egregious blunders committed in connection with the Mesopotamia affair and their consequence, we would see how much reliance we can place on the authorities that now govern the millions of people in India. The grant of Home Rule to her would really indicate the readiness and determination of the British Empire to establish liberty and truth all over the world.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 4th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 4th September, reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of a meeting held at Coimbatore, under the auspices of the local Home Rule League, when the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar delivered a lecture on Home Rule, a report of which appears in New India of the 3rd idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 11th, 1917.

The Home Rule leagues.

Referring to the statement usually made by high officials of the Government and several Anglo-Indians and a few others, that the Home Rule agitation is carried on only by a few popular leaders and that it does not receive the support of the public, and to the list published elsewhere in the same issue to show that there are over 4,000 members in these leagues throughout the Presidency, the Swadesamitran, of the 11th September, observes:—The fact, that almost all men of sound education and good influence have joined these leagues, shows beyond doubt how reasonable and essential the Home Rule movement is and what ideal is impressed upon the minds of the public. When Lord Pentland condemned the Home Rule agitation and unjustly interned the leaders that carried on this agitation, many influential men joined these leagues in order to defend them. These leagues, which have for their object the attainment of Home Rule through the scheme of reforms propounded by the Congress Muslim League, have now taken a firm root in the country and cannot be shaken. It is quite certain that hereafter these institutions will enlist members in large numbers and display great activity in the performance of their duty to the public.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 12th, 1917.

Home Rule

Adverting to the resolution passed by the Guzarat Sabha of Bombay to present a petition to the Secretary of State for India signed by the people of Guzarat that it is the strong desire of the Indians that they should be granted Home Rule, the Swadesamitran, of the 12th September, observes that the expediency of presenting similar petitions to the Secretary of State may be considered in other provinces as well, and that it is the opinion of many that their efforts will be crowned with success, if their aspirations are openly and clearly made known to Secretary of State.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 25th, 1917.

The Home Rule agitation.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 25th August, publishes in Telugu the speech of Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar delivered in a meeting held at Salem, which contains:—". . . . The whole power is now held by the I.C.S. officers. All of them from the youngest member of the body to the oldest hold the same opinion and have the same object in view. This is their peculiar characteristic. Before coming to this country they believe that they are greater than the people of this country. When they are entrusted with responsible offices they think that they are omnicient and that others do not know more than what they themselves know. When they become Lieutenant-Governors. . . and Executive Council members they lend a deaf ear to our complaints and our cry becomes a cry in the wilderness. For example, see what great loss is caused to the landowners under the new settlement in the districts of North Arcot, Chittoor, Madura and South Arcot. The Government raised the land tax by 25 per cent. Though objections were raised against this on behalf of the people in the Provincial Legislative Council, they were thrown out. That was why, in that council, I observed that the Government was sowing seeds of discontent amongst the people. . . Such is the fate of our resolutions. The Indians cannot therefore derive any benefit from the present bureaucracy. We, therefore, say that in their place the swaraj must be established. Some believe that Mrs. Annie Besant has created this idea in us. But since 1885, resolutions have been passed by the National Congress every year that responsible self-government be granted to us . . .

If the I.C.S. officers who have been enjoying power tell us that we should never even dream of asking swaraj, we should not blame them. Because those who are enjoying power cannot willingly give it up. We should, therefore, bring home to their minds that we have a fervent desire for swaraj. Those who say that we should not be given swaraj fall under three categories:—

(1) The first are Europeans who are carrying on trade here. Their staunch desire is that they should gain though we lose. The English are called a nation of traders.

(2) The Missionaries who spread Christianity.

(3) Judas Iscariots, existing among us, who with the help of the Madras Mail and Times, believe that swaraj should not be granted to us. . . His Excellency has told us that we should keep quiet and not agitate for swaraj. Do you know what Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar said in reply? He said—"I would not only not keep quiet, but will still work for agitating for swaraj in the face of all difficulties, however numerous they may be." I also told His Excellency that I would scarifice my all for the sake of swaraj I am now 66 years old, but I wish to live long and work for attaining swaraj. Though the Government may cancel my pension I will not leave off my work. Whatever may happen I am prepared to give up all that I have. . . Can even the Police take to jail 500 or 600 men all at once? Are there jails which can accommodate so many? Do not be afraid of the threats of the Police. . . You must, therefore, go to the temples and mosques and take the swadeshi vow there.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sep. 8th, 1917.

Home Rule.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 8th September, publishes in Telugu the speech of Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar delivered on the 2nd September at Coimbatore, which contains the following:— . . The Government does not pay heed to the words of the representatives of the people in the council. The Government recently increased the land-tax by 25 per cent in the districts of North and South Arcots, Chittoor and Madura. . . But if India is granted self-government only such land-taxes, as are necessary for the improvement and the protection of the country will be imposed. It may be said that there was not a single day when the Government did not reject the resolutions proposed by the representatives of the people. . . I have been in the Council for three years. It is from my experience thereof that I say that the Indians necessarily require self-government. If all the current political affairs are explained to our people they will all surely join the Home Rule League. . . Some believe that as the Government will not grant all that we ask them, it is good to make a compromise with them by requesting them to grant at least the important items in the scheme of the Congress Committee. If we agree to such a compromise you do not know how the British will disregard us. What we asked for are important things. We should not reduce them. We must repeatedly ask for them. To obtain them, Mrs. Besant has preached to us and showed us what we have necessarily to do. She has showed us the path, and has suffered for us in several ways. . She is undergoing the punishment of internment not because of the order of Government but because she worked for the Indians. Had the Indians been unanimous on the question of passive resistance on the very first day of her internment and been prepared to carry it out she would not have gone to Ootacamund. . . Some say that we should all maintain silence by the time Mr. Montagu, who exposed clearly all the defects of the administration of the country by our white people, arrives in India. . . If the people who carry on passive resistance become more numerous, jails will prove heavens and not hells".

Home Rule.

A correspondent in the Kerala Patrika, of the 8th September, condemns the present agitation for Home Rule and says:—When the King-Emperor is engaged in this colossal war, it is rather rash on the part of the Indians to press their demand for self-government. What they should now do is to help the British Government in all possible ways to bring the war to a successful conclusion. After the conclusion of the war, if the Indians approach His Majesty the King-Emperor with the prayer that self-government should be bestowed on them, His Majesty would certainly grant it.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sep. 8th, 1917.

A curious objection to the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India.

34. Adverting to the statement said to have been made by Lord Beresford about the nomination of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India, that it is being objected to by the Indians on the ground that he is not of pure British descent, the Swadesamitran, of the 30th August, observes:—Our readers are aware that many in England have objection to the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the Secretary of State for India. But the objection raised by Lord Beresford, who is one among them, is a very curious one. We cannot understand the meaning of the expression "pure British descent." Besides many of the Indians are not actually aware of what descent Mr. Montagu is. It is indeed their desire that they must have a Secretary of State, who would not take the word of the bureaucracy for the gospel truth, but would render satisfaction to the people by his liberal views and forethought. Need we, therefore, say whether, or not, the Indians are satisfied with the nomination of Mr. Montagu? If it is the intention of Lord Beresford to object to his nomination, why should he throw the blame on the Indians?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1917.

Strange acts.

35. The Prapanchamitran, of the 1st September, writes:—Some Government officials in this Presidency perform certain strange acts, which create disgust in the minds of the people. The District Judge of Guntūr has asked for information as to how many of the pleaders practising in his court have joined the Home Rule League. Some Brahman officers are making private enquiries to find out the individuals in their office who get Justice. They are also using their official influence to get from the Postal authorities secret information about the names of persons in receipt of the said paper. The Government should take notice of their conduct and condemn them.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

The Lokopakari, of the 3rd September, reproduces this article.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

Adulteration of ghee.

36. Referring to the reply given by the Governor of Bengal to the deputation that waited on him, that he has decided to enact a law, at a very early date, to prevent the adulteration of ghee, the Swadesamitran, of the 1st September, says that it is imperative on the part of the Government of India to enact for the whole of India an Act similar to the one which the Government of Bengal propose to enact for the city of Calcutta.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

Adverting to the same subject, the Lokopakari, of the 3rd September, observes that a similar legislation should be made in this Presidency also.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

Exodus to the hills.

37. The Swadesamitran, of the 1st September, publishes in Tamil an abstract of the comments of the Englishman condemning the exodus of the Government to the hills during the summer season.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 1st, 1917.

Revolvers for railway guards.

38. A correspondent of the Swadesamitran, of the 3rd September, inviting the attention of the authorities to the serious danger the guard and the brakesman of goods train No. 381 were exposed to in guarding the train and the passengers therein from the numerous stones pelted at it on the night of the 30th August 1917, when it had to be stopped ahead of the Trichinopoly Railway station, to about 40 minutes for want of the line-clear signal, suggests that the Railway authorities will do well to supply revolvers to Railway guards, and, if this is not possible, to issue instructions to stationmasters to give the line-clear signal as soon as the train leaves a station so as to enable it to reach the next station promptly.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 3rd, 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 4th, 1917.

"A whitewashing commission."

39. The Swadesamitran, of the 4th September, reproduces in Tamil a further portion of the article under this heading published in the Hindu of the 28th August, in which the writer undertakes to show the mistakes in the report given by Messrs. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar and Marjoribanks.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 4th, 1917.

Hoisting of Home Rule flag at Ootacamund.

40. The Swadesamitran, of the 4th September, also reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of a special meeting of the members of the Home Rule League, Ootacamund, held in the League's premises on the 31st August 1917 for the purpose of taking the opinion of the members to hoist the Home Rule flag at the premises to fly day and night, which appear in New India of the 3rd September 1917.

MAHAVIKATA DUTAN, Madras, Sep. 8th, 1917.

Hoisting of the Home Rule flag at Ootacamund.

The Mahavikata Dutan, of the 8th September, reproduces from the Swadesamitran, of the 4th idem, a Tamil version of the proceedings of a special meeting of the members of the Home Rule League, Ootacamund, held in the League's premises on the 31st August 1917 to take the opinion of the members to hoist the Home Rule flag at the premises by day and night

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 4th, 1917.

The Home Rule League, Trichinopoly.

41. The Swadesamitran, of the 4th September, publishes an abstract of the proceedings of a meeting held under the auspices of the Swarajya Samajam at Trichinopoly, when Mr. Chandrasekhara Ayyar, a member of the Madura District Congress Committee, and Mr. M. S. Manteswara Sarma, a member of the Provincial Congress Committee, Madras, are reported to have addressed the audience on "Students and Motherland" and "Our Duty to the Motherland at the present juncture", respectively. In the course of his speech, the latter is said to have condemned the present policy of the Government, and advocated the taking of the swadeshi vow, the boycott of foreign articles and the adoption of the method of passive resistance, as the means for reforming this policy.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

The Home Rule League, Trichinopoly.

The Dravidan, of the 5th September, also publishes in Tamil an abstract of the proceedings of the first anniversary of this League celebrated on the 1st idem, referred to in paragraph 5 on page 2299 of Report No. 36 of 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 4th, 1917.

Home Rule League, Tiruvarur.

42. The Swadesamitran, of the 4th September, publishes, from the pen of its own correspondent, the proceedings of a public meeting held at Tiruvarur on the 2nd idem under the auspices of this League, when Rao Bahadur K. S. Venkatarama Ayyar, the president of the meeting, is reported to have, in his introductory remarks, explained to the audience the objects of Home Rule Leagues, while the other speakers are said to have addressed them on the present political situation, the reforms suggested by the Congress and the Muslim League and the necessity for the grant of Home Rule to India. In the course of his concluding speech, the president is reported to have stated that the time has come for the grant of more rights to the Indians, that some of the authorities are not willing to part with the powers they have been enjoying, that the objects of the Home Rule Leagues are not objectionable, that it is not the intention of these Leagues that the British Government should quit this country and that by the adoption of the policy of passive resistance it is not their intention to do anything prejudicial to the interests of the Government.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

The Home Rule League, Tiruvarur.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 5th September, also publishes from the pen of its own correspondent the proceedings of a public meeting held at Tiruvarur on the 2nd September 1917 under the presidency of Rao Bahadur K. S. Venkatarama Ayyar.

43. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th September, also reproduces in Tamil an abstract of the proceedings of a public meeting held at Masulipatam, under the auspices of this League, when Mr. Deobanker of New India is reported to have addressed the meeting on "Passive Resistance". The abstract is published in the Hindu of the 4th September 1917.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

Home Rule League, Masulipatam.

44. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th September, reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of a public meeting held under the auspices of this League at Kumbla to thank Mr. Montagu for his announced visit, and to pray for the cancellation of internment orders in spite of Anglo-Indian threats, as published in New India of the 4th idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

Home Rule League, Kumbla.

45. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th September, also publishes in Tamil the proceedings of a public meeting held at Kulitalai on the 4th September 1917, under the auspices of this League, when the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar is reported to have addressed the audience in Tamil on Home Rule. The proceedings are published in the Hindu of the 6th idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

Home Rule League, Kulitalai.

46. The Dravidan, of the 11th September, publishes the proceedings of a public meeting held at Coimbatore on the 8th idem under the auspices of the local Home Rule League, when Mr. Dwarakadas, the editor of the Young India of Bombay is reported to have addressed the audience on the present situation, in the course of which he is said to have spoken of the internments and the adoption of the policy of passive resistance if the persons interned are not released soon. Many students are stated to have been present at this meeting.

DRAVIDAN, Madras, Sep. 11th, 1917.

Home Rule League, Coimbatore.

47. The Swadesamitran, of the 12th September, publishes in Tamil, asreported by a correspondent, the proceedings of the first anniversary celebration of this league held at Calicut on the 8th idem, under the presidency of Manjeri S. Rama Ayyar, which appears in the Hindu of the 10th idem.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 12th, 1917.

Home Rule League, Calicut.

48. The Vartakamitran, of the 21st June, dwells upon the facilities that exist in India for utilising mechanical power in developing industries and laying special stress on the creation of such power by means of water-falls, suggests that, as the people themselves may not find it easy to get the capital that is required for such a big undertaking, the Government should take an interest in the matter and, though they cannot advance the required amount of capital, they should at least guarantee recoupment if a loss should occur.

VARTAKAMITRAN, Tanjore, June 21st, 1917.

Development of mechanical power in India.

49. In offering its opinion on a variety of subjects under the heading "News and Notes", the Vartakamitran, of the 21st June, observes elsewhere:—Whenever there is a misunderstanding between the rulers and the ruled on important subjects, the usual procedure adopted by our benign Government is to appoint a commission or committee to enquire about the matter and tide over the difficulty for the nonce. This is a wise policy indeed. The gentlemen, who constitute the committee, will usually be some Indians, who will always abide by the opinion of the Government, and some English officials, who have no interest whatever in India. This will be clearly seen from the constitution of certain commissions recently appointed by the Government. Turning to the Industries Commission alone, some of us may think that it will do some good to the Indians. But these are bound to be disappointed. The evidence of some European witnesses makes it clear that, even if the Government should by mistake think of benefiting the Indians, the Europeans would prevent them from doing so. But one thing is certain and that is that many European companies will start business in India and throw obstacles in the way of the industries carried on by the Indians. European companies have sufficient capital and industrial training. They obtain also liberal help from the banks. The Government, too, will not refuse to help them. If European companies are started like this, it will lead to the Government putting a stop to the help they may render to our local industries. We have to think that it is only the European merchants that stand in the way of the development of the industries and the economic advancement of India. Every help rendered to India will no doubt operate harshly on foreign merchants. On account of this, the industries of India should not be destroyed. Our readers are aware of the hue and cry raised in England about the levying of duties on twist cloth and other articles imported into India. This hue and cry of the English merchants looks justifiable in the eyes of our Government, who put forward the plea of war for not granting us the privileges to which we are entitled.

VARTAKAMITRAN, Tanjore, June 21st, 1917.

Short notes.

Look at the differences between the indigo merchants and the cultivators in Behar. These have existed for a long time. It is the Europeans who have taken to indigo cultivation, that seem to conduct the Government of that place and the Government officials are led by them. Bestowing some consideration on this matter, the Government appointed an official eight or nine years ago to enquire about it. The report of this official has not yet been published, nor has the condition of the cultivators improved since. When Mr Gandhi evinced an interest in this matter and started an enquiry about the condition of the cultivators, the European planters grew wild and tried to drive him away by means of official pressure. But as he stood undaunted, they climbed down—we do not know if their object is to give in for the present and ruin the cultivators ultimately—and offered to help him in his investigation. A committee has been appointed and Mr. Gandhi also made a member thereof. We do not think that any good will come of this. It appears this committee will enquire about the relations that exist between the zamindars and the cultivators. Who wanted this committee? While an enquiry was demanded about the relations that subsisted between the indigo planters and the cultivators, the Government have appointed a committee to enquire about the relationship between the zamindars and the cultivators. Perhaps this committee has been brought into existence to prove to Mr. Gandhi that even Indian zamindars are not treating their cultivators properly. The action of the Government in ignoring the hardships suffered by the cultivators under the indigo planters and interfering in an unconnected matter is causing both regret and surprise.

The Government of India have called for information about the quality and quantity of dyes which may be required by India, so that they can write to the Commercial Department in England and get the same. Why all this difficulty? Nothing has been done to improve the dyeing stuffs produced in India. The Dyeing Expert for Madras says that dyes cannot be prepared from the stuffs available in India. But the expert for the United Provinces says that they can be prepared. Who is correct? The Madras expert is changing his avocation like a chameleon. He is a pencil expert today. He is a leather expert tomorrow. We do not know which work it is that he knows well. Moreover, any one may be appointed to do the expert work he has been doing. The work done by him can be seen only on paper.

VARTAKAMITRAN, Tanjore, June 28th, 1917.

The Vartakamitran, of the 28th June, comments as follows under the heading News and Notes:—A conference was held in Simla on the 18th June 1917, with Sir Claude Hill as President to discuss some matters connected with agricultural education. At the Agricultural Conference held some time before this at Pusa, it was decided that there was no use in increasing the number of agricultural colleges, on the ground that a sufficient number of students had not joined the existing colleges. This is itself a proof of the fact that agricultural education is not imparted in these colleges properly. But Sir Claude Hill stated that there should be a separate agricultural college for every province and a secondary grade agricultural school in every district. Whether the agriculturists are benefited or not by the increase of secondary grade agricultural schools, it will surely provide appointments for the Indians trained in the agricultural colleges and the Englishmen. Those now studying in agricultural colleges are doing so only for the purpose of getting appointments under Government. This is also like the Industrial Department which serves no purpose.

There seems to be a proposal to hold an exhibition in Madras of the manufactured articles available in South India and those required in this country.

This may help our merchants to know where the goods required by them can be purchased. Besides this a foreign merchant can also understand by a visit to this exhibition, what articles can find a sale in South India and import the same. Unless this easy import of articles is stopped in a way, India will not gain anything from this exhibition. It will benefit only foreigners.

Mr. Chadwick, I.C.S., has been appointed as a representative in London to advance the interests of Indian trade. Here is a new appointment for the members of the Indian Civil Service. These I.C.S. men have till now been Judges, heads of Agricultural Departments, Industrial Experts and Inspectors of Schools. They are now going to become grand trade experts. Everything is curious.

It is not known whether the committee appointed in Behar to equire into the hardships of the cultivators will conduct its enquiry openly or secretly. Anyhow the efforts of the indigo planters there to drive away Mr. Gandhi proved in vain. We can learn one thing from this and that is that we cannot have any remedy as long as we are content with talking. We cannot derive any benefit, unless we make the Government understand that we can manage our affairs without their aid. The Congress was crying hoarse over this matter for a number of years and yet it was of no use. The moment Mr. Gandhi started a personal enquiry about it, the Government also moved in the matter. Therefore every one should bear in mind the fact that action is better than speech.

Mr. Marsden, the Dyeing Expert in Madras, has been sent to Pusa to observe the process followed there for preparing indigo blue and improve that industry in this province also. As soon as he returns, he will proceed to the Agricultural College at Coimbatore and conduct experiments there. It appears his salary will be paid from the Agricultural department. What does it matter which way money goes, as long as it is wasted?

The Secretary of State for India has asked the Indian committee in the London Imperial Institute to examine how the raw products available in India can be utilised in England. This is very good indeed. They want that Indian products should be converted into manufactured articles only in England. Could not the Secretary of State have asked for a consideration of the feasibility of converting them into articles in India itself? When it comes to self-interest, people do act unjustly, however honest they may be.

Short notes.

The Vartakamitran, of the 5th July, writes under the heading "News and Notes":—Orders have been issued that gold can hereafter be imported into India only under a license granted by the Government. There is room to think that this order will hamper trade.

VARTAKAMITRAN, Tanjore, July 5th, 1917.

A committee has recently been appointed in England with the name of the Empire Resources Development Committee, the object of which seems to be to make several countries like India, Celyon, etc., bear a good portion of the huge expenditure incurred in this war. One proposal of this committee is that the English Government should take over the lands and mines in eastern countries such as India and Ceylon and, working them profitably, repay the debt now incurred. It appears other colonies also would share the profits derived from this scheme. The Indians and the Singalese, who have been enjoying the lands from time immemorial, have no right of ownership over them! They belong only to those who come over from England! This is their principle. Can there be a doctrine more ignominious and dangerous to our people than this? The English Government should not blindly fall in with the views of this committee, the members of which do not seem to like that others should live and prosper.

Our people should join together in curbing the efforts of a few Englishmen who are actuated with the false view that they alone should be happy in the world. Until this is done, we cannot conceive of what India's future will be. There should be union among us.

Every one knows how our people are getting poorer day by day, and yet no one comes forward to improve our economic condition. The Government, who are always offering the war as a plea for negativing every request of ours, do nothing to disapprove of the action of associations, which work for keeping India always under the foreign rule, and those which are for European companies alone being benefited by working the industries and mercantile enterprises in India and other eastern countries. They, on the other hand, help them to a slight extent. Unless India advances industrially and commercially, England will be subjected to much hardship. If the articles manufactured in England are to be sold in India, the Indians should have money enough to purchase them. If the Indians are poor and cannot purchase them, how can the trade of the English be carried on? When we think of the mercantile condition of India after the war, it pains us much.

We do not know what will become of the proposal to completely stop German articles being imported into the allied countries. America does not evince so much hatred in the matter of the German trade. Though she has joined the Allies in the war, it is doubtful if, after the war, she will be as inimical to Germany as the English and others, in matters of trade. As many articles necessary for several industries in other European countries also are available nowhere else than in Germany, these countries too will make a show of being hostile only as long as the war lasts and they will then surely join together and compete with other countries in matters of trade.

If, even at a time when several foreign articles cannot be imported into India, new industries cannot be started here, what will India do after the war? The English people want to carry Indian raw products to England and converting them into manufactured articles there, find a sale for them in India again. They are giving all sorts of deceptive advice such as that it is only agriculture that should flourish in India and that India will be benefited only by agricultural improvement. We do not say that agriculture should not improve. But if there is no industrial advancement, there is no hope for India.

We fear if Burma will become another South Africa. It appears Indians in Burma have to take out passports for moving one place to another, and this order seems to have been passed under the Defence of India Act. Burma has not been sufficiently colonised. There are numerous forests and mines there and a large extent of cultivable lands. We do not know if arrangements are being made to give these lands to English planters. Burma is a portion of India. We cannot see the reason for demanding a passport for one to go from one portion of India to another. Perhaps they will hereafter demand a passport for one to go from one house to another!

Vartakamitran, Tanjore, June 28th, 1917.

Our economic position.

50. In discussing the probable effect of the present war upon the economic position of India, the Vartakamitran, of the 28th June, writes:—Our present position is so bad that we cannot even conceive of our past. The greatness of our languages and civilisation is proved beyond doubt by the fact that they have not been affected much on account of the country having been under the rule and control of foreigners for years. But of what use can languages and civilisation be without money, which we have not. Now arises the question as to what is the cause of our having lost our money and the answer is mercantile robbery. The extensive import of foreign articles after the advent of the English rule destroyed the internal trade and several industries ceased to exist, the result being that we had to depend upon foreigners to satisfy our wants. We lost our wealth by purchasing the goods of foreigners. With the loss of our wealth, we lost our brains as well. We were reduced to such a pass that the Europeans began to consider us to be equal to an even inferior to the Negroes of Central Africa. For all outward appearances our country seems to be enjoying quite and peace, and the people seem to be happy. But the fact is otherwise. The population is not increasing as it ought to and the death-rate is also high. The percentage of people always suffering from disease here is ten. We do not know when this state of affairs will improve. Before the war began, the Europeans considered India to be a convenient market for their goods and brought about the complete ruin of the Indian industries, by flushing the Indian market with the same articles that were manufactured in India, at a cheaper price. But as these Europeans also purchased what they required from us, there was apparently some advantage. The present war, everyone knows, is the outcome of a mercantile competition, and therefore the allies are considering about entering into a compact among themselves, with the object of reducing the trade of the enemy countries. We do not know what will be the position of India in this compact. It looks as if she will not be benefited. Our readers may be aware of the fact that, some days back, Sir James Meston, the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces, who is one of a class conspiring to keep India always under the rule of the foreigners, Sir S. P. Sinha, the nominal representative of the Indians, and the Maharaja of Bikaneer, the representative of the Indian Princes, were sent to England by the Government of India to sit on a conference connected with the war. Let us see what benefit these have conferred on India. Our benign Government have levied a duty of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on cotton manufactures in India, in order to help the development of the trade of England. See how they protect the development of Indian trade. In response to the call that India should bear a portion of the heavy expenditure incurred in the war, the Government of India too borrowed 100 crores of rupees and made a gift of it. As the war is being carried on for the purpose of protecting the independence of small kingdoms, it is necessary indeed that we, who desire for such independence, should also pay a portion of the expenditure. But the doubt is whether we will share the benefits arising from the war. Of the 33 crores of people in India, leaving alone the women and boys under 15 and old men over 70, only 12 crores of people are in a position to earn and it is these that will have to work and repay the debt of 150 crores of rupees now incurred and the interest thereon. Thus every one will have only to think that his debt has increased by Rs. 12-8-0 this year. It has been decided that, after the war, the countries subject to the control of England and those allied to her should co-operate with each other in developing trade and that India and the countries subject to England should levy a smaller duty on articles received from England than on those received from other countries and the gentleman who went to England as our representatives have also approved of this proposal. This will work only to the prejudice of India, as long as the power of levying duties is not entrusted to the Legislative Councils in India. Before the war, several countries traded with India and not only vied with each other in supplying us with articles at cheap prices but also purchased from us the articles required by them. Thus there was a two-fold advantage. But now, as England wants to give special privileges also to other countries, these will fix any price they please for the articles sent by them and the result will be that we will have to pay more for articles. There will again be no room for the Indian industries to thrive; for, the articles received from the allied countries will, by themselves, be sufficient to ruin our industries. Moreover, as all foreign contries cannot trade with India, they cannot be expected to buy the articles required by them from India. Thus our exports will be reduced while our imports will be increased and therefore India will have to suffer a loss on account of reduction in trade. As already stated, the condition of India's trade is bound to become worse, unless the Indians acquire greater privileges in administering the country. Any number of Agricultural Departments, without such privileges, will be of no use.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th September, reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of a public meeting held to unveil the portrait of the late Doctor Dadabhai Naoroji presented to the Gokhale Hall by the students of the first Students' Home attached to the Christian College, Madras, as they appear in New India of the same date.

The late Doctor Dadabhai Naoroji

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

52. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th September, reproduces in Tamil the proceedings of a public meeting held at Tanjore on the 4th idem under the presidency of Mr. V. P. Madhava Rao, C.I.E., to protest against the attitude of the Madras Mail with reference to its leading article headed "A word to Mr. Montagu", which appear in the Hindu of the same date.

A public meeting at Tanjore.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

53. The Hindu Nesan, of the 5th September, reproduces in Tamil a communication sent by Mr. M. Ramachandran of Conjeeveram regarding the celebration of the 70th birthday of Mrs. Annie Besant. This appears in New India of the 4th idem.

Sri Vasanta Jayanti.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sep. 5th, 1917.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

Viceroy's speech.

54. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th September, reproduces in Tamil a portion of the telegraphic summary of the comments of the Statesman on the speech delivered by His Excellency the Viceroy during the recent session of the Imperial Legislative Council, which is published in the Hindu of the same date.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

The Swadesamitran, of the 7th September, publishes in Tamil the telegraphic summaries of the Bombay Chronicle, the Times of India and the Rangoon Times on this subject, which appear in the Hindu of the same date.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

The Viceroy's speech.

Anent the speech delivered by the Viceroy in opening the meeting of the Legislative Council at Simla, the Swadesamitran, of the 7th September, says:—Those who go through this speech will note that the very attitude of the Viceroy has changed. In his speech last December at Calcutta, he warned his hearers "against expecting revolutionary changes; and this cue was taken by the Provincial heads, who since delivered their own speeches in the same strain. They threatened to adopt repressive measures and immediately gave effect to it. All these did not terrify the people in the country. As the people felt convinced that the work done by them was a lawful work and that the measures adopted by the authorities were improper ones, they believed that their object would be accomplished and that the steps taken by the authorities would not yield the expected results. The Viceroy's speech indicates that the authorities too have come to the same conclusion, after such a long time. Instead of telling us, as they did, that we cannot have the reforms we wish for, the authorities now seek our co-operation in the matter of discussing these reforms. This change augurs well. We need not go behind this and seek to know the reason for this change. The change has come and that is sufficient for us. The Viceroy pointed out what all has been done till now to raise the status of India and remove the longstanding grievances of the Indians. Though they have only done their duty here, let us be grateful to them for this. But the Government of India should bear in mind that the Indians will not be satisfied by the status of India being raised by a degree. India will not be satisfied, unless she becomes equal to the other British possessions. All the grievances, which affect her self-respect, should be done away with. The Viceroy offered an explanation in his speech to some who seem to think that the Government will be endangering themselves by conferring the higher appointments in the army on Indians. We will say that these have not understood the Indians well, and that they have not the capacity to realise the attitude of the present-day Indians. India knows full well that, surrounded as she is on all sides by strong kingdoms, she will be devoured by some one, unless she forms part of the British Empire. But she knows equally well that, without her sincere friendship and entire support, England cannot maintain her position in the continent of Asia in the future. It will not be in the interests of England herself to think of removing only a few of our grievances being afraid of some one. We have attained manhood, and wish to have the same status in our country that the people of other countries have in theirs The duty of trying to secure this status for us rests upon the Government of India. The Viceroy and the members of his Council, who constitute the Government of India, should realise that it is their duty to forget, if possible, the country and the race to which they belong and strive for the good of the people of this country. In doing this duty, they may be confronted by obstacles. But they should proceed undaunted. Lord Chelmsford can acquire the full confidence of the Indians only if, ignoring the objections raised by some one somewhere, he tries to secure for India the status that she is entitled to and all the privileges claimed by her. He seems to have admitted in replying to a question that secret instructions were issued to the Provincial Governments about Home Rule and to have added that they could not be laid on the table, as they were confidential. Why should a Government which admits that Home Rule is a reasonable ideal, be irritated by this ideal being propagated? Why should a secret circular be issued and why should it not be published even now? Why cannot an announcement be made that, if the defects in the existing administration be pointed out, they will be removed? Let by-gones be by-gones. We hope the attitude of the Government will, hereafter at least, be one of deep sympathy with the aspirations of the people.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 7th September, also refers to the difference between this speech and those delivered by the Viceroy before this and observes:—The present speech will give satisfaction to all Indians. It clearly shows that he does not ignore Indian public opinion and indicates his statesmanship and wisdom. The Calcutta statesman says that he has climbed down. It is only climbing down to suit the occasion that betokens wise statesmanship. We hope that, as observed by him in conclusion, suitable reforms will be introduced soon, with an eye upon the real interests of India.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

The Viceroy's speech.

The Swadesamitran and the Hindu Nesan, of the 10th September, reproduce in Tamil the comments of the Englishman, the Tribune and the Punjabee on this speech, while the Hindu Nesan referred to above also publishes in Tamil the comments of the Rangoon Times, the Bombay Chronicle and the Times of India.

SWADESAMITRAN & HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sep. 10th, 1917.

His Excellency the Viceroy.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th September, says:—His Excellency the Viceroy has now stated plainly that the ideal of Home Rule or the ideal of self-government is a legitimate one. Suspicion and mistrust have now disappeared. The time has come when the friendly relations between the rulers and the ruled will be strengthened. The Government have begun to annul internments. His Excellency the Viceroy's mind is, therefore, free from agitation and is full of peace. . . A spirit of criticising and suspecting annoyed the rulers and the ruled. They have now disappeared to the satisfaction of all. . . The bureaucracy and the people have to carry out His Excellency's advice that the rulers and the ruled should forget the past and promote mutual love. A policy of conciliation will achieve the desired end and not a policy of repression. If the present discontent had not spread His Excellency's many acts of kindness would have been made a subject of praise. The abolition of the system of indentured labour, the settlement of the Indian problem in the colonies, etc., would have pleased the people at a time of peace. But they have not attracted the attention of the people on account of the intensity of the agitation engendered by the enforcement of repressive laws. But the people will hereafter understand the benefits of His Excellency's rule.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

But the Anglo-Indian papers have begun to turn a deaf ear to the advice of His Excellency. The Madras Mail did not give up its threats. It says that if there should be any sign that the Local Government endeavour to release Mrs. Besant under compulsion from the Secretary of State, neither the Europeans nor the Indians following of the old school will endure it. The Englishman says that the action of the Government betrays their weakness.

We pray that His Excellency the Viceroy will pay no regard to these papers, which are always opposed to the ideals of the people, but will follow a peaceful policy, and strengthen the bond of friendship between the rulers and the ruled. Whatever methods are pursued for the future welfare of India, the people are ready to forget the past and co-operate with the Government. We only pray that the Viceroy will see that the repressive policy does not again appear.

His Excellency the Viceroy's speech.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th September, reports the Bombay Chronicle to have said in the course of its remarks on His Excellency the Viceroy's speech:—There is no need that we should be very glad that the Government of India have recommended to the Madras Government the release of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers. The Government of India are trying to mend their own mistake.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

The Viceroy's speech.

In reviewing the speech of the Viceroy recently delivered in the Imperial Legislative Council, the Andhrapatrika, of the 6th September, observes:—" . . Nine Indian Military officers have been granted commissions in the army. But the Indians will not be satisfied unless the distinctions observed between the Indians and the English in this matter are completely removed. . . Sir Robert Bordon accepted it as just that the Canadians residing in India should be placed under the same restrictions as the Indians in Canada. He was of opinion that the Indians should be treated with respect. The Viceroy believes that Sir Robert Bordon's speech will do good to India. . . . It is regrettable that the Viceroy has omitted to state what reforms he intends to make along the lines above indicated. It does not seem proper that the Government of India should still keep their despatch to the Secretary of State as secret. Whatever the opinion of the Government may be it is clear that nothing short of the scheme of reforms proposed by the National Congress and the Moslem League will satisfy the people. It is that scheme that will form the seed for self-government. It is necessary that the Indians should represent this with a united voice to Mr. Montagu. . . ."

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sep. 11th, 1917.

The Viceroy's speech.

In commenting upon the recent speech of His Excellency the Viceroy at the Imperial Legislative Council, the Manorama, of the 11th September, observers:—Though there may be difference of opinion among the politicians in India on certain matters referred to therein, it may be admitted that it is a solemn utterance full of sympathy towards Indians, and one that has been made clearly keeping in view the relations between India and the British rule. None who had read His Excellency's previous speeches could have expected that it would be such a sympathetic one. On the whole, we are happy to say that this speech would, to a certain extent, satisfy the Indians.

MALAYALA MANORAMA, Kottayam, Sep. 12th, 1917.

Writing on the same subject, the Malayala Manorama, of the 12th September, says:—His Excellency the Viceroy has agreed to release Mrs. Besant and her associates, in case they agree that they would, in future, discuss public matters in a moderate tone. They, however, contend that the tone of their speeches and writings was not immoderate from the very beginning. It is, therefore, doubtful whether they would give such an undertaking. In any case it would be better to set them at liberty for some time and see how they conduct themselves.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sep. 7th, 1917.

The internments.

55. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th September, reproduces in Tamil the letter addressed on this subject by Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar and Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar to Commander Wedgwood, which is published in the Hindu of the same date.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sep. 8th, 1917.

Internments.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 8th September, publishes in Telugu the reply of Sir S. Subrahmania Ayyar to Commander Wedgwood which is to be found in the Hindu of the 7th September.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Sep. 5th, 1917.

The Madras internments.

The Desamata, of the 5th September, reports the Amrita Bazaar Patrika, to have said:—Everyone knows that in England some British friends of India have started a Home Rule League. That league has published a leaflet and is distributing copies of it in the House of Commons. A London correspondent to a contemporary journal gives the following description of the contents of the leaflet:—"The members of the League wish that the British citizens should understand that the reason why Mrs. Besant was subjected to repression was that she contended that Home Rule should be granted to India. The leaflet says that her position in making constitutional agitation is the same as that of Mr. Redmond in Ireland. . . . We will create another Ireland, vaster and more dangerous than the present Ireland, or make a great Empire containing people who enjoy the happiness of Home Rule."

Mr. George Lansbury has signed the leaflet. He is the President of the Executive Committee of the Home Rule League there. He concluded the leaflet with the request that all lovers of freedom should demand the release of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

Release of the interned.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 6th September, writes under this heading:—Yesterday, hand bills were circulated to the effect that the release of Mrs. Besant, Mr. Wadia and Mr. Arundale was in sight. . . . The joy that Mrs. Besant's "dear children" had felt was unlimited.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

Release of the interned.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th September, in its leader regarding the release of the interned, observes:—. . . It was good that the Indian Government should have stated that they would release not only Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia but also all those that had been interned owing to their violent political agitation.

From the words of the Government it may be inferred that the cause of the internment of Mrs. Besant was that she carried on political agitation violently and unconstitutionally. If the Government had explained what those unconstitutional methods were, it would have been advantageous to the people. . . As far as the people could understand, no unconstitutional methods were employed by Mrs. Besant and her followers. That is why the minds of the people are agitated. . . The Defence of India Act is a war measure and was not intended to apply to political agitation. . . From the words of the Government of India it is clear that the interned will be released immediately. The magnanimity of Mr. Montagu is thus revealed. . . The Government deserves the grateful thanks of the people for noting the attitude of the people and for being prepared to release the interned. . . If the interned are released, it remains to be seen what the Madras Mail, which threatened to oust him (Mr. Montagu) from his office, would say. The Statesman has already begun to abuse the Government.

56. The Kaliyugavartamani, of the 11th August, reproduces in Tamil an abstract of a speech delivered by the Lord Bishop of Calcutta referred to in paragraph 50 of Report No. 33 of 1917. KALIYUGAVARTAMANI, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1917.

The Lord Bishop of Calcutta on Home Rule.

57. The Dravidan, of the 6th September, reproduces in Tamil an abstract of an article on this subject published in Justice of the 4th idem. DRAVIDAN, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

Theosophy and politics.

58. The Liva-ul-Islam, of the 6th September, reproduces from the Dravidan of the 30th August an article on this subject abstracted in paragraph 40 of Report No. 36 of 1917. LIVA-UL-ISLAM, Madras, Sep. 6th, 1917.

Mr. Montague's visit to India.

